Students unlikely to return to Santa Monica campuses this year

SCHOOLS OUT: While school buildings will remain closed for the duration of the year, students will continue to receive instruction up to their summer vacation.

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

California public schools are likely to be closed for the remainder of the academic year, according to California State Superintendent of Public Instruction Tony Thurmond.

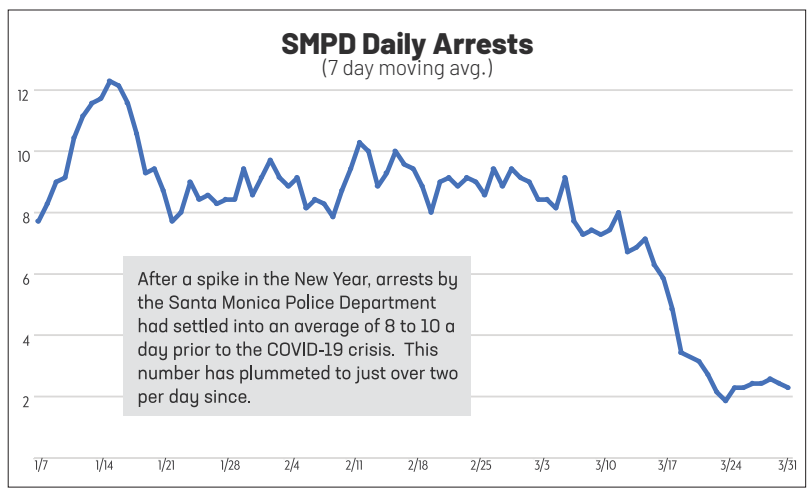

In a letter sent out Tuesday morning, Thurmond detailed a need to keep schools across the state shuttered for the safety of students and staff.

"Due to the current safety concerns and needs for ongoing social distancing, it appears that our students will not be able to return to school campuses before the end of the school year," Thurmond said in the letter. "This is in no way to suggest that school is over for the year, but rather we should put all efforts into strengthening our delivery of education through distance learning."

While most city of Santa Monica employees are working from home during the coronavirus pandemic, some services still need people out in the field and are adapting their operations to protect workers and residents.

In interviews with the Daily Press last week, city leaders said first responders are wearing personal protective equipment when necessary, monitoring their health and preparing for the lockdown's possible consequences on public safety.

COVID-19 Cases increase as drive through testing expands

Four new Santa Monica residents have tested positive for coronavirus, bringing the total number of cases in the city to 53, public health officials said Wednesday.

Cases in both Santa Monica and Los Angeles County have more than doubled over the last week, with more than 1,000 cases confirmed in the county over the last two days alone. Barbara Ferrer, director of the L.A. County Department of Public Health, announced Wednesday 513 new cases of coronavirus for a total of 3,518 cases across the county, 733 of which have been hospitalized at some point.

Ferrer confirmed Wednesday that five people experiencing homelessness and two people working in homeless shelters have tested positive for coronavirus. She said the county is investigating 207 cases among residents and staff in 43 institutional settings.

Ferrer announced 11 deaths Wednesday, bringing the county death toll to 64. Seven people who resided in nursing homes have died since the pandemic began, she said.

Nine of the 11 deaths reported Wednesday occurred in people older than 65. One person was between 41 and 65 and another person was between 18 and 40. All 11 individuals underlying health conditions except for two people over the age of 65.

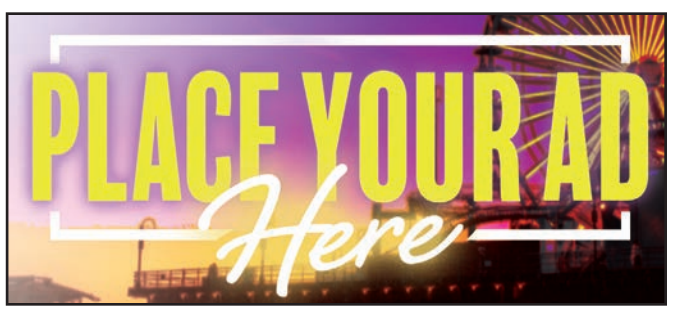

Across California, more than 8,700 people have the virus and 64 have died.

Ferrer said more than 21,000 L.A. County residents have been tested as of Tuesday, more than double how many tests had been completed a week ago. She said the number of orders were first being implemented across the county, leaders of the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District said they were monitoring the situation closely and would adhere to any directives made by state officials.

