Red Cross makes fundraising splash

BY CATHERINE CAIN
Special to the Daily Press

SWINGERS The best things in life are free, but that shouldn't keep you from shelling out some cash for them anyway.

That's why you'll be asked to donate $1 for every glass of tap water you drink at your favorite local restaurant this week, up until March 28.

The Red Cross of Santa Monica is holding a fundraiser through UNICEF called Project TAP. The donations from participating restaurants will go toward providing clean drinking water to countries where people are living with unsanitary conditions.

"It's a fundraiser with UNICEF. Basically they have people all over the country recruit restaurants," Red Cross volunteer and Samohi senior Monica Choo said. "Restaurants ask all their customers who order tap water to donate a dollar."

The project began in 2007 in New York City. Last year, the project raised over $300,000, said Cory Russell, a Red Cross worker and one of five city coordinators hired for the project in the Los Angeles region.

The Project TAP Web site stated that every dollar buys enough water to supply one child with safe drinking water for 40 days — approximately 40 liters, Russell said.

Russell said the Red Cross of Santa Monica is the only Red Cross chapter currently involved in the project. This year, Red Cross volunteers — many of whom are high school and college students — have set out to recruit various local restaurants to the project. The community service group that goes out to recruit is comprised mainly of older teenagers and young adults, but Russell said middle school student volun-

Man stands up against Ye Olde King's Head

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

DOWNTOWN He goes out nearly every weekend, carrying the same red and yellow double-sided sign, marching up and down the same block of Santa Monica Boulevard, handing out leaflets about his grievances against a local pub.

Since November of 2007, F. Daniel Gray has been staging one-man weekend protests of Ye Olde King's Head, standing in the 200 block of Santa Monica Boulevard, hoping to tell passersby the story of how the former public school teacher from Los Angeles was asked to leave the British restaurant the previous year.

He is currently forced to stay at least 100 yards away from the restaurant because of a restraining order.

Gray said he was watching the World Cup final between France and Italy in July 2006 at the restaurant when an employee asked him to leave, saying that he was creating a disturbance.

"I was just sitting there," he said. "I said, 'according to law, you have to give me a reason.'"

"He said 'you leave or I will have you arrested.'"

After leaving the restaurant, Gray said he contacted the Santa Monica Police Department but wasn't successful in getting an officer to respond to the dispute. Still upset over the incident, Gray said he began corresponding via e-mail with the owner, who reportedly responded in one of the messages that someone had observed the customer push a woman at the restaurant.

"I said, 'you accuse me of a crime,'" Gray said. "You accuse me of being a criminal … and that is slander."

He filed a lawsuit claiming that the restaurant had made defamatory statements, litigation that was subsequently thrown out of court after a judge reportedly found the case to have no merit. That was when he began the protests.

"I have lies that have been told about me," Gray said.

In September 2008, a Santa Monica Court judge issued the restraining order. The order expires on Sept. 1, 2011.

Gray is no stranger to protests. He said he was fired from a teaching job with the Los Angeles Unified School District after carrying a sign that claimed the vice principal was racist. Gray unsuccessfully appealed the job termination.

Yaron Tilles, the attorney representing Ye Olde King's Head, said that while he could not comment on the specifics of the defamation lawsuit, Gray was asked to leave because he was causing a disturbance.

"That matter has been litigated and has been resolved," Tilles said. "Mr. Gray took it up on appeal and the trial court dismissal was upheld on the appeal as well."

The restaurant has also filed its own defamation claim against Gray. Tilles said he could not comment on either the restraining order or claim.

"Ye Olde King's Head is exploring and pursuing all of its rights and remedies with-

Texas man files lawsuit following brothel dispute

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS A Texas businessman has filed a federal lawsuit claiming a rural Nevada county violated his civil rights when it denied his application for a license to operate a brothel.

In a lawsuit filed March 5 in U.S District Court, Bruce Kahn, of Dallas, argued that a residency requirement in Nye County's license application violates the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution.

The Nevada residency requirement has no "rational basis," the complaint said.

Kahn's company, TCR Holdings LLC, tried to buy the Chicken Ranch, a legal brothel in the desert town of Pahrump, 65 miles from Las Vegas. The deal fell apart when Kahn was denied a license in 2007.

The lawsuit claims Kahn was a rejected because of a county ordinance that requires a license application to include evidence that the applicant has lived in Nevada for at least six months. Kahn's attorney, Clyde DeWitt, said his client told Nye County officials he would move to Las Vegas after he obtained his license.

"That wasn't apparently a satisfactory response," said the DeWitt, who practices in

Smoking out the truth

Editor:

Referring to my March 12 op-ed criticizing a proposal to further restrict smoking in Newport Beach, Jack Neworth accuses me of ignoring "the reason for smoking bans – the dangers of second-hand smoke." But it's the supporters of smoking bans who are ignoring a crucial danger: the danger of allowing the government to violate private property rights.

Is second-hand smoke obnoxious? Some of us think so – just as some of us think certain kinds of music are obnoxious. Can second-hand smoke pose certain risks? Perhaps – just as certain foods may put us in danger of developing various diseases. Property rights protect our ability to make these kinds of assessments, and thereby pursue our health and happiness. If you abhor second-hand smoke, for instance, you can refuse to allow smokers into your home or your restaurant.

But by the same token, you must recognize others' right to allow smoking in their home or restaurant. That means if the owner of your favorite diner wants to let customers light up, you can voluntarily choose to tolerate the smoke, try to persuade the owner to change his policy, or take your business elsewhere – but you can't force him to comply with your views. To be free to act on your own judgment, you have to leave others free to act on theirs.

While supporters of smoking bans may cheer today, they should keep in mind: there is no telling what voluntary activity a government that rejects property rights will ban tomorrow.

The numbers game

JUST HOW MANY HOMELESS ARE in Santa Monica? Determining the actual number of individuals is difficult.

A 1990 RAND study indicated there were 1,397 homeless people in our city. A city-authorized census conducted on Oct. 27, 1999 pegged the city's homeless at 1,037 persons. The Los Angeles Homeless Services Authority (LAHSA) conducted a county-wide census Jan. 25-27, 2005 and directly counted 1,192 homeless people. The figure was later adjusted upward to 1,991 to compensate for perceived shortcomings in the original count.

