Council approves concealed carry weapon license fee increase

SCOTT SNOWDEN
SMDP Staff Writer

The Santa Monica Police Department (SMPD) will once again start issuing Concealed Carry Weapon (CCW) licenses as Council voted unanimously to adopt the proposed fee of $617 for new applicants. Previously, the SMPD would refer all applications to the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department (LASD).

However, following a recent Supreme Court ruling in June 2022, the LASD has seen an influx of applications that's exceeded their processing ability. Winning with a 6–3 decision in the case New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v Bruen, the majority ruled that New York's law was unconstitutional and that the ability to carry a pistol in public was a constitutional right under the Second Amendment.

Prior to the Supreme Court's ruling, there was a requirement within the California state law that required "good cause" to issue a CCW. Applicants have to show that danger would be significantly mitigated by the applicant's carrying of a concealed firearm.

Following that ruling, California Attorney General Rob Bonta has stated that the state's "good cause" requirement is also likely unconstitutional as well and should not be enforced.

Prior to March 1, 2017, SMPD

New Board of Education members reflect on their first 100 days in office

GRACE INEZ ADAMS
SMDP Staff Writer

Santa Monica Malibu Unified School District's newest Board of Education members, Alicia Mignano and Stacy Rouse, have been in office for just over 100 days and recently sat down with the Daily Press to reflect on surprises, challenges and their priorities during these first few months.

Mignano and Rouse were both elected just weeks before Ben Drati announced he would be leaving the district after nearly seven years at the helm.

"I was surprised but I think it's

Brambila Salon celebrates 20 years in Santa Monica

GRACE INEZ ADAMS
SMDP Staff Writer

For Mary Brambila, the founder and owner of Brambila Salon on Ocean Avenue, hair and beauty have always been a passion. However, when she first started in the industry as an assistant she did not find the type of positive, welcoming salon environment she was looking for, so she decided to start her own.

"I thought, in order to do it the way I wanted to, I had to open my own place," she said.

Now, 20 years later, she has a team of dedicated stylists and an established and loyal clientele at her oceanfront location.

"It means so much being a first-generation American girl whose parents immigrated here from Mexico with only a 5th-grade education to now having a business and seeing our last name on Ocean Ave. It's a dream come true," Brambila said. "Also, being able to provide jobs to a diverse group of like-minded women and men is the icing on the cake. All of this by being able to make people feel beautiful."

SALON: The business has survived two decades on Ocean Ave.

Morgan Yee, one of the salon's stylists said she feels Brambila has succeeded in creating the kind of atmosphere she had yearned for.

"She really wants to keep it warm, inviting and appealing," said stylist Morgan Yee. "I feel like what Mary has put out is really that she wants our clients to come in and that their visit feels like a little mini vacation."

"You could have just come from work or from a screaming kid, whatever it is, when you walk in, we're like, we're going to take care of you."

Brambila said she took inspiration from hotels down the street from the salon where she would often go for dinner after work in the early days of her business.

"I really loved the hotel experience, where they would be like 'welcome, how can we serve you,' so I really learned from the local hotels and I really wanted to offer that to my clients," she said.

She said she hopes to offer her clients an experience that leaves them feeling "full" and rejuvenated after their visit, something Yee said people really need, especially following the pandemic.

