NMS Properties says they are vindicated by City audit

BY KATE CAGLE
Daily Press Staff Writer

A four-month long multi-department review of NMS Properties' contracts with the City of Santa Monica failed to produce a smoking gun or even very much smoke.

The audit spanned three departments: the City Attorney's office, Planning and Community Development and Housing and Economic Development. It looked at contracts, agreements and affordable housing requirements set by the City. The review included all affiliates of NMS Properties, including newly founded WNMS, according to Andy Agle, director of Housing and Economic Development, who worked on the report.

"What we were just wanting to do was put out the facts," Agle said, declining to elaborate on the six-page report. It will be up to the City Council to direct staff to follow-up if they have any concerns.

Study predicts significant Southern California beach erosion

A new study predicts that with limited human intervention 31 percent to 67 percent of Southern California beaches could completely erode back to coastal infrastructure or sea cliffs by the year 2100 with sea-level rises of 3.3 feet (1 meter) to 6.5 feet (2 meters).

The study released Monday used a new computer model to predict shoreline effects caused by sea level rise and changes in storm patterns due to climate change.

The study's lead author, Sean Vitousek, says erosion of Southern California beaches is not just a matter of the region losing its identity and tourism dollars, but of exposing critical infrastructure, businesses and homes to damage.

The study has been accepted for publication by the American Geophysical Union's Journal of Geophysical Research: Earth Surface.

George Lucas gives another $10M to USC for student diversity

George Lucas has given another $10 million to the University of Southern California's School of Cinematic Arts to fund the student diversity program he helped establish.

The donation was announced Monday by USC, Lucas' alma mater. Last fall, USC established a foundation in Lucas' name to support students from underrepresented communities who qualify for financial support. It was funded with an initial $10 million gift from the George Lucas Family Foundation.

Michael Renov, vice dean of academy affairs, said the gift will help USC "recruit storytellers whose voices are underrepresented in cinematic media and whose inclusion benefits all of us."

Gianopulos named new chairman of Paramount Pictures

BY JAKE COYLE
AP Film Writer

Viacom Inc. named Jim Gianopulos the new chairman and chief executive officer of Paramount Pictures, turning to the former Fox chief to revive the flagging movie studio.

Gianopulos will succeed Paramount's former chairman, Brad Grey, who was ousted in February. Viacom Chief Executive Bob Bakish said Monday that Gianopulos will be able to deliver the recovery needed to "begin the next chapter in Paramount's storied history."

But hits have lately been lacking for Paramount, which has trimmed its release schedule and seen its standing in Hollywood slide. Along with overseeing production, marketing and distribution at the studio, Gianopulos has been tasked with setting a new strategy for Paramount. The studio lost $445 million in its 2016 fiscal year.

"Looking ahead, I see a strong opportunity to position the studio for success by creating valuable franchise opportunities, developing fresh creative ventures, and mining Viacom's deep brand portfolio to bring exciting new narratives to life," Gianopulos said in a statement.

Gianopulos was pushed out of 20th Century Fox last year when Stacey Snider was promoted to lead the Fox Filmed Entertainment Group. At Fox, Gianopulos notably oversaw the likes of "Avatar" and the "X-Men" franchise in his 16 years of running the studio.

Though Paramount had a number of critically acclaimed Oscar contenders last year ("Fences," "Arrival"), it has struggled to find the franchise blockbusters studios depend on for the lion's share of its ticket sales. Paramount's biggest movie last year was the so-so performing "Star Trek Beyond," which made $343.5 million worldwide. But it released a string of clunkers, including "Zoolander 2," "Ben-Hur" and "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles: Out of the Shadows."

Formerly under Sumner M. Redstone, Viacom wasn't willing to plunk down the kind of money other studios, like the Walt Disney Co., have invested in sought-after intellectual properties. Instead, the studio has turned to financing partners and China to claw its way back. But some of those efforts haven't panned out. A ballyhooed $1 billion co-financing deal with Chinese firms, Huahua Media and Shanghai Film Group, has, at least for now, stalled.

