With “social distancing” orders still in effect throughout Los Angeles County, the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District’s Board of Education gathered online once again Wednesday for its second Zoom meeting of 2020.

Through the online platform, Superintendent Ben Drati detailed how the district will adapt to the ongoing need to keep schools closed. Drati said the district had anticipated the recent announcement from state officials and SMMUSD had taken several measures to guarantee quality education.

Confirmed coronavirus cases in Santa Monica jump to 62

Public health officials said Friday that 62 Santa Monica residents have tested positive for coronavirus as the total number of cases in Los Angeles County reached 4,566.

An additional six people in Santa Monica were confirmed to have the virus Friday out of a total of 521 new cases reported in L.A. County. Santa Monica’s case count is 1.6 times higher than it was a week ago and L.A. County’s has more than doubled. More than 1,000 people have been hospitalized at some point, representing 22% of cases.

Barbara Ferrer, director of the L.A. County Department of Public Health, said residents can expect to see 1,000 new cases each day in the coming weeks, and must continue to stay at home as much as possible and practice physical distancing.

She said about 26,000 residents have been tested as of Friday, more than double the number that had been tested a week ago. Seven thousand to 10,000 people are now being tested each day, but testing is still limited to people showing symptoms who have been approved by a doctor.

“We are going to see more cases of people who are positive with COVID-19, but it’s our hope that the rate increase continues to be manageable and that we don’t overwhelm our healthcare system,” she said.

Ferrer also announced 11 new deaths Friday, bringing the death toll in the county to 89. The death rate now stands at 1.9%, slightly below the state’s death rate of 2.3%.

Seventy-eight percent of people who have died in L.A. County were older than 65, Ferrer said. Seven people of the 11 people whose deaths were reported Friday were older than Although Los Angeles farmers markets were ordered to close earlier this week, Santa Monica farmers markets will remain open during the coronavirus pandemic with enhanced safety measures, city of Santa Monica officials said.

This weekend, the downtown, Pico and Main Street markets will have additional staff to limit the number of people entering the market and ensure that people are maintaining a distance of six feet from each other within the market, said city of Santa Monica spokesperson Constance Farrell. Staff will sketch out six feet intervals to guide the line leading into the market and customers have been

In time of crisis, Trump-Pelosi relationship remains broken

JONATHAN LEMIRE AND LAURIE KELLMAN

Associated Press

Two of the most powerful people in Washington haven't spoken in five months at a time when the nation is battling its worst health crisis in a century, one that has already killed more than 6,000 Americans and put 10 million others out of work.

President Donald Trump and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi last talked Oct. 16, when Pelosi pointed her finger at the seated president during a heated exchange in a White House meeting that was captured in a widely shared photograph. Pelosi stormed out, and the two leaders' frayed relationship was soon severed by the House's impeachment of Trump months later.

Now, there are worries the broken relationship could hinder the federal government's ability to respond to the growing coronavirus crisis, the extent of the damage reflected in Thursday's report that a record 6.6 million people filed for unemployment, adding to more than 3 million from two weeks earlier.

"Relationships are the beginning of everything. Trust in one another is key to cooperation," said John M. Bridgeland, who held government posts under Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama.

The relationship between Trump and Pelosi, never warm, appears beyond repair after the Republican president's impeachment, according to allies of both leaders. Even the COVID-19 pandemic, which has rewritten the rules of daily American life and threatens people's health and employment, has done nothing to thaw the ice between the two.

Last month, as Washington crafted the most expensive stimulus package in U.S. history, Trump and Pelosi eyed each other warily from opposite ends of Pennsylvania Avenue, the president leaving it to others to negotiate a $2.2 trillion economic relief package.

Trump and Pelosi communicated with — or at — each other via Twitter, television and intermediaries the other side could tolerate. Chief among them has been Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who negotiated the three rescue bills passed so far. When Trump signed the package at the White House, he didn't invite Pelosi or any other Democrats to join him.

The record-breaking jobless claims add new urgency to the matter of next steps for Congress, which had been moving, slowly, toward crafting another recovery bill that could equal or surpass the first stimulus' price tag.

Pelosi and Mnuchin worked out the stimulus by speaking dozens of times by phone and in the speaker's Capitol office overlooking the Mall. Going forward, new White House chief of staff Mark Meadows, a former congressman who has a relationship with Pelosi, is expected to be another leading conduit.