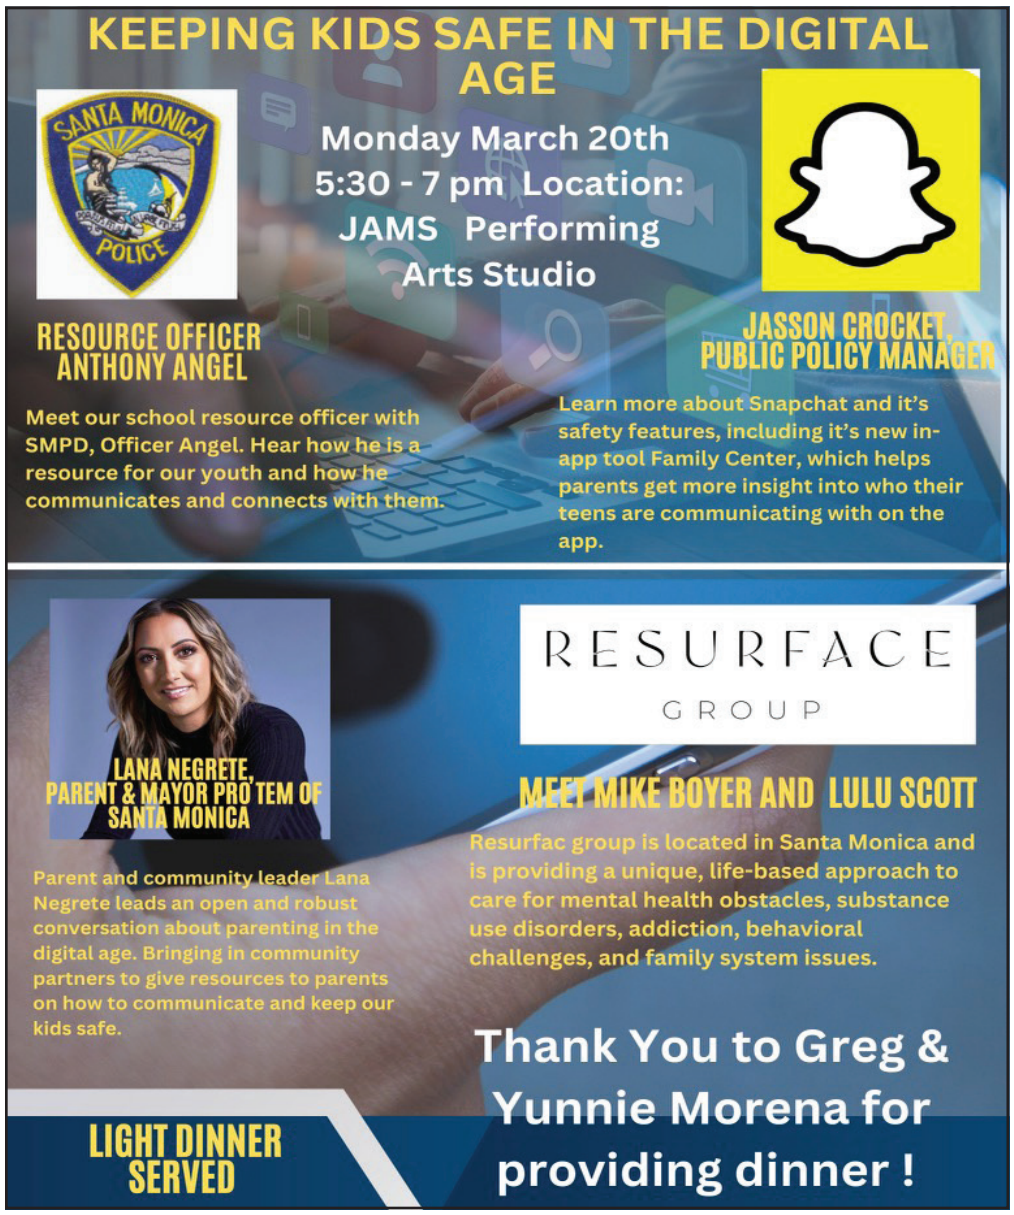

"People really miss getting their hair done for so many different reasons," she said. "So we get to give

Farmer's Market Fog

KATHARINE A. JAMESON

These days, everything seems like it has its own catch phrase: 'Heirloom'. 'Artisanal'. 'Organic'. From 'natural' or 'non-GMO' to 'classic', foods don't only carry a brand name, but an often-convoluted description of what they are and the purpose they serve. Products that are labeled 'all-natural', or 'cage free' can mean very little.

We're taught to 'shop local' or 'buy organic', look for the 'non-GMO' label or to buy from a certain region. We are fed so much different info that it seems nearly impossible not to grow skeptical when trying to be healthy. Often we hear that farmer's market produce is 'pesticide free', but what does that mean? Is it herbicide free and fungicide and chemical fertilizer free? The more free our food gets, the more it seems to cost.

GROWTH IN GROWING.

Some local farmers' markets feature growers who were born into it, but taking farms to scale as a large businesses, whether locally or nationally, is no small feat. "Mo money mo problems" may translate into "mo land, mo pests" when growing on a bigger scale. After all, how can you tend the rows personally when you decide to grow big?

