Continued evolution of Silicon Beach economy brings companies into and out of town

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Staff Writer

The Silicon Beach economy is maturing and evolving according to global law firm Goodwin who have recently announced plans to set up a new practice in Santa Monica dedicated to private equity and technology.

The new office will be located at 520 Broadway in Santa Monica. It will initially take up more than 20,000 square feet over the building's entire fifth floor. A.J. Weidhaas, Co-Chair of the firm's Private Equity practice, will serve as the Santa Monica Office Chair. The office will be home to approximately 20 technology and private equity lawyers, including current Goodwin lawyers who will relocate and lateral talent.

Weidhaas said opening an office in Santa Monica is necessary due to the logistical and cultural constraints of Silicon Beach.

He said travel from the westside to other parts of Los Angeles is a legitimate deterrent for some business deals and while tech companies are spread along the coast from Hermosa Beach to Santa Monica, the money behind the industry is clustered locally.

"You can see lots and lots of companies around but the financing sources tend to be more in Santa Monica and the Brentwood Corridor."

According to Weidhaas the ability to host live meetings is still key to the industry's success despite

Downtown parking structure could become new housing

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

The City of Santa Monica wants to build affordable housing on a property it owns downtown.

The City owns 1318 4th St., which is currently home to Parking Structure No. 3. The structure is heavily used but has long been slated for demolition, and the City designed Parking Structure No. 6 to replace the parking capacity that would be lost. Fewer drivers are using the downtown public parking structures, City staff said.

The City worked with two companies for more than a decade to replace the structure with a movie theater, but both companies have withdrawn from negotiations. On Tuesday, City Council could approve a plan to solicit proposals to build 100 to 150 affordable apartments on the site.

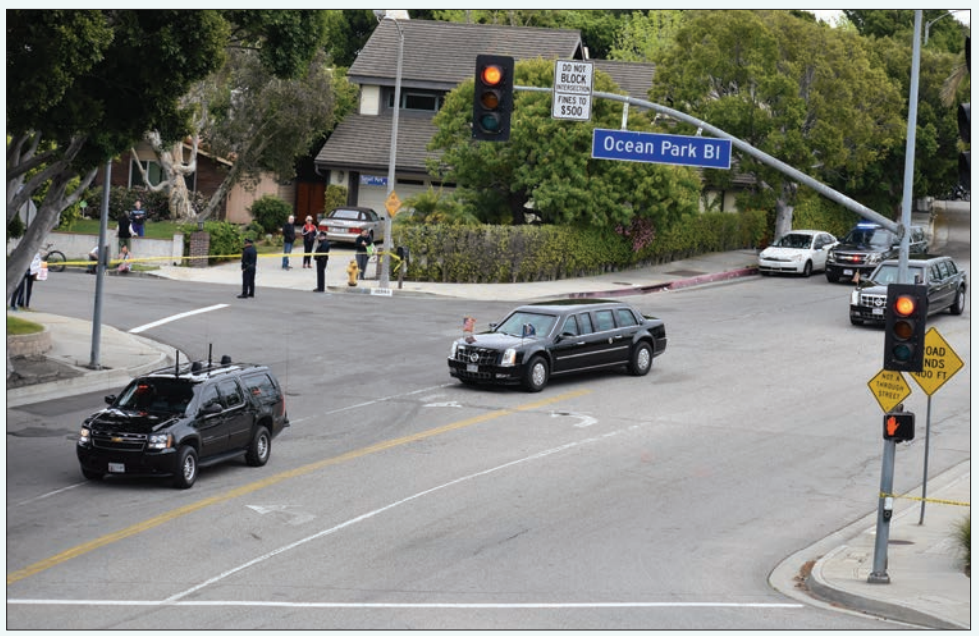

"Ground-floor space could also house activities and uses that support the Downtown and

AIRPORT: Critics and supporters came out as President Trump came through Santa Monica Airport on his way to a fundraiser in Beverly Hills.

ANGEL CARRERAS
Daily Press Staff Writer

President Donald Trump swung through Santa Monica Friday evening.

The president was on his way to a 2020 reelection campaign fundraiser in Beverly Hills. His arrival brought a motorcade which brought traffic jams momentarily throughout Santa Monica. His presence also brought about supporters and protestors.

Trump was met with many protestors his last visit in Santa Monica. Last year's protestors brought signs, strapped signs to pets and chanted at the president.

