Gaps in radiation monitoring system detected

GARANCE BURKE
NOAKI SCHWARTZ
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO Parts of America's radiation alert network have been out of order during Japan's nuclear crisis, raising concerns among some lawmakers about whether the system could safeguard the country in a future disaster.

Federal officials say the system of sensors has helped them to validate the impact of nuclear fallout from the overheated Fukushima reactor, and in turn alert local governments and the public. They say no dangerous levels of radiation have reached U.S. shores.

In California, home to two seaside nuclear plants located close to earthquake fault lines, federal authorities said four of the 11 stationary monitors were offline for repairs or maintenance last week. The Environmental Protection Agency said the machines operate outdoors year-round and periodically need maintenance, but did not fix them until a few days after low levels of radiation began drifting toward the mainland U.S.

About 20 monitors out of 124 nationwide were out of service earlier this week, including units in Harlingen, Tex. and Buffalo, N.Y. on Friday, according to the EPA.

Gaps in the system — as well as the delays in fixing monitors in some of Southern California's most populated areas — have helped to prompt hearings and

Teacher files appeal to block release of records

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

DOWNTOWN A math teacher at Santa Monica High School who was found to have violated the school district's sexual harassment policy has filed an appeal to block the release of his personnel records.

The Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District was ordered to release the records earlier this month by Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Ruth Kwan, who felt the public's right to know what kind of contact Marken had with a 13-year-old female student outweighed his right to privacy.

Marken's attorneys filed the appeal on March 18. Kwan ordered the school district to keep the personnel records sealed until the appeal is heard, which may not happen for at least six months, possibly a year, those familiar with the appeals process said.

Superintendent Tim Cuneo told the Daily Press that the district was prepared to release the records to parents, but will abide by the judge's order.

Michael Chwe, a parent with two children at Samohi, filed a California Public Records Act request in December with the superintendent's office in an attempt to learn more about the investigation involving Marken.

That was after more than 140 people signed a letter expressing disapproval of the district's handling of the case, asking for more information about the incident.

The school district was in the process of responding to Chwe's request when Marken filed a motion to block the release of the records.

Chwe said he has filed a lawsuit against the school district, claiming it failed to turn over the personnel file in a timely fashion, allowing Marken time to file a request for an injunction barring its release.

In her ruling, Judge Kwan said the viola-

COMMUNITY PROFILES | BOB EISENHART

Letter carrier punches out after four decades

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

DOWNTOWN On March 2, Bob Eisenhart hung up his hat at the Post Office on Santa Monica Boulevard for the last time after 43 years on the job.

His union, the Letter Carriers 1107, gifted him with a gold watch to commemorate the event, and the office gave him a plaque before he walked out the door.

He didn't wait around long enough to get his 40-year pin.

"I'd had enough," Eisenhart said.

Eisenhart was slinging mail and dodging angry canines in Santa Monica when it was still a sleepy beach town, with shacks on the sand where multi-million dollar homes now stand and family restaurants in spaces occupied by international hotel chains.

He worked three routes in his tenure, the third and final he held for 29 years.

"Bob was around when we were still using three-wheeled vehicles to deliver mail," said Tim Thornton, a mailman who has been with the Santa Monica Post Office for 25 years.

Thorton described Eisenhart as "the kind of guy who would get to work a bit early just to make coffee for the guys," when "the guys" had to be in the office by 5:30 or 6 a.m.

Eisenhart never intended to be a mailman. In fact, as he made a living working at a carpet store, he aspired to a position he felt was a great deal more glamorous.

"I wanted to be an FBI agent," he said.

As he researched his chosen field, the 20-year-old Eisenhart came to an unexpected conclusion — to work at the FBI, you needed to be versed in accounting, and accounting was, well, boring.

Eisenhart's backup, the Los Angeles Police Department, wouldn't take him for another year, and the newly-married young man now had extra motivation to start his career in a hurry.

Eisenhart met Corrine, his wife to be, on a fluke. When he was in high school, a friend signed up for a dating service at the Teenage Fair, basically the 1960s equivalent of Match.com.

Unfortunately for Eisenhart's friend, you had to be 16 to get the five names and phone numbers of the women to contact, and he was a year short, so Eisenhart collected the names and, on a whim, called Corrine.

"I didn't tell her for years," he said, laughing.

Ashley Archibald ashley@smdp.com

EISENHART

With his dreams of law enforcement temporarily sidelined — and Corrine less-than-thrilled by the thought of her husband joining the organization after the violent 1965 Watts riots in Los Angeles — Eisenhart widened his job hunt and found a position at the Post Office. It paid 30 cents more per hour than the spot at the carpet store and came with health care, a boon to a soon-to-be family man.

Eisenhart started with the Post Office in 1968, just two years before President Richard Nixon would turn the organization from a government department to an independently-run mail monopoly.

At the time, the office was a government agency responsible to Congress, and the Postmaster General held a place in the President of the United State's cabinet.

Postal workers delivered mail in government-issue blue Pintos, and later in their private vehicles after safety concerns about the Fords came to light.

Tuesdays and Wednesdays were particularly rough, because all of Santa Monica, it seemed, subscribed to Life and Look magazines, which added tens of pounds to the mail load that the men and women would haul about, Eisenhart said.

Letter carriers arrived in the wee hours of the morning and got off their routes when they had finished up for the day, no matter the time, and hit the road, or the bar.

Eisenhart, who didn't drink, would enjoy a cold root beer at a bar by the Santa Monica Pier after he got off his route, which hit a series of apartment complexes on San

U2 rocker's project raises questions about green certification

NOAKI SCHWARTZ
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES When U2 guitarist The Edge announced plans to build a cluster of mansions overlooking the Pacific Ocean, he promised the homes would look like nothing more than scattered leaves on the ridgeline and boast the country's most sought-after green building seal.

Environmental groups, state and federal officials and even some neighbors have not been sold. The green designs are great, they said, but just don't build your houses in one of the most environmentally sensitive areas in Southern California.

Critics say the proposed project in oceanfront Malibu is an example of how developers can follow the rules, but still violate the spirit of the national green building program called the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, or LEED.

While many acknowledge the program, is a step in the right direction, critics say dressing up homes, office buildings and hotels in a green veneer gives short shrift to one of the most critical elements of all: whether anything should be built there.

"You can have a really environmental project that scores incredibly well on LEED but if it's placed in a pristine area is it truly an environmental project?" said Mark Gold, executive director of Heal the Bay, which opposes the project.

"Most people in the environmental community would say 'No' and that's something that LEED need to take into greater consideration."

The Green Building Council, which oversees LEED, says the system is meant to be flexible. Whether or not a building or home should be built in a certain area is primarily left up to local and state authorities.

"It's a balancing act," said Nate Kredich, the nonprofit's vice president of residential market development, who disagrees with the idea that they don't give enough weight to siting.

Bet on black

Editor:

I first read about Gov. Jerry Brown's proposal to cut off funding for community redevelopment in the SMDP.

In the weeks since, the proposal has wound its way through the legislature and in the mean time comes word of the many examples how this money had been diverted, converted, and other wise put to other use than what the treasure was directed to address – redevelopment.