Pelosi has played down her lack of communication with Trump.

"Whatever communications we need to move forward, that will be happening whether I talk to the president or not," Pelosi said Thursday. "It's not casual. It isn't, 'Let's just chat.' It's about what is the purpose, what is the urgency, does it require the time of the speaker and the president, both of whom are very busy people."

The speaker also announced the formation of a bipartisan House select committee on the coronavirus crisis. Trump lashed out at the panel as a "witch hunt" and said it would ultimately help "build up" his poll numbers.

"I want to remind everyone here in our nation's capital, especially in Congress, that this is not the time for politics, endless partisan investigations," Trump said during the White House coronavirus task force briefing.

During the pandemic is a time when Americans may have less tolerance for the usual partisan bickering or brinkmanship.

"There's no space for politics," said Democratic Rep. Ben McAdams of Utah, who is recovering from the coronavirus and is one of several lawmakers who have isolated themselves.

According to a new poll by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research, 44% of Americans approve of how Trump is handling the coronavirus outbreak, mirroring his overall approval rating.

And fewer Americans, 38%, approve of the federal government's job of handling the virus' spread throughout the country, compared with larger shares approving of how their state and local governments are doing (57% and 54%, respectively).

Just 31% of Americans approve of how leaders in Congress are addressing the coronavirus, while 41% disapprove.

It wasn't always this bitter between Trump and Pelosi.

After the Democrats captured the House in November 2018, Trump cheered for Pelosi to retake the speakership, telling aides that he respected the California Democrat's political survival skills and believed she was a transactional politician with whom he could deal.

Instead, Pelosi became his most visible antagonist, creating viral images when she mockingly clapped for him during his 2019 State of the Union address and when she strode out of the West Wing after another tense meeting clad in a designer coat and sunglasses. His demand for federal money for a border wall with Mexico, and Pelosi's refusal to agree, led to the longest government shutdown in history. Trump ultimately backed down, and the government reopened.

Their feud exploded last year when Pelosi overcame her initial reluctance and authorized an impeachment inquiry into Trump's attempts to pressure Ukraine into investigating the family of a Democratic political foe, former Vice President Joe Biden.

Trump has told aides and confidants he

'Modern Family' promises satisfying end to its 11-season run

LYNN ELBER

AP Television Writer

Writer-producers Steven Levitan and Christopher Lloyd were mulling ideas for the 2009 TV season when they landed on an intriguing sitcom approach, one revolving around an extended family and done in the “mockumentary” style made popular by “The Office.”

“All these things are familiar enough, but different enough that we have a shot with this one,” Lloyd recalled thinking as he and Levitan tackled the first “Modern Family” script. “Having said that, I didn’t believe in it. I was at a party with one of my ‘Frasier’ friends, and said, ‘I think it’s a good piece of writing, but I’d sell the thing to you for 10 bucks because I don’t think it’s going anywhere.’”

Then the ensemble cast of familiar TV faces such as Ed O’Neill (“Married ... With Children”) and Julie Bowen (“Lost,” “Ed”) and relative newcomers was gathered. Once the first episode was shot, Lloyd moved “all the way to hopeful,” as he put it.

ABC’s “Modern Family,” which ends its 11-season run with an hour-long finale (9 p.m. EDT Wednesday), went on to earn five best comedy Emmy Awards to equal the record set by “Frasier,” which counted Levitan and Lloyd among its writers. The critically lauded series proved to be an increasingly rare TV bird: It gently pushed at social boundaries while remaining a treat that kids and parents could enjoy together, even as the explosion of screens and edgier fare drove solitary viewing.

Largely living up to its title, “Modern Family” built its comic storytelling around a mix of characters and couples — young and older, straight and gay, mostly white but not entirely — that reflected the change in American households while acknowledging that tolerance and understanding still lagged.

The show’s creators tip their hats to “Will & Grace” for being first to bring gay characters to the forefront, but “Modern Family” had a different perspective than that NBC show’s rowdy riff on the single life. Cameron and Mitchell, played by Eric Stonestreet and Jesse Tyler Ferguson, were a devoted couple and loving parents to Lily (Aubrey Anderson-Emmons).

“As someone who’s a LGBTQ equality activist, it was a job that I took very seriously,” said Ferguson. “And I am so proud to say that Mitch and Cam have become pop culture touchstones for the fight for marriage equality, and brought a gay couple into so many people’s living rooms.”