SMMUSD Superintendent Ben Drati added on Wednesday, "Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District will follow the latest directive to keep campuses closed for the remainder of the 2019-2020 school year."

However, distance learning will continue, according to Drati.

"We will have another letter for (parents) this week with additional details regarding our continued plans for distance learning and additional resources for our families during this difficult time," he said.

Prior to the dismissal of students in mid-March, elementary students were told to pick up packets that they would be expected to complete while they participated in online learning sessions, according to Jacqueline Mora, assistant superintendent of educational services. Secondary students were instructed to submit assignments online and communicate with their teachers by email or phone.

"We have entered uncharted territory with distance learning," district staff said in a previous letter, but SMMUSD has responded by launching a new Family Resources website that contains updated instructional materials as well as a community and mental-health guide that lists local organizations who may be willing to help those in need.

But some local parents worry if children will have the resources needed to actually learn while they are away from the classroom.

With a daughter in fourth-grade and a full-time job with Los Angeles County, Mariah Quevedo said in an interview last week it's been hard adjusting to the school closures.

Quevedo said her daughter goes to John Muir Elementary School and she's been completing her daily workbook activities in the morning.

"She'll do her math or reading and I add an art project in there or some extra curricular stuff, so she can have something fun to do during the day," she said. "But my concern is I just feel like schools should be showing more of an effort to set up online classes, check-ins and online attendance — to keep that class routine going."

Quevedo added there are many parents who don't have the luxury to pay for tutors and other programs, so she hopes to see SMMUSD institute a model similar to Los Angeles Unified School District's.

"I'm not one to compare but I have a lot of friends and family in LAUSD, and my daughter catches up with her friends on the weekends and they're talking about how they see their teacher every morning," Quevedo said, detailing how L.A. schools are taking attendance and holding they it's mandatory Zoom meetings online.

"It's nothing too major, but I think it's an hour-and-a-half of class time and they take attendance and assign projects just like it's regular class time. And it's nice because it gives the kids an opportunity to ask the teacher questions," she said.

That important, to Quevedo, because not all parents have the skills to help with the lessons children are studying in their books.

"That class routine is important, and I feel like here in Santa Monica and Malibu, kids are using this time as a vacation because they don't have to report to anybody," Quevedo said, "so I think a setup like (Los Angeles Unified's) would be very beneficial for Santa Monica."

California cities want transparency rules waived in pandemic

JULIET WILLIAMS
Associated Press

Citing unprecedented challenges created by the coronavirus pandemic, city officials across California are asking Gov. Gavin Newsom to suspend or delay numerous state laws, saying they're unable to comply with everything from environmental regulations to public records laws that give people a window into how the government is spending public money.

Noting that city resources and personnel are stretched thin responding to the pandemic, the executive director of the League of California Cities asked Newsom last week to "take immediate action to pause certain statutory requirements."

The league that represents nearly 500 cities is seeking to delay the state's constitutionally mandated California Public Records Act, which requires transparency in government decision-making and spending. The law requires public agencies to respond to requests for information within 10 days, though many routinely take advantage of legally allowed extensions.

Spokeswoman Kayla Woods said the group is not seeking to suspend all public records requests, but wants "flexibility to cities if their ability to respond to certain PRA requests is limited due to decreased staffing or closure of city facilities." She said the delay would be limited to records requests "other than those created during, and relating to, the COVID-19 crisis."

"Cities have varying levels of staffing and resources, and are focusing nearly all of their efforts on responding to this public health crisis," Woods said in an email to The Associated Press.

The danger with suspending such laws, even partially or temporarily, "is that the public won't know and won't have ability to oversee financial improprieties, public employee wrongdoing, fraud — myriad important aspects of the government will not be able to be seen by the public if the public doesn't have access to public records," said Duffy Carolan, a San Francisco attorney who represents media outlets.

The league's request comes as governments worldwide are spending billions, often through contracts with private companies, to build emergency hospitals, acquire hotel rooms and buy much-needed personal protective equipment. In California alone, the Legislature approved $1 billion in emergency spending that will filter out to local governments.

Newsom has already waived regulations on everything from hospital staffing to school funding in sweeping executive orders. He temporarily suspended parts of the state's open meeting laws, allowing boards and commissions to meet and vote by teleconference and exempting rules that people be allowed to speak in person.