I really got a vicarious kick at the notion that some city managers must have been getting sudden heartburn attacks thinking that any funds thus commandeered would have had to be replaced as other cities like Santa Monica went to work spending and allocating what funds were on the books rather than risk a cutoff or worse, a claw back by the state?

When I read that the city had floated a $60 million line of credit with Wells Fargo, I really was not sure if the city was in a lead, follow or get out of the way mode?

Lead to be pragmatic I thought, because ... the city was putting itself on the line to see to it that these projects were in fact going to get funded independent of the Brown plan.

Follow I thought, in deference to the state of the economy, and the governor's determination to address the budget shortfall with the city shouldering the fair share of the state's burden.

And getting out of the way, in steering clear of Brown's plan altogether and securing the city's own funding.

While [recently] the Brown proposal was voted down, it certainly is not over, the deal making and second guessing continues in Sacramento and Brown is by no means abandoning any or all alternatives to reducing California's historic economic slide and the real economic and political tea leaf readers know it.

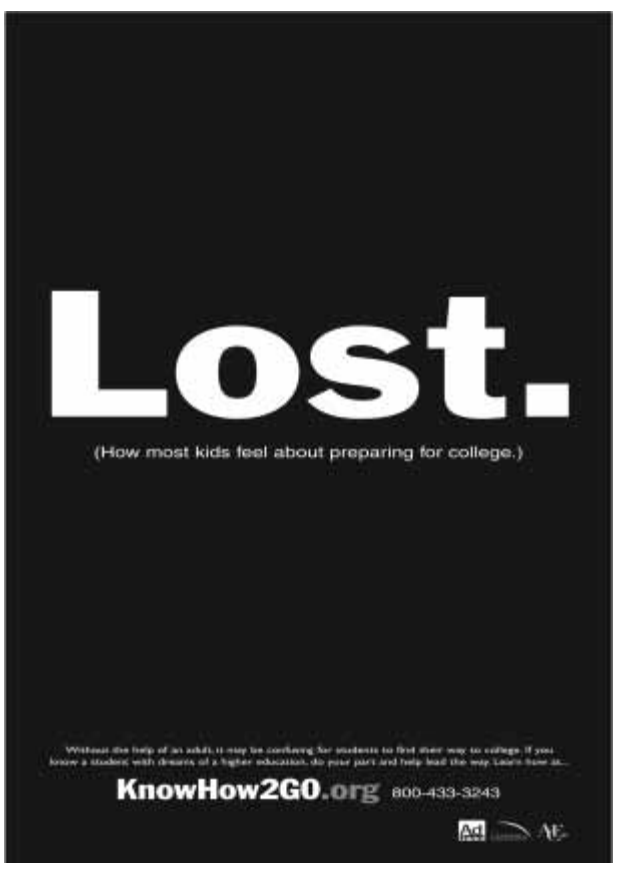

And that's why I think that the city did neither of the above. What the city did was hedge its bet against any action, or delay, for that matter.

Either way, I have come to the conclusion that the city's tax payers are going to foot yet another bill one way or the other is my bet as the budget deliberations here and in Sacramento play out.

My money remains on Brown's black, not the city's red.

Bets please, round and round she goes where she stops nobody knows, place your bets, ladies and gentleman.

Hines' sow's ear

THE CITY COUNCIL EARLIER THIS WEEK wrestled with the Bergamot Transit Village Center, a proposed 960,000 square-foot development proposed for the former 7.16 acre Paper Mate pen site bounded by 26th Street, Olympic Boulevard and Stewart Street.

Houston-based developer Hines purchased the "gateway" property in August, 2007 for $75 million. It's across Olympic from a future Expo Light Rail stop and the Bergamot Art Complex.

Hines executive vice president Colin Shepherd gave a 10-minute presentation on the proposed project, complete with site plans and renderings of proposed buildings, streets and green spaces. With a few exceptions, everyone despised it.

Village? No way. Hines' "village" consists of 566,573 square feet of "creative" office space, ground floor retail and 344 units of housing dressed as a 1960s-era Orange County business park complete with grid layout and five, large, boxy buildings — some as high as 86 feet. Residential blocks were segregated from bland office blocks. A round thematic structure that looked like a giant water tank or toilet bowl commanded the corner of 26th and Olympic.

Council members and residents alike complained that the hideous project failed to connect with the neighborhood, the buildings weren't attractive or humanly scaled and it was neither particularly pedestrian- or bicycle-friendly.

Shepherd told council this concept was in the works for four years and in compliance with the new Land Use and Circulation Element (LUCE). He assured everyone that the project wouldn't generate traffic as workers and residents would gladly give up their cars and use light rail and bicycles, which is delusional in my book. A new signalized intersection at Olympic east of 26th alone will surely exacerbate the horrendous traffic in the area even more.

Did Shepherd think he could throw slop on the plate and because Hines and its associates had raised thousands of campaign dollars for five out of seven council members, this would be swallowed with gusto? I seriously question whether Hines (whose international reputation as a top-notch developer and property manager took a big hit with this mess) is capable of delivering a satisfactory project. Any chance of an exciting development now seems remote.

But instead of wrangling about articulated walls and bike racks, this project's basic concept should be totally rethought. For example, keep the height limit at the present zoning — 45 feet — to reduce the "village's" density by 40 percent or about 500,000 square feet, not the nearly 1 million Hines proposes.

Make it primarily residential. Around 500 housing units could be built on the site along with about 30,000 square feet of real neighborhood-serving retail such as markets, a coffee house and dry cleaner. The surrounding office complexes — Lantana, Agensys, Yahoo! Center, Water Garden, MTV, to name a few — have little or no residential components.

A mostly residential project would leave plenty of land for green space. Parking for 1,000 cars — half of what is proposed — would suffice. And there would be a similar reduction in motor vehicle trips. Housing would complement existing and future neighborhood office, creative and production/studio projects. With a combination of market rate, affordable, art/studio workspace housing, you can't get any more sustainable than being within walking or biking distance of your job.

Hines contributions to City Council campaigns loomed like a giant shadow over the discussion about the Bergamot Transit Village's poor design and dubious community benefits. After council members refused to implement residents' requests for additional disclosure of campaign contributions a few weeks ago, a citizens group formed to research and publish developer campaign contributions.

The Santa Monica Transparency Project (SMTP) consisting of people from the Santa Monica Democratic Club, Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights, The Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City, citywide neighborhood groups and Common Cause, collected and analyzed political donations to council members from the last two elections.

Hines donated $14,925 to Terry O'Day, $13,725 to Bob Holbrook, $4,975 to Gleam Davis, $3,998 to Pam O'Connor and $4,250 to Richard Bloom (in 2008). In March 2008, Hines contributors retired O'Connor's entire $4,600 2006 campaign debt. Some donations were given directly to council candidates, while others were submitted on the candidates' behalf to help pay for mailers. Councilmembers Bobby Shriver and Kevin McKeown didn't accept donations from Hines, SMTP reported. Shriver said they never offered him any money.