The Urban Institute's heralded "Ending Homelessness in Santa Monica: Current Efforts and Recommended Steps," published December 2006, referenced the 1,991 figure from the 2005 census and speculated there could be a total of 2,300 to 3,000 homeless here daily — in and out of services.

LAHSA's 2007 census, Jan. 23-25, found 1,506 persons in the city. That figure was recently adjusted to meet the parameters of this year's census methodology and revised downward to 999 persons. LAHSA's most recent census conducted on Jan. 27, 2009 counted 915 individuals. City sources say this represents an 8 percent decrease from the adjusted 999 person 2007 count.

Counts are done at night when it's easier to locate homeless individuals. While the Police Department's Homeless Liaison Program (HLP) team can point out the nooks and cubby-holes where transients bed down after dark, transients are still overlooked including those who are inaccessible or on private property. Hundreds of persons in out-of-town cold weather shelters may not be credited as "Santa Monica homeless" even though they spend most of their time here and utilize our services.

Different counting methodologies, theoretical projections and partial counts have led to variations in the estimated number of homeless in Santa Monica in a given 24-hour period. This is also why a pinpoint accurate count is unobtainable. Still, it's safe to say over the last decade, Santa Monica's daily homeless population has been fairly constant somewhere between 950 to 1,200 persons.

Numbers also vary slightly from year to year for a number of other reasons — the economy, weather and even police activity in adjacent communities. Despite dramatically increased city spending, more resources and added manpower in recent years, we still have about the same numbers of homeless — but not necessarily all the same individuals.

The services and programs described in the "2009 Annual Review of the City's Plan for Homeless Services ..."before the City Council tomorrow night for review are impressive. The Police HLP team, Human Services staff and city funded service providers are working hard on life-changing programs to get people off the street. This includes rehabilitative programs, both reunification with family and services "back home" and into housing, safe facilities or supervised care, here.

There are still many service-resistant individuals — some with mental problems or addictions — on the street by their own choosing or "milking the system." Others are hanging around for months or years waiting for free housing or, having applied for assistance, biding their time until welfare checks arrive.

Even with the new programs and efforts to secure housing as set forth in City Hall's latest "Action Plan to Address Homelessness" adopted by City Council last year and similar "calls to action" in previous years, numbers have not significantly decreased over time. That's because for every person who is sent "home" or who obtains housing, there's someone else lining up on our doorstep awaiting services.

Case in point. One program, West Coast Cares (now an outreach contractor with the Police Department), alone has sent 570 people "back home" since November 2006. Hundreds more have obtained housing, yet overall homeless numbers don't seem to be down 600 or 700 since 2006.

The city crossed the line between "helping our own" and attracting persons looking for handouts years ago. The needy and opportunists alike are enticed here with our envious array of services and expectations of a new apartment with an ocean view.

According to the "2009 Annual Review ..." a total of 3,575 homeless persons were provided with services via homeless programs funded by the city in fiscal year 07-08. Santa Monica spent directly over $3.4 million for core programs alone, excluding police and paramedic services.

Now, with well over 95 percent of the city's homeless from "out of town," we're on a treadmill, expending lots of effort and going nowhere. The big question is: In times of scarce money, losses in city revenue and trim-to-the-bone budgets, how long can we or should we continue this grand giveaway?

Also on tomorrow's council agenda (Consent Item 1-I), $445,000 more for two consulting firms to continue supplying transportation planning and design services for Expo Light Rail, Land Use and Circulation Element (LUCE) updates and 20th Street and the Cloverfield Boulevard traffic modifications that Pico neighbors don't want but City Council does. Additional consulting for the Planning Department? Tight Budgets? More gridlock? Can you say, "rubber stamp?"

Time for resistance

OVER THE PAST FEW MONTHS, I'VE heard from many Americans who feel they've lost the power to be heard by their government. From the repeated assaults on our civil liberties to the financial ruin brought about by irresponsible corporations and government officials, Americans feel helpless and beaten down.

Faced with a government that is not heeding their demands, many are simply giving up. But we are far from helpless, and this is not the time to surrender our rights.

Too often, we forget that America began with a revolution. America was born out of the sheer grit and determination of a rebellious group of colonists. These freedom fighters stood their ground. They knew they had rights. And when those rights were systematically violated, they resisted.

Thankfully, there are a growing number of Americans — what I like to refer to as "teaspoons of resistance" — who have not given up the fight and are choosing to exercise their First Amendment right to peaceably assemble and "petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

There are many examples. Let me cite a few. In more than 40 cities across the country, growing numbers of Americans have been taking to the streets and staging "tea party protests" to voice their objections to the government's out-of-control spending and its bailout of mega-corporations and bad mortgages. Once such event recently took place on the Santa Monica Pier. Although no tea is being tossed at these protests, they are gaining in popularity as a way for citizens to express their discontent with government spending gone haywire. In fact, organizers are planning a nationwide Tax-Day Tea Party protest.

Mindy McAlindon of Franklin, Tennessee, is taking a slightly different approach in voicing her discontent about the economy. She plans to bombard the White House with actual tea bags and protest notes. Protesters in other cities are planning to do the same for members of Congress.

More than 10,000 demonstrators in 100 locations across the country recently gathered at the offices of major banks whose behavior both before and since the government bailout "epitomize an era of CEO and corporate excess at the expense of broader prosperity that has weakened the economy."

And then there is Concepcion Picciotto, a small woman in her late 60s who has carried on the longest continuous act of protest in the United States. Since 1981, Picciotto has staged a round-the-clock peace vigil across from the White House in Lafayette Park in the hopes of ending U.S. interventionist wars and banning nuclear weapons. She has thus far managed to outlast four presidents — Ronald Reagan, George Bush, Bill Clinton, and George W. Bush — and she's planning to outlast Barack Obama.

We could use more tireless freedom fighters such as Concepcion Picciotto today. Yet she is merely one of a long and historic line of Americans to stage populist protests in the form of sleep-ins, sit-ins and marches to oppose government policies, counter injustice and bring about change.

Clearly, this is no time to stand silently on the sidelines. It's a time for anger and reform. Most importantly, it's a time for making ourselves heard. And there is no better time to act than the present.