On the land they've tended for four generations, the Tamai family does just that. Their personal touch seems to make their produce glow. It's set out in a colorful bounty across tables and under tents on the rainy afternoon I stop by to meet Gloria. She laughs gently when she can't recall exactly how many years she's attended the Wednesday farmer's market, but has been a staple here for over four decades. Her customers have become her friends. When I ask if she has any favorites, she diplomatically tells me that they all are.

Like many smaller local farms, the Tamais have resisted certifying organic. The process is lengthy and expensive and the forty acres that once cost them $125 an acre to rent has skyrocketed to $3000 an acre over the years. With fuel prices to contend with, they've had to raise their prices just to soften the blow. "We're trying to keep the prices down, but it's so hard because everything is so expensive."

SOIL HEALTH.

Soil health is pivotal for good quality produce and much of our soil across America is devoid of nutrients. Many regenerative or sustainable farms focus on soil health by returning organic matter to the soil, as the Tamais do with compost and the remnants of their crops. Chemical fertilizers wreck the soil and are harmful for our health, not to mention the environment.

You can tell the difference in produce grown in healthy soil. The Tamais' beets burst with electric color, almost as if someone had dyed them. Farmers attribute produce's color to the density of nutrients in the soil and optimum levels of phosphorus.

CARROTS: Roasted with Harissa

Produce starts to lose its taste and nutrient profile within 48 hours of being harvested. (Most of what we buy in stores is long past its prime in this sense). The Tamais harvest their crop the night before they deliver it to Santa Monica's Wednesday farmer's market, which means it's some of the freshest around.

With their brightly colored greens, root veggies and ruby red berries surrounding us, Gloria Tamai discusses using biodiversity practices in growing their crops. She says they use lady bugs to protect their strawberries, making it possible to only use pesticides deemed appropriate for organic produce elsewhere on the farm. The ladybugs eat the pests that bother the strawberries, somehow sparing the berries themselves.

WHAT REALLY MATTERS.

Shop local, ask questions. Buying local mitigates the harmful effects on the environment when food travels a long distance, but it's not the only thing to consider. Conventional farming is tougher on the earth and on soil than organic farming is, as it captures less carbon and pours more contaminants into the soil, which ultimately run into our rivers, streams and oceans.

Multiple chemicals used in conventional farming have been linked to cancer and many scientists speculate that they're contributing to the rise of ADHD in young people. When we can't buy local, organic produce, what factors should go into our choices?

TALKING POINTS.

Talk to the farmers. What do they use on their produce? How do they grow their crops while avoiding sprays? Are they using pest management? Fertilizers? Ask if they use herbicides or fungicides. Fungicide residues were recently detected on 90 percent of conventional

Letter: Santa Monica Angel

To the editors:

Wednesday evening, March 15, my wife and I were taking our daily constitutional through the byways of our lovely city when we witnessed a small bird of prey make an unsuccessful attempt at acquiring a pigeon dinner. There was quite a ruckus overhead and I immediately grabbed for my phone, went to my Merlin app and attempted to ID the rascal. In the process, apparently, my drivers license and debit card flew, not unlike those lucky pigeons, out of my fanny pack and onto the ground, or somewhere. Of course, we were unaware at the time and only discovered the items were missing when we got home. A 45 minute retracing of our steps was unsuccessful. The bank was called, the debit card cancelled and a new one ordered. A royal pain, to be sure, but no real damage done. My wife thought perhaps since I was "smart" enough to lose both my bank card and my drivers license together whoever found them might check the address and be so kind as to mail them back. I said, yeah sure, honey but I was thinking dream on!

This morning, on a whim, I went out to the mail box just to look. There, in the magazine slot were both items. Since no note was included (I would have thought something along the lines of, "Here's your stuff, Einstein!") I would like to take this opportunity to thank the anonymous Angel who took the time and trouble to walk them over to our apartment. A small thing, in the bigger scheme of things, but oh what great things they can be. Faith in humanity restored? Maybe not restored but certainly shored up. And I'm left waiting for a chance to pay this kindness forward. I hope it happens today!

Thank you,

Stephen Bradford, Santa Monica

IS IT WORTH IT?