The message he’s gotten from fans: “I don’t actually have any friends who are gay, and it’s like I do now because I know Mitch and

Rico Rodriguez, who played precocious son Manny to Sofia Vergara’s exuberant Gloria, also takes pride in what he helped bring to TV.

“Portraying a Latino on screen was the biggest honor. Growing up, you didn’t see too many people who looked like me or who related to my family. I have a bunch of Glorias and a bunch of Mannys in my family,” Rodriguez said.

“Modern Family” didn’t escape criticism, including for its portrayal of Claire (Bowen) and Gloria as stay-at-home moms overshadowed by their husband’s career success, although Claire ultimately proved her workplace prowess.

Wrapping a long-running show may not be the hardest thing to do in TV but it’s got to be close, given the weight of fan expectations and the hovering ghosts of great endings (“Cheers,” “The Mary Tyler Moore Show”) and widely panned ones (“Seinfeld”).

“I personally like finales where there is some sense of characters experiencing what the audience is experiencing, which is having to say goodbye,” said Levitan, who wrote the finale’s first half-hour. “It’s an emotional thing for many people. They spend a lot of time with these characters ... so giving them the emotionally satisfying ending that they seek/want is, for me, the best way to go.”

For Lloyd, who wrote part two, the ending of a family show “really needs to be a beginning.”

“It felt like a better approach to me was to set people off on new journeys and sort of turn the stewardship of these characters over to the audience at that point,” he said. “Hopefully, the audience will be happy imagining the characters off on new adventures, new challenges ... The audience provides their own futures for these characters.”

“Modern Family” wrapped taping before the coronavirus forced a halt to movie and TV production. The finale will be preceded at 8 p.m. EDT by the documentary “A Modern Farewell,” a look back at the show’s creation and run, which included five seasons among the 30 top-rated series.

Levitan said he never regretted the mockumentary approach, which was intended to make “Modern Family” feel true-to-life and appeal to adults as more than a “cutesy kid’s show.” It also allowed the cast to punctuate a scene with a spontaneous “can you believe what that person just said?” look and other wordless commentary, Bowen said.

“There’s times in my house, I’m embarrassed to say, my children will say something so ridiculous and I find there’s this impulse to look at the camera,” she said. “That’s an 11-year habit I’m going to have to break.”

CITY OF SANTA MONICA

NOTICE OF AVAILABILITY OF DRAFT 2020-24 CONSOLIDATED PLAN AND DRAFT FY 2020-21 ANNUAL ACTION PLAN ALLOCATING COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT (CDBG) & HOME INVESTMENT PARTNERSHIP ACT (HOME) PROGRAM FUNDS

Notice is hereby given that the City of Santa Monica has developed the Draft 2020-24 Consolidated Plan and Draft FY 2020-21 Annual Action Plan, which is available to the public for a 30-day review period starting March 16, 2020 and can be viewed online here: <http://www.smgov.net/hsd>.

Written comments may be submitted by April 15, 2020 by email to humanservices@smgov.net or by mail to Human Services Division, 1685 Main Street, Room 212, Santa Monica, CA 90401.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) provides annual CDBG and HOME entitlement funds to the City of Santa Monica. As a recipient of these federal funds, HUD requires the City to develop a five-year Consolidated Plan and Annual Action Plans for housing and community development which identify high priority needs and the associated goals, strategies, and resources anticipated over a five-year period.

Please note that the two previously-advertised presentations of these draft documents at the March 19th Housing Commission meeting and the March 23rd Social Services Commission meeting have been cancelled due to the suspension of all City Commission meetings through March 31st in order to prevent the spread of COVID-19.

Trump admin tries to narrow stockpile's role for states

JONATHAN LEMIRE, RICARDO ALONSO-ZALDIVAR AND AMANDA SEITZ

Associated Press

Already facing growing anger and worry from governors over federal assistance to fight the coronavirus outbreak, the Trump administration on Friday abruptly changed its description of the Strategic National Stockpile and put forward a narrower vision of the role the federal government's repository of life-saving medicines and equipment should play in supplying states' needs.

The change conforms with President Donald Trump's insistence that the stockpile is only a short-term backup for states, not a commitment to ensure supplies get quickly to those who need them most during an emergency, the latest front in a concerted White House effort to try to put the onus for battling the crisis on the states, with Washington meant to play more of a supporting role.