The governor's office did not respond to a request Tuesday from the AP asking whether he is considering any more such suspensions.

Across the U.S., governors, lawmakers, mayors and county officials have already opted to keep the public away from public meetings for the sake of health. Federal agencies have cited the crisis in refusing to respond to records requests. In California, San Francisco's mayor suspended the city's stringent Sunshine Law, and Fresno's city council voted to suspend the entire California Public Records Act.

In response, 132 good government and media companies have urged governments to redouble transparency during the crisis, saying credibility is more critical than ever.

"As people are asked to make increasing sacrifices in their daily lives for the greater good of public health, the legitimacy of government decision-making requires a renewed commitment to transparency," the groups wrote.

In response to his request for emails related to Sonoma County's coronavirus response, county officials told Santa Rosa Press-Democrat reporter Tyler Silvy that the public's interest "is not served by diverting staff resources away from essential emergency response work to immediately respond to records requests." In subsequent correspondence, a county attorney told Silvy the county would process such requests when normal business resumes.

Aaron Field, a San Francisco attorney who specializes in media law and is co-chair of the Northern California Society of Professional Journalists' freedom of information committee, noted that the California Supreme Court has said open government "is essential to the functioning of society," so the bar for suspending such a rule — even temporarily — should be high.

"In the midst of a crisis in which the government is more involved in our daily lives than it has ever been in my memory, it's more important than ever for public access to be preserved," he said.

The League of California Cities requested a host of delays in its six-page letter. Woods, the league's spokeswoman, said many city employees who would normally work on fulfilling statutory requirements "have been pulled from their regular assignments to work on these vital emergency response efforts."

The league is requesting delays to numerous waivers and deadlines, including for construction project approvals, housing reviews and annual staff salary information. It also seeks to:

— Suspend a California law requiring public officials to file statements of economic interest that can show conflicts of interest and weighing fees for late submissions, which California's Fair Political Practices Commission is expected to formally approve Thursday. Woods said the filing delay ensures local leaders can focus on responding to the crisis.

— Delay some parts of California's environmental law by four months, including the need to hold timely meetings and a rule requiring California Environmental Quality Act reviews to be completed within a year.

— Cut by 25% the locally required spending on some transportation projects, which governments have previously sought to waive; and extend the deadline to approve some construction projects.

Contemporary Pin Up Culture Is Thriving

Need a diversion? How about a documentary about extraordinary and everyday women who compete in a Pin Up contest? That's the story behind "Bombshells and Dollies," a new documentary on Amazon (and other platforms) by Santa Monica resident and producer Dan Halperin, and it came about almost by accident.

Dan was in Las Vegas exploring the possibility of a TV show about cars and found himself at Viva Las Vegas Rockabilly Weekend, where "25,000 people come from all over the world, celebrating rockabilly music, classic cars, vintage style, pin up and burlesque culture. It takes over the Orleans Hotel for four days, a huge hotel off the Strip that turns into the 1950s for four days."

PIN UP CONTEST

Focused on the cars, Dan says he noticed "almost peripherally" a number of women dressed unusually colorfully in vintage style clothing. The TV show he came to pitch didn't fly, and he thought the story of these women might make a good reality show.

"Several hundred women from around the world submit to compete in the Miss Viva Las Vegas pin up contest, and of the hundreds who submit, 12 are selected as finalists." The people Dan pitched the idea to liked it, but wanted it partly-scripted to feature the kinds of signature cat-fights seen on other reality shows.

Dan went back to Rockwell DeVil, founder of the Miss Viva Las Vegas Pin Up contest with that proposal, and she said flat out, "We would never do that." Till then, Dan thought that pin up was just about dress up. "It was a shocking blow to me. She said, 'We would never demean ourselves that way,' and that flipped a switch for me. We decided to do a documentary, and I ended up following the 12 finalists through the final competition."

The stories the women tell paint a picture of female empowerment, embracing all body types, races, sexual orientation and cultures. For them, pin up is an emotional and creative outlet. As a producer who leans toward embracing social issues in his work, Dan says, "This film is very much about women's freedom of self-expression and developing self-respect, about total body acceptance, no matter what size or shape, and celebrates every woman's right to look and feel gorgeous."

PIN UP CULTURE

It might be easy to dismiss Pin Up culture as skin-deep, but "Bombshells and Dollies" presents a personal look at the lives of this diverse cast of adult women. From different backgrounds, classes and geographical locations, they all have full lives outside their passion project.