It's March Madness and while most people are worried about broken basketball brackets, we decided to send several Santa Monica donut shops into heated competition. We set two divisions: Fancy and Regular.

DONUTS

FANCY — The Fancy donuts included Sidecar, Duck, Erin McKenna's and Holey Grail. All of these shops were above $3 for a donut and while we chose as close to a "simple" option as each shop had, they all offer specialty flavors ranging from mildly interesting to way out there.

HOLEY GRAIL VS. ERIN MCKENNA — Holey Grail wins. These are both "non-traditional" in some way. Grail uses Hawaii-grown taro as their base and McKenna is vegan/gluten free. There was really no contest here. Grail is beautifully bouncy with a great external cripiness and subtle, pleasing flavors. McKenna is exactly what you'd expect from a high end vegan place, not bad if you account for its lack of every tasty ingredient in a pastry but strictly worse than every other donut in the game.

SIDECAR VS. DUCK — Duck wins. Duck is the new kid on the block and makes your donut to order every time. It was the cheapest of the "Fancy" bracket but this win was more about Sidecar's loss. It was just too dense and too cake-like. This was a shocking defeat as many an SMDP employee has enjoyed Sidecar and they have some great options outside this bracket (the Vietnamese coffee is a standout as is the Eggs Benedict donut). However, they were objectively less pleasing in the head-to-head tasting.

