THE WHAT A RACE ISSUE

Massive race takes all kinds

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

DOWNTOWN In a field of 25,000, there were bound to be some characters.

Among them were Patrick McDonagh and five friends who ran the race dressed up in full Elvis Presley regalia, complete with wigs and white spandex jumpsuits, blaring rock 'n' roll from a stereo on a pushcart and drinking beer instead of Gatorade.

It's not a strategy you'll find in the official L.A. Marathon training guide, but it seemed to work for the crew of Presleys, all experienced marathoners with scores of races under their sequined belts.

"I've met all my goals in running, so what a way to have fun," said McDonagh, who completed his 49th marathon Sunday.

Hours after the elite runners finished the race, marathoners continued to cross the finish line on Ocean Avenue at Santa Monica Boulevard in droves, cheered on by a crowd that packed the sidewalks down the final stretch.

"The people just made it so uplifting," said Michael Seguin, a Los Angeles police officer who was running his first marathon.

It wasn't a postcard perfect beach day, but for the runners the overcast sky and cool 68 degree afternoon temperature was about as good as it gets.

"The weather was perfect," said Christy Araujo-Henderson, who called Sunday's race her favorite of the five marathons she's completed. "I can't say anything bad about it."

The L.A. Marathon's new route that brought the race to Santa Monica for the first time didn't go off without a hitch — there was a late start because of a traffic jam at the race's Dodger Stadium starting point — but officials in Santa Monica said the massive crowd that turned out for the race had been well behaved and there were no serious injuries reported by mid-afternoon.

Publicity surrounding the new "Stadium to the Sea" route helped attract the largest field of runners in the event's history.

Peggy Hoyle, who traveled from Washington D.C. to run the race, her third marathon, said she was among those attracted by the new course.

"It was always interesting — there's

SANTA MONICA The Los Angeles Marathon's new "Stadium to the Sea" course was designed to be a visual tour of the city, beginning at Dodger Stadium and passing landmarks such as Graumann's Chinese Theater and Beverly Hills' upscale shopping district, Rodeo Drive, on the way to a finish near the ocean.

No one enjoyed those sights, or the race, more than Wesley Korir.

Korir successfully defended his Los Angeles title Sunday, while Edna Kiplagat won the women's event and a gender challenge bonus of $100,000.

"One thing my coach told me is, 'Wesley, enjoy yourself,' " said the 27-year-old, whose 2009 win in Los Angeles was his first marathon victory. "I tried to do that. To get my head out of running, I was looking everywhere. I saw everything."

Korir, a native of Kenya living in Louisville, Ky., won a tactical battle by breaking away from fellow Kenyans Richard Limo and Paul Samoei in the 25th mile to cover the 26.2 miles in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 19 seconds, the third-best time in the event's 25-year history. Limo finished 29 seconds back, followed by Samoei in 2:09:54.

Kiplagat, of Kenya, dropped Teyba Naser of Ethiopia in the 23rd mile to win in 2:25:37. She took advantage of an 18-minute head start women's elite competi-

The Hump decides to close doors

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

SM AIRPORT The Hump, the high-end sushi restaurant facing federal charges for allegedly selling endangered whale meat, closed its doors Friday and does not plan to reopen, according to a statement on its Web site.

The phone number to the restaurant was no longer active as of Saturday evening and an employee at The Hump's sister restaurant, Typhoon, confirmed that Friday was The Hump's last night in business.

After 12 years of doing business in Santa Monica, the owners of The Hump decided to close its doors March 20 as part of a self-imposed punishment and as a way to raise awareness about the "detrimental effect that illegal whaling has on the preservation of our ocean ecosystems and species."

"Closing the restaurant is a self-imposed punishment on top of the fine that will be meted out by the court," the statement said.

Pier bomb threat a false alarm

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

SM PIER Police reopened the Santa Monica Pier around 7:30 p.m. Saturday after determining that two suspicious packages found near the finish line of Sunday's Los Angeles Marathon did not contain explosives.