Holbrook bristled that $13,725 wouldn't buy his vote, saying he had that much if not more in his bank account, while O'Connor rambled on with a detailed account of her "ex parte" communications with Hines representatives. O'Connor seemed to be rubbing everyone's face in what to disclose as if to say, "You brought this up. Now, you'll get all of it."

SMTP disclosed that as an independent expenditure, Hines and its attorneys also contributed $17,500 to a series of controversial and "deceptive" campaign mailers from Santa Monicans for Quality Government that featured two council members who were recently elected.

Sit tight. This saga will go on for another four years.

YURI KAGEYAMA
Associated Press

TOKYO Mounting problems, including badly miscalculated radiation figures and inadequate storage tanks for huge amounts of contaminated water, stymied emergency workers Sunday as they struggled to nudge Japan's stricken nuclear complex back from the edge of disaster.

Workers are attempting to remove the radioactive water from the tsunami-ravaged nuclear compound and restart the regular cooling systems for the dangerously hot fuel.

The day began with company officials reporting that radiation in leaking water in the Unit 2 reactor was 10 million times above normal, a spike that forced employees to flee the unit. The day ended with officials saying the huge figure had been miscalculated and offering apologies.

"The number is not credible," said Tokyo Electric Power Co. spokesman Takashi Kurita. "We are very sorry."

A few hours later, TEPCO Vice President Sakae Muto said a new test had found radiation levels 100,000 times above normal — far better than the first results, though still very high.

But he ruled out having an independent monitor oversee the various checks despite the errors.

Officials acknowledged there was radioactive water in all four of the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex's most troubled reactors, and that airborne radiation in Unit 2 measured 1,000 millisieverts per hour, four times the limit deemed safe by the government.

Those high airborne readings — if accurate — would make it very difficult for emergency workers to get inside to pump out the water.

Officials say they still don't know where the radioactive water is coming from, though government spokesman Yukio Edano earlier said some is "almost certainly" seeping from a damaged reactor core in one of the units.

The discovery late last week of pools of radioactive water has been a major setback in the mission to get the crucial cooling systems operating more than two weeks after a massive earthquake and tsunami.

The magnitude-9 quake off Japan's northeast coast on March 11 triggered a tsunami that barreled onshore and disabled the Fukushima plant, complicating a humanitarian disaster that is thought to have killed about 18,000 people.

A top TEPCO official acknowledged it could take a long time to clean up the complex.

"We cannot say at this time how many months or years it will take," Muto said, insisting the main goal now is to keep the reactors cool.

Workers have been scrambling to remove the radioactive water from the four units and find a place to safely store it. Each unit may hold tens of thousands of gallons of radioactive water, said Minoru Ogoda of Japan's nuclear safety agency.

Safety agency officials had been hoping to pump the water into huge, partly empty tanks inside the reactor that are designed to hold condensed water.

Those tanks, though, turned out to be completely full, said Hidehiko Nishiyama of Japan's Nuclear and Industrial Safety Agency.

Meanwhile, plans to use regular power to restart the cooling system hit a roadblock when it turned out that cables had to be laid through turbine buildings flooded with the contaminated water.

"The problem is that right now nobody can reach the turbine houses where key electrical work must be done," Nishiyama said. "There is a possibility that we may have to give up on that plan."

Despite Sunday's troubles, officials continued to insist the situation had at least partially stabilized.

"We have somewhat prevented the situation from turning worse," Edano told reporters Sunday evening. "But the prospects are not improving in a straight line and we've expected twists and turns. The contaminated water is one of them and we'll continue to repair the damage."

The protracted nuclear crisis has spurred concerns about the safety of food and water in Japan, which is a prime source of seafood for some countries. Radiation has been found in food, seawater and even tap water supplies in Tokyo.

Just outside the coastal Fukushima nuclear plant, radioactivity in seawater tested about 1,250 times higher than normal last week — but that number had climbed to 1,850 times normal by the weekend.

Nishiyama said the increase was a concern, but also said the area is not a source of seafood and that the contamination posed no immediate threat to human health.

Up to 600 people are working inside the plant in shifts. Nuclear safety officials say workers' time inside the crippled units is closely monitored to minimize their exposure to radioactivity, but two workers were hospitalized Thursday when they suffered burns after stepping into contaminated water. They were to be released from the hospital Monday.

UNEVEN BALANCE OF FOOD: Economic inequality among nations and other factors have contributed to a global food system whereby two billion people are seriously undernourished while another billion are substantially over-consuming.

Food system needs work

Dear EarthTalk

I understand a recent government report concluded that our global food system is in deep trouble, that roughly two billion people are hungry or undernourished while another billion are over consuming to the point of obesity. What's going on?

Ellie Francoeur
Baton Rouge, La.

THE REPORT IN QUESTION, THE GLOBAL Farming & Futures Report, synthesized findings collected from more than 400 scientists spanning 34 countries, and was published in January 2011 by the British government's Department for Business Innovation & Skills. Its troubling bottom line conclusion is that the world's existing food system is failing half of the people on the planet.

Economic inequality among nations and other factors have contributed to a global food system whereby a billion people are hungry (lacking access to sufficient amounts of macronutrients, e.g. carbohydrates, fats and proteins), another billion suffer from "hidden hunger" (lacking crucial vitamins and minerals from their diet), while yet another billion are "substantially over-consuming" (spawning a new public health epidemic involving chronic conditions such as type 2 diabetes and widespread cardiovascular disease).

The report, which was prepared by the research firm Foresight on behalf of the British government, also predicts that the cost of food worldwide will rise sharply in coming decades, increasing the likelihood of food-based conflicts and migration, and that people won't be able to feed themselves without destroying the planet — unless we can transform the global food system on the scale of the industrial revolution.

"The global food system is spectacularly bad at tackling hunger or at holding itself to account," Lawrence Haddad, director of the Institute of Development Studies and an author of the report, told the UK's Guardian. The report warns that an expanding world population that is already overexploiting its natural resources is a recipe for disaster, especially given the onset of climate change.

"Farmers have to grow more food at less cost to the environment," said Caroline Spelman of the UK's Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA), which commissioned the report. That may sound simple, but many factors determine if production of a given food is economically viable.

Fixing the global food system will be no small task. Fundamental will be the spreading of existing knowledge and technology to the developing world to boost yields. Other keys to such an endeavor include dramatically reducing food waste — Americans toss as much as 40 percent of their food — especially since food production and distribution accounts for as much as a third of global greenhouse gas emissions. Also, researchers suggest that investing in genetically modified crops and cloned livestock, despite the potential risks, may be "essential in light of the magnitude of the challenges."

What can those of us in developed nations do? Staying active and eating right is the best way to prevent obesity and ensuing health problems. And choosing locally produced food over that which is shipped in from far away will help reduce our food's carbon footprint. Also, support the efforts of groups working to end hunger and malnutrition in poor countries. If nothing else, those who wish to help feed the hungry can set their web browsers' home page to The Hunger Site and click on a button there once a day which triggers a donation of food from one of a number of sponsors to needy people in developing countries.