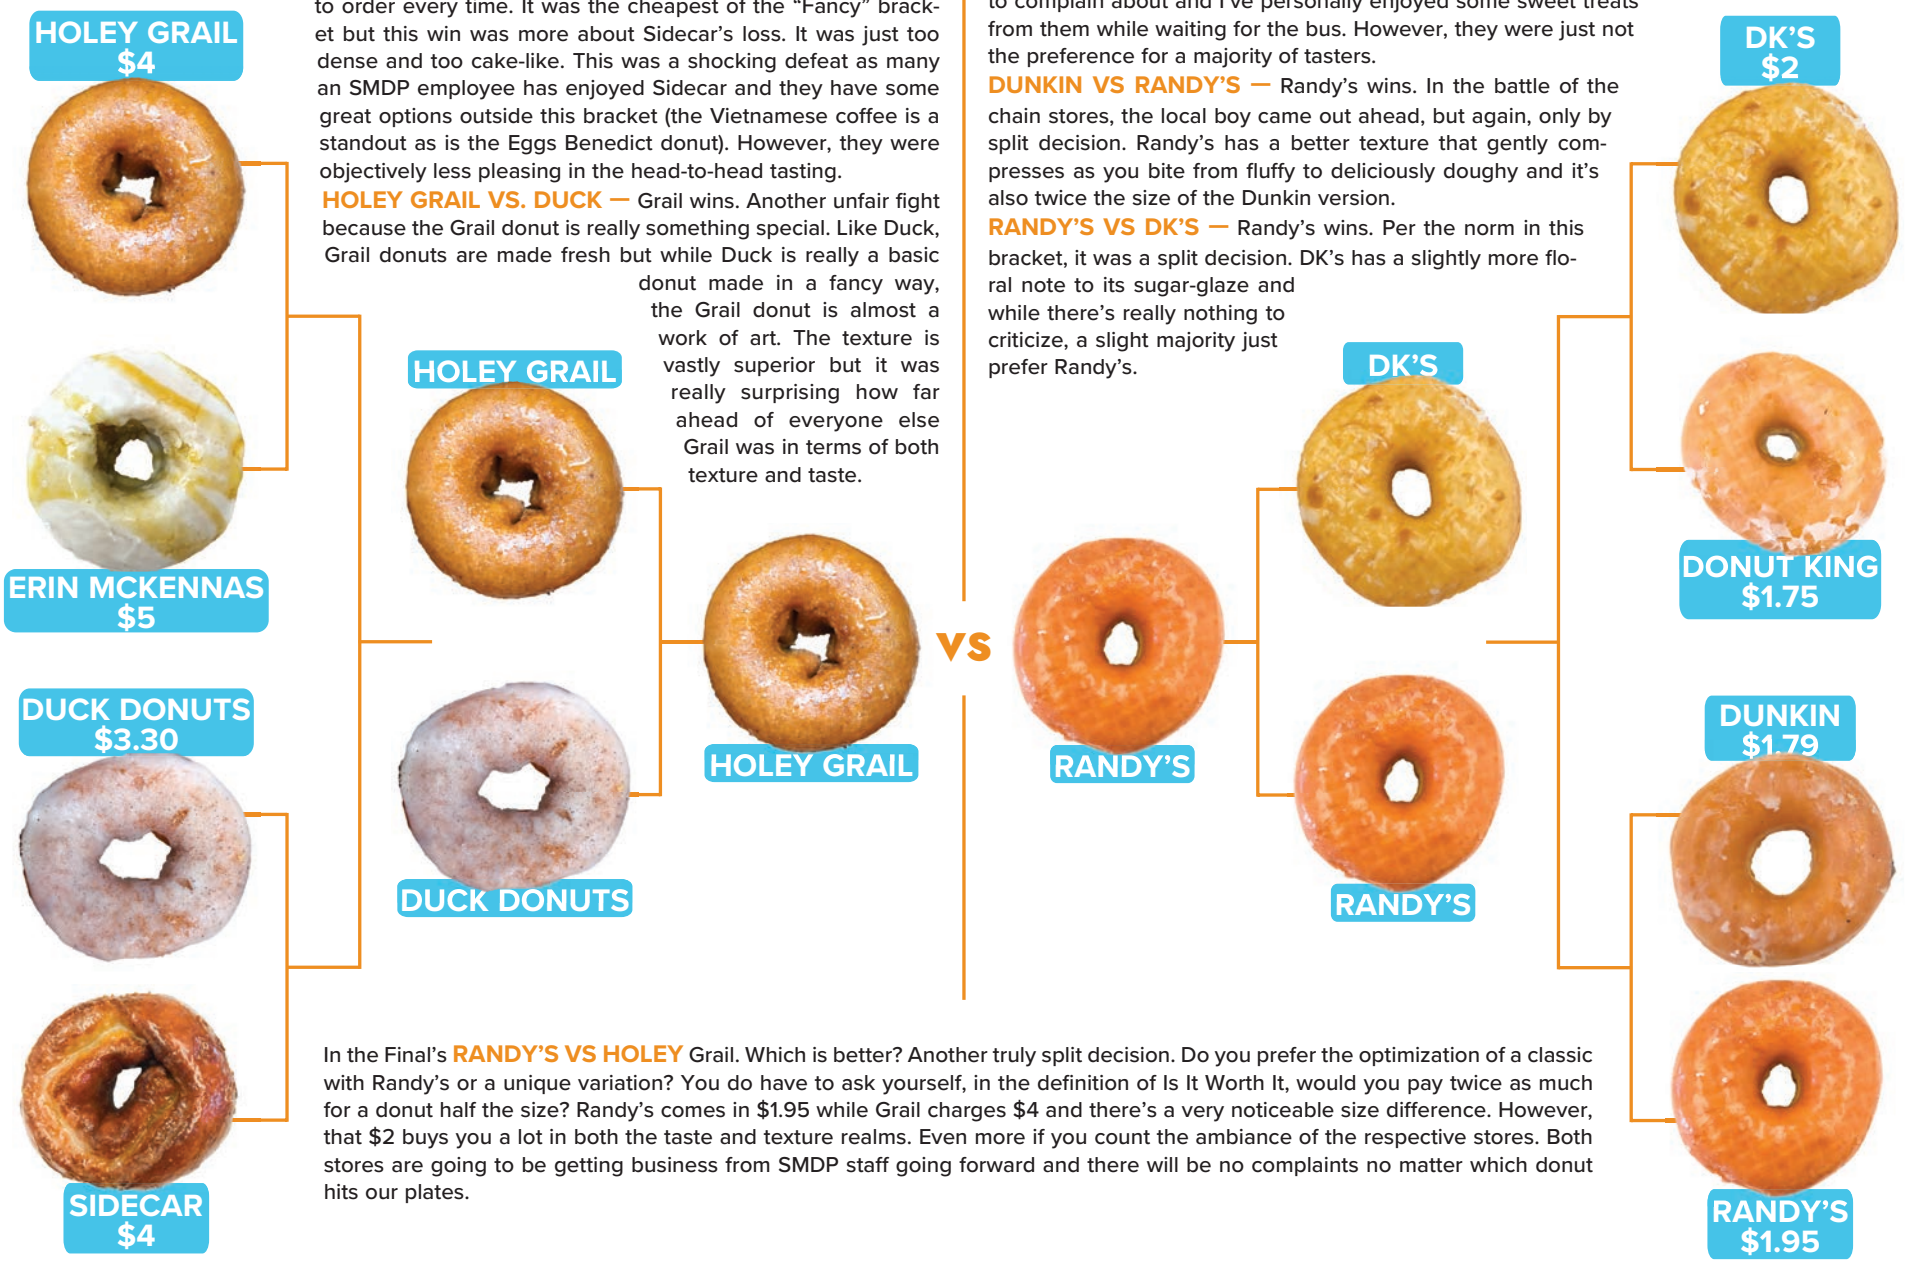

HOLEY GRAIL VS. DUCK — Grail wins. Another unfair fight because the Grail donut is really something special. Like Duck, Grail donuts are made fresh but while Duck is really a basic donut made in a fancy way, the Grail donut is almost a work of art. The texture is vastly superior but it was really surprising how far ahead of everyone else Grail was in terms of both texture and taste.

BASIC — The classic donut is one of the world's great culinary inventions. The perfect example of simplicity becoming sublime. We pitted Randy's, Dunkin, DK's and Donut King against each other to find the best of the basics. It's worth noting that this bracket was incredibly close with no absolute clear winners. Opinions were divided at every step and nothing was "bad" about any of the options which really highlights how perfect a food the glazed donut is.

DK'S VS DONUT KING — DK's wins. In a squeaker of a match, DK's was marginally preferred. While the donuts themselves are almost interchangeable, DK's does come with significantly more Je ne sais quoi. The box is nicer, the donut glaze less fractured and the store itself has some excellent options if you want to bump up to the "Fancy" zone. Donut King is run by some of the nicest people around, at $1.75, there's nothing to complain about and I've personally enjoyed some sweet treats from them while waiting for the bus. However, they were just not the preference for a majority of tasters.

DUNKIN VS RANDY'S — Randy's wins. In the battle of the chain stores, the local boy came out ahead, but again, only by split decision. Randy's has a better texture that gently compresses as you bite from fluffy to deliciously doughy and it's also twice the size of the Dunkin version.

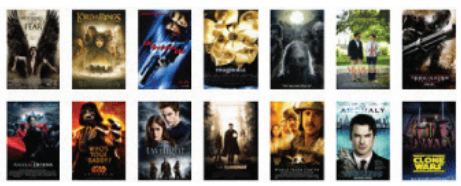