This year was a stark contrast in protestors

3rd federal judge blocks citizenship question on 2020 census

BY MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
Associated Press

A third federal judge has blocked the Trump administration from adding a citizenship question to the 2020 census, ruling Friday that it poses a "substantial risk" of undercounting Hispanics and non-citizens.

U.S. District Judge George Hazel in Maryland also concluded that a citizenship question is "arbitrary and capricious" and violates the Constitution and the federal Administrative Procedure Act.

Federal judges in New York and California previously barred the Trump administration from adding a citizenship question to the census for the first time since 1950. The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear arguments April 23 for the Justice Department's appeal of the New York judge's decision.

Hazel heard six days of trial testimony in January before ruling.

"Overwhelming evidence supports the Court's finding that a citizenship question will cause a differential decline in Census participation among noncitizen and Hispanic households," he wrote in his 119-page decision.

The Supreme Court justices are expected to rule by late June, which the Trump administration said is soon enough to allow printing and distribution of census forms next April.

Because of the tight timeframe for printing census forms, the high court granted unusually quick review of the first decision that went against the administration. That ruling, from a federal judge in New York, held that Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross' decision to have the census ask about citizenship was "arbitrary and capricious" under federal law. The second ruling, from a court in California, also found that asking about citizenship would violate the Constitution, which calls for a count of all people, not just citizens.

Former U.S. Census Bureau director John Thompson, the first plaintiffs' witness for the bench trial in Maryland, testified Ross disregarded "long established" Census Bureau protocols in adding the citizenship question. Thompson, who oversaw the bureau from 2013 through June 2017, said he doesn't think officials properly tested the question for the 2020 census.

"It's very problematic for me," Thompson said of Ross' decision.

In a court filing, plaintiffs' attorneys said Ross communicated with former White House Chief Strategist Steve Bannon, former Attorney General Jeff Sessions and other administration officials before issuing the March 2018 directive "to further the unconstitutional goal of diluting the political power of non-white immigrant communities."

The Census Bureau began collecting citizenship data through the annual American Community Survey in 2005. Government lawyers said in a court filing that Ross decided to use the same wording from that "well-tested question" on the ACS for the citizenship question on the 2020 census.

Hazel said the evidence he considered includes several statements by Trump "demonstrating his animus toward immigrants" and expressing concern about "the political the growth of digital communications.

"Even through the products are virtual companies raise capital and do business to a significant extent in person," he said. "There's going to be an in person meeting and the human element of people still looking each other in the eye is real. It's different to look someone in the eye rather than over skype."

He said he expects the work in the local office to be heavily focused on the day to day needs of tech and media companies including work on intellectual property, employee concerns, stock questions and ongoing needs related to financing. He said the overall culture is maturing and Goodwins arrival in the city comes as another established company departs for larger offices nearby.

HBO recently announced plans to lease the entire 240,000-square-foot office building at Ivy Station, a large-scale mixed-use development currently under construction adjacent to the Culver City station of the Los Angeles Metro Expo Line.

In addition to the office building, Ivy Station will feature 200 apartments, 50,000 square feet of ground floor retail and restaurant space, a 148-room boutique hotel, two acres of publicly accessible outdoor space, and 1,500 below-grade parking spaces, 300 of which will be dedicated for use by Metro transit riders.

"HBO is an ideal business anchor for Ivy Station, bringing to the property creative professionals that will enjoy access to public transit, host out of town guests at the hotel, and frequent the shops and restaurants that will populate the ground floor town square-style retail space," said Tom Wulf, Executive Vice President, Lowe.

Other established companies to move out of Santa Monica in recent years include Yahoo, Imax and The Honest Company. Bucking that trend was Snapchat who consolidated their disparate Venice offices into a cluster of buildings near the Santa Monica Airport.

Weidhaas said there will always be a churning of the tech/media companies in Silicon Beach and that the overall economy is continuing to follow the trends established in other tech hubs.

"The market is at midpoint here relative to how mature the market is in Silicon Valley and Boston," he said. "It's not early days anymore."

the larger community but have otherwise been priced out of commercial storefronts Downtown," staff said.

The City will save $13,600,000 to $32,700,000 of housing trust funds by using the City-owned site, compared to the land acquisition costs of other affordable housing projects in the pipeline. It will pay around $3 to $4 million to demolish the structure and remediate the soil, given the likely presence of hydrocarbons associated with gasoline, and will contribute anywhere between $5 million and $21 million for construction, depending on the number of apartments and design of the project.