Santa Monica Police Sgt. Jay Trisler said officers found a duffel bag and a cooler underneath the pier during a routine sweep in preparation for the marathon. The pier was evacuated around 6 p.m. and a 1,000-foot barrier was established as a precaution while the bomb squad investigated.

After about two hours it was determined that the packages did not pose a threat and the pier was reopened.

It's all about jobs

Editor:

Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger started the year with a clear goal: "jobs, jobs, jobs." That's good news for Los Angeles County communities that have been hit hard during the recession and for families and children who have been pushed into poverty as a result.

But the budget proposal the Governor revealed would drastically undercut his job creation goal by eliminating employment for thousands and shredding safety net programs and services that provide for the most basic needs of impoverished L.A. County families and children, consequently worsening our local economy.

In L.A. County, the Governor's budget would hurt thousands of families who fell victim to the economic downturn. Nobody understands this better than John, who for 10 years had been a successful wholesale distributor. In 2007, his business started declining, and by mid-2009, John had lost 80 percent of his clients. The family filed for bankruptcy, depleted their savings, sold their possessions, and eventually lost their home. John, his wife, and three children found themselves homeless, with no income or resources for the first time in their lives. The family applied for CalWORKs in October 2009 as a means to weather the tough economic climate. John and his wife are currently participating in the CalWORKs welfare-to-work program, and are motivated to find employment and start the trek toward regaining self-sufficiency.

The Governor's most recent budget proposal would spell disaster for many L.A. County families and children, like John's, who are already barely hanging on. The proposed 15.7 percent cut to CalWORKs grants, on top of a 4 percent reduction last year, would impact 165,129 families, including 318,144 children across the county. CalWORKs grants have not increased since 1989. Twenty years ago, the maximum grant for a family of three was $694. Today it is still at $694. The Governor is proposing to reduce it by 15.7 percent to $585, expecting families to survive despite the impact of 20 years of inflation on the cost of shelter and other basic necessities. Ironically, in reducing funding for this program, California would forsake money from the federal government which could help stimulate local economies, for every state and local dollar.

The impact on struggling California families would grow much worse under the Governor's plan if the state fails to collect $6.9 billion in increased federal funding for state programs. In the absence of those additional federal dollars, the Governor proposes to eliminate the entire CalWORKs program for all 165,129 families, many of whom would be forced into homelessness.

With the elimination of CalWORKs, California would lose $3.7 billion annually in federal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant funding and would not be eligible for hundreds of millions of dollars in additional federal funding that would create thousands of new subsidized jobs in L.A. County. Over 4,000 current subsidized jobs would be eliminated. Every state dollar cut from CalWORKs results in lost economic activity. If we factor in all the lost federal matching funds, the loss to the local economy is far greater. Cutting CalWORKs grants or eliminating the CalWORKs program directly conflicts with the Governor's stated goal of "jobs, jobs, jobs."

O'Connor rakes in developer loot

MAYOR PRO TEM PAM O'CONNOR finally filed her July 17 to Dec. 31, 2009 campaign disclosure statement on March 17, 2010 — more than six weeks late. Her council re-election contributors included a number of developers, attorneys, architects, tourism industry donors and real estate interests. She hauled in $6,675 for the period.

Four family members/associates of Alexander Gorby, principal of Maxser, Inc., were the largest contributing block at $250 each for a total of $1,000. Maxser's mixed-use hotel project at 710 Wilshire Blvd. will be before City Council in the coming months for approval of a development agreement.

Barbara Flamming and Wade Killefer of Killefer-Flamming Architects each contributed $250. Kenneth Kutcher and Kevin Kozall, attorneys with Harding, Larmore, Mullen, Jakle, Kutcher, & Kozall, LLP — a Santa Monica law firm specializing in land use issues and property law with developer clients like Texas mega-developer Hines — each contributed $250.

Colin Shepherd, vice president of Hines, opened his wallet and rustled up $250. Hines is behind the massive Bergamot Transit Village Center, a nearly 1-million-square-foot project proposed for the former Paper Mate site at 26th Street and Olympic Boulevard. This project is currently in review pending City Council approval for a development agreement.