Gianopulos is expected to have bigger budgets to work with and to increase the studio's annual output. He will also be called on to better leverage Viacom's other properties (among them Comedy Central, MTV, BET and Nickelodeon) on the big screen.

Viacom's TV business, though, has also recently struggled. Bakish, who was named chief executive in December, has led a restructuring intended to refocus the media conglomerate on its core brands.

Is the past prologue?

HISTORY IN MANY WAYS IS ONE LONG obituary. When I think about how history is written and what is generally made memorable, it is most often a retelling of the death and destruction that was wrought. Looking backwards we see that the 2000s were dominated by the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center. In the 80's and 90's it was AIDS and Crack Cocaine deaths. In the 70's we have the carryover from the Vietnam war that started in the 60's, which were dominated by death of a President, a Civil Rights Leader (King), another Civil Rights Leader (Malcolm X) and in the 50's we had the Korean Conflict, the 40's were a World War, the 30's were disease and malnutrition thanks to a Great Depression and the late teen's had the global pandemic of the Spanish Flu.

The epidemic we face today is abundance, boredom and redundancy. It is just as critical that we deal with these issues or else they will lead to larger problems like disease, war and rebellion.

I believe that abundance is a problem because as a country we have more food and material wealth than we know what to do with. It's been estimated that we throw away 40% of the food produced in this country annually. I like to say that "this is America, we have more of everything" and we do. More diabetes, more heart attacks, more obesity and strokes – all related to our abundance of food and indulgence.

We have more boredom today than ever because we have less to do. We don't have to shop and prepare our food, it doesn't take all day to make dinner, it takes a trip to the Whole Foods and quick run through their buffet line and you've got dinner for as many as you want. Alternatively, if you are skilled at the reheating process, you can hit up the deli counter of Vons, Bristol Farms or Gelson's and have a "home cooked" meal in 20 minutes, just don't forget to swing through the produce section and grab a couple of bags of salad and you're ready to play host.

The plethora of entertainment options continues to grow each day, and yet we find less and less to enjoy. We have become immune to amazement, dulled to thoughtful and insightful commentary, and bored with what was once the height of creativity. The onslaught of media and the firehose of social updates on what people had for lunch and the latest tweets from the current President keep us so wound up and spinning all the time we have no ability sit back and enjoy anything, which thus robs of our interest in what is really going on. We are forced to constantly react, but never respond.

America is facing a crisis unlike any we, or the world, has ever faced before. Redundancy, the concept of an employee that is no longer needed, is soon to be the word of the decade. Automation is coming to every field. From robot surgeons to artificial intelligence that does legal research and is starting to draft briefs – there is no industry that has not been, nor will not be, radically changed by robots.

All of this is leading us to a worsening of the current drug epidemic that is running rampant through our country. We see it here with our population of the permanently unemployed – they turn to drink and drug to occupy their days. Sadly, some do not make it out alive.

I predict that the problems will only get worse unless we find a way to either increase individual occupations and encourage the suffering to find new activities to bring purpose and meaning to their lives. The high level of redundant American employees is unsustainable. We have to put them to work somehow. American abundance is a wonderful thing, but the price of it is growing each day. As we need fewer and fewer people to produce more and more, we have to find a way to increase the consumers, and give them a reason to get up in the morning and buy.

We cannot afford to simply have large numbers of unemployed people who do nothing but take drugs, make babies and waste their lives doing nothing of value or creativity. That's what leads to large prison populations with under involved parents who create children that are destined to repeat the mistakes of their parents.

With likely better health, Dodgers favorites to win NL West

BY BETH HARRIS
AP Sports Writer

Clayton Kershaw was lost for 10 weeks in the second half of the season, they had a record 28 players go on the disabled list, and the Los Angeles Dodgers still won 91 games and their fourth consecutive NL West title last season.