Most are employed, some have their own business, others are single moms or homemakers with families, still others share a life with a same-sex partner. What they have in common is that they share a commitment to community engagement as volunteers or doing charity work.

And while pin up focuses on beauty and ideals of femininity, it isn't just a vanity project: these women have overcome great challenges to get to the Miss Viva Las Vegas competition. Which that makes for some dramatic, moving and inspiring moments in the documentary.

COMING FULL CIRCLE

In a way, Pin Up could be said to have come full circle.

Dan says, "We take our film back to the 40s, when men were overseas fighting in World War II, and women were not only raising their families but holding down 40-hour-a-week jobs to fill the mens' places. Pin ups were images of beautiful women, often celebrities, posed in a sexy but modest style, that the soldiers 'pinned up' in their barracks, their lockers, painted on their airplanes. Even the 'girl next door' was sending cheesecake pictures to the GIs, to remember what they were fighting for and coming home to, knowing they were being supported.

"Like today's women, they had very full lives. And clothing from the 40s and 50s included much fuller body types. As contemporary women were finding that today's clothing just doesn't fit every body type, they hearkened back to these styles. Pin up today takes the best of the 40s and 50s, and leaves the more oppressive aspects of womens' lives from that era behind, turning it into something positive instead."

BUT IS IT FEMINIST?

As the post-war years passed, the 50s came roaring to life with rock and roll, Elvis, Jerry Lee Lewis and rockabilly culture began influencing styles. "Rockabilly is a huge aspect of pin up culture," Dan said, "and the music embraced women wearing a whole new fashionable, brightly colored style of clothing. Often you'll see them posed with vintage cars, another aspect of the rockabilly lifestyle at Viva Las Vegas Rockabilly Weekend."

One of the judges of the Miss Viva Las Vegas contest is professional model Angelique Noire, Dan said. "She says in the film that she gets hired by major brands to model all over the world, and 'they decide what I'm going to wear, they do my makeup, my hair, select the photographer, location and pose. But in pin up, it's my own creativity, where I'm in control of all aspects of my image.'"

So is pin up feminist or not? According to Dan, "The women who do pin up say 'I celebrate my sexuality and physical presentation, but not at the expense of my intellect and what I do for the community.' It is 'woman strong, look at me, I am all of this.'"

This year's Viva Las Vegas Weekend has been canceled due to COVID-19…leaving Dan Halperin with 1000 DVDs he intended to sell there. Why is Everyone Looking at Us?

On a recent Saturday we were bicycling up Main Street thinking, there are still too many cars on Main Street. Then we noticed something else going on. Pedestrians looked up as we rolled by, and there followed greetings: "Good morning." "Hey." The head-nodding acknowledgment. A "howdy-do" felt like we were in an America town a hundred years ago.

I usually ring my bike bell to provoke the locals. This was different. Something in their eyes. Granted, you focus on the eyes when a mask is covering the mouth and the nose. But why were they looking at us riding past? Everyone gave up their glance.

"Only connect," is the famous epigraph from E.M. Forster's 1910 novel, Howards End. When we find ourselves yearning disabled, skin hungerers (an actual condition where a human desires physical contact), what do locked-inside-in-a-locked-down-city dwellers with nowhere to go but back in do?

We got free. We flew the cooped up and lived inside an E.M. Forster bubblilicious fiction of affection.

On Friday night, I was with a friend at Urgent Care on 9th and Wilshire. He's seventy-one, was feverish for two weeks and lost his sense of smell – time for the swab, right? Everything looked pretty good, they said, after blood pressure and temperature checks. No need for the test.

Next was UCLA Immediate Care, after a quick stop at Hank's Liquor for a not-unrelated emergency. Streets empty the whole way to 16th and Arizona. Parking a breeze. They didn't look at my friend's Medicare card. They didn't want to read the note from his doctor. The entire exchange was conducted outside the automatic sliding door my friend never made it through. His doctor's voice on speakerphone held to the glass – they didn't care. They suggested the Emergency Room right across the street.

ER: open 24/7! A Friday night and only one person in the waiting room! My friend came out four hours later waving nine pages confirming chest x-ray, CT scan, liter of saline, script for Albuterol. And the Covid-19 test.