What can ordinary citizens do? Instead of sitting around and waiting for someone else to change things, take charge. Never discount the part that everyday citizens play in our nation's future. You can change things, but there can be no action without education. Get educated about your rights and exercise them. Start by reading the Bill of Rights. You can do so online at www.rutherford.org. Or, if you want a copy to keep with you, e-mail me at johnw@rutherford.org and I'll send you a free one.

It doesn't matter whether you're protesting the economy, the war, the environment or something else altogether. What matters is that you do your part. As that great revolutionary firebrand Samuel Adams pointed out, "It does not require a majority to prevail, but rather an irate, tireless minority keen to set brushfires in people's minds."

Take some time right now and start your own brushfire for freedom. In the words of one Tea Party organizer, become "10-minute citizens. Take 10 minutes, six days a week and learn about the issues, and then call politicians, or email them, or call talk radio, or write letters to the editor and make your voice heard."

It's midnight in America right now. But the real question is, will there be a dawn? That's up to you and me. The future is in our hands.

Space shuttle dodges space junk

BY MARCIA DUNN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. Confronted with orbiting junk again, NASA ordered the astronauts aboard the linked space station and shuttle Discovery to move out of the way of a piece of debris Sunday.

Discovery's pilots fired their ship's thrusters to reorient the two spacecraft and thereby avoid a small piece from a 10-year-old Chinese satellite rocket motor that was due to pass uncomfortably close during Monday's planned spacewalk.

Mission Control said keeping the spacecraft in this position for about three hours — with Discovery's belly facing forward — would result in a slow, natural drag of about a foot per second, enough to get the complex out of the way of the 4-inch piece of junk.

Space junk has been a recurring problem for the space station, especially recently. Earlier this month, the three space station residents had to take shelter in their emergency getaway capsule when another piece of orbital debris seemed like it might come too close.

And just last week, right before Discovery's arrival, the space station almost had to dodge yet another piece of junk. The debris — from an old busted-up Soviet satellite — stayed at a safe distance.

"Space debris is becoming an ever-increasing challenge," flight director Kwatsi Alibaruho said Sunday evening. When it comes to dodging junk, "It's a big deal. It's very tiring. Sometimes it's exhausting."

The latest episode occurred as NASA scrambled to put together a spacewalking repair plan for a jammed equipment platform at the space station. "That was certainly exciting," Alibaruho said, chuckling.

On Monday — on the third and final spacewalk of Discovery's mission — astronauts plan to return to an equipment storage shelf that jammed and could not be deployed Saturday. The spacewalkers accidentally had inserted a pin upside down. On Sunday, Alibaruho said the catch for the mechanism is considerably stiffer than expected and engineers now believe the upside-down pin might not be the culprit after all.

Monday's spacewalkers — former schoolteachers Joseph Acaba and Richard Arnold II — will use all their strength this time to get the shelf properly deployed. They will have pry bars and hammers, just in case. If nothing works, the jammed platform will simply be tied down with sturdier tethers.

A hastily assembled team of experts spent Saturday night and much of Sunday trying to figure out how best to deal with the problem.

The storage platform — located on the long space station framework that holds all the solar wings — is meant to secure big spare parts that don't fit inside the space station but will be needed once NASA's shuttles stop flying. Because of all the pin trouble Saturday, the astronauts did not have time to deploy additional shelving on the opposite side of the station. That work was bumped to Monday's spacewalk.

Despite the recent incidents, Discovery's astronauts said they don't worry about space junk when they're outside.

"We have enough other risks and worries to take on as we go outside," said Steven Swanson, who took part in the first two spacewalks.

One item on Sunday afternoon's agenda — a slow day for both crews, with time off — was a full test of a urine processor that was delivered by Discovery. There were hiccups, unfortunately, that the astronauts were trying to resolve.

The urine processor is a critical part of the space station's new water-recycling system, which NASA would like to get working before the population at the orbiting outpost doubles to six at the end of May. The system, which arrived in November, is designed to convert astronauts' urine and condensation into drinking water.

Quirky dictionary featuring regional words gets federal funding

BY RYAN J. FOLEY
Associated Press Writer

MADISON, Wis. If you don't know a stone toter from Adam's off ox, or aren't sure what a grinder shop sells, the Dictionary of American Regional English is for you.

The collection of regional words and phrases is beloved by linguists and authors and used as a reference in professions as diverse as acting and police work. And now, after five decades of wide-ranging research that sometimes got word-gatherers run out of suspicious small towns, the job is almost finished.

The dictionary team at the University of Wisconsin-Madison is nearing completion of the final volume, covering "S" to "Z." A new federal grant will help the volume get published next year, joining the first four volumes already in print.

"It will be a huge milestone," said editor Joan Houston Hall.

The dictionary chronicles words and phrases used in distinct regions. Maps show where a submarine sandwich might be called a hero or grinder, or where a potluck — as in a potluck dinner or supper — might be called a pitch-in (Indiana) or a scramble (northern Illinois).

It's how Americans do talk, not how they should talk.

"It's one of the great American scholarly activities and people will be reading it for a century learning about the roots of the American language," said William Safire, who frequently cites the dictionary in his "On Language" column in The New York Times Magazine. "It shows the richness and diversity of our language."

Doctors have used it to communicate with patients and investigators have referred to it in efforts to identify criminals, including the Unabomber. Dialect coaches in Hollywood and on Broadway have used the dictionary's audio recordings of regional speakers to train actors.

Author Tom Wolfe has called the dictionary "my favorite reading."

In awarding the two-year, $295,000 grant that will get the final volume into print, National Science Foundation reviewers called the dictionary "one of the most visible public faces of linguistics," and a "national treasure."

The concept dates to 1889, when the American Dialect Society was formed. But the project did not start in earnest until 1965, when English professor Frederic Cassidy dispatched workers to 1,000 carefully chosen U.S. communities to interview residents and make audio recordings of their speech.

Workers often slept in "word wagons" — vans emblazoned with the UW logo — and even were chased out of a few Southern towns. The field work alone took five years and collected 2.5 million different words and phrases.

Since then, linguists have painstakingly researched the words using print materials to decide which should be included. The dictionary project has about a dozen workers and a $750,000 annual budget.