RANDY'S VS DK'S — Randy's wins. Per the norm in this bracket, it was a split decision. DK's has a slightly more floral note to its sugar-glaze and while there's really nothing to criticize, a slight majority just prefer Randy's.

In the Final's RANDY'S VS HOLEY Grail. Which is better? Another truly split decision. Do you prefer the optimization of a classic with Randy's or a unique variation? You do have to ask yourself, in the definition of Is It Worth It, would you pay twice as much for a donut half the size? Randy's comes in $1.95 while Grail charges $4 and there's a very noticeable size difference. However, that $2 buys you a lot in both the taste and texture realms. Even more if you count the ambiance of the respective stores. Both stores are going to be getting business from SMDP staff going forward and there will be no complaints no matter which donut hits our plates.

a great opportunity to be able to participate in finding someone," Mignano said. "It's a key position for everything that we do in the district so I'm excited to participate in the process and for our community members to participate."

Rouse echoed this sentiment.

"I was really surprised when Dr. Drati left," she said. "I did not see that coming."

However, she is also embracing the opportunity to help find a new leader and has a clear image of the type of person she thinks would do well in the position.

"Really a community builder that continues to build on the community that we have, we're not starting from zero, but someone who comes in and really sees all of the parts... and sees it through the lens of who our kids are and how they learn, " she said.

Mignano has her own list of desired characteristics.

"Somebody with experience leading a district, our district is very diverse and has unique needs...and making sure that person is student centered and is able to build a vision and get people on board," she said.