The alteration of the language describing the stockpile was reflected on government websites on Friday, a day after Jared Kushner, Trump's son-in-law and White House senior adviser who has taken a larger role in the coronavirus response, offered a new argument about the supplies.

After saying that states should use their own stockpiles first, Kushner on Thursday said, "And the notion of the federal stockpile was it's supposed to be our stockpile. It's not supposed to be states' stockpiles that they then use."

Until Friday, the federal Health and Human Services website had reflected a markedly different approach to the stockpile. The "Strategic National Stockpile is the nation's largest supply of life-saving pharmaceuticals and medical supplies for use in a public health emergency severe enough to cause local supplies to run out," the website used to say, according to an archived search.

"When state, local, tribal, and territorial responders request federal assistance to support their response efforts, the stockpile ensures that the right medicines and supplies get to those who need them most during an emergency," the website had said.

But, according to data, the description changed Friday morning: "The Strategic National Stockpile's role is to supplement state and local supplies during public health emergencies. Many states have products stockpiled, as well. The supplies, medicines, and devices for life-saving care contained in the stockpile can be used as a short-term stopgap buffer when the immediate supply of adequate amounts of these materials may not be immediately available."

Officials at the agency said the change had been in the works for weeks, downplaying any connection to Kushner's comments. Kushner made his claim during his first appearance at the daily White House coronavirus task force briefing, a moment meant to highlight his growing role in managing the federal response to the pandemic, particularly in delivering vital supplies.

Trump has long insisted that the primary responsibility lies with the states in managing the pandemic. He has resisted calls to issue a national stay-at-home order and said that he didn't want to overly use the Defense Production Act, which allows him to mobilize private companies for the effort, because he believed the states should take the lead in obtaining supplies.

But in statehouses across the nation, there has been increasing frustration at the lack of assistance from Washington.

Trump scoffed at New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's request for 30,000 ventilators for the state, a virus hotbed. In neighboring Connecticut, Gov. Ned Lamont told CNN on Tuesday that the state couldn't get personal protective equipment from the national stockpile and was only able to get 50 ventilators from the federal supply. He said he was told that he'll have to secure the rest on his own.

States have also reported multiple issues with the equipment the federal government has managed to send.

Illinois was supposed to receive a federal shipment of 300,000 N95 masks in March, but instead received less-effective surgical masks, Gov. J.B. Pritzker revealed during a Tuesday briefing. California Governor Gavin Newsom, who is trying to track down 10,000 ventilators for his state, announced on Twitter last week that he had received 170 broken ventilators from the national stockpile.

And Gov. Jay Inslee of Washington, in a recent conference call with the White House, said the states need "a Tom Brady," urging Trump to act like the legendary quarterback instead of playing a backup role.

Meanwhile, the White House on Friday stepped up precautions to protect the president and vice president from contracting the new coronavirus. Anyone who is expected to be in "close proximity" to Trump or Vice President Mike Pence will be given a new, quick COVID-19 test "to evaluate for pre-symptomatic or asymptomatic carriers status to limit inadvertent transmission," according to White House spokesman Judd Deere.

All visitors to the White House complex already have their temperatures taken when entering the building and if they will be in close proximity to either Trump or Pence. Trump took the new COVID-19 test on Thursday and the White House doctor said results were back in 15 minutes. He tested negative.

The president, however, did not seem to be aware the new policy had been put into place, when he sat down for a Friday afternoon roundtable discussion with energy industry executives at the White House.

"You know what? I like it. Let's test these guys," he said in response to a question about the policy. "Listen: They gave us millions of jobs. If anybody wants to be tested, we'll test them."

Many of those seated around the Cabinet Room table indicated when asked that they had, indeed, received the tests.

Lemire reported from New York. Seitz reported from Chicago. Associated Press writer Jill Colvin contributed from Washington.

WNBA postpones start of season this month because of virus

The WNBA has postponed the start of its season because of the coronavirus pandemic, with no indication when play would begin.

The league was scheduled to open training camps April 26 and the regular season was set to begin May 15. The WNBA will still hold a “virtual” draft April 17.

WNBA Commissioner Cathy Engelbert said in a statement Friday the league will “use this time to conduct scenario-planning regarding new start dates and innovative formats.”

“Our guiding principle will continue to be the health and safety of the players, fans and employees,” Engelbert said.