Cassidy died in 2000, still looking toward publication of the final volume. His tombstone reads: "On to Z!"

Hall, who has worked at the dictionary since 1975 and been editor since 2000, said the complete series of five volumes published by Harvard University Press will contain about 75,000 entries.

Draft entries for the final volume are still being reviewed. During a recent visit to their offices at UW-Madison's English department, one was tracing the history of the word "stone toter," a type of fish found in parts of the eastern U.S.

After the final volume is published, the next phase of the project will be to put the dictionary online. Hall envisions an online edition that will be updated constantly.

Hall said her all-time favorite word is bobbasheely, used in Gulf Coast states as a noun meaning a good friend or a verb to hang around with a friend. It comes from the language of the Choctaw tribes.

Two people interviewed in Texas and Alabama in the 1960s used the word. Further digging revealed that Nobel Prize-winning author William Faulkner had once used it in a novel, and it was used in the early 19th century by a colleague of former vice president and duelist Aaron Burr.

The dictionary has occasionally been put to serious use.

Forensic linguist Roger Shuy said he occasionally referred to the dictionary when he studied the Unabomber's writings in the 1990s for clues to the writer's identity. His profile didn't help catch Ted Kaczynski, but it turned out to be pretty accurate: He guessed the Unabomber had a doctorate, grew up near Chicago and was older than some investigators initially believed.

Hall said she has uncovered flaws in a test routinely given to diagnose a brain abnormality in which people have difficulty coming up with words for everyday items. The test's answer key does not allow regionalized answers; for instance, referring to a harmonica as a "mouth harp" is counted as a mistake. She hopes to help the authors rewrite the test to avoid misdiagnosis.

Hall also was sought for help by reporters who didn't understand President Bill Clinton's comment in 1993 that an Air Force official who had criticized him "doesn't know me from Adam's off ox."

Hall said the phrase is used west of the Appalachians in place of the more popular "he doesn't know me from Adam." The "off ox" refers to one of the two oxen once used to plow fields.

Wolverine spotted again in Nevada

BY MARTIN GRIFFITH
Associated Press Writer

RENO, Nev. A year after becoming the first documented member of its species spotted in the Sierra Nevada since the 1920s, a wolverine has been caught on research cameras again — only 15 miles away.

Pictures showing the wolverine in apparent good health have revived talk that the predator known for its ferocity could be reintroduced in California.

The wolverine has been sighted in recent weeks on private timber land north of Truckee, Calif., in the northern part of the mountain range, said Richard Callas, senior environmental scientist with the California Department of Fish and Game.

The wolverine's discovery on nearby national forest land a year ago surprised scientists, who feared the elusive animal was driven out of the Sierra long ago by human activity.

Scientists confirmed it was the same animal through DNA from hair samples collected at camera stations used for wildlife surveys on Sierra Pacific Industries land.

"Although we had hopes this wolverine might be a different individual, indicating more than one might exist in California, it is encouraging to discover that it has survived for at least a year in the wild," Callas said.

Scientists are unsure whether the wolverine remained in the area or returned to the area after making a long trek away. Wolverines can range over areas as large as 750 square miles.

Researchers also are still unsure of its origins. They think it could either be an immigrant from Idaho, 600 miles away, or a captive wolverine that had been released into the wild.

It appears the male wolverine can survive in the area for an extended period of time, said Jeffrey Copeland, wildlife ecologist with the U.S. Forest Service's Rocky Mountain Research Station in Missoula, Mont.

"The photos show it to be a big, fat, healthy animal," Copeland said. "It doesn't seem to be in any distress. He's made it a year and he's finding food."

While the California fish and game agency has no plans to reintroduce wolverines to the state, it could again discuss the concept, Callas said.

"There would be many factors to consider prior to reintroducing wolverine, including the presence of suitable habitat, competition with other species, disease and the source population," he said.

The wolverine would do well in California because of its ample habitat, said Copeland, also a founding director of the Wolverine Foundation based in Kuna, Idaho.

"If you were going to reintroduce them to some state, California would probably be as good as any," he said. "I'm sure there's ample food sources for them."

Copeland estimates there are only 250 to 300 wolverines in the lower 48 states, with most in the northern Rockies.

Past attempts by conservation groups to have the animal listed as an endangered species have failed. The Forest Service and U.S. Bureau of Land Management classify the wolverine as a sensitive species.

California's wolverine was found by accident. A graduate student at Oregon State University, Katie Moriarty, got a picture of it during a research project aimed at martens, another member of the weasel family.

DNA has linked the wolverine to a group in the Rocky Mountains, not a genetically distinct group in California.

If the wolverine wandered from Idaho, Copeland said, it probably was looking for a female as a mate.

"If it came from Idaho, it would be unusual for the wolverine to stay in the area because there's no reason to believe other wolverines are there," Copeland said. "The longer it stays there alone, the more I think it's a captive animal that was released or escaped."

It's uncertain whether the wolverine will remain in the area, Callas said.

"If it does leave the area, it may be detected" by camera stations being used throughout the Sierra to study carnivores, he said.

GET GROWING: Various vegetable growing techniques — combining crops, 'interplanting,' 'vertical gardening' and succession planting — can combine to yield a substantial bounty from even the smallest of backyard garden plots.

Bumping up crops

Dear EarthTalk

I want to start an organic vegetable garden in my yard and I would like to know how to combine crops to make better use of time and space.

Val Thomason
Denton, TX

MOST COMMERCIAL FARMS CONCENTRATE on growing a few select crops to supply a wide variety of customers, but gardening at home is a different story entirely. Most backyard food gardeners are looking to augment their family's diet with a variety of seasonal fruits, vegetables and herbs throughout the growing season.

For those of us who face time and space constraints in our gardening endeavors, combining crops within the same planting areas makes a lot of sense. Such techniques are particularly well-suited to organic gardens where chemical fertilizers and pesticides aren't used to artificially boost crop productivity.

The most common way to combine garden crops is via an age-old technique called interplanting, which in essence means planting various garden edibles with different growth and spacing attributes together in the same soil beds or rows. One example involves combining fast-maturing vegetables, such as lettuce, field greens or beets, with slower-maturing ones like winter squash or pole beans. According to the informational "Our Garden Gang" website, mixing tall plants, like sweet corn, peas or staked tomatoes, with low-growing crops such as melons or radishes, is another way to maximize diversity and yield.