Mental health and student well-being is also top of mind for both board members.

"I think transitioning from the pandemic back to in person has been very difficult for our students, especially our middle school and high school students," Mignano said. "And also an increase, unfortunately, of drug use."

As a former PTA council member, she said she sees parent education efforts as a valuable way of addressing these issues by giving them knowledge, tools and resources to help support their kids.

Despite the challenges and hard work ahead, both Mignano and Stacy are proud of things SMMUSD has accomplished.

For Mignano, who was born in Mexico and attended public school in South Central Los Angeles as an English Language Learner (ELL) before moving to Portland for high school, supporting the district's ELL students is close to her heart.

"I think that we have made a lot of progress for our English Language Learners and I've been a part of that work and I'm very proud that I have put in the time and worked with Maria [Leon-Vazquez] and Dr. [Jaqueline] Mora, with our community liaisons and our parents to advocate for our kids."

Her son is a student at Edison Language Academy and she said bilingual education is incredibly valuable and something she is glad to see within the district.

"In the time that I went to school here in California, it was during 'English only,' people used to think that if you only focus on English, students would learn better and what was found through research is that is not the case, that when we strengthen supports for the home language, when we have different support for our students, it makes a big difference."

For Rouse, who has a background in conflict resolution and is the sole member of the board from Malibu, the ongoing conversations surrounding dividing SMMUSD and creating an independent Malibu school district, a process known as "unification," is frequently on her mind.

Just before her election, the city of Malibu and SMMUSD agreed on a "conceptual framework" for what such a process would look like with a potential time frame for a new district to be formed as early as July 2024. In the meantime, Rouse hopes to strengthen connection and understanding between the two cities.

"I think the unique role I play is having a bridge, I do have relationships in both communities," she said. "Sometimes we don't always realize how many cross connections we have, so really bringing that to light and making the communities have a more nuanced perspective and knowledge of each other."

Both board members expressed a deep appreciation for the role of public education in society.

"Public education is essential to developing critical thinkers and it's part of democracy," Mignano said. "It can be a really essential tool to change lives and improve lives."

"Whether you have kids or not – school age or at all – or whether you participate in it or not, public school is for and by the public so everyone has a stake in it and whether you realize it or not, it impacts you."

citrus samples that were studied.

Getting certified organic is expensive and time consuming and it's not foolproof. Organic farming still uses sprays and there are tons of loopholes to get through, if the farmers want to.

Buy as locally as possible and always try to buy thin skinned fruits and veggies (aka the dirty dozen,) organically if possible... and if your wallet permits.

ROASTED CARROTS WITH HARISSA YOGURT

INGREDIENTS

1 bunch rainbow carrots
3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil, divided
Salt and pepper – to taste

1 clove garlic, pressed
1 tablespoon harissa spice (I use dry)
2 tablespoons mint, finely chopped (add more if desired)

METHOD

Preheat oven to 400° F.

Scrub carrots with a vegetable brush. Trim tops and cut into half lengthwise.

Place on parchment paper lined baking sheet. Drizzle with 2 tablespoons olive oil and toss.

Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

In a small mixing bowl, add yogurt, lemon juice and zest, garlic, harissa spice and mint.

Drizzle carrots with yogurt or serve sauce on side with mint garnish.

* Recommendation: prepare yogurt sauce first and refrigerate for a few hours prior to serving.

handled all requests from Santa Monica residents. After this date however, policy was changed so that all CCW requests were referred to the LASD, but it wasn't until after the Supreme Court ruling that applications for independent municipalities, like Santa Monica, exceeded the capacity of the Sheriff's Department.

During Tuesday evening's Council meeting, Sgt. Scott McGee of the SMPD explained what a CCW means. "A concealed carry weapons license allows a citizen to legally carry a pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon their person.

"A license to carry can be issued by the sheriff, the county or the chief of the municipal police department, pursuant to the Penal Code," McGee said. "State law allows for a person to be issued a permit if they meet certain requirements."

According to McGee the individual must be a resident of Santa Monica, be of good moral character, have completed firearms training and a qualification, be at least 21 years of age and be free from any criminal convictions that might disqualify the applicant.