The WNBA, which was set to begin its 24th season, is the longest running professional women’s sports league.

Every other major sports league has been put on hold due to the virus.

The postponement of the 2020 Olympics gives the WNBA flexibility with its schedule. The league was set to go on a monthlong break starting July 10 to allow players to participate in the Tokyo Games.

Two WNBA cities are major hot spots for the virus: New York and Seattle. One of the Storm’s homes for the season, the Angel of the Winds Arena, is being used as a coronavirus isolation site.

The Las Vegas casino where the Aces play is shut, as is the Connecticut Sun’s home arena.

“We continue to send our thoughts and prayers to our players, fans, and all of those in the community impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic and are grateful to those selfless health care workers and first responders who work tirelessly on the front lines,” Engelbert said.

ORLANDO
With parks closed, Disney starts furloughs in 2 weeks

Saying they don’t know when they’ll be able to re-open many of their businesses with the coronavirus spreading, Walt Disney Co. officials announced they will start furloughing some workers in two weeks at its theme parks resorts in Florida and California.

The statement released late Thursday from The Walt Disney Co. said the first wave of furloughs will start April 19 and involve workers whose jobs aren’t necessary at this time. Anyone who is furloughed will remain a Disney employee, the company said.

“Over the last few weeks, mandatory decrees from government officials have shut down a majority of our businesses,” the statement said.

The statement did not say how many of Walt Disney World’s more than 75,000 employees or Disneyland’s 31,000 workers would be furloughed, but it would involve executive, salaried and hourly non-union employees.

Disney World has the largest number of workers at a single location in the U.S. More than half of its workers are covered by a union contract.

The company has been paying workers and providing health care benefits at its theme park resorts since the parks closed in mid-March due to coronavirus concerns and that will continue through April 18, the company said.

Furloughed workers will continue to receive full healthcare benefits, plus the cost of employee and company premiums will be paid by Disney. Employees enrolled in a program in which Disney pays tuition for further education can still continue to take classes, the statement said.

Employees can also apply paid vacation time to the start of their furlough if they desire, the company said.

Late last week, SeaWorld Entertainment said it was furloughing 90% of its workers because the novel coronavirus had forced the company to close its 12 theme parks. The company had 4,700 full-time employees, approximately 12,000 part-time employees and the company hires more than 4,000 additional seasonal workers, according to its annual report.

Universal’s Florida and California parks plan to stay closed at least through April 19, company officials said late last month.

LA-area subway construction expedited as virus cuts traffic

Los Angeles County transportation officials are taking advantage of light traffic during the coronavirus pandemic to expedite construction subway construction by shutting down a section of a major thoroughfare.

The closure of a couple of blocks of Wilshire Boulevard in Beverly Hills will allow contractors to advance work on the Wilshire/Rodeo station for an extension of the Purple Line subway, the Metropolitan Transportation Authority said.

Completing the work sooner is expected to in turn minimize future construction impacts to local businesses during the economic recovery period that follows the pandemic, Metro said.

Leaders in Beverly Hills, where high-end retailers of luxury goods on its famed Rodeo Drive have been shut down, approved the boulevard’s temporary closure on March 31.

The Purple Line extension is being built and will add 9 miles (14.5 kilometers) to the existing route.

When complete, commuters will be able to travel all the way from downtown to the Westwood area near UCLA. The line currently terminates in the Wilshire Center area of Koreatown.

Snowflake

Adoptable Pet Of The Week

Snowflake is a confident 3-year-old bunny who knows exactly what he wants: a captive audience! This charismatic showboat will happily preen, thump his hind legs, and toss his toys- as long as somebody’s watching. Between shows, Snowflake is liable to stretch out and relax, conserving his energies for his next performance. He’s sure to provide endless entertainment for the right family. Consider giving him an audition to be your Forever Friend. Snowflake, ID# A059171, is available for adoption at the Santa Monica Animal Shelter located at 1640 9th Street, Santa Monica CA, 90404. The shelter is closed to the public and adoptions are by appointment only by calling the shelter at (310) 458-8595, Tuesday through Saturday between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. For a full list of adoptable animals, visit petharbor.com.

PET TIP OF THE WEEK: BUNNY STATS & SMAS ADOPTION SPECIAL

According to the House Rabbit Society and the Humane Society, rabbits are the third most surrendered animals to animal shelters in the United States, after cats and dogs. They are also often harder to adopt out. As a result, many rabbits stay in animal shelters for months with insufficient opportunity for socialization, and inadequate space to roam which is essential for the physical and physiological health.