Building on the idea of interplanting, Better Homes & Gardens magazine suggests that gardeners combine plants that produce vines and can be grown on trellises or fences along with low-growing crops. So-called "vertical gardening" concentrates much more production into each square foot of planting area. Also, the magazine reports, crops grown off the ground "tend to be healthier because they are less likely to contract fungus infections or soil-borne leaf diseases." Tomatoes, pole beans, cucumbers, snap peas, melons and winter squash are all examples of crops suitable for vertical gardening if staked or supported properly.

Another common technique often employed by "weekend" gardeners, organic or otherwise, is succession planting, which entails replacing a finished crop with a different one, or planting a single crop in small amounts over an extended period of time. One example would be to replace a spring crop with a summer crop, such as planting cucumbers — which thrive in warmer weather — where the peas had been growing earlier. Another form of succession planting involves staggering the planting of seeds from one specific crop throughout its growing season to ensure a continuing supply as long as possible.

Some crops particularly well-suited to succession planting include bush beans, lettuce, spinach and radishes, each of which have long growing seasons but can be harvested after only a few weeks. A related technique would be to plant both early- and late-maturing varieties of the same type of crop around the same time, and harvesting the resulting crops successively. Tomatoes and corn, for example, each come in varieties that ripen at different times during their respective growing seasons.

And while it may be easy to get carried away with edible gardening, don't forget to plant a few flowers to spruce up the look of your garden and also attract bees to help pollinate your food crops. Marigolds and sunflowers are good choices as they are relatively easy to grow organically and tend to attract lots of bees.

teers can still participate in the project.

"If some of them can't go out, they take care of the awareness events — outreach," Russell said. "If they prove themselves, they can go out with the high school juniors and seniors recruiting."

The recruiters inform restaurant managers about the project and what it takes to be involved. If the restaurant agrees to participate, they must pledge a certain level of activity, Russell said.

"We inform them what the project is and give them information for their employees," Choo said. "Sometimes they can be really difficult, but if we keep going back we can get a few here and there."

While many restaurants have agreed to support the project, and all of them will be eventually recognized, the Santa Monica Red Cross is currently paying particular attention to Swingers Diner, located on the corner of Broadway and Lincoln Boulevard.

"This is our first year doing it," Swingers General Manager Amanda Graham said. "We had wanted to do it last year but didn't have enough warning. This year we wanted to do it because of the recruitment."

Swingers and other restaurants will heavily encourage donations for their normally free glasses of tap water, but they have decided not to make the charge mandatory.

"We wanted to give people an option," Graham said. "We think people will be really excited about it."

Safe drinking water will be brought to countries based on their level of need. Russell said this year they are really focused on Togo, the Central African Republic and Haiti, which was recently hit by three Katrina-level hurricanes.

"For me personally, I'm a big believer in community. I just like to evenly hit everything, whether it's animals, people in other countries. I just want to make sure that everyone and everything gets the help it needs," Graham said. "It's something we haven't supported before, so I'm happy to support it."

both Las Vegas and Santa Monica.

The lawsuit names Nye County and the Nye County Licensing Board. Chief Deputy District Attorney Ron Kent was not available for comment Friday. Commissioner Andrew "Butch" Borasky, chairman of the licensing board, declined to comment.

According to the lawsuit, Kahn began negotiating to buy the bordello in September 2006 from its owner, Western Best Ltd. When a deal was reached, TCR Holdings deposited $150,000 earnest money into an escrow account pending a license to operate.

Kahn forfeited his earnest money after the board denied his application in June 2007, according to the complaint. Kahn claims he spent at least $80,000 in his effort to obtain the brothel license.