New projects seek way out of forest stalemate

JEFF BARNARD
AP Environmental Writer

RUCH, Ore. On a steep ridge covered with Douglas fir, ponderosa pine, and oak so thick the falling snow could hardly make its way to the ground, two grizzled veterans of the spotted owl wars were tying green plastic flagging around big old trees so they would not be cut down when timber fallers come to make a reality out of their principles for breaking the logjam over managing the nation's forests.

Forestry professors Jerry Franklin of the University of Washington and Norm Johnson of Oregon State University were two of the authors of the Northwest Forest Plan. It divided national forests in Washington, Oregon and California into two landscapes — one for timber and one for the spotted owl, salmon and other fish and wildlife — to settle lawsuits brought by conservation groups.

Their plan didn't work out as they hoped, and after nearly 30 years of non-stop court and political battles, the Obama administration is hoping Franklin and Johnson can show federal agencies a new path forward.

This path would make good on the elusive promise that federal forests nationwide can produce timber that creates jobs in struggling rural timber towns, and habitat for fish and wildlife on the brink of extinction — all without going up in smoke every summer.

"If everything works out, this will become the basis for a whole new vision, a whole new strategy for management of the federal forests," Franklin said. "This is sort of a seed we're planting. If the ground is fertile — the stakeholders feel this is consistent with what they want — it will grow into a completely different approach. We'll manage these lands for both ecological and economic benefits. We'll integrate those goals rather than trying to separate them."

There are tough obstacles to overcome.

Federal forests are managed under a principle called multiple use, providing timber for jobs, habitat for wildlife, forests for recreation and sources for clean water. Timber production paid the bills and called the tune until the 1990s, when conservation groups sued to force protection of habitat for the northern spotted owl and salmon in Washington, Oregon and Northern California.

The Northwest Forest Plan allowed logging to resume. The plan created old-growth reserves protecting habitat and other lands designated for logging. Timber production was cut by about 80 percent of the harvests of the 1980s. The logging cutbacks spread through the entire national forest system.

The Bush administration tried to scrap the plan to allow more logging, but was repeatedly overturned by the courts. Its last-ditch effort to increase logging on BLM lands in Western Oregon was withdrawn by the Obama administration as legally indefensible.

Automation, logging cutbacks on federal lands, foreign imports and the collapse of the housing industry have left the timber industry a shadow of what it was in the 1980s, but rural communities still hold out hope it will come back. Besides timber jobs, federal forests share timber revenues with counties where the timber is cut. Those revenues have plummeted with the declining harvest, and federal safety net funding runs out this year.

For the past 25 years, private lands have filled the timber gap, but now China's booming economy is renewing interest in federal forests.

Meanwhile, wildfires have become a perennial problem, increasing pressure to thin out dense forests.

Hoping to find a way out of this logjam, Oregon Democrats Rep. Peter DeFazio and Sen. Jeff Merkley brought Interior Secretary Ken Salazar to Oregon last October. He backed three pilot projects on U.S. Bureau of Land Management forests in Western Oregon. One is in the dry forests of the Siskiyou Mountains outside Medford, a second in the wet forests of the Cascade Range outside Roseburg, and a third in the even wetter Coast Range outside Coquille.

The Medford District project targets about 5,000 acres in an 80,000-acre watershed in the Applegate Valley. All of it is on lands that had already been designated for logging. BLM offered a timber sale on this ridge in 2004, but it didn't sell. Timber companies felt the amount of logs didn't justify the cost of taking them out. But a few stumps show where big old pines easy to get at were cut.

Franklin and Johnson's vision for restoring this forest — reducing the danger of wildfire and insect infestations while maintaining habitat for the northern spotted owl — would cut far more trees than the last timber sale.

Historically, because of regular wildfires, this ridge would have been covered mostly by grass and brush, with scattered big pines, oaks and madrones and some isolated dense patches of trees, said Johnson. Instead, it is densely packed with Douglas fir. After the pilot project, most of the Douglas fir will be gone, making it tougher for fire to kill the big pines and dense patches.

Jennifer and Link Phillippi own the last sawmill standing in Josephine County, The Rough & Ready Lumber Co. in O'Brien. After losing a BLM timber sale to an adverse court ruling over spotted owl habitat, they were hoping this pilot project would be their salvation. But after touring it last weekend, Jennifer Phjillippi came away disappointed because the site is one where timber interests and conservationists already agreed logging is needed.

"If we're really going to do things the forest needs, I think we need to be bold and step into places people might have concerns and get past them," she said. "The forest isn't getting any better as long as we're avoiding problems."

Doug Robertson, a county commissioner in Douglas County, said the tight restrictions of the Northwest Forest Plan and expanding habitat protections for the northern spotted owl make it impossible to repeat Franklin and Johnson's vision across a wide landscape.