The other day I slipped through the snow fence near Lifeguard Tower 28 and illegally sat on the sand. Staring at the Pacific, I thought, is there compassion out there in the deep? What must the sea creatures think of us?

"Told you so"?

A guy in a wetsuit breaks my reverie. We're sheltering in the same space and gently acknowledge each other. He says I should take care – the beach being closed and all. Just before diving headfirst he shouts back, "You can't close the ocean!"

I wonder if he knew about the surfer fined a thousand dollars because they closed the ocean in Manhattan Beach.

Opportunity, Ignored In SM?

SUNRISE: A new dawn for the Earth? How will things change when we come out of this.

I WROTE LAST WEEK

About the possibility, the golden opportunity, for the human race to mend its sinful ways once and for all, in the wake of the lessons forced on us in the most terrible way by this deadly virus.

Look at the clear blue skies, and probably much cleaner oceans. The drop in crime. The federal government sending out checks to people who suddenly have nothing. Empty streets and freeways, trains and buses. The homeless into shelters. People caring for the elderly and infirm, whom they don't even know. The time people are spending with their families, or in solitary contemplation. The books read, films watched. Poetry written, songs composed, art created, imagination unleashed.

The valuable time on our hands with nothing to do but whatever we choose to do. No obligation to trudge to work, come home, collapse, eat, watch TV, sleep and start all over again. (Nothing at all wrong with work, if it fulfills you.) Maybe Andrew Yang was right, the advance of technology has changed everything.

The horrible plague has shown us all this is possible. We've been forced into it. But we can choose it too, going forward.

When you go outside for exercise, a walk, run, skate or bike ride, the amazing sight of empty streets and beaches before you are testament to an ongoing act of love and brotherhood by so many thousands. Almost everyone has complied, without the threat of enforcement. How about that?

EXISTENTIAL DILEMMAS

Of course, there are some major down sides. Freedom from drudge work but also from income, and that's very scary. For some, 100 percent time with family is about 50 percent too much. 100 percent time alone can be unnerving too. There is so much we all miss now in home sequester, per our habits and desires: getting together with friends, playing sports, watching sports, travel, dining out, dancing, concerts, the beach and ocean. It's been said we will come out of this either gourmet cooks or alcoholics.

We are experiencing some really good things we never have before, and hopefully we will see the great value in these alternatives forced upon us, and want to continue them no matter what.

IMAGINE

All the people, living for today.

Imagine there's no countries, and no religion too, nothing to kill or die for.

Imagine all the people living life in peace.

Imagine no possessions, no need for greed or hunger, a brotherhood of man.

Imagine all the people sharing all the world.

You may say I'm a dreamer but I'm not the only one. I hope someday you'll join us, and the world will live as one.

It's a well-worn Utopian concept, and John Lennon captured it poignantly in his song. But it always failed, after a time, I think because people were trying to create that space in the midst of a world that wasn't thinking that way, and even hostile to the idea.

NO QUESTION THERE IS RESISTANCE AND DOUBT

But, here it is, right in front of us. All the irrefutable demonstration that we are all in this together. And, for the big picture, it looks hopeful. Especially in a world facing imminent threat to human existence through climate change.

Maybe you wouldn't choose to eliminate all trains and planes, boats and cars, but maybe there's a way to get along with a lot fewer of them. Maybe we can see the homeless now as full blown human beings, just like us, but some with special needs. I have a good friend whose brother has emotional problems; when, out of nowhere, he gets the call that his brother is flipping out, he drops everything to take care of him. Hasn't this crisis demonstrated beyond doubt that we are all brothers and sisters? If we don't care for everyone, we will all suffer and die with the spread of this disease. The poor, the sick, the homeless, the incarcerated -- they are us.

BUT... BUT...

We're not all on the same page. Greed is a powerful human component and there are those who even in the most dire straits will seek to exploit it to their advantage.

I DO APPRECIATE IT

Really I do. All of you who have sent me suggestions for sites streaming music. Great music by the biggest stars, terrific music by people you've never heard of. Creativity brought into existence by crisis, shared freely with the world. It's a great and noble thing.

I have looked at a few. Eh.

But that's just me. I have worshiped at the altar of live music for many decades. It just doesn't compare to something on a screen, no matter how good and immediate the technology. So, I'll just wait, mostly. How long? No one knows. Too long.

But it's an excellent distraction for music lovers with a lot of time on their hands now. I've found three websites with good lists of streaming music, day by day, from Billboard, NPR and CNET, then one from The Guardian, not as well organized but covering a much broader cultural landscape.