Santa Monica is looking to replace Samoshel, a downtown homeless shelter near the 10 freeway that was built 25 years ago as a temporary facility, and may consider 1314 4th St. as a replacement site.

Staff have raised concerns about whether the location is suited for a shelter, however, and the City will hold community meetings in the coming months about other potential sites. The Housing Commission also recommended that the site include permanent supportive housing for people experiencing homelessness.

Under the City's affordable housing guidelines, which Council changed last month after deciding one rule incentivized developers to include fewer affordable units in their projects, it is projected that 25 percent of all new development in the City will be affordable between 2013 and 2021. Proposition R, which voters approved in 1990, requires 30 percent of all new development to be affordable.

Other new affordable housing downtown includes the recently completed, 64-unit Arroyo, Magnolia Villas, which will house 40 apartments for low-income seniors and a 55-unit complex just south of the 10.

A Trump supporter named Evan, who also asked to have his last name withheld, chimed in.

"This shows everyone that Trump supporters are everywhere. Places you wouldn't expect them."

The second floor Trump protestors jeered and booed Trump as he drove by, chanting, "Lock him up" while donning their protest signs which had statements such as "Not my president" and "Release the Mueller Report".

Vaccine wars: Social media battle outbreak of bogus claims

BARBARA ORTUTAY
AP Technology Writer

Like health officials facing outbreaks of disease, internet companies are trying to contain vaccine-related misinformation they have long helped spread. So far, their efforts at quarantine are falling short.

Searches of Facebook, Pinterest and Instagram turn up all sorts of bogus warnings about vaccines, including the soundly debunked notions that they cause autism or that mercury preservatives and other substances in them can poison and even kill people.

Some experts fear that the online spread of bad information about vaccines is planting or reinforcing fears in parents, and they suspect it is contributing to the comeback in recent years of certain dangerous childhood diseases, including measles, whooping cough and mumps.

"The online world has been one that has been very much taken over by misinformation spread by concerned parents," said Richard Carpiano, a professor of public policy and sociology at the University of California, Riverside, who studies vaccine trends. "Medical doctors don't command the sort of authority they did decades ago. There is a lack of confidence in institutions people had faith in."

The effort to screen out bogus vaccine information online is one more front in the battle by social media to deal with fake news of all sorts, including political propaganda. (Researchers have even found Russia-linked bots trying to sow discord by amplifying both sides of the vaccine debate.)

Pinterest, the digital scrapbooking and search site that has been a leading online repository of vaccine misinformation, took the seemingly drastic step in 2017 of blocking all searches for the term "vaccines."

But it's been a leaky quarantine. Recently, a search for "measles vaccine" still brought up, among other things, a post titled "Why We Said NO to the Measles Vaccine," along with a sinister-looking illustration of a hand holding an enormous needle titled "Vaccine-nation: poisoning the population one shot at a time."

Facebook, meanwhile, said in March that it would no longer recommend groups and pages that spread hoaxes about vaccines, and that it would reject ads that do this. This appears to have filtered out some of the most blatant sources of vaccine misinformation, such as the website Naturalnews.com.

But even after the changes, anti-vax groups were among the first results to come up on a search of "vaccine safety." A search of "vaccine," meanwhile, turns up the verified profile of Dr. Christiane Northrup, a physician who is outspoken in her misgivings about — and at times opposition to — vaccines.

On Facebook's Instagram, hashtags such as "vaccineskill" and accounts against vaccinating children are easily found with a simple search for "vaccines."

The discredited ideas circulating online include the belief that the recommended number of shots for babies is too much for their bodies to handle, that vaccines infect people with the same viruses they are trying to prevent, or that the natural immunity conferred by catching a disease is better than vaccines.

In truth, fear and suspicion of vaccines have been around as long as vaccines have existed. Smallpox inoculations caused a furor in colonial New England in the 1700s. And anti-vaccine agitation existed online long before Facebook and Twitter.

Still, experts in online misinformation say social networking and the way its algorithms disseminate the most "engaging" posts — whether true or not — have fueled the spread of anti-vaccination propaganda and pushed parents into the anti-vax camp.

Jeanine Guidry, a professor at Virginia Commonwealth University who studies social media and vaccines, said social media amplifies these conversations and creates echo chambers that can reinforce bad information.

Carpiano said it is difficult to document the actual effect social media has had on vaccination rates, but "we do see decrease in coverage and rise in gaps of coverage," as well as clusters of vaccine-hesitant people.

Despite high-profile outbreaks , overall vaccination rates remain high in the U.S., according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. But the percentage of children under 2 who haven't received any vaccines is growing.