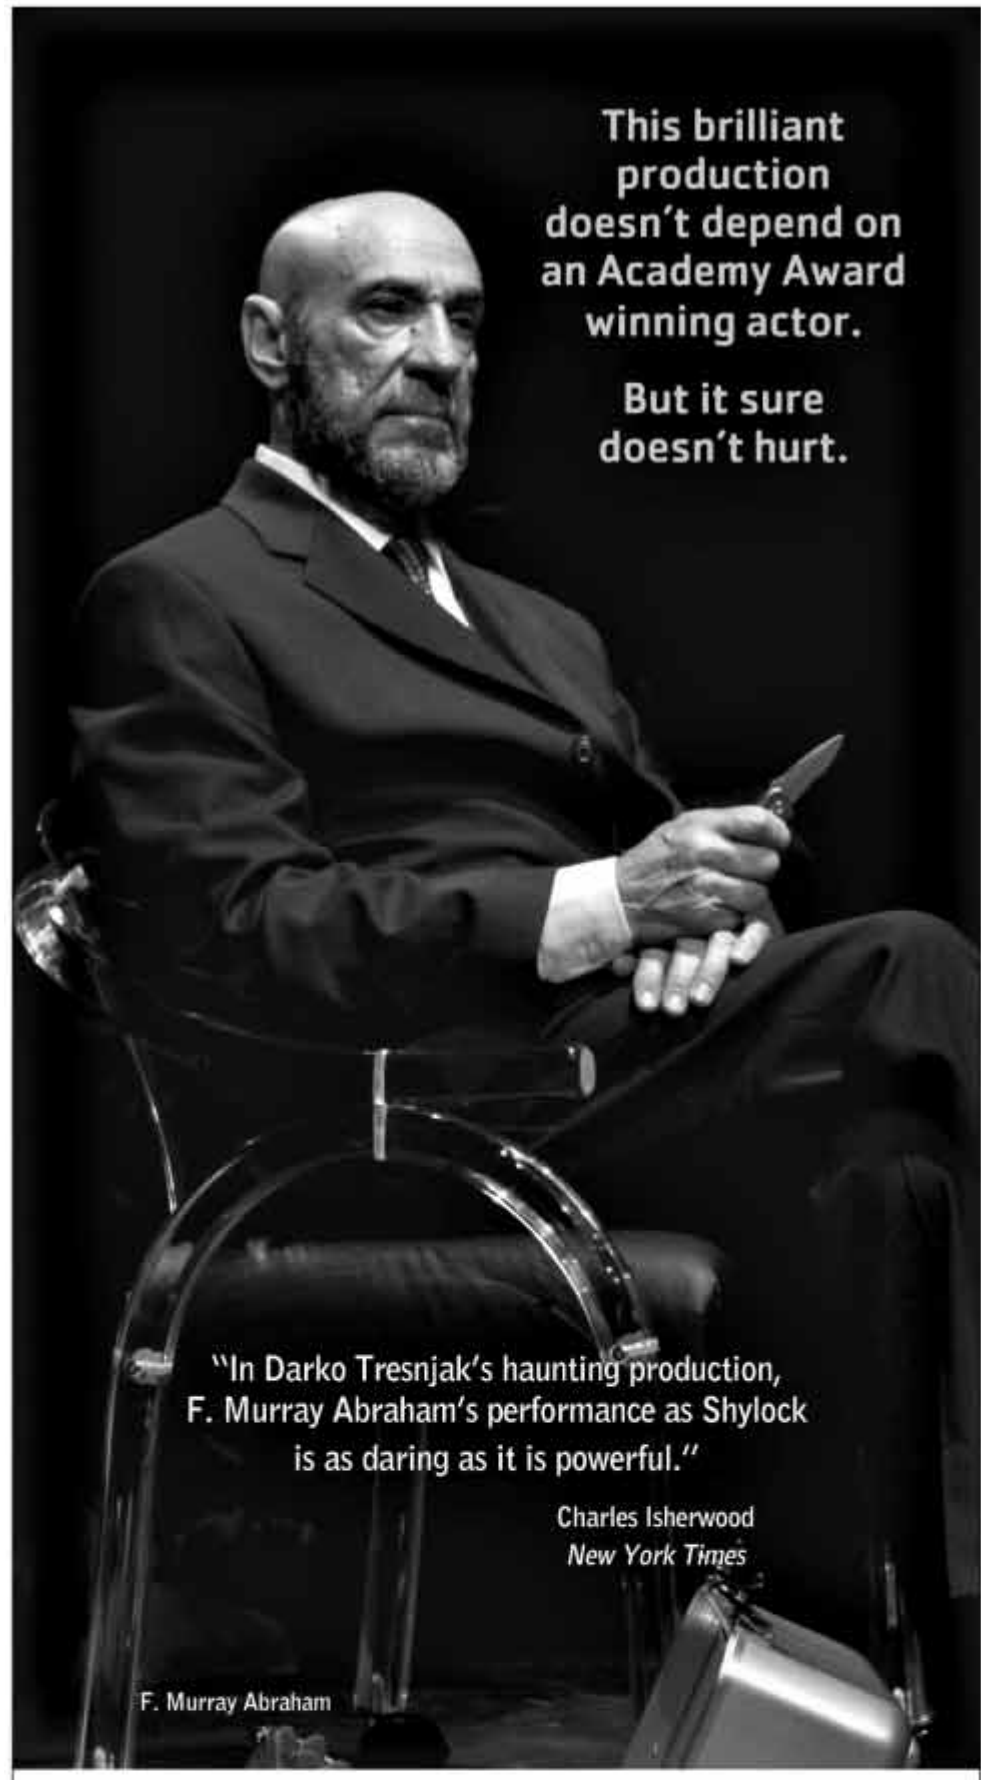

As an alternative, he wants to split the BLM timber lands in Oregon in two, selling off 1.2 million acres for private timber production, and locking up 1.2 million acres for fish and wildlife habitat.

After the past 25 years in court, conservation groups don't trust BLM.

"It is not so clear to us they have embraced a different management approach," said Joseph Vaile of Klamath-Siskiyou Wildlands.

This mistrust and divided landscape are just what Franklin and Johnson hope to overcome.

"The whole notion that you can manage the federal estate with a singular type of outcome, either timber production or owl habitat, is not desirable socially or ecologically," said Franklin.

F. Murray Abraham in THE MERCHANT OF VENICE
By William Shakespeare | Directed by Darko Tresnjak
APR 14-24, 2011

You might have seen Shakespeare's tragicomedy, The Merchant of Venice. But, trust us, you've never seen it like this. Not with Academy Award winner, F. Murray Abraham's nuanced unlocking of Shylock's humanity. Not with Director Darko Tresnjak's ingenious staging of a modern, digitized world. And certainly not the West Coast premiere of this highly acclaimed production in the enormously intimate 499-seat Broad Stage in Santa Monica. To see an astonishing Merchant of Venice, call or go online for tickets now.

Crews test site where chemicals were stored

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARSTOW Federal crews sampled soil this week at a property in the Mojave Desert city of Barstow owned by a former fireworks maker as they investigated how the chemical perchlorate made into the town's drinking water supply.

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency investigator Will Duncan said in a Riverside Press-Enterprise story Thursday that more than 50 soil samples had been taken over a 20-acre area around the house.

Barstow warned residents for several days in November not to drink local tap water after samples showed that levels of perchlorate, an inorganic chemical used in rocket fuel and defense manufacturing, were above the maximum contaminant level of six parts per billion.

Duncan said the widow of the owner and operator of the long-defunct Mojave Pyrotechnics Inc. told state water quality officials during the drinking water ban that her husband had stored chemicals at the property.

When the company went out of business in the early 1980s, the husband moved leftover drums of chemicals to the property from a nearby manufacturing facility, Duncan said. The chemicals were stored at the property until about 1985, he said.

Neighbors complained about the stockpile and fire department records include photos of 55 drums kept there, including one labeled as an oxidizer, a class of chemical to which perchlorate belongs.

EPA officials recently found white residue containing perchlorate in a garden area of the house, prompting this week's sampling.

Agency officials expected to finish sampling Thursday and to clean up the contamination during the summer, Duncan said. Barstow has drawn water from other wells since the chemical was found.

Perchlorate contamination has been found in the waterways of at least 25 states, according to the EPA, but it has been particularly widespread in California and the Southwest.

The toxin can interfere with thyroid function and poses developmental health risks, particularly to fetuses.

Navy training linked to dolphin deaths

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO A Naval training exercise that included an underwater blast off San Diego's coast has been linked to at least three dolphin deaths earlier this month, prompting a probe into whether the military violated the federal law that protects marine mammals.

Navy officials, who reported the deaths of the long-beaked common dolphins following the March 4 detonation off the coast, say they were following proper procedures and will continue with the training.

The National Marine Fisheries Service plans to take another look at the Navy's pending request to disturb marine mammals between Imperial Beach and Coronado, where it conducts amphibious and special warfare training, agency leaders told the San Diego Union-Tribune on Friday.

The Navy's application, which has been in the works for years, says it does not anticipate any dolphin deaths due to training. But following the March 4 incident, the fisheries service opened an enforcement case to determine whether the Navy violated the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972, which is designed to safeguard dolphins, whales and similar creatures.

Along with the three deaths reported to the fisheries service, two other dead dolphins were found later, but it's not clear if they were injured by the Navy exercises.