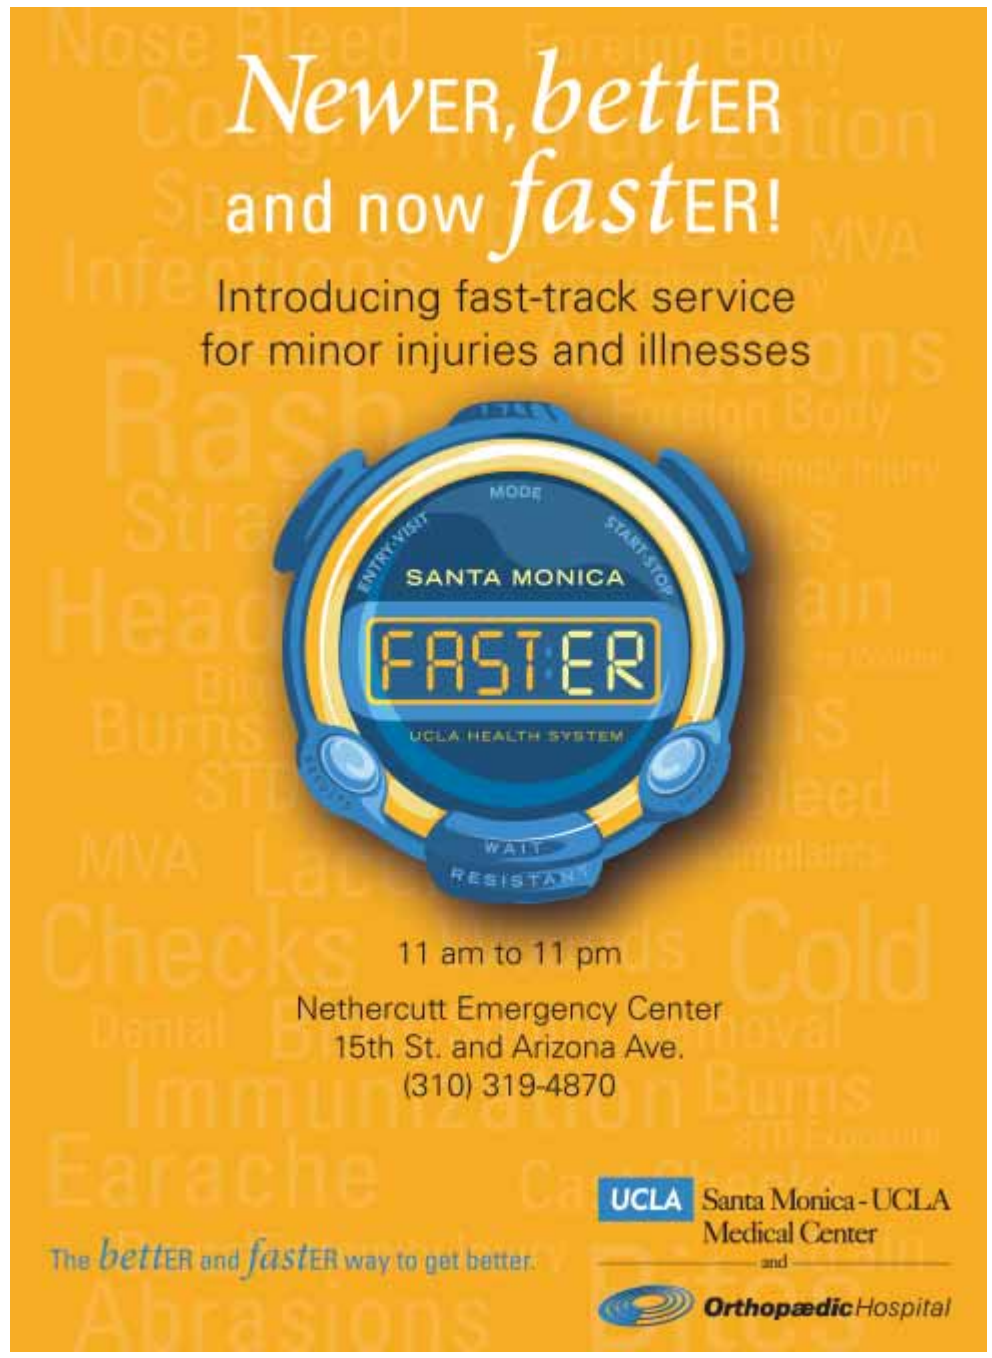

The complaint seeks a declaration that Nye County's residency requirement violates the due process clause of the Constitution, as well as a clause that prohibits states from enforcing laws that "abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States."

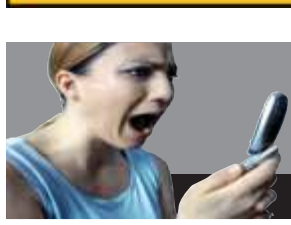

It also seeks an injunction that would prohibit Nye County from enforcing the residency requirement.

DeWitt, who primarily represents clients from the adult entertainment industry, said Kahn owns no other brothels.

"The bottom line is: As far as he or I can see, he is qualified to get a license, and that's all he's after, along with some money," the lawyer said.

Ahlquist stars on stage and behind scenes

an alley behind the Third Street Promenade.

Not only is he a regular on stage, but he's a permanent fixture behind the scenes.

Since 2007, Ahlquist has been the general manager and artistic director of the Downtown entertainment venue, booking shows, writing the curriculum for courses offered at its school, and promoting performances to the community.

He has appeared in theaters across the country with improv group Mission Improbable, but managing one was always his dream.

"I don't have to get my lunch shift covered to go to rehearsal. I don't have to find someone to fill my temp job in order to make a poster for the show that I'm in," he said.

The Westside Eclectic is a relative newcomer to the Santa Monica entertainment scene, founded in 2005 by husband-and-wife team Mark and Alison Campbell, opening a theater that also doubles as a comedy school.

It has attracted prominent names in comedy since its founding, from Margaret Cho, a performer in one of the WE's shows, to Adam Sandler and Andy Dick, both of whom came to watch.

It was an injury sustained when Ahlquist was a gymnast at the University of Massachusetts, sidelining him for a season, that led to an introduction to improvisational comedy.

Left with an abundance of free time from the injury, Ahlquist decided to take acting classes where he met a student who told him about auditions for an improv group called Mission Improbable.

He made the cut and along with a core group of six comedians, Ahlquist began pursuing a new passion.

"I played a lot of jazz music in high school and my favorite part was the improvising part," he said. "The gratification was so pure and immediate and I felt the same about improv."

"You never knew what was going to happen — if you sucked, you sucked so badly that you're terrible, but if you're great, it's so amazing that it was better than any written show because the stakes are so much higher."

In the beginning the group performed the occasional shows on the road, eventually going on a full-time tour to theaters and universities when its popularity and demand grew stronger.

"We would be in cafeterias beside Snapple machines and at county fairs and everyplace you could do it," he said. "It was cool because it taught me how to make a show work no matter what."

Today, the improv group has about 25-30 performers who put on about 200 shows a year. Ahlquist remains involved to this day.

More than a year after moving to Los Angeles from Chicago, Ahlquist, who was waiting tables at Houston's in Pasadena, saw a job listing for a general management position at The Westside Eclectic.

He came in energetic for the interview, leaving with a good sense that he had landed the job, only to lose out to another candidate.

"I said if it doesn't work out, then let me know," Ahlquist said.

A week later, he got a call back.

Daniel Granof, The Westside Eclectic's vice president of strategy and business development who joined around same time Ahlquist was hired, said that his colleague came in with a gung ho attitude and took what had been established and ran with it.

"He has been able to use his experience and contacts from all his years performing to build a really good school," Granof said.

The school offers courses for six skill levels, catering to everyone from stay-at-home moms looking for another hobby to aspiring comedians. Every class puts on a public performance at the theater.

Granof is also enrolled in the school and is at level four, calling himself a novice performer.

"Being someone who is taking classes and has gotten to see Lloyd perform a lot, I have a much greater appreciation for what he is able to do," he said. "He just brings an energy to every scene and every performance."

For Ahlquist, who has branched out to stand-up and sketch comedy, the thrill with improv is all about the connection with other on-stage performers.

"You're tapping into this group's mind than your own head," he said. "It's something bigger than you, which is sort of addicting to me."

Long Beach Poly wins fourth straight state title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO Long Beach Poly used its depth and balance to win its fourth consecutive girls' Division I state title, beating Monte Vista of Danville 57-33 Saturday to tie a Calfornia record for most consecutive championships.