Some of the fake news online about health and medicine appears to be spread by people who may genuinely believe it. Some seems intended to wreak havoc in public discourse. And some appears to be for financial gain.

InfoWars, the conspiracy site run by right-wing provocateur Alex Jones, routinely pushes anti-vax information and stories of "forced inoculations" while selling what are billed as immune supplements. Naturalnews.com sells such products, too.

"It is a misinformation campaign," Carpiano said. "Often couched in 'Oh, we are for choice, understanding, education,'" he said. "But fundamentally it is not open to scientific debate."

power that undocumented immigrants may wield." But the judge said nothing in the record shows Ross considered or adopted the president's statements before deciding to add a citizenship question to the 2020 census.

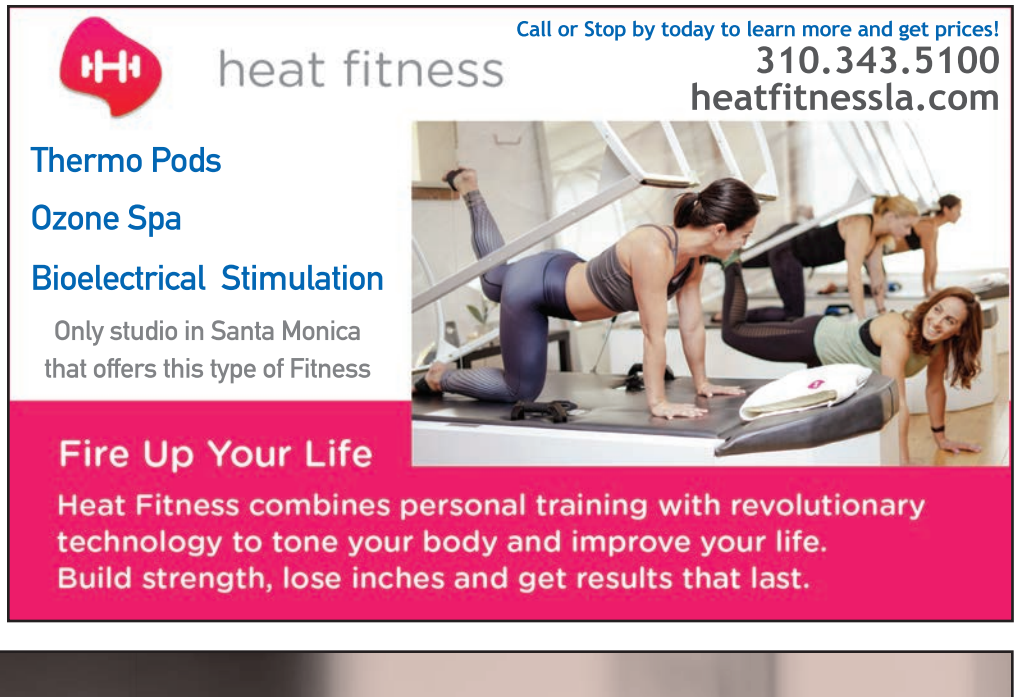

"Without more evidence demonstrating (Ross) was actually persuaded to make his decision based on discriminatory animus, a finding that, more likely than not, (Ross') real motivation was to depress immigrant response rates cannot be made. Ultimately, Secretary Ross' original rationale remains, to some extent, a mystery," the judge wrote.

The plaintiffs for the Maryland case include residents of Texas, Arizona, Washington state, New Jersey, South Dakota, Nevada and Florida. Attorneys from the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund also sued on behalf of more than two dozen organizations and individuals. The court agreed to consolidate the claims in December.

Plaintiffs' attorneys had urged Hazel to proceed with the Maryland trial as scheduled since the judge's ruling in the New York case could be reversed on appeal.

Lions sign Rams playoff standout running back C.J. Anderson

The Detroit Lions have signed free agent running back C.J. Anderson, who made big plays for the Rams after being acquired late last season. Anderson rushed for 403 yards in 11 games for the Panthers and Rams. He was waived by Carolina in November, signed with Oakland but didn't appear in a game. He ended up with Los Angeles and rushed for 299 yards in the last two games. Then he ran for 123 yards and two touchdowns in the Rams' playoff win over Dallas, getting more carries than All-Pro Todd Gurley. Anderson spent the previous five seasons with Denver, rushing for 1,007 yards in 2017. He joins a Detroit backfield that includes Kerryon Johnson, who shined last season as a rookie.

