Questions arise over repayment of virus-delayed rent

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Temporary moratoriums on evictions in Santa Monica and other Southern California cities have left both renters and landlords questioning how tenants will be able to make up rent they couldn't pay during the coronavirus pandemic.

More than 1.6 million Californians have filed for unemployment since March 16 and economists are predicting that the recession caused by coronavirus could have long-lasting impacts on the economy. The hospitality industry was the first to fall — half of Santa Monica's hotels are closed, and restaurants have shed workers as they try to stay open on takeout and delivery alone — but the crisis has also reached local tech companies like ZipRecruiter and Bird, which laid off hundreds of workers last month.

Santa Monica renters may not be evicted during the crisis for not paying rent if they provide documentation showing that they have lost income due to COVID-19 or its economic impacts. After the city lifts its local emergency proclamation, tenants must pay any unpaid rent within six months. In Los Angeles, renters have one year

Maskapolooza: Hundreds handcraft masks to donate to local hospitals

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

In recent weeks, the need for medical masks has increased exponentially. Nurses and doctors have pleaded for donations on social media, where they've detailed how physicians have been forced to reuse the valuable face covers.

But thanks to hundreds of people across the country, including some right here in Santa Monica, hospitals everywhere are receiving the necessary supplies that will allow them to help the most critical of patients.

For two weeks, Kristen Held has traveled up and down the streets of the Westside in search of hardware stores and good Samaritans who may be in possession of N-95 masks and other supplies that may be helpful to hospitals during the recent pandemic.

"I just finished dropping off a sewing machine to this lady up the street because she wanted to get involved as well," Held said in an interview Wednesday.

She said it was part of "Maskapolooza," a group of more than 600 people across the country who have connected online and become involved in the fight against COVID-19.

"I saw some healthcare workers at the very beginning of this were using their masks for (as long as) five days in a row, because that's all they had to protect themselves," Patricia Peppard said. "I went on my Facebook feed and I wrote exactly that and said I heard that hospitals are accepting homemade masks since there's a shortage throughout

MASKS: Though she is one of many Americans who is dealing with the consequences of the recent pandemic, Kristen Held has helped deliver various Maskapolooza covers that will be used at local hospitals or shipped out to states like New York.

Coronavirus shrinks city revenues

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Before coronavirus hit, the city of Santa Monica was already facing a projected $2 million budget shortfall this year and an annual deficit of up to $74 million by the end of the decade, mostly due to rising pension costs and flattening revenues.

With most businesses shut down through at least the end of April and economists predicting a months-long recession, the city's General Fund could suffer deeper losses.

The city owes $448 million to CalPERS, the state pension fund. More than 20 years ago, local governments retroactively increased worker pensions based on the assumption that CalPERS' assets would continue to grow at the same rate it did during the 1990s. But the fund's value tanked during the Great Recession and is still too low to cover pension costs — so cities across California, including Santa Monica, have to make up the shortfall.

Seeking to balance the budget, city officials eliminated 29 vacant jobs, cut pensions, raised parking fees and trimmed city programs. City Council was also considering putting initiatives on the November ballot to raise taxes on hotels, parking and real estate sales and create taxes to capture revenue from high-earning landlords and businesses.

Now, General Fund revenue from sales, hotel and parking taxes have

Santa Monica College Feeds Hundreds of Students During Covid-19 Crisis, First Drive-Thru Pantry on April 2

Santa Monica College (SMC) held a first-ever drive-thru pop-up pantry to serve students who are food insecure on Thursday, April 2 in a parking lot near the SMC Student Services Center. Mandatory social distancing and hygiene guidelines were enforced, as 250 bags of non-perishable food items and groceries from Westside Food Bank and SMC's 10 donor-supported food closets were handed out. In addition, 500 meals from social enterprise Everytable were distributed, plus delicious cupcakes from The Butter End Cakery.

This inaugural drive-thru pantry was designed as an alternative to on-campus food resources that are currently inaccessible to students due to the Covid-19 crisis. SMC's classes and student support services are being provided in a completely remote environment through June 16, 2020.

Santa Monica College has one of the most comprehensive college food security programs in the nation. It includes 10 food closets and a new centralized food pantry that will feature refrigeration for fresh produce previously available in the college's weekly free farmers' market and hundreds of donated meals from Everytable in lieu of rent for its presence at the SMC Center for Media and Design (the new pantry's launch was delayed due to the Covid-19 crisis); a meal voucher program sponsored by SMC's Associated Students; and a partnership with CalFresh to get eligible students enrolled to receive benefits. The college also provides other essential wraparound services such as referrals to community resources and case management. The SMC food security programs have been made possible over the years through partnerships with organizations like Westside Food Bank and Food Forward, and by grant funding including from sources such as the California Community Colleges Chancellor's Office, in addition to donations through the SMC Foundation.