This month: Tennessee Williams - Steps Must Be Gentle. https://www.facebook.com/groups/288785622940/permalink/10158445436512941/

I have rarely tuned in to music on TV or online since we lost Palladia on cable. Loved that channel. For now, if that's what I crave, I have half an office stacked with Blu-rays and HD DVDs. I have a big comfortable recliner. Now how do I get that HD weed delivered?

Make your memories, especially in your youth, I say, when you're probably more freewheeling, because you will feed off them for a lifetime. That's pretty dramatically clear right now.

That popped up this past week. I did a phone interview with a producer from Albuquerque FM radio station KUNM, putting together a documentary about the time 50 years ago, days after the killings at Kent State, when UNM erupted into the national headlines as a center for student unrest over the war in Vietnam.

Jane Fonda showed up, Gov. Dave Cargo called out the National Guard who waded in with razor-sharp unsheathed bayonets and stabbed some students and media people, nearly fatally, and a march down Central Avenue drew an angry crowd out of Albuquerque High School who threw very large rocks, one of which caught me squarely and very hard in the right eye. Bye bye binocular vision and my exquisite ping pong game. I was reporting for the campus newspaper, but I had also worked at KUNM, and producer Kent Paterson wanted my recollections.

I told him that I started at KUNM in 1968 after discharge from the Army (drafted), delivering the news but talking my way into a music show. Saturdays, midnight to 6 a.m. -- amazing that no one else wanted that, right? But I knew I would be getting all those students cruising home at closing time after partying Saturday night, who switched on the radio (remember radios?) when they got home.

PLAYLIST

Paterson asked me what my playlist was like, and not being able to tick that off 50 years later, I did a little research.

"Well, Kent," I responded, "there was an amazing amount of good music to choose from then. To give you an idea, these albums were released in '68 -- Elvis, Gold Records, Merle Haggard, Sing Me Back Home, The Notorious Byrd Brothers, Blue Cheer's Vincebus Eruptum (one of the loudest, baddest albums ever!), Boogie with Canned Heat, Simon & Garfunkel's The Graduate, Dr. John, Gris Gris, Iron Butterfly, Heavy, Aretha, Lady Soul, the first Spirit album (in my Top 10 of All Time), the Velvet Underground's classic White Light White Heat, Gordon Lightfoot, Did She Mention My Name?, Johnny Cash, From Sea to Shining Sea, Now and - Them, John Coltrane's transcendent Om, Richie Havens, Something Else Again, Steppenwolf... and Kent, that was just in January."

completed tests is an undercount because the county is still waiting on some labs to report negative tests.

Two drive-through testing centers are now open on the Westside.

Primary care startup One Medical opened an open air testing center in West Los Angeles Wednesday and the city of Los Angeles opened a free testing site at the West L.A. Veteran's Administration Lot 15 last week. Both are only testing people who are symptomatic.

One Medical, which operates several primary care offices on the Westside, is offering drive-through testing to patients who have been virtually assessed and referred for testing by its providers. The Veteran's Administration testing center is free and open to anyone who the county system deems symptomatic or high risk.

The county has 1,438 open hospital beds, including 240 ICU beds, Christina Ghaly, director of the L.A. County Department of Health Services, said Wednesday. She said the county received 320 new ventilators but has not yet had to distribute many stockpiled ventilators.

At a Wednesday news conference, Ferrer addressed new guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control that members of the public can wear scarfs, bandanas or homemade masks to prevent themselves from spreading coronavirus to others. She said N95 masks and surgical masks should only be worn by medical workers and first responders because some hospitals have a shortage of masks.

"It will prevent droplets coming out of our mouths and potentially infecting others, because you can be spreading even if you have no symptoms," Ferrer said. "But wearing a mask is not a shield and doesn't replace requests that you stay at home, practice social distancing and (wash your hands)."

To slow the spread of coronavirus locally, Santa Monica public schools will close indefinitely and county beaches, beach bike paths and public trails will close through at least April 19, officials said last week.

City of Santa Monica parks and farmers markets are still open, but Palisades Park was closed last weekend to prevent crowding. The city's public buildings, nonessential businesses, playgrounds, Santa Monica Pier and beach parking lots are closed through the end of April.