Rabbits make exceptional pets! Generally quiet, they are sweet and social. Rabbits can live with other pets and are known to form deep bonds with their owners. They get adequate exercise in little space, thrive in small quarters, and keep themselves clean by grooming regularly.

The Santa Monica Animal Shelter has an abundance of wonderful rabbits waiting for their second chance. While usual adoption rates for rabbits are $200, they are offering a special adoption rate of $20 per rabbits. The rabbits have been spayed/nurtured and can be adopted and go home on same day. Come meet them at the shelter and you will see that they live up to the reputation as being fun loving and absolutely adorable!

Pet of the Week is provided by Carmen Molinari, a long-time volunteer at the Santa Monica Animal Shelter and founder and CEO of Love At First Sit, a pet care and dog training company in Santa Monica. additive measure that can be helpful in these types of settings,” she said.

Vendors at the Wednesday market said business was down significantly from recent weeks.

Luis Jaime of JF Organic Farm said he has seen a steady decline in business over the past couple of weeks but business Wednesday was the worst it’s been since the coronavirus pandemic began. He said customers were likely staying away because they have heard Los Angeles markets are closed.

He said the stall supports many families, from the farm owners to truck drivers to field workers.

“There’s not enough people and they’re not coming as much,” he said. “People are afraid with the social distancing, but I think we should just let them in. Everybody thinks we are all closed, but we’re going to be here every week.”

Lori Heal of Two Peas in a Pod farm, whose family farm has been selling directly to consumers for 36 years, said she has also seen a drop in customers this week.

“It’s the die-hards that are out now,” she said. “And it’s all about the relationships. The community provides us with so much and it’s really touching to me when customers are asking how we’re doing.”

She said her family fielded emails and phone calls from customers this week about the market because people were unsure who was open given the Los Angeles closures. However, she said her family plans to continue selling at the three markets they have access to for as long as they stay open.

A bleak US jobs report likely portends even deeper losses

CHRISTOPHER RUGABER

AP Economics Writer

A grim snapshot of the U.S. job market's sudden collapse emerged Friday with a report that employers shed hundreds of thousands of jobs last month because of the viral outbreak that's brought the economy to a near-standstill.

The loss of 701,000 jobs, reported by the Labor Department, ended nearly a decade of uninterrupted job growth, the longest such streak on record. The unemployment rate surged in March from a 50-year low of 3.5% to 4.4% — the sharpest one-month jump in the jobless rate since 1975.

And that's just a hint of what's to come.

For the April jobs report that will be released in early May, economists expect as many as a record 20 million losses and an unemployment rate of around 15%, which would be the highest since the 1930s.

The enormous magnitude of the job cuts is inflicting far-reaching damage on economies in the United States and abroad, which are widely believed to be sinking into severe recessions. As rising numbers of people lose jobs — or fear they will — consumer spending is shrinking. That pullback in spending, which is the primary driver of the economy, is intensifying pressure on those businesses that are still operating.

Economists are holding out hope that an extraordinary series of rescue actions from Congress and the Federal Reserve will help stabilize the U.S. economy in the months ahead. The key goals of Congress' just-enacted $2.2 trillion relief package are to quickly put cash in people's hands and incentivize companies to avoid job cuts or quickly recall laid-off employees.

The package includes an extra $600 a week in unemployment benefits on top of the usual state payments and will ideally enable the millions of newly jobless to pay their rent and other bills. But it won't make up for the vast array of spending that Americans typically engage in that has now been lost — from eating out and paying for gym memberships to buying new furniture, autos and electronic gadgets. Indeed, Oxford Economics says that for the April-June quarter, that pullback will likely cause the sharpest quarterly drop in consumer spending on record.

Katharine Abraham, an economist at the University of Maryland, said that if the extra aid manages to help many of the unemployed avoid building up excessive debt, "when able to extend the learning all the way to the end of the year,” Drati said Wednesday. “We have acquired information about our families as to who does not have a computer device or WiFi. And as of yesterday, I believe we distributed over 780 computers to families who needed that support.”

This district has also purchased WiFi hotspots for those in need of WiFi, and Drati said that technology would be coming in the next week.