Other contributors with pending projects and waiting for development agreements include James Anderson, chief operating officer for NMS Properties, who kicked in $250. NMS is behind Paseo Nebraska, a large and controversial mixed-use project planned for 3025 Olympic Blvd. NMS is also seeking a development agreement with City Hall for a 545-multi-family residential complex with 80,000 square feet of commercial and office space. The 357,000-square-foot project was designed by Killefer-Flamming.

Colorado Creative Studios, LLC donated $250. They are asking for a development agreement to build a 151,600 square-foot, five-floor "creative arts/studio/production" office building with underground parking for 584 vehicles at 1834 Colorado Ave. (and Stewart Street).

Bradley Cox, managing director of Trammel Crow, donated $250. Crow has plans to redevelop residential property at 301 Ocean Ave. — a 1950s apartment complex owned by former Santa Monica's first female mayor, the late Clo Hoover. It was the subject of a bitter landmark battle in September 2009. O'Connor voted to uphold Trammel Crow's appeal of the structure's landmark status, thus clearing the way for Crow's condo project.

Gail Goldstein of Equity Partners, a real estate/management firm, contributed $250. According to Internet search sites, Goldstein is the leasing contact for a number of EP properties in Santa Monica including the Arboretum Apartments, Santa Monica Business Park and Yahoo Center, to name a few.

Bruce Ramer and Ann Ramer each contributed $250. He's an entertainment lawyer for Gang, Tyre, Ramer and Brown, Inc., in Beverly Hills. Additional $250 (maximum individual contribution allowed by election law) contributors include the Best Western Gateway Hotel, Bubba Gump Shrimp Company, Santa Monica Amusements, LLC (Pacific Park) and the Santa Monica Firefighters union.

Accepting donations from entities that stand to profit handsomely by doing business with City Hall isn't illegal. But you can bet the family Prius that many of these contributors are stuffing O'Connor's campaign chest because they expect something from her in return. The big question is what. And, how will it affect the rest of us?

Some, if not all, of O'Connor's money was raised at a "business-friendly" breakfast at Casa Del Mar last Sept. 22, hosted by Cheryl Richardson and Kim Karie of the real estate government relations consulting firm The Karie Group.

Lobbyist Karie also politicked hard behind the scenes to help secure Terry O'Day's appointment to City Council. She's currently recruiting attendees and donors for a Ballona Watershed fundraiser honoring O'Day on April 29 at the tony California Plaza in Downtown Los Angeles. Tickets are $500 each. Sponsorships? Where do I sign up?

DEVELOPMENT CRACK-DOWN IS COMING

I had a brief chat last Monday with our new city manager, Rod Gould, about City Hall's lack of enforcement of development agreements. In my column two weeks ago I wrote that 14 out of 15 deed-restricted condominiums in the Dorchester at 1040 Fourth St. were occupied by owners instead of being leased out to low- and moderate-income tenants. A 15th unit was being leased at market rate rents — both conditions violate a nearly three-decades-old development agreement between the Dorchester and City Hall.

Gould told me that city staff was reviewing 11 development agreements and if out of compliance, staff will go to City Council for guidance on how to obtain compliance on a case-by-case basis. The Dorchester is just one of the agreements under review.

Gould said that he favored "habitual" review and enforcement.

"We will do it every year," Gould said.

I suggested City Hall's reviews also include smaller condo and mixed-use developments. I opined, "You could find dozens if not hundreds of deed restricted units where agreements to provide low- and moderate-incoming housing have been ignored."

Flood fears recede in Fargo

DAVE KOLPACK
JAMES MACPHERSON
Associated Press Writers

FARGO, N.D. The good news was all about things that didn't happen: No floodwaters pushing aside hastily built sandbag walls, no neighborhoods evacuated, no panicked residents wondering if they'd ever see their homes again.

The Red River crested in Fargo on Sunday without doing major damage, and city officials all but declared victory.