Dave Roberts survived plenty of adversity in his first year as manager while having his optimism regularly tested.

With likely better health this season, the Dodgers have to be considered favorites to repeat as division champions.

Their farm system is deep — witness Corey Seager's rise to prominence — and they have enough veteran talent to withstand the ups and downs.

The team re-signed closer Kenley Jansen as the bullpen anchor, kept third baseman Justin Turner as a leader in the clubhouse and re-signed lefty Rich Hill as No. 2 in the rotation.

HERE ARE SOME THINGS TO WATCH FOR THIS SEASON:

NEW LOOK: The Dodgers fulfilled a need at second base to upgrade their hitting against left-handed pitching by acquiring Logan Forsythe from Tampa Bay in exchange for pitcher Jose De Leon. Forsythe hit .264 with 20 homers, 52 RBIs and 76 runs scored last season for the Rays. Leading off the Dodgers' lineup, he has potential to score 90 runs despite having three injections in his arthritic right knee during spring training.

HEALTHY ROTATION: Kershaw is set to make his seventh consecutive opening day start against San Diego on April 3. The left-hander is healthy after missing 2 ? months last year with a herniated disk. That's welcome news to a team that endured a parade of pitchers on the disabled list last season. Kershaw was 12-4 with a 1.69 ERA and 172 strikeouts in 149 innings, the best ERA of his nine-year career. Rich Hill will have his first full season in the Dodgers' rotation as the No. 2 starter with Kenta Maeda slotted in at No. 3. The fourth and fifth spots will be up for grabs among Scott Kazmir, Brandon McCarthy, Alex Wood and Hyun-Jin Ryu, all of whom were injured last year. Julio Urias, the 20-year-old who made an exciting big-league debut last year, figures to be held back in extended spring training as the front office carefully manages his arm with September and October in mind.

SUPER SEAGER: SS Seager exceeded the front office timeline in becoming the franchise's best young player, hitting .308 with 26 home runs to win NL Rookie of the Year. He led NL shortstops in batting average, slugging, runs, total bases and hits. Veteran 2B Chase Utley mentored him and was re-signed to maintain the improved clubhouse culture. Seager has been sidelined by a strained oblique since early March, but he expects to be ready by opening day. With another year of maturity for the 22-year-old, it's a matter of whether he can top his performance.

OUTFIELD LOGJAM: A deep outfield corps will force the Dodgers to platoon heavily, using a mix-and-match approach that means no one is likely to get more than 450 at-bats. The choices among right-handed hitters include Yasiel Puig, Trayce Thompson, Scott Van Slyke and Kike Hernandez; left-handed hitters include Andre Ethier, Joc Pederson and Andrew Toles. Ethier could miss his second straight opening day because of mild disk herniation in his lower back, similar to the injury that derailed Kershaw last year. The 34-year-old Ethier missed most of last season with a broken leg. Puig hasn't consistently performed to the level he showed as an All-Star during his first two seasons, which could relegate him to role player status in the crowded outfield if the team doesn't try to trade him.

YOUNGSTERS TO WATCH: 1B-OF Cody Bellinger hit 56 home runs in his last two pro seasons after reaching Triple-A at age 21. The son of Clay Bellinger, who won two World Series titles with the Yankees, possesses a smooth left-handed stroke and patient approach at the plate. Defensively, Bellinger moves and throws well, and he's played all three outfield positions, giving him versatility and No. 1 status among Dodgers prospects. He could land on the big-league roster this season, and is already regarded as the heir apparent to 34-year-old All-Star 1B Adrian Gonzalez. RHP Yadier Alvarez had a 2.12 ERA in Class A during his pro debut last season. The Dodgers spent $16 million to sign the 21-year-old Cuban during their international binge two years ago. His fastball has topped 100 mph.

High court struggles over hospital pension dispute

BY SAM HANANEL,
Associated Press

The Supreme Court seemed to struggle on Monday over whether some of the nation's largest hospitals should be allowed to sidestep federal laws protecting pension benefits for workers.