Environmentalists have called on the Navy to suspend activities involved in the deaths and conduct a transparent investigation.

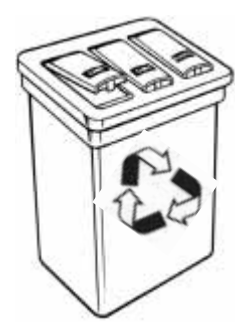

But Navy officials said the program it calls "mission-critical" would continue. They said they were following proper procedures on the day of the blast and are conducting their own investigation to see if changes are necessary.

"We have an excellent track record in our training and have exacting standards that we apply to try to prevent these types of incidents," Cmdr. Greg Hicks, a spokesman for the Navy's Third Fleet, told the Union-Tribune. "We do our best to protect marine life while conducting essential training."

Hicks said there were no dolphins in view when the training countdown began, and when they could be seen it was too late to stop safely.

He could not say how many underwater blasts the Navy has performed at the site in recent years. Documents show the Navy's permit request for underwater explosives involve up to 415 "small" detonations during 311 training events a year.

Underwater explosives are important for clearing obstacles out of harbors so ships can enter. When the Navy practices with them offshore, Hicks said observers look for dolphins, seals, whales and similar creatures that might swim into the danger zone.

Transit Priority Systems Project

Installation of the Transit Priority System (TPS) at 80 traffic signals along major corridors within the city of Santa Monica. Work requires installation of wireless detectors to sense the approach of buses on the bus routes. Work is currently taking place on Arizona Avenue at 20th Street and on Arizona at 26th Street. Partial roadway closures are expected and impact to traffic should be minimal.

Utility Undergrounding

Various alleys will be temporarily closed for underground work on utilities in the following locations: 18th Court between Pearl Street and Pico Boulevard; 20th Street between Pearl Street and Ocean Park Boulevard; 18th Street between Ocean Park Boulevard and Ashland Place North; on Ashland Place North between 18th Street and 16th Street. Work is taking place until approximately July, 2011.Borderline Neighborhood Improvement Project
New water main installation, new various street pavement finishes, new landscaped areas, trees, pedestrian lighting, and a neighborhood kiosk. Work will be taking place on Longfellow Street at the intersections of Marine, Navy and Ozone streets. Please observe posted detour signs. Project is anticipated to be complete June, 2011.

Street & Park Lighting Project

The work consists of modifying existing high-voltage series streetlight circuits to low-voltage multiple circuits. Work will take place citywide through September of 2011. Work will be taking place on 11th Street from Marguerita to Alta, and on Sixth Street from Montana to Washington avenues. Partial roadway closures are expected and impact to traffic should be minimal.

Borderline Neighborhood Improvement Project

New water main installation, new various street pavement finishes, new landscaped areas, trees, pedestrian lighting, and a neighborhood kiosk. inquiries in Washington and Sacramento.

"Because the monitoring system ... plays such a critical role in protecting the health and safety of the American people, we will examine how well our current monitoring system has performed in the aftermath of the tragic situation in Japan," said Sen. Barbara Boxer, a California Democrat who chairs the U.S. Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, which plans a hearing in the coming weeks on nuclear safety.

EPA officials said the program effectively safeguarded the country against a threat that did not materialize. They said they put portable monitors in place as backups and repaired the permanent ones in Los Angeles, San Bernardino, San Diego last weekend.

"The network as a whole continues to detect even the slightest traces of radiation in the air," the agency said in a statement to The Associated Press.

The EPA's independent watchdog, Inspector General Arthur Elkins, told the AP he is considering reviewing the agency's emergency response planning, including the agency's RadNet system.

The network, launched after the Cold War and upgraded following the 9-11 attacks, measures radiation nationwide through dozens of monitors that suck in air samples periodically and pump out real-time readings about radioactive isotopes.

The EPA's data, as well as samples that numerous federal agencies are collecting in Japan, is sent to the Department of Energy's National Atmospheric Release Advisory Center in California. Teams there check it against sophisticated computer models that predict how releases at Fukushima could spread across the Pacific.

tion of the district's sexual harassment policy by Marken was at the lower end of the spectrum, but even so, she felt parents have a right to know what occurred.

The district's sexual harassment policy includes everything from making inappropriate jokes or drawings to teasing and touching someone's clothes in a sexual way, as well as making unwanted sexual advances.

The father of the victim told the Daily Press that he still doesn't know exactly what happened to his daughter, who told him she did not want to return to Samohi and is now attending school out of the country.

Marken's attorney, Richard Schwab, said his client is a well respected teacher and that the charges against him were of the lowest level, calling them "trivial."

Vicente Boulevard.

He brought his young children on the job with him when babysitters fell through, a liability that wouldn't be allowed today, and people along his route would leave them cookies and nickels.

"People were nice then," Eisenhart recalled. "As long as you were doing your route, it was all your boss cared about."

Not so anymore.

With the advent of the Internet and the booms and busts of the past two decades, the Post Office took major hits, hemorrhaging money to the tune of $8.37 billion in 2010 alone.

The company cited everything from declining mail volumes to the economic slowdown for the decline, and recently began offering buy-outs and early retirement deals to its management staff.

Approximately 7,500 positions are on the chopping block this year, as are several district offices, said spokesperson Richard Maher.

"Half of our locations do not generate enough revenue to cover the cost of operating them," Maher said.

The stresses of the financial situation began weighing on the Santa Monica office, Eisenhart said, with fewer people to cover high-volume routes and no back up when people got sick or injured.

Having achieved and passed the years of service needed to retire with maximum benefits, Eisenhart decided it was time to go.

"They cut too much," he said. "They were carving out hours, not hiring substitutes. The regulars were doing old routes and overtime. It burns on you, mentally and physically."

In his new-found free time, Eisenhart has begun to tackle the long list of "honey-do's" that accumulated at his home in Gardena over the past decade, with an emphasis on a long-neglected vegetable garden that he hopes will be producing tomatoes by this summer.

He will miss his co-workers, and the city of Santa Monica in general, which he watched develop into the thriving destination city it is today through the lens of one who literally took to its streets every day for four decades.

"Santa Monica is a good city," Eisenhart said. "They really take care of people there."

EDGE

"I think for the most part we have folks fairly comfortable that site selection is ultimately not something that should prohibit someone from building a LEED home," Kredich said. "That's not our area."

LEED certification has become the benchmark for green design, allowing developers to get their plans processed faster in some cities. It also all but ensures positive publicity for a project.

The National Parks Service, which manages land near The Edge's project, and conservation groups have seized on what they see as a major flaw in the coveted green building system.

They say out of a possible 136 points used to determine a home's LEED rating, only 10 percent touch on where it is built.

The Edge, whose real name is David Evans, and his partners want to build five homes averaging 10,500-square-feet each on a 156-acre site in the Santa Monica Mountains. The homes will feature native landscaping, electric vehicle charging, solar panels and their own wastewater treatment. The plan also calls for an access road up the mountain.