A year after record flooding forced thousands in the area to evacuate and damaged about 100 homes, officials and residents used a host of lessons learned to prepare for this year's less intense — but still potentially destructive — rush of water.

Thousands of volunteers, including young children, stacked more than 1 million sandbags and crews built miles of clay levees to keep the waters away. Officials gave residents tips on building better sandbag dikes, including clearing the ground of snow and ice that could be melted by floodwaters. And the city held exercises to map out the best routes for trucking sandbags to neighborhoods.

The Red River crested Sunday afternoon at just under 37 feet — 19 feet above flood stage — and was on its way down as evening approached. Only some baseball fields, farmland and backyards were submerged.

Residents of Fargo and its neighbor across the river, Moorhead, Minn., felt both better prepared and luckier than they did last year, when the river crested nearly 4 feet higher.

"The sense is we've made it. We're thankful and let's have a party," said Bob Ona, senior pastor at Fargo's First Assembly of God church in Fargo, where volunteers gathered over the past week before heading out to the city's so-called Sandbag Central.

Fargo Mayor Dennis Walaker said he would pop the champagne later this week to celebrate his city's success in fighting the flood. On Saturday he helped pass out cigars to other city officials.

Walaker noted that while most floods have at least "one day of chaos" that didn't happen this year.

"The big thing is relief," he said. But he added, "We need at least another week here before we get it to the level we wanted it to be. There's still a lot of water down south."

The forecast over the next few days was favorable to speeding up the north-flowing river's fall: freezing temperatures overnight and only a small chance of rain.

"We're bobbling downward," National Weather Service spokesman Greg Gust said.

That was good news to residents here, who worried that the Red could stay at its crest for several days, straining temporary levees and sandbag dikes.

Fargo residents already have begun cleaning up the debris in low-lying neighborhoods, and highway crews were out measuring clay levees in preparation for removing the temporary barriers over the next week.

Elsewhere, residents went about their daily Sunday routines — walking their dogs, reading newspapers, going to church — without much worry over the Red.

At a coffee shop in Moorhead less than a block from the river, Fargo resident Terry Ziegelmann leisurely read the paper while eating a bagel.

"I don't see the nervousness in people you would normally see when you talk flood," said Ziegelmann, who has lived in the area since 1972. "We were prepared this year."

The weather also helped. Though the river initially rose faster than expected because of unseasonably warm weather, below-freezing temperatures over the past several days slowed the melting of snow and skies were free of major rain storms.

Flooding this year has been limited mostly to areas just along the Red River in Fargo and Moorhead, where 3-foot-high piles of sandbags have prevented water from reaching homes. In rural areas outside Fargo, more widespread flooding from Red River tributaries submerged several fields and washed out a few roads.

Two small northwestern Minnesota towns, Halstad and Oslo, were cut off from the outside world as the swollen Red swamped highways leading into them, leaving them virtual islands encircled by dikes.

The National Guard helped mend a private levee that breached around nearby Harwood early Sunday before lending its muscle to a sandbagging effort southwest of Fargo in tiny Kindred along the rising Sheyenne River, which feeds into the Red, Cass County sheriff's Capt. Bruce Jorgensen said. But there were no serious problems or emergencies.

Back in Fargo, Pastor Ona invited several families whose homes were damaged in last year's floods to pray during Sunday services.

"We want to publicly give thanks to God — he has helped us, we have been spared," Ona said. "Amen! Hallelujah!"

Church member Albert Frisinger, 54, said last year's flooding submerged his basement and parts of the first floor of his home. Frisinger had been recovering from gallbladder surgery at local hospital at the time and was evacuated because of the floods.

This year, Frisinger was able to watch the sunset on the eve of the river's crest from his new home near the Sheyenne River. Water crept to within about 30 feet of his home but wasn't a threat.

"A year ago I was crying," Frisinger said. "Today I'm happy."