CRIME WATCH BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON MARCH 28, 2019 AT ABOUT 2:33 P.M.

While patrolling near the Jack in the Box at 2025 Lincoln Blvd, officers saw two male subjects sitting on a curb near the entrance drinking beer and smoking in violation of a Santa Monica Municipal Code. Officers made contact with subjects for the violations. As officers attempted to identify the subjects, one of the two refused to provide any identifiable information. The subject was placed under arrest. A search of the subject led to the recovery of burglary tools - two screwdrivers, cutting tools and lock picking device. A computer check revealed the subject was on probation for burglary. Augustine Torres, 27, homeless, was arrested for possession of burglary tools and probation violation. Bail was set at $10,000.

CREATORS SYNDICATE © 2019 STANLEY NEWMAN STANXWORDS@AOL.COM 4/6/19

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (April 6)

The celebration of your birth won't be just a day. It will be ongoing, sporadic and surprising, the way the cosmic forces seem to gift you through this solar return. One of the gifts comes in the form of people who really get you and get behind what you do. Another is the environment that better supports you. Aquarius and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 8, 30, 1, 19 and 10.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Balanced is not the same thing as equal. Strange things can balance out and often do. You can't argue with what works, nor is there any point in arguing with what doesn't.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're always making efforts to accommodate. Usually, life is better if you can swing it. But right now, it's just easier when everyone eats the same food and likes the same kind of entertainment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You realize what's at stake for you, but in order to reach an agreement, you also have to know what's at stake for the other person. You'll reach agreement in at least three instances before the day is done.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Because you take business personally and treat people so well, you'll reap the benefits of a fulfilling atmosphere where you spend a good deal of your time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). It's fun to think about the future so long as you can avoid getting so caught up in planning and dreaming that you miss what's happening right now. What you have is extremely precious!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). There's comfort in knowing what you can expect. When you tell people what they are about to experience and then deliver on that, the reaction will be extremely favorable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Take the high road. You don't have to take it out of benevolence. You can take it out of utility, just because it's the way most likely to solve the problem, and take the benevolence points as a bonus.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The time to set a goal for a conversation is before you have it. It may help to write down your goals and questions because it's a lot harder to recall this reasonable part of the brain when face to face.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). There are so many wonderful things about your current position, most of them so common to you that you can't really see them. It's why the perspective of strangers is so valuable to you now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You'll be evangelizing for a cause that will make the world better. Ignore the nonbelievers. You'll gain real numbers and momentum with those who are on the fence, just waiting to be convinced.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). All the kindergarten rules apply, and those much older will avoid all sorts of mayhem from applying the basics like "eyes on your own page" and "hands to yourself."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Remember when you made that commitment when you really don't know much about it? Now you know. Future commitments are harder to make from this wizened position.

Bird Beaks and Lunar Conjunctions

The bird's beak is shaped to fit the food it eats. The hummingbird has a dainty dipper suited to hollyhock. The vulture is built to tear into muscle. And don't mess with the woodpecker. The lunar conjunction to Uranus has us considering the ways in which we are suited to fulfill our own needs. Lean into those strengths, or adapt as necessary.

TO THE VIRGO DEALING WITH HUMILIATION

(See Thursday's column.) So you embarrassed yourself. Does it help to know that everyone has or will at some point? Bonus: If you do this in a way that is, as you suggested, bizarrely inappropriate, you might be an artist or something. It takes creativity to be bizarrely inappropriate! Since humiliation is part of the human experience, even if you were to get your wish and become someone else, you wouldn't be immune to the effects of humiliation. So let's try and focus on what's good about it.

I'll bet that right now you can come up with five things you'll do differently as you go forward in life being you. It's like you got a new operating system! Humiliation has a way of autodownloading the upgrade.

Take heart in the fact that this new version of you is more grounded in humility than the old version. With this feature, people will find you more relatable, likable and trustworthy, as they will be able to tell by your attitude that you've been though stuff; you don't feel like you're above them; and you probably understand their suffering.

Bonus: The self-monitoring system of your upgrade is now better than ever. It's not foolproof, but it's certainly not going to make certain sorts of mistakes again.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

Even before he became the diminutive Ant-Man, Aries actor Paul Rudd often employed an understated sense of humor and low-key charm to delight audiences. Modesty tempered with the fiery Aries passion is a winning and rare combination in Hollywood. Look for Rudd in "Living with Yourself," a new comedy series about a man undergoing an experimental self-improvement treatment.