City Manager Rick Cole announced last week fines for individuals and businesses violating the stay at home orders that range from $100 to $1,000. Santa Monica Police Department Chief Cynthia Renaud said she has directed officers to contact, inform, educate and encourage compliance with individuals before resorting to citations.

Cole announced Wednesday that construction sites, which Gov. Gavin Newsom has deemed essential and are allowed to stay open under his Safer at Home order, must operate in accordance with social distancing and hygiene requirements.

The local order requires that handwashing facilities or hand sanitizer be installed at entrances to construction sites, shared equipment be sanitized, and workers must maintain six feet of distance from each other and not gather in groups larger than three.

The city has the authority to halt construction if the requirements are not followed, said city spokesperson Constance Farrell.

MICK TAYLOR

The day of writing this I got a call, that I missed, from Auburn, IN. Robocall, I figured. But when I got a second call I answered it, and wound up chatting with a cool dude named Kris, with an amazing story.

He got my number from the end credits of one of my Not Just Another LA Music Shows, from 1995, that he watched from a DVD that a friend in Europe sent him. Yes, I had the legendary blues and Stones guitarist on my public access show taped in Eagle Rock. The first of two shows featuring him, actually.

A huge Stones fan and especially of Taylor, Kris decided, what the hell, 25 years ago but maybe the phone number is still good.

After I determined he wasn't trying to sell me a reverse mortgage or get me to vote for a Republican, we talked music. He told me of a Stones concert, his sixth one, maybe, that he attended in AZ, I think, at a big stadium, around 2003.

"They opened the gates and we all rushed in," he remembered, "running like crazy for the best spots in front. But it was a long, long, long way and by the time I got there I was about to pass out. It took about an hour of leaning on that fence before I felt a little bit better.

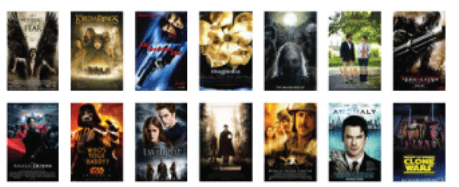

"When I went to the doctor a month later, he gave me a stress test and said, you had a heart attack about a month ago!

"But they filmed that show," he said with obvious delight, "and because I was in front, I now have a DVD of a Stones show with me in it! Not many people can say that!"

"Not many people," I pointed out, "have a DVD of them having a heart attack!"

Charles Andrews has listened to a lot of music of all kinds, including more than 2,000 live shows. He has lived in Santa Monica for 34 years and wouldn't live anywhere else in the world. Really. Send love and/or rebuke to him at therealmrmusic@gmail.com

CURIOUS CITY

The first draft of the $2T aid package from DC was an absolute giveaway to fat cats. Corporate socialism. The Dems stepped in and demanded more for those really in need, and got it, to some degree.

In Santa Monica, same thing. Have you noticed that construction has not abated? Do you really think you can erect a building with no one getting closer than six feet? And why are we continuing to build, build, build in SM? Density spreads disease! This is insane. Call a halt!

Our City Council continues to consolidate their power by limiting input from residents. They have moved to diminish the role of commissions, staffed by volunteer residents to advise the Council, and even reduce the two minutes of comment we get at Council meetings. Huge projects, demonstrably opposed by many residents, are now able to move forward without any comment or input allowed.

While the entire planet is moving in one direction, our city government is trying to hold on by their fingernails, resisting community good for their own personal power. Really?

Charles Andrews has lived in Santa Monica for 34 years and wouldn't live anywhere else in the world. Really. Send love and/or rebuke to him at therealmrmusic@gmail.com

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 02)