The Q Line

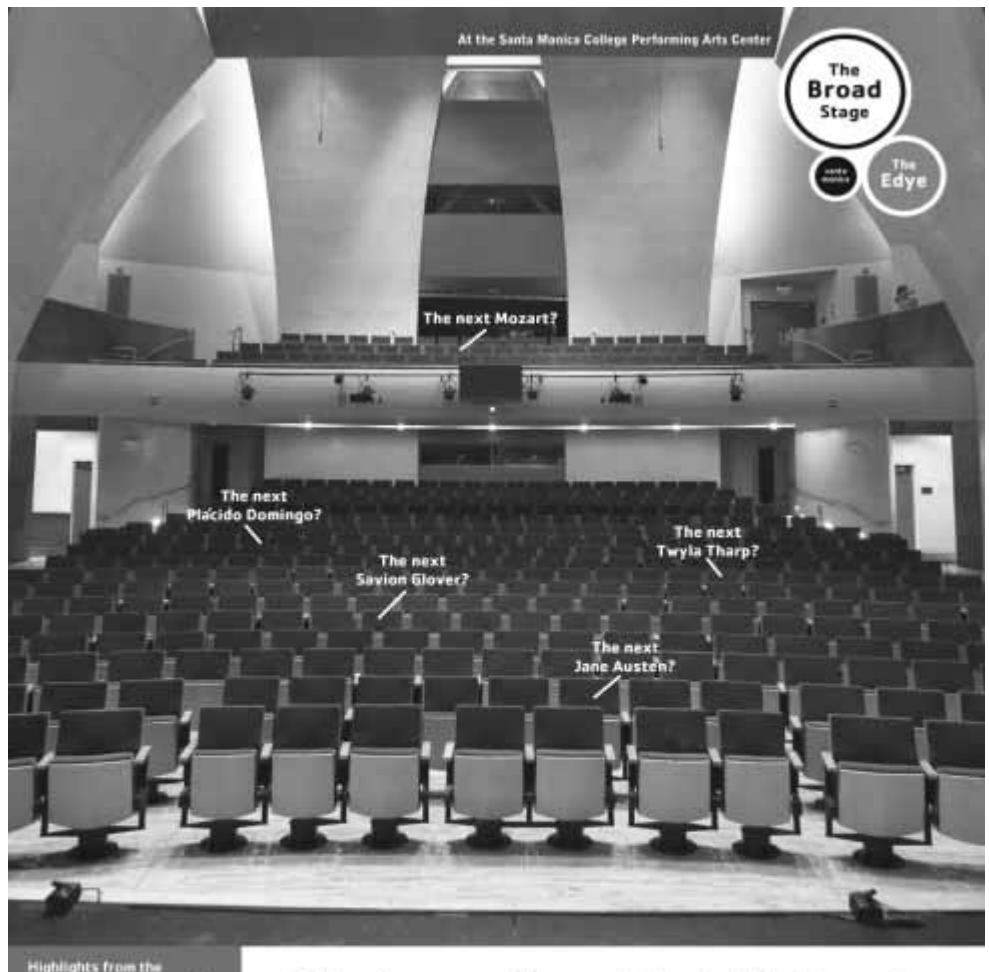

Preserving permits

Los Angeles school officials want to dramatically reduce the number of kids who leave their district to attend schools in places like Santa Monica. Local officials are concerned the plan will cost the district money and disrupt students' education.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Should Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District officials fight to keep those students or are they a drain on the budget to begin with?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press.

GARDEN SECURITY: To discourage animals from raiding the backyard compost, OrganicGardening.com recommends mixing kitchen garbage with soil or wood ashes before burying it.

Critter-proof composting

Dear EarthTalk

My husband and I want to start a garden this year. I really want to make compost from leftover food scraps and yard materials. He says it will attract unwanted animals, and refuses to agree to it. Is he right? If so, how do we deal with that issue in a green-friendly, non-lethal way?

Carmen Veurink
Grand Rapids, Minn.

IT'S TRUE THAT OUTDOOR COMPOST piles and bins can be a draw for wildlife—be it bears, rats, raccoons, skunks, opossums or some other creatures of the night—but there are ways to minimize the attraction. For one, make sure everyone in your household knows to keep meat, bones, fish, fat and dairy out of the compost. Not only will these items "overheat" the compost pile, they'll also stink it up and attract animals.