Councilmember Oscar de la Torre asked if the two-year renewal process included a repeat psychological examination, to which McGee replied "no" and that to conduct the examination every two years the SMPD would "have to have very specific and articulable reasons why we feel that they [the individual seeking to carry a handgun, hidden from view, in public] would need to have another one."

According to the City, LASD currently has approximately 150 applications in various phases of the process for Santa Monica applicants: 83 in queue, 46 already approved, 9 denied and 11 inactive.

"So, in the City of Santa Monica, 46 residents have a license to carry a concealed weapon…" de la Torre reiterated. "And just so that we understand," he added, "Realistically, when can you pull that weapon out? What would constitute a legal way to utilize that weapon? And then what would be illegal, so that we understand exactly what we're talking about here?"

"I think the situation there will dictate a little bit. I haven't seen anything within the Penal Code as it relates to CCWs and when they can and cannot [sic]." McGee replied. "In light of a life threatening situation or where there's a moment of serious bodily injury to yourself or someone else may and they feel that there's no other possible solution to that scenario."

Mayor Gleam Davis remarked that recently and within the state of California, she had seen a notice on a business window that said "No guns allowed inside" and asked if there was any ability to control where someone actually carries a concealed weapon, like the pier, for example. City Attorney, Douglas Sloan, answered, "Yes, there are some limitations for example. They could be prohibited from all city government buildings and so forth."

However, legal details on this issue are still currently being developed and debated as City Manager David White explained. "There's actually some state legislation being developed and debated in the state and is supported by the governor that does have a number of different restrictions about where you can carry a gun. It will cover places like buildings, schools, places of worship and things like that."

White was referring to something called SB2 that lists almost everywhere you really don't want anyone to be able to bring a loaded firearm to, but it hasn't been passed into law yet.

The proposed use of a third party service to streamline the application process with a fee of $617 for new applicants was passed unanimously. Of that, $398 for new applications and $348 for renewals would go to the vendor. These costs do not include other fees for fingerprinting, psychological evaluation and a range safety course. The additional $219 would cover mounting administrative and processing costs.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 20)

Welcome to your year of childhood dreams come true. When you were small, you had ideas about who you wanted to be. Even though you outgrew some of them, you'll embody those notions in surprising and delightful ways. More highlights: You'll follow a marvelous inspiration to a different part of the world; you'll invest well and continue the trend; and love will fill your days. Capricorn and Sagittarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 20, 1, 14 and 18.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Yesterday needn't take up too much of today. You handle things when they happen, as completely as possible. This is how you keep your days fresh and clean. Every morning is a fresh start.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). There's a roadblock ahead. Take note, but don't agonize about it. What's inside you is bigger than what's ahead of you. Assess the situation so you can settle into strategizing. That's the fun part.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Worry is like salt. You only need a little to improve the dish of your day. A dash will move you to action. Create a list of possible solutions. You'll be glad you were smart enough to let a little worry in.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). It's time to question your assumptions again. This is a bit of a mind game, and it will help to get the opinion of an outside observer or, even better, advice from several diverse sources.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You can be on your own side and still want to change. To wish for your own growth isn't an act of self-rejection unless you spin it that way. You'll evolve faster when you accept yourself and build on what you already love.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your success secret is objectivity. Refrain from judgment. If you can listen objectively to everything, including your own thoughts, you'll find answers. You'll refine a technique or improve the available tools.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Your intellect will get a vigorous and joyous workout today as a strong desire to learn and explore new ideas meets your willingness to ask questions. New insights and discoveries abound.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll push yourself. Because you work harder to improve, you will. You may go backward before you go forward again, but by this time next month you'll have made a notable difference.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). People will love to hear the thinking behind your plans, especially when you put it into a short, punchy story. Speed up the exposition, leave out the boring details and expand on the fun bits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You have that elusive quality called grit. You don't see it because it's so much a part of you; you assume it comes with your human DNA. Not necessarily. Your powers of perseverance are remarkable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Do what you love for long enough to be in a good mood over it. Joy is contagious and touches every part of your life as well as the lives of others. When you're having fun being you, relationships improve.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). It's not enough just to survive. What about excitement, connection and fun? What about glamour, art, sportsmanship, intellectual prowess? What about adventure? Pick the category that most appeals and focus your whole being there for a few hours.