Justices considered the cases of three church-affiliated nonprofit hospital systems being sued for underfunding pension plans covering about 100,000 employees. But the outcome ultimately could affect the retirement benefits of roughly a million employees around the country.

The hospitals — Advocate Health Care Network, Dignity Health and Saint Peter's Healthcare System — say their pensions are "church plans" exempt from the law and have been treated as such for decades by the government agencies in charge. They want to overturn three lower court rulings against them.

Workers suing the health systems argue that Congress never meant to exempt them and say the hospitals are shirking legal safeguards that could jeopardize retirement benefits.

"I'm torn," Justices Sonia Sotomayor said at one point during the hour-long argument. "This could be read either way in my mind."

Justice Anthony Kennedy said the Internal Revenue Service issued hundreds of letters over more than 30 years approving the hospitals' actions. That shows they were "proceeding in good faith with the assurance of the IRS that what they were doing was lawful," he said.

The case could affect dozens of similar lawsuits over pension plans filed across the country.

Much of the argument focused on how to read a federal law that generally requires pension plans to be fully funded and insured. Congress amended that law in 1980 to carve out a narrow exemption for churches and other religious organizations.

But in each of the three cases, appeals courts in San Francisco, Chicago and Philadelphia ruled that the exemption applies only to plans that were established by a church.

Hospital lawyer Lisa Blatt told the justices that Congress wanted to exempt plans associated with or controlled by a church, whether or not a church itself created the plan. She said federal agencies including the IRS and the Labor Department have assured them for decades that they are exempt.

Blatt said a ruling against the hospitals would "jettison 30 years of settled expectations" and open the hospitals to billions in liability.

Justice Elena Kagan said if Congress wanted a broader exemption, it used "very odd language" instead of being more straightforward.

Arguing for the workers, lawyer James Feldman said Congress was very zealous about creating exceptions to pension laws and did not intend to exempt these hospitals. He said the IRS letters wrongly interpreted the law and can't be relied on.

"These plans have zero involvement with any church," Feldman said.

Justice Samuel Alito seemed to side with the hospitals, noting that these and other similar lawsuits exposed the hospitals to billions in damages.

The federal government is backing the hospitals. Justice Department lawyer Malcolm Stewart acknowledged that Congress could have made the law clearer, but he said lawmakers wanted to protect hospitals like those being sued.

California-based Dignity Health formed in 1986 from the merger of two Catholic hospital systems. Illinois-based Advocate Health Care Network is affiliated with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the United Church of Christ. Saint Peter's is owned by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Metuchen, New Jersey, and is headquartered in New Brunswick.

A ruling is expected by late June.

CAMPAIGN

2016 she took her brand to social media, calling it #Nevertoopretty.

"The campaign consisted of us taking images of girls and women holding a sign that stated what they were never to pretty to do or be," said Williams. "We posted images on Instagram and all social media."

Williams describes the campaign as very organic and authentic.

On March 7, Under Armour released their new social media campaign #ImPretty. To many viewers the similarities are shocking and caused an uproar on their Instagram account.

"You're 'pretty' guilty of plagiarism @underarmour. You're betraying the support and credit that you should be giving to the woman, small business owner @tooprettybrand and professional trainer who started the @nevertoopretty campaign several years ago," said known2sun.

Another user added, "Are you serious @underarmour??? First you give to the corrupt, now you steal from the creative? This concept belongs to @tooprettybrand (&has for years) #prettylame," said leahkitty.

Both companies promote female empowerment on social media. Their goal is to encourage women and girls all around to fight and change the stigma of female athletes 'needing' to be pretty.

There are not only similarities in the campaign itself, but also with an athlete sponsorship. Olympic athlete, Mikaela Mayer, has worked with both companies.

A professional boxer, Mayer posted a photo of herself advocating the #nevertoopretty movement two days before leaving to the Rio Olympics sending the message she is never too pretty to throw a punch.