Nuclear plant officials disregarded tsunami risk

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
YURI KAGEYAMA
Associated Press

TOKYO In planning their defense against a killer tsunami, the people running Japan's now-hobbled nuclear power plant dismissed important scientific evidence and all but disregarded 3,000 years of geological history, an Associated Press investigation shows.

The misplaced confidence displayed by Tokyo Electric Power Co. was prompted by a series of overly optimistic assumptions that concluded the Earth couldn't possibly release the level of fury it did two weeks ago, pushing the six-reactor Fukushima Dai-ichi complex to the brink of multiple meltdowns.

Instead of the reactors staying dry, as contemplated under the power company's worst-case scenario, the plant was overrun by a torrent of water much higher and stronger than the utility argued could occur, according to an AP analysis of records, documents and statements from researchers, the utility and the Japan's national nuclear safety agency.

And while TEPCO and government officials have said no one could have anticipated such a massive tsunami, there is ample evidence that such waves have struck the northeast coast of Japan before — and that it could happen again along the culprit fault line, which runs roughly north to south, offshore, about 220 miles (350 kilometers) east of the plant.

TEPCO officials say they had a good system for projecting tsunamis. They declined to provide more detailed explanations, saying they were focused on the ongoing nuclear crisis.

What is clear: TEPCO officials discounted important readings from a network of GPS units that showed that the two tectonic plates that create the fault were strongly "coupled," or stuck together, thus storing up extra stress along a line hundreds of miles long. The greater the distance and stickiness of such coupling, experts say, the higher the stress buildup — pressure that can be violently released in an earthquake.

That evidence, published in scientific journals starting a decade ago, represented the kind of telltale characteristics of a fault being able to produce the truly overwhelming quake — and therefore tsunami — that it did.

On top of that, TEPCO modeled the worst-case tsunami using its own computer program instead of an internationally accepted prediction method.

It matters how Japanese calculate risk. In short, they rely heavily on what has happened to figure out what might happen, even if the probability is extremely low. If the view of what has happened isn't accurate, the risk assessment can be faulty.

That approach led to TEPCO's disregard of much of Japan's tsunami history.

In postulating the maximum-sized earthquake and tsunami that the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex might face, TEPCO's engineers decided not to factor in quakes earlier than 1896. That meant the experts excluded a major quake that occurred more than 1,000 years ago — a tremor followed by a powerful tsunami that hit many of the same locations as the recent disaster.

A TEPCO reassessment presented only four months ago concluded that tsunami-driven water would push no higher than 18 feet (5.7 meters) once it hit the shore at the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex. The reactors sit up a small bluff, between 14 and 23 feet (4.3 and 6.3 meters) above TEPCO's projected high-water mark, according to a presentation at a November seismic safety conference in Japan by TEPCO civil engineer Makoto Takao.

"We assessed and confirmed the safety of the nuclear plants," Takao asserted.

However, the wall of water that thundered ashore two weeks ago reached about 27 feet (8.2 meters) above TEPCO's prediction. The flooding disabled backup power generators, located in basements or on first floors, imperiling the nuclear reactors and their nearby spent fuel pools.

The story leading up to the Tsunami of 2011 goes back many, many years — several millennia, in fact.

The Jogan tsunami of 869 displayed striking similarities to the events in and around the Fukushima Dai-ichi reactors. The importance of that disaster, experts told the AP, is that the most accurate planning for worst-case scenarios is to study the largest events over the longest period of time. In other words, use the most data possible.

The evidence shows that plant operators should have known of the dangers — or, if they did know, disregarded them.

As early as 2001, a group of scientists published a paper documenting the Jogan tsunami. They estimated waves of nearly 26 feet (8 meters) at Soma, about 25 miles north of the plant. North of there, they concluded that a surge from the sea swept sand more than 2 1/2 miles (4 kilometers) inland across the Sendai plain. The latest tsunami pushed water at least about 1 1/2 miles (2 kilometers) inland.

The scientists also found two additional layers of sand and concluded that two additional "gigantic tsunamis" had hit the region during the past 3,000 years, both presumably comparable to Jogan. Carbon dating couldn't pinpoint exactly when the other two hit, but the study's authors put the range of those layers of sand at between 140 B.C. and A.D. 150, and between 670 B.C. and 910 B.C.

Harvick wins with final turn pass

JOHN MARSHALL
AP Sports Writer

FONTANA Kevin Harvick isn't one of those drivers who jumps out front and stays there all the way to the checkers.

He's more of a lingerer and closer, someone who's able to stay close to the front then make his move at just the right time.

Harvick was at his pass-at-the-end best on Sunday, overtaking California king Jimmie Johnson on the final turn at Auto Club Speedway to win after trailing the entire race.

"I wish we could just go out there and wear 'em out one day, just not have to worry about waiting until the last lap," Harvick said. "It does kind of seem we wait until the last moments to really get going. It's probably somewhat of a bad habit I have, but I guess it worked out."

Kyle Busch had the dominant car most of the day and led a race-high 151 laps, including off a restart with nine laps left.

Harvick, as he always seems to, nailed the finish.

He had a rough start to the season, finishing 42nd at Daytona after a blown engine and hadn't been able to pull it together since despite having fast cars. His best finish was a fourth at Phoenix.

Harvick didn't have a particularly strong qualifying session at Fontana, either, to start 24th and wasn't exactly ripping through the field once the race started.

What he did do was gradually work his way to the front, pulling up behind Johnson after getting past Busch.

Taking advantage of a small gap to the outside, Harvick made his move on Johnson going into Turn 3, then completed it coming around Turn 4. Ahead going down the last straightway, he finished off his becoming-a-trademark finish to take the checkers for the 15th time in his career.

"I really felt good when they had that restart because I knew his car was really fast on the long run," said Richard Childress, owner of Harvick's No. 29 car. "I knew if they didn't get too far out in front of us, we'd have a shot. All we needed was to get him side-by-side and start racing. That gave Kevin a chance to catch them and he made the right move going into 3."

Unlike Saturday's Nationwide race, which featured lead changes seemingly every other lap, this one had drivers camped out front for long stretches before the final flourish.

Part of it was the lack of cautions, the opening 75 laps coming under green to set a track record. Overnight rain, which lingered as mist until a couple hours before the race, also played a role. Drivers who were able to get the setup right were able to get out front and stay there while everyone else tinkered.

Mostly, that meant Busch.

He swept the Nationwide and Sprint Cup races last week at Bristol, then opened with a Nationwide win at Auto Club, using a late two-tire pit stop to beat Carl Edwards and Harvick, who each took four tires.

Busch had a rough start to his Sprint Cup weekend, forced to a backup car after sliding into the wall on his first practice lap on Friday, but still managed to qualify eighth.

Busch took his first lead on Lap 22 and lost it a few times on green-flag pit stops, but was back out front within a few laps, pulling away on each of the four restarts.

He just didn't have enough left after the leaders stayed out on the last caution, spoiling his chance to pull off the NASCAR weekend sweep two weeks in a row.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.
Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

What suits your fancy, Sagittarius?