“We have to be able to deliver instruction and we think online is probably the best way to do this,” he said. “Once all of our students have computers, then we can then really work towards strengthening the delivery methods of our educational services.”

In addition to the informational update, the Board did have a decision to make Wednesday night regarding issuance and sale of 2020 Refunding General Obligation Bonds in the not to exceed $90 million.

“This is something that we have been doing all along when we see opportunities in the market to refinance our debt obligations and save our taxpayers money,” Kean said prior to a presentation that detailed how the district could save upwards of $6.469 million.

Ferrer said the county is investigating 321 confirmed cases of coronavirus at 67 institutional settings, and 11 residents of nursing homes and assisted living facilities have died. The number of institutions under investigation, which in addition to homes for the elderly include homeless shelters, treatment centers, jails and prisons, has quadrupled since Monday.

Seven inmates and 18 employees of county jails and prisons have tested positive. Seven people experiencing homelessness have tested positive, down from the total reported Thursday feels as if Pelosi has tried to undermine and humiliate him at every turn and he will never forgive her for impeachment, according to two White House aides and Republicans close to the West Wing who spoke on the condition of anonymity because they weren’t authorized to publicly discuss private conversations.

Days before Trump was acquitted by the Senate, the two leaders came face-to-face on camera before the president’s State of the Union speech. Pelosi reached out her hand in a gesture that seemed more like a dare. Trump ignored the outreach and started his speech.

And then, before Trump had left the

OTHER BOARD ACTIONS

- The district approved an Emergency Resolution that designates various construction work as “essential” so the district’s project can continue in compliance with governmental health and safety requirements.
- A resolution honoring the Week of the Young Child on April 11-17, 2020 was approved Wednesday in an effort to highlight SMMUSD’s State Preschool and Seaside Programs and call on the residents of our community to support the needs of local youth
- Adult Ed Week will be celebrated in SMMUSD from April 6-10, 2022, according to a resolution approved this week. And Dolores Huerta, arguably the most prominent Mexican-American female labor leader in the United States and the co-founder of the United Farm Workers of America, will be honored as well. Her 90th birthday falls on April 10.
- The board held its annual public hearing on the Measure R Parcel Tax Plan. The plan will be adopted at the next board meeting because two individuals were not homeless, Ferrer said.

Ferrer reiterated Friday that people can prevent themselves from spreading coronavirus to others by wearing homemade masks and should not try to purchase N95 masks, which are in short supply and should be reserved for healthcare workers.

To slow the spread of coronavirus locally, Santa Monica public schools are closed indefinitely and county beaches, beach bike paths and public trails will close through at least April 19, officials said last week.

City of Santa Monica parks and farmers markets are still open, but Palisades Park was closed last weekend to prevent crowding. The city’s public buildings, nonessential businesses, playgrounds, Santa Monica Pier and beach parking lots are closed through the end of April.

podium, Pelosi ripped up a copy of his address on camera. She held it up for her allies and her family to see and took a little bow.

The coronavirus has proved disproportionately deadly for older Americans; Pelosi turned 80 last week, while Trump is 73. But neither has slowed down their public schedule, and they haven’t stopped sniping.

“I don’t know what I would learn in a conversation with the president,” Pelosi said this week.

businesses open back up ... they should be able to spend money.”

Still, even factoring in the government’s intervention, Joel Prakken, chief U.S. economist at IHS Markit, predicts that the economy will sharply contract in the April-June quarter — by a 26.5% annual rate, the worst on records dating to just after World War II.

Many economists say that additional government support will be needed, particularly if the virus persists into the late summer.

The job losses during March were likely even larger than what was reported Friday because the government surveyed employers before the heaviest layoffs hit in the past two weeks. Nearly 10 million Americans applied for unemployment benefits in the final two weeks of March, far exceeding the figure for any corresponding period on record. Those layoffs will be reflected in the jobs report for April.

“This was an ugly jobs report, showing that the pain in the economy started in early March, well before the spike in the weekly initial jobless claims data,” said Joseph Song, an economist at Bank of America Securities. “It is going to get much worse in coming reports.”

Brad Hershbein, senior economist at the Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, said that last month’s job loss likely reflected nervousness among businesses that had cut back on hiring even before the flood of layoffs.

One sign of how painfully deep the job losses will likely prove to be: During its nearly decade-long hiring streak, the U.S. economy added 22.8 million jobs. Economists expect the April jobs report being released in early May to show that all those jobs could have been lost.