SMC Superintendent/President Dr. Kathryn E. Jeffery said that the college's goal is to "ensure that students who are in need during this time know, and feel, that the college is here to support them. "This current crisis has created a set of difficult circumstances for many," she said. "We fully intend to continue to serve students as best as we can during this public health crisis. It is hard for students to focus on classes when they are hungry!"

SMC plans to hold a weekly drive-through pop-up pantry to provide food as long as LA County Department of Public Health and local authorities' guidelines permit. This will complement the SMC Foundation's Meal Project, a subscription service that has been launched to provide meal deliveries to the homes of students who are at risk for hunger and food insecurity.

The SMC Foundation recently launched a $2 million fundraising campaign for the Meal Project which seeks to ensure that students identified as being at great risk for hunger and food insecurity–including homeless students, veterans, former foster youth, and seniors–do not suffer the consequences of a time that has left hundreds in unstable economic circumstances. To date–and at the end of the first week of the Meal Project–700 at-risk students have begun to receive healthy, chef-prepared meals dropped off via a subscription service with Everytable.

The Meal Project received a $500,000 seed donation from Santa Monica College through grant funds; a $200,000 lead gift from angel donor Ann Wang and The Wang Family Trust; and $35,000 from the SMC Associated Students.

The campaign is still $1 million away from its goal, which would allow SMC to feed 3,000 students for three more months, while the college operates in a remote environment (Tax-deductible donations may be made at santamonicacollegefoundation.org/mealproject).

Santa Monica Police Activities League Cancels Annual Charity Golf Classic On Monday, June 8

After careful consideration with the board of directors regarding the safety and health of everyone that may participate in the annual Santa Monica Police Activities League (PAL) Charity Golf Classic, they have made the difficult decision to cancel the tournament scheduled on Monday, June 8 at the Mountain Gate Country Club in Los Angeles.

With increased concerns about the Coronavirus (COVID-19), and following the direction of the California Department of Public Health, they felt it best to cancel the event, which would be considered "nonessential" under these current conditions.

Lost your job and health coverage because of coronavirus? Covered California is here to help

These are unprecedented and challenging times for the nation and the state of California, as the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic has altered the course of our lives for the foreseeable future.

As job loss claims hit record-highs, more and more Californians will be dealing with a loss of in-come and their health insurance coverage. Covered California and MediCal are providing a path to coverage for those affected by this pandemic.

Covered California recently announced a special-enrollment period related to the crisis. Anyone who meets Covered California's eligibility requirements, which are like those in place during the annual open-enrollment period, can sign up for coverage from now through June 30.

"The goal is to have as many people covered as possible to ensure they have access to vitally needed health care," said Peter V. Lee, executive director of Covered California. "This is the right thing to do and we to make sure no one is left behind in California during this pandemic."

Those signing up through Covered California will have access to private health insurance plans with monthly premiums that may be lowered due to federal subsidies and new state financial help that became effective in 2020. Once a plan is chosen, coverage begins on the first of the following month — meaning individuals losing job-based coverage will not face a gap in coverage.

That was the case for Jose Gonzalez Fernandez. The 60-year-old Bay Area resident lost his construction job and health insurance at the end of February, but in March he heard on the local news that Covered California's special-enrollment period would apply to his circumstances.

"I have always had health insurance through my union," Gonzalez Fernandez said. "It was scary to think that I would not be able to go to the doctor if I got sick or if I catch the coronavirus. I can't imagine getting sick, not having health insurance and not having money to pay for the medicine and medical services. That truly is scary."

Gonzalez Fernandez is thrilled to be enrolled in Covered California plan for just $2 a month for him and his wife, Luz. "The best thing ever is that I get to keep my same coverage. I get to keep my doctors."

Also, consumers who sign up through CoveredCA.com may find out that they are eligible for no-cost or low-cost coverage through MediCal, for which they can enroll in online. Those eligible for MediCal can have coverage that is immediately effective, because California has put a 90-day hold on MediCal renewal reviews, ensuring those already enrolled can continue their coverage and freeing up resources to quickly process the expected new enrollments.

All medically-necessary screening and testing for COVID-19 is free of charge. This includes tele-health or doctor's office visits, as well as network emergency room or urgent care visits, when necessary for the purpose of screening and testing for COVID-19. In addition, MediCal covers costs associated with COVID-19 in both its managed care plans and with fee for service providers. Covered California health plans will help cover costs that arise from any required treatment or hospitalization.