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Power plays could define meetings and dealings in general. What people don't realize is that if you want to have it your way, you could and would. Still, at a certain point, you will go in, deal with the issue and then close the door, leaving people with their mouths hanging open. Tonight: Only where people are.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ A must event could change the tone of the day. Others could come to blows, as their opinions are so varied. Knowing what you want and your expectations will help enormously. Some situations need to blow up. Don't intervene. Tonight: Could be late.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Your ability to move in a new direction could be colored by a strange reluctance that you might not understand. Actually, you are connecting more with your subconscious. Dealing with feelings of that nature might not be surprising and is great in the long run. Tonight: Honor your limits.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Your knowledge benefits someone more than you think. An associate, co-worker or friend could be trying to get more feedback. If you feel uncomfortable, say so, and establish your boundaries. There is nothing wrong with that. Tonight: Togetherness works.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ You can juggle a lot more than most people and keep everyone happy. You will have to demonstrate this ability now. However, new information and an inquiry could force your mind to drift. Perhaps the need to escape a conversation takes priority. Tonight: Catch up on news.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ You will focus on what you do best. Many people are distracted. You also realize the discipline of handling your assets well -- be it money or effort. Avoid making judgments about others. Tonight: Pick up what you want. You deserve a treat.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Seriousness marks your actions. A somber approach goes far, but others might be reactive. Many people remember when you were a little more giddy or charming. Trust that the balance will return, but for now, it is the way it is. Tonight: Very playful -- finally!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Listen to what is happening in your immediate domestic environment. A sense of depression or sadness exists within you. During conversations, be aware of your internal signals and what they mean. If you aren't sure what your feelings mean, slow down. Tonight: Start handling an issue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ You are flying high and full of energy. Unexpected developments impact your creativity. A child or loved one could be the source of the issue. Avoid being overly challenging with a difficult friend. Relax. You can only do so much. Tonight: What suits your fancy?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Be aware of what is going on. If someone is acting unpredictably, it is because this person simply cannot integrate everything around him or her. You see an acting out of mixed signals. Kindly help this person integrate. Tonight: Indulge.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb19)
★★★★★ Though you might be on top of everything, others are not. This discrepancy could cause problems in a project or key venture. You certainly don't want to do everything. Go for a novel approach to this problem. Tonight: Detach from today, trusting that you will find the answer.

PISCES (Feb 20-March 19)
★★ Know when to act. Right now, much occurs in an unexpected manner. Know what you need to do in order to feel better, and act with certainty. Brainstorm with those who look at life differently. Tonight: Get some extra R and R.

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, adaptability will mark your success. To observers, it looks like you bring a full gallop to a screeching halt and reverse direction. Your actions might not make sense to many people. Are you running a popularity contest, or are you living your life? If you are single, you meet friends and potential lovers through your immediate circle. It is more than possible that Mr. or Ms. Right will appear on the scene.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

The Allianz MasterDex X® Annuity

may be the tool you need to "X-tend" your retirement portfolio.

MasterDex X from Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America is a fixed index deferred annuity with an X factor. Consider the MasterDex X because it offers:

• The potential for indexed interest based on growth in a market index
• A 10% bonus on premium received in the first three years[1]
• Access to your full contract value, including your bonus, as a lump sum – without surrender charges – after 10 years
• Free withdrawals of up to 10% based on your paid premium
• Flexible income options including lifetime income

Call me today to discuss how an Allianz annuity may be right for you.

Jeremy Abaranok
315 South Beverly Drive Suite 512
Beverly Hills, CA 90212
1-800-238-1719

Annuities are designed to meet long-term needs for retirement income. They provide guarantees against the loss of principal and credited interest, and the reassurance of a death benefit for beneficiaries. 1The bonus is subject to a 10-year vesting schedule. None of the bonus is vested during the first contract year. 10% of the bonus will become vested on each contract anniversary until the beginning of the 11th contract year, when 100% will be vested. If you surrender your contract before the 11th contract year, or if you begin annuitization prior to the sixth contract year (or for fewer than 10 years), you will lose the portion of the bonus that is unvested. Bonus annuities may include higher surrender charges, longer surrender charge periods, lower caps, higher spreads, or other restrictions that are not included in similar annuities that don't offer a premium bonus feature. During the first 10 contract years, we will apply a surrender charge and an unvested bonus reduction if you partially or fully surrender your contract. The same would apply if you begin annuitization, which means receiving regular income payments over a specified period of time, prior to the sixth contract year (or for fewer than 10 years). These charges may result in a loss of bonus, indexed interest and fixed interest, and a partial loss of principal (your premium). Any amounts taken from your contract may be subject to ordinary income taxes and, if taken prior to age 591/2, a 10% federal tax penalty. Products are issued by Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America. Guarantees are backed by the financial strength and claims-paying ability of Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America.

CrossMath + × − ÷

• Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.

• Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.

• You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.

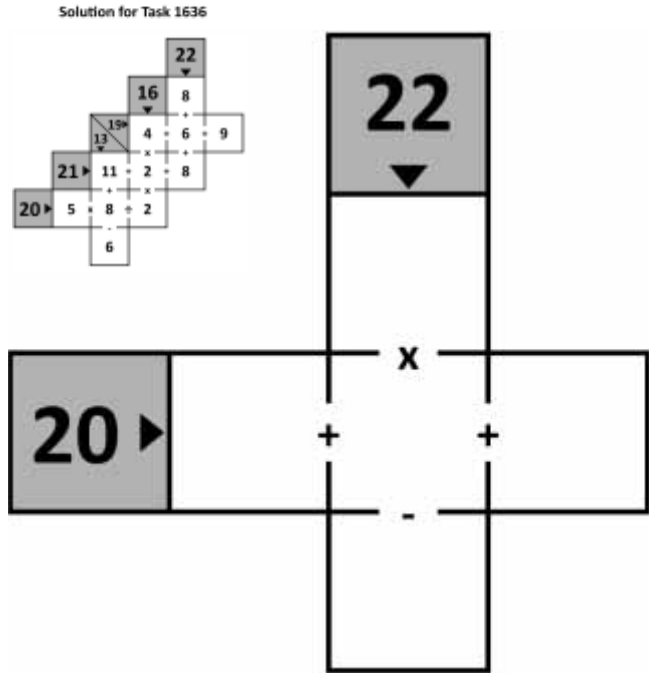

• The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ The Feral Professor: Tihomir Petrov, 43, a mathematics professor at California State University Northridge, was charged in January with misdemeanors for allegedly urinating twice on the office door of a colleague with whom he had been feuding. (Petrov was identified by a hidden camera installed after the original puddles turned up.) Petrov is the author of several scholarly papers, with titles such as "Rationality of Moduli of Elliptic Fibrations With Fixed Monodromy."

■ Gangs in Durban, South Africa, have recently begun stealing expensive anti-retroviral (ARV) drugs destined for AIDS patients and using them in the country's most popular street drug, "whoonga," a highly addictive, smoked cocktail of detergent, rat poison, marijuana and the ARVs. The crisis was reported by KwaZulu-Natal province drug-abuse organizations and Durban police, who stood by their claims despite attempts by South African president Jacob Zuma to assure international suppliers of ARVs that more were needed and that none were being diverted for whoonga.