Not long after the Olympics she was signed by Under Armour, and worked with their #ImPretty campaign.

"After the multiple comments on their social media and mine, Under Armour emailed me and said everything I was doing was awesome, and they said their campaign is independent of what I am doing," said Williams.

Williams said she wants to work out some sort of agreement with Under Armour. The company stands by their belief that they have a unique and independent campaign.

"At Under Armour, we aim to celebrate and inspire the strong female spirit. With the #ImPretty campaign, we wanted to challenge the idea of 'just a pretty face', recognizing that beauty runs much deeper than what is visible from the outside," said Attica Jaques, Vice President, Brand Management at Under Armour.

Williams is thankful for the support she has from the local community and her social media campaign. At the end of the day her goal is to have the campaign grow and to bring awareness to girls and women all over.

"I want every female to feel as if they can accomplish anything, and they can do whatever it is they want," said Williams.

AUDIT

The report found NMS in compliance with development agreements and contracts concerning the 23 buildings they own and manage in Santa Monica.

In December, a Los Angeles County Superior Court judge found CEO Neil Shekhter and his associates submitted a forged contract and destroyed evidence as part of a civil suit over a joint venture involving Boston-based hedge fund AEW. As a result, Judge Soussan Bruguera gave AEW control of nine properties – seven of which are in Santa Monica. Attorneys for NMS appealed and a stay has been placed on the ruling while it works its way back through the courts.

Soon after the ruling, NMS spokesman Eric Rose faced tough questions from Councilmember Sue Himmelrich who requested the review along with Councilmember Kevin McKeown. Himmelrich was concerned about the future financial viability of the City's largest developer and his ability to meet contractual obligations. At the time, Rose promised full cooperation.

"NMS is pleased that the City's thorough inquiry is resolved," Rose said in a statement to the Daily Press. "We feel vindicated by the City's report, which clearly shows that NMS has been in full compliance with all of its regulatory agreements and obligations."

The audit found NMS is in compliance with all development agreements and – so far - moving forward on pending contracts, including a land swap that will allow the City to rebuild Fire Station 1. In an email to the Daily Press, McKeown said the City has more work to do.

"Our big challenge may be with NMS agreements that are not yet finalized, including one that could affect our City's ability to construct a much-needed downtown fire station," McKeown said. NMS still has to secure the necessary entitlements to complete the land exchange.

The bulk of the report looks at affordable housing requirements that all developers must adhere to in order to build large projects in the City. Of NMS' 615 apartments governed by deed-restrictions - meaning the tenants pay lower rents and must fit certain qualifications - 89% of them are in compliance.

A breakdown of the rest revealed 33 vacant apartments, 32 tenants over the allowed income level and 3 households that did not file paperwork. Rose explained the tenants over the allowed income had met requirements at one time, but had most likely received new jobs or promotions since moving in. Santa Monica laws will allow many of those tenants to stay in their homes. The three households that did not submit income documentation have already received 90-days notices to vacate.

"As to 33 vacant apartments, those are just normal vacancies that represent about 5% of the total units, an industry-standard vacancy standard," Rose said.

The report does not address Himmelrich's major concern: how the potential loss of nine properties and various lawsuits could impact NMS's bottom line. A spokesman for NMS says the company has plenty of money and fulfilling contractual agreements in the future will not be a problem. At the moment, NMS has ten Development Agreement applications moving through the pipeline.

Better Walking and Biking Along the Beach Path

GoSaMo

The North Beach Trail Project will improve safety and circulation for both pedestrians and bicyclists on Santa Monica Beach. Ocean Front Walk, north of the Pier, will be renovated with new paving, seat walls, lighting, and better connections to and from the Pacific Coast Highway overpasses and the beach. The shared bike path at the north end of the beach will be widened with a clearly defined separate path for pedestrians, and circulation along the bike path under the Pier and around the large parking lot north of the Pier will be improved to accommodate the heavy pedestrian traffic.