There's a joy-dial on your heart; this solar return reaches in and turns it up. You get more of what makes you happy. More music, interesting stories, time with loved ones and order in your life. You impose the order through a series of small practices, taking on one less-than-optimal circumstance at a time. Scorpio and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 50, 31, 2 and 11.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Guard against interruptions. You can't afford to be pulled out of the flow of what you're doing. Sure, you can jump back in, but every distraction costs you something.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You've committed to an endeavor. There have been plenty of days when you didn't want to do it, and you did it anyway because you're a person who honors your commitments. Today, you'll be rewarded.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Emotions can get in the way or they can support you. Much depends on how focused you are on the goal. Stay fixed on your aim, and let whatever feelings show up organize themselves to help you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). There are plenty of reasons why you can't do the thing, and writing them down is the first step in your action plan. Answer every reason with a possible solution to try.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Your reputation is excellent, and you'll like the feedback you get when you test that. Today's luck involves publicity. Your best ideas may involve an open invitation to the general public.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Follow the crowd; end up in a crowded place. That's not so bad if the music is right, if your team needs you or if the event rocks your world. But if you just wind up in a long line for lunch? It's probably not worth it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Can anyone tell you what to do with your life? Sure, and lots of people will be happy to, especially if there's some kind of payment involved. And yet, moments of reflection and meditation will give you better intel.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The best reason to improve? Whichever one motivates you. For some, it will be revenge. For others, it's competition. For you, it's to fulfill an idea you have about who you might be.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You can see the same picture a thousand times and still notice something different in each viewing -- a reminder that you are constantly evolving and the world will meet you wherever you are.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You never stop reaching for the sun. The progress you seek will be all about reinvention. Some of who you are becoming is completely within your control, but there will also be surprises.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The space between things will convey more meaning than things themselves. It's true for the space between words, notes, visuals, people and more. You'll get good at reading spaces.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). When you seek achievement and goals, there's a definite end in mind. You get the prize, and you're done. But this thing you're after now will be an endless cycle of exploring and reinvention.

SANTA MONICA POLICE DEPARTMENT

SMPD Chief Cynthia Renaud said police officers are asked to self-monitor their health by taking their temperature at the beginning and end of each shift and use PPE in the field if necessary. Police stations and vehicles are being wiped down regularly.

Officers have arrested an average of two to three people each day since city officials declared a local emergency over coronavirus and shut down many businesses, public buildings and some outdoor spaces such as Santa Monica Pier.

"With any crime, you have to have a victim, a suspect and a location, and if you get rid of the location, the crime isn't going to happen," Renaud said.

But Renaud said SMPD is preparing for an uptick in domestic violence and officers are ramping up car patrols to deter people from breaking into closed businesses.

"We're concerned about what could happen with people confined together for long periods of time, especially with the amount of alcohol being purchased right now," she said.

Officers also have the authority to issue citations to individuals and businesses who violate state and county stay at home orders, although Renaud has directed officers to educate people about the orders and encourage compliance before resorting to citations, which can result in fines.

Individuals who break the stay at home order once can be fined $100, those who break the order twice can be fined $250 and those who break it three or more times can be fined $500. Businesses are fined on a higher schedule.

SANTA MONICA FIRE DEPARTMENT

SMFD Chief Bill Walker said coronavirus hasn't prompted significant changes to department protocol for medical aid calls because paramedics already take precautions for infectious diseases.

However, response teams are now sending one paramedic to evaluate potential COVID-19 patients so the entire team doesn't have to put on PPE until the person is confirmed as a potential case. Walker said the department has enough PPE for the next month.

Walker said although firefighters and paramedics are concerned for their health and their families' health, they train for crisis scenarios and feel prepared to assist during the pandemic. He said last week that SMFD had not yet encountered substantial numbers of coronavirus patients in the field.

"This is what our folks are trained to do … and we just haven't had (a lot of people with coronavirus) in the field," he said. "But we do foresee some tough medical challenges coming our way."

BIG BLUE BUS

Big Blue Bus has suspended fares so customers can board through rear doors and maintain their distance from operators, who now carry gloves and hand sanitizer. Buses are sanitized daily.

On Tuesday, BBB officials announced that two bus operators tested positive for coronavirus last weekend. The operators last worked on Friday, March 20, driving Routes 12, 7 and 8.

In a statement issued Tuesday, King alluded to the fact that BBB and transportation agencies across the globe had lost ridership during the pandemic and said the agency will continue to provide transportation for riders who rely on it.

"We know our bus system is an essential service that people rely on and we are closely monitoring routes to continue to meet those needs," King said.

PUBLIC WORKS

The city is still collecting trash and recycling, but some residents have complained that their garbage hasn't been picked up since last week.

City spokesperson Constance Farrell said residential routes were modified or consolidated last week to account for a decrease in demand for trash pickup from businesses required to close due to COVID-19. The city is also trying to minimize the number of workers needed for trash collection, she said.

"Some residential customers experienced changes to their normal collection schedule," Farrell said. "This week we are back to the normal schedule for all residential customers."

Farrell said customers should call (310) 458-2223 if their trash, recycling or organics have not been picked up and the city will collect the waste that day or the next.