Otherwise, home composters should keep in mind that critters aren't actually eating the compost but are sifting through it to find fresh edible kitchen or garden scraps. To discourage animals, the website OrganicGardening.com recommends mixing kitchen garbage with soil or wood ashes before burying it in the hot center of your compost pile. Washington State's Department of Fish and Wildlife recommends not putting any food scraps in open compost piles, but says that if you must, bury them under at least eight inches of soil and then place a wire mesh barrier over the top held in place with a heavy object or two.

Putting your compost pile in a pest-proof container is another way to prevent tampering with your precious organic soil-to-be. Compost tumblers are popular because they mix and aerate by just being turned occasionally, and they keep raccoons, rats, dogs and other interlopers at bay. Otherwise, compost bins with wire tops or sealed lids work well too, but require a little more manual labor in terms of stirring.

Of course, another option would be to make the compost indoors using a worm bin. You can still put kitchen scraps in just like in a bigger outdoor compost pile, but without the worry of attracting wildlife. The website Instructables.com offers instructions for how to create your own worm composting bin. Another good source is the blog One-Change.com, which offers a step-by-step guide to the process.

"COMPOSTING CAN BE A REWARDING, ENVIRONMENTALLY FRIENDLY AND PEST-FREE EXPERIENCE"

The long and short of it is that if you know what you're doing, composting can be a rewarding, environmentally friendly and pest-free experience. For some great tips on how to get started, visit the website Composting101.com, a comprehensive and free guide for the home gardener on what to do and how to do it. Also, some forward-thinking cities such as Seattle are picking up food scraps with yard waste at the curbside along with garbage collection, and making huge amounts of commercially viable compost out of it. If your city or town offers a similar program you might want to consider saving yourself the trouble of doing it at home for the common good.

One more thing to keep in mind is that the garden itself may attract as much if not more wildlife than some food scraps in a compost pile. Strategically placed fencing and wire mesh can frustrate some critters enough to keep them moving along, but you can be sure some of your neighborhood wildlife will reap the harvest that you've sown. And as long as they leave enough for you, who can't live with that?

Korir wins for second time

tors were given over the elite men to win the prize awarded to the first runner of either gender to finish.

The new, predominantly downhill course was expected to be fast, but the layout proved to be one that allowed a large pack of runners to remain near the lead. A dozen men stayed in the lead pack well past the halfway point, and seven remained at the front through the 20th mile. For Korir, that meant abandoning the pursuit of the gender challenge bonus, which he won in 2009.

"When we got to 18 miles, and the group was still large, in my mind, I was like, 'Oh, boy, this is going to come to a (finishing) kick,' " Korir said. "So at that time, I didn't really pay attention to winning the challenge. Because you can't win the challenge without beating the guys."

The presence of Limo, who had the fastest career marathon time in the field, weighed heavily on Korir, prompting him to make his breakaway move with more than a mile remaining.

"I didn't want to wait until the last 400, the last 100," said Korir, "because I knew Limo is a very good track guy. He ran a very fast 5K time. So in my mind, I knew if it came to the last 100 or 200 meters, I would have a lot of work to do. So I decided to push earlier."

It was a push for which Limo had no response.

"It was a tough pace by that time," said Limo. "He was having a lot of strength."

Silvia Skvortsova of Russia moved to the women's lead in the second mile, but Kiplagat and Naser moved past her in the 21st mile, during the final significant climb of the route, before Kiplagat pulled away by turning in her three fastest splits over the final three miles. Naser finished 42 seconds back. Skvortsova was another minute back in third.

"Edna just pushed the pace, which was not the pace I was running for," said Skvortsova, who was also third in 2009. "I was staying with my pace, which is what I was planning to run."

It was the first marathon win for the 30-year-old Kiplagat, who cut almost 25 minutes off her previous best time.

"I was trying to run my best," she said. "So I am not surprised, not only at being the winner, but also the overall champion."