Community outreach is currently underway! Please visit www.tiny.cc/SurveyNorthBeachTrail through April 20, 2017 to take a survey in English or Spanish that will measure Beach Trail users' perceptions of safety, comfort, and desired access points along the Beach Trail between Bay Street and the north city limits. In-person surveys will be conducted along the Beach Trail on Sunday April 9, 2017 between noon and 4pm. City staff and the consultant team will interview Beach Trail users and gather their responses to a short survey. Information collected will inform initial design concepts for improvements, which will be presented at a Community Workshop in May/June 2017. Time and location information to be posted on the City's project website at http://www.santamonicaparks.org/beach-trail.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 28)

Go on and set those ambitious goals. The next three weeks bring the clarity to organize your efforts, prioritize your responsibilities and make a doable plan. One special person brings sunshine to your summer days. You'll create new income for your family in July; also there's a big sale in October. Sagittarius and Scorpio adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 39, 40, 47 and 1.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Honest self-reflection requires a big person with a little ego. You'll review the chain of events that led up to an undesired result. Your willingness to look at what your part may have been will enable to you to see a solution.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
If allowed, there are some rather unhelpful ideas that will go marching around your mind with all the pomp and circumstance of bonafide facts. Check them, challenge them, or just ignore them and they'll diminish in the distance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)
What seems like a formless mess may very well be just that now, next week and next month. But it will not always be this way. Trust that things yet unknown are shaping slowly into the structures of your future.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)
Coral reefs make up only about a tenth of one percent of the earth's surface, yet that's where nearly a quarter of the known species of marine life live. You want beauty. Go to a rare place of concentrated diversity.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
Of course you can be creative all alone and you often have a peaceful experience creating in solitude and silence. And yet, you need the group energy to keep you motivated. Get involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
You've been emphasizing output over input, and that's fine for a while as long as you realize that when the inspiration dries up, you'll need to go replenish it. But why wait?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
They may look at you appraisingly, figuring out what value you might add to their lives. And yet, do not fall into the trap of thinking you are as good as what you can do for others. You are invaluable and your worth is inherent.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)
In regards to finance, you'll benefit from erring on the side of caution. What builds slowly will build strong. The same will go for partnerships of all types. Be methodical and stay aware.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
Someone is going to get the best deal, the highest quality and in the most abundant quantity available -- why not you? Nothing is guaranteed, but ask anyway. Those who don't ask, don't get.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
A certain amount of political play is to be expected. And yet, if it seems that the intrigues and falsehoods surround you on all sides, it's a sign that you are in a toxic game. Get out. No prize is worth this.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
Discovering why what you offer is different and necessary is the usual burden and challenge of business. Being the total original that you are, you will find this neither burdensome nor challenging today.

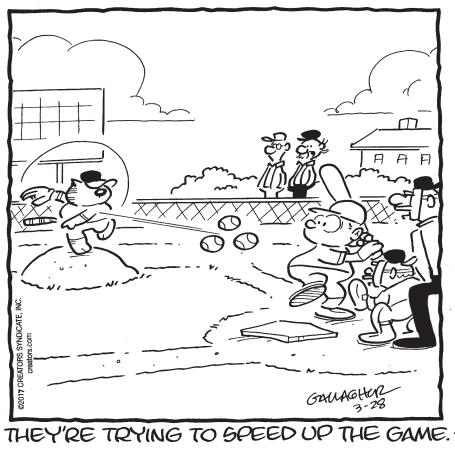

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
Oddly, there are some people in the world who find it extremely difficult to be happy for other people. They are the opposite of you, with powers of empathy so strong that you feel every human victory almost as if it were your own.

Mercury and Saturn Embolden

Pressure begets pressure. Resistance is met with resistance. People are naturally inclined to push against whatever is pushing against them. But we don't always have to go with our natural inclinations. Mercury and Saturn embolden a nontypical response to life -- the kind that will shake things up, if not heal the situation.