The Jackrabbits (32-3) got 12 points from Ta'Nitra Byrd and 10 from Southern California-bound Monique Oliver, but nine different players scored for Poly, and 11 had rebounds.

Still, the Jackrabbits had to work harder for the win than many expected.

The Mustangs (29-3) jumped out to 6-1 and 10-7 leads in the first quarter. Poly didn't take its first lead until 6:22 of the second quarter, and carried only a two-point advantage into halftime.

Niveen Rasheed led Monte Vista with 16 points. Only one other player made more than one basket.

Monte Vista stayed close through the first two minutes of the third quarter by outrebounding Poly, and also refusing to buckle under the Jackrabbits' defensive pressure.

The Mustangs hung back in a zone, daring Poly to make outside shots, and the Jackrabbit starters responded by going 1 for 13 from the field in the first half.

But Poly broke the game open early in the third quarter, going on a 15-3 run to take a 36-23 lead.

Oliver hit a 3-pointer and handed out two assists, but coach Carl Buggs had called a timeout during the run to make sure that Poly's post players got plenty of touches. The move paid off. Byrd hit three free throws during that span, and Monte Vista never threatened thereafter.

Long Beach Poly joined Bishop Montgomery of Torrance, Brea Olinda, Point Loma of San Diego and Sacred Heart Prep of Atherton on the girls' side, and Price of Los Angeles on the boys', in winning four state championships in a row.

Poly defeated Santa Monica High School in the first round of the tournament.

Westchester wins Division I boys hoops title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO Dominic O'Connor scored 14 points as Westchester of Los Angeles defeated McClymonds of Oakland, 49-31, to win their fifth California boys' Division I championship at Arco Arena on Saturday.

The top two teams in California didn't exactly dazzle with fundamentals as neither team ever got into a flow offensively — in large part due to the defensive effort by both.

In the end, though, Westchester (35-2, No. 1 in the state and No. 5 in the nation) was able to convert more of its opportunities than McClymonds (29-2 and No. 2 in the state). Santa Monica High School was eliminated in the first round of the tournament by Dominguez.

Dwayne Polee Jr. had nine points and 10 rebounds for Westchester, while Damon Powell led McClymonds with 12.

The Warriors, shot just 20 percent from the field, missing 39 of their 49 shots.

McClymonds threatened to break its record-low of 25 in a game, set two years ago by scoring just 11 points in the first half. McClymonds went 5:04 without scoring, and 8:58 without a basket, thanks to Westchesterís outstanding defense.

The Warriors had to battle for every shot attempt, and though they played solid defense on their end, the Comets were able to get out and run often enough to lead 24-11 at halftime.

McClymonds cut the lead to seven, 26-19, in the third quarter, but an O'Connor steal and a Jordin Mayes jumper ended that run and started a 7-0 Westchester burst that all but decided the game.

Westchester also won titles in 1998, 2002, 2003 and 2005, and has never lost a state championship game. McClymonds, the defending California Division I champion, also lost in 2007.

Union files grievance over Dodgers contributions

BY RONALD BLUM
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK The baseball players' association filed a grievance against the major league clubs after the Los Angeles Dodgers said charitable donations will be required in future player contracts.

Manny Ramirez agreed to make a $1 million donation to the Dodgers Dream Foundation when he accepted a $45 million, two-year deal from Los Angeles on March 4.

"Every future Dodger will be asked to fill in a blank line," Los Angeles owner Frank McCourt said Thursday. "They're making a lot of money, these players. We won't tell them how much to contribute, that wouldn't be right."

Not so fast, said the Major League Baseball Players Association. The grievance was filed Friday and, unless settled, will be decided by arbitrator Shyam Das.

"Players are free to choose to make donations to club charities, but clubs can't require such donations by contract," union general counsel Michael Weiner said Saturday. "Provisions that require players to make contributions to clubs' charities are unenforceable under the basic agreement. It's not a subject that the Basic Agreement permits individual bargaining on."