Lower-income service workers bore the brunt of the job cuts in March, with restaurants, hotels and casinos accounting for roughly two-thirds of them — a loss of 459,000 jobs. Retailers shed 46,000.

Yet the layoffs have also begun to creep into many other corners of the economy. Doctor’s offices sliced 12,000 jobs, the most on records dating to 1972. Law firms cut 1,700. Banks and real estate companies also shed jobs.

Many employers have cut hours for some staffers. The number of part-time employees who would prefer full-time work jumped by one-third in March to 5.8 million.

Bridget Hughes had her work hours cut in half before she was forced to take two weeks off from her job at Burger King and self-isolate after her aunt tested positive for COVID 19. She’ll be quarantined until next week. The restaurant where she worked in Kansas City, Missouri, has cut about two-thirds of its staff and is providing drive-thru service only. Hughes, 49, doesn’t know when she’ll be able to return to work.

She applied for unemployment benefits, but state officials told her it might be up to 30 days before her claim is processed and her first check is issued.

“We were already living paycheck to paycheck,” she said. “I don’t know if we’re going to make rent this month. We are struggling to get food on the table.”

A key determinant of the economy’s future will be whether businesses can survive the shutdown and quickly rehire those workers who consider themselves to be temporarily laid off. If so, that would help the economy snap back and avoid the type of weak recovery that followed the past three downturns.

But if the virus outbreak forces businesses to stay closed into the late summer, many may go bankrupt or won’t have the money to rehire their old employees. That would mean that many workers who now consider themselves on temporary layoff could lose their jobs.

So far, some large and small businesses are still paying for health care benefits and keeping in touch with their newly laid-off workers, a slightly hopeful sign amid the flood of job cuts.

Still, many worry that their jobs are gone for good.

Megan-Claire Chase, 43, of Dunwoody, Georgia, was laid off a week ago from her job as a marketing manager at a staffing company. Chase, a four-year cancer survivor, was laid off back in 2008, and it took her two years to find a job. This time, she’s even more fearful.

“There is so much uncertainty,” she said. “How do you bounce back? There is no timeline because there is no history.”

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (MARCH 04)

The solar return brings brilliant improvements to your daily and personal life. You'll so regularly do what you love that you'll stop looking wistfully forward to weekends and special events and instead find yourself giddy about every day. Your weeks will be peppered with the playfulness and laughter of great friends. Cancer and Leo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 4, 39, 1 and 50.

A ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll extend the benefit of the doubt, delay judgment, tolerate, include and accept. But you won't hand over the keys to the kingdom to anyone who hasn't earned your trust.

T AURUS (April 20-May 20). You're planning something. The only part more important than timing is the weather in the room. In a calm atmosphere, sudden movements are startling. In chaos, anything can happen.

G EMINI (May 21-June 21). Each bit of information has a particular frequency. When you share information, you share the vibrational tone of it, too. Vibrations change what's around them. Choose carefully what you share.

C ANCER (June 22-July 22). Like the moon to the sea, you'll move things without touching them. You only have to be yourself, moving along your usual orbit, and things with reflect back naturally.

L EO (July 23-Aug. 22). Sometimes, you have to go a little wild to know different sides of yourself. Each situation is different though. Certain wild situations are best passed on. Your judgment on the matter will be excellent.

V IRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). For an option to be truly healthy, it must make sense across several categories. If it's good for your body but not your budget, or the other way around, keep looking for alternatives that make more sense.

L IBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll experience an instance of poetic justice. This is the most delicious happening of the week and is best savored instead of shared, as its meaning is mostly relevant to you.

S CORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). It's wonderful to love someone, and you'll bounce around in the effervescent feeling of this. Be careful not to make this person the center of your life though. You are far better suited for that role.

S AGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You know who you are, but that doesn't mean you shouldn't try new styles of being. The more confident you are in your essence, the less you need to cling to one way of presenting yourself.

C APRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You know people. You can accurately predict their reactions to certain circumstances. You'll use your predictions to plan an event, and the results will be about as near to perfect as anyone could hope for.

A QUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You will be compelled to help others, especially the very young, very old or anyone with an obvious need. Be judicious in giving help to anyone outside those categories. You don't want to foster unhealthy dependence.

P ISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You don't want publicity for yourself, but you'll be happy to draw and manage attention for the sake of your cause or your team. You'll reach many this weekend.