Besides the gender challenge bonus, Kiplagat received a $25,000 time bonus for finishing with a mark equal to a top-20 time from the 2009 season. For winning their respective divisions, she and Korir received $20,000 and a new car.

Korir became the first person to successfully defend his L.A. marathon title since Stephen Ndungo of Kenya won in 2001 and 2002.

The race drew a record 26,054 entrants, surpassing the 24,947 in 2006.

SM's Mallon finishes 11th

The lone Santa Monica-based elite runner in this year's Los Angeles Marathon, Julia Mallon, finished 11th amongst women with a time of 2 hours, 47 minutes, 9 seconds on Sunday.

Her stated goal was to finish in 2 hours, 45 minutes, which would have qualified her for the U.S. Olympic Trials. Her time was 1 minute, 9 seconds short of qualifying.

always something to see," she said of the route, which went through Downtown Los Angeles before heading through Hollywood, the Sunset Strip and Beverly Hills to reach Santa Monica. "It could have been a little bit better organized," she said.

MIckey Takahashi, who has run in seven L.A. marathons, gave the new route a good review but agreed things could have gone more smoothly. He said he waited an hour after finishing the race to retrieve the personal items he'd left with race organizers at Dodger Stadium to be transported to the finish line.

Michelle Mesta, 14, who ran her first marathon after training with the group Students Run L.A., called it an "overwhelming" experience, but one she was glad to have had.

"I learned how to push myself even more," she said.

Restaurant closure comes amid federal investigation

"The owner of The Hump also will be taking additional action to save endangered species.

"One such action will be to make a substantial contribution to one or more responsible organizations dedicated to the preservation of whales and other endangered species.

"The Hump apologizes to our loyal customers, the community of Santa Monica, and the public at large for our illegal actions. While the current difficulties faced by The Hump overshadow the many friendships formed over the years, we want our customers and friends to know how much we thank you for your support."

Federal prosecutors last week charged the owner and chef of the restaurant at the Santa Monica Airport with the illegal sale of whale meat in violation of the Marine Mammal Protection Act, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a maximum fine of $200,000.

While the restaurant immediately took responsibility once it was charged, the charges came only after an undercover sting operation that was orchestrated by animal activists and the associate producer of the Oscar-winning documentary "The Cove."

The activists used a tiny video camera to record their payment of $600 for the omakase, or chef's choice, which included eight pieces of whale. The activists bagged samples of the meat and sent them to the Marine Mammal Institute, where they were determined to be Sei whale, an endangered species.

City Hall is conducting its own investigation into The Hump. As the restaurant's landlord, the City Council planned to discuss this coming Tuesday whether or not to evict The Hump and its sister restaurant or to impose penalties as part of lease negotiations. The restaurants' owners were reportedly negotiating a new lease agreement with City Hall when the federal charges were filed.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ (1) Myesha Williams, 20, and a friend walked in to the police station in DeLand, Fla., in January and demanded to know why their photos appeared in local crime news on TV. Following questioning, police decided Williams was the woman on their surveillance video robbing a beauty shop and arrested her (but since Williams' friend had left before the actual robbery, she was not charged). (2) The burglar who stole already-filled prescription orders from the West Main Pharmacy in Medford, Ore., in January puzzlingly limited his take to the pickup-ready packages filed under "O." Police guessed that the burglar must have been after the commonly stolen "oxycodone" and was unaware that outgoing prescriptions are filed by customers' last names, not their medications.

■ (1) Last May, a 13-year-old boy in Galt, Calif., became the most recent inadvertent beneficiary of foolish behavior. Acting on a dare, the boy had chugged eight shots of tequila and lost consciousness. A routine CT scan at the hospital exposed an until-then-unrevealed brain tumor, and the boy is slowly recovering from his arduous but lifesaving surgery. (2) In January, James Shimsky, 50, became the most recent priest in the Catholic Diocese of Scranton, Pa., to be arrested for wayward behavior (with several recent instances reported in a January edition of News of the Weird). Shimsky was arrested on a Philadelphia street for allegedly buying cocaine.