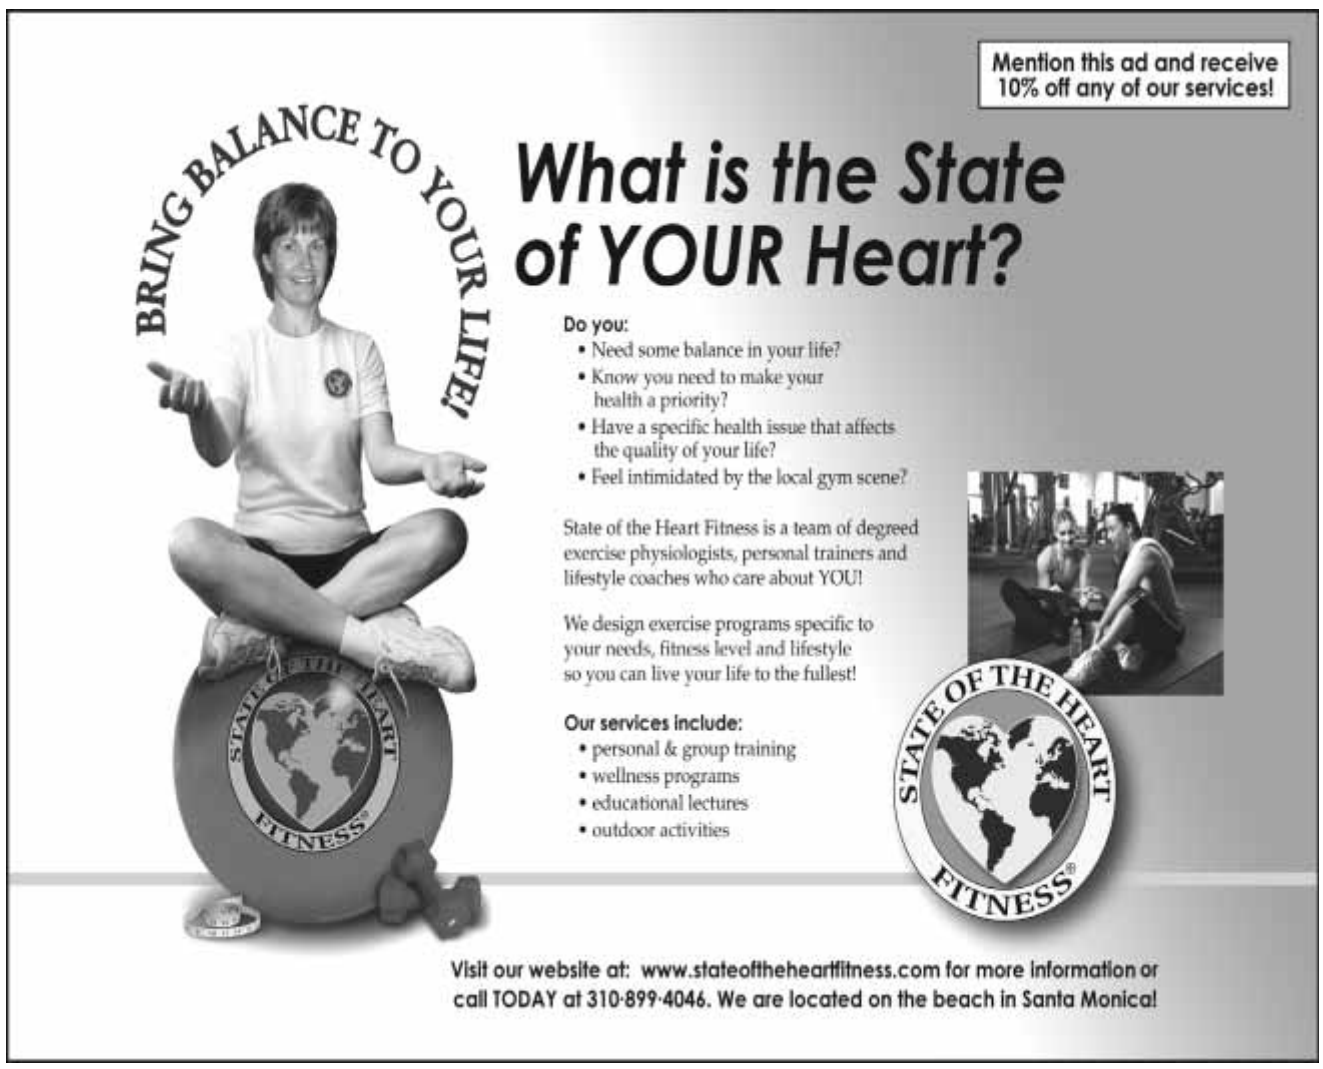

Article II of baseball's labor agreement states contracts can include special covenants "which actually or potentially provide additional benefits to the player."

Rob Manfred, baseball's executive vice president of labor relations, said the provisions are allowed. Many players and teams have included them in contracts.

"As long as they are individual club policies, a club is free to bargain hard over what it is looking for," Manfred said. "These clauses are freely negotiated by individual players and clubs. There's no element of coercion in those negotiations. We're at a loss to understand how the MLBPA could possibly take the position that making a charitable donation does not provide a benefit to the player."

McCourt sounded surprised by the union's litigation.

"I have not seen the grievance, but I find it odd that in these challenging times, that we encounter a complaint against the idea of players giving back to the communities that support them," he said in a statement. "We believe there are qualities that represent the Dodger way. The player's contributions to the team, appreciation of the fans, and impact on such a supportive community all combine to help our organization live up to our core values. We seek players who embrace these values. The Ramirez provision is a blank line to be filled in with whatever number a player chooses."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ If you make up your mind and focus, manifesting becomes easy. Push comes to shove with a boss if you aren't careful. You have the diplomatic skills necessary to make what you want happen. Tonight: Study a problem, and view all different sides before coming to a conclusion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Others push to have you see a situation their way. The more pushing, the more likely you are to pull back and look for a better response. Let a difficult associate know exactly what you are thinking. Tonight: Where people are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Your ability to deal with others could be mitigated by an associate who is very challenging, demanding and controlling. Fatigue marks your decisions later today. Mobilize supporters to achieve greater leadership and effectiveness. Tonight: A must appearance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Work with a partner directly. He or she can be your best friend if approached properly. Don't let another's power play drop immediately. Tonight: Seek out an expert; surf the Web; find new solutions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Let others seek you out and ask for advice. You have a lot going on around you, and are sorting out your priorities. Do you feel as if someone is trying to pull the wool over your eyes? Tonight: Listen to suggestions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Accomplish as much as you can. Your creativity emerges and might actually be disconcerting to someone. If you feel under the weather, let someone else pitch in. You don't need to do everything. Let someone else pick up some of the overflow. Tonight: Listen.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Your imagination knows no limits on a good day. Charge this endless resource into problems, especially those involving a security-related matter. Others can be demanding, if nothing else, and you need to go with the flow. Tonight: Burning the midnight oil.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You come from a very solid point of view, and you know it. Being confident is one thing; being cocky is another issue. Add a touch of modesty, and your message will come through. Your creativity bubbles forth later in the day. Tonight: Follow your imagination.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Your ability to get past a problem and work within the social constraints could be more important than you realize. You might sense where someone else is coming from and understand a lot more about his or her motives than he or she does! Tonight: Happily head home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Be aware of expenses and what is happening around you, though you might not want to believe that your personal life has the implications that it does. Be aware of what others feel as well. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Be yourself, above all. Though many people have trouble digesting your multifaceted personality, you should not change. Be aware of naturally imposed limitations. Tonight: Pay bills first.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★ You could feel a little under the weather. Realize what is happening behind the scenes. Also, know that you can make a difference by not stepping forward just yet. Listen to what is going on, and act on this information tomorrow. Tonight: Do what feels natural.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ In Airdrie, Alberta, in January, police officers responded to a report from the Ralph McCall Elementary School that a man was standing in the yard yelling with a portable loudspeaker toward a group of frolicking kids, calling, "Girls in the field, come over to my truck, come pet my dog." When alarmed adults nearby approached him, the man quickly got in his truck and took off.

■ In response to a bomb threat called in to Hays High School in Buda, Texas, in February, Principal Shirley Reich directed the evacuation of all students, who were kept out for two hours until the all-clear. The building had not been completely cleared, though. Reich had ordered that eight special-needs students, who presented mobility problems for the staff, be kept inside during the evacuation, and afterward Reich defended her decision, crediting herself for compassion because it was cold out.