In addition, all health plans offered through Covered California and by MediCal will provide tele-health options for enrollees, giving individuals the ability to connect with a health care professional by phone or video without having to personally visit a doctor's office or hospital.

"A core part of our mission is improving access to high-quality health care, and that has never been more important than it is right now in California," Lee said. "Covered California will help you find a path to the coverage you need for you and your family."

Consumers can easily find out if they are eligible MediCal or other forms of financial help and see which plans are available in their area by using the CoveredCA.Com Shop and Compare Tool and entering their ZIP code, household income and the ages of those who need coverage.

To enroll in Covered California or MediCal health plans:

- Visit www.CoveredCA.com.
- Get free and confidential assistance over the phone, in a variety of languages, from a certified en-roller.
- Have a certified enroller call you and help you for free.
- Call Covered California at (800) 300-1506.

RENT REPAYMENT

"The moratorium can be extended or the rent repayment period can be extended depending on the length and severity of the emergency, as well as federal and state aid provided," said city spokesperson Constance Farrell.

But organizations representing renters and property owners doubt that renters will be able to make up rent in a year's time, let alone six months.

"Renters are struggling just to pay their current rent, so how are they going to make up any deferred rent in the future?" said Dan Yukelson, executive director of the Apartment Association of Greater Los Angeles, which represents landlords.

Renters will receive some assistance under the CARES Act, which President Trump signed into law last week. All individuals earning less than $75,000 per year will receive a $1,200 check from the federal government, people out of work will receive $600 a week on top of their unemployment benefits for four months and federal small business loans will allow some employers to keep paying workers.

The extra unemployment benefits cover roughly 80% of the rent on the average Santa Monica studio apartment, and the $1,200 direct payment amounts to less than half.

Yukelson said the government must provide direct rental assistance so landlords can continue to make their mortgage payments.

"Many rental property owners are living month to month too, and the eviction moratoriums seem to encourage renters not to pay in spite of some having savings or enhanced unemployment benefits," he said. "We need the government to step in with rental subsidies … or we will soon be seeing a large volume of mortgage defaults by rental housing providers."

Healthy L.A., a newly formed coalition of more than 250 organizations, is urging the L.A. County Board of Supervisors to adopt stronger tenant and homeowner protections, including a suspension of rent and mortgage payments.

But it's unclear whether the county has the power to do so, even under an emergency declaration. Santa Monica officials say the city does not have the authority to waive private contracts between landlords and tenants.

"At the very least, cities and counties should be aggressively pushing the state and federal government to do this," said David Levitus, the founder of Los Angeles Forward, an advocacy group that helped form the coalition. "This is an urgent necessity and we need to figure out how to make it happen."

Farrell said the city supports and is advocating for efforts at the state and federal levels to channel aid to impacted individuals and families, residential and commercial tenants, small business owners and property owners.

Levitus added he thinks cities should be as generous as possible in setting repayment plans.

"That fact that Santa Monica can only do six months is really not acceptable in my eyes," he said. "It's just not realistic."

the country right now. But I was unsure so I was hoping someone would inform me."

Within minutes, Peppard connected with a friend of a friend — Christina Karaba — who was searching for people who are costume designers and stylists in Los Angeles who sew. Their conversation eventually led to Peppard joining Maskapolooza.

"Christina is finding the contacts for the hospitals in need and then she's posting that on the Maskapolooza page and then everyone within those areas are making mask covers using a design that was made by a nurse," Peppard said. Created by a nurse for nurses, the cotton covers that extend the life of an N-95 mask because doctors and nurses can bleach and wash them.

Peppard compares Maskapolooza's efforts to her day-job where, on big jobs, a team will be sewing, buying fabric and designing throughout the project. "This is still working as a team, it's just we're all working together through Facebook Messenger and NextDoor," Peppard added.

However, creating the covers as well as having to care for children and complete all of life's other responsibilities can be taxing, especially considering it takes experienced sewers hours to complete a single face mask.

"But seeing all of the people asking for them… that motivates you to get busy again and just continue to make more," Peppard said, sharing she has produced more than 80 mask covers and Held has purchased or collected more than 2,000 N-95 masks for St John's Hospital from Next Door neighbors and businesses since last week.

Though she is one of many Americans who is dealing with the consequences of the recent pandemic, Held said she feels it's important to come together as a community right now.

"I'll do anything to help," Held said as she described the efforts of her neighbors. So when a Culver City hardware store asked her to get the head of the hospital's signature to prove she wasn't selling the masks online, Held had no problem with the request and soon returned to collect the merchandise.

And she hasn't stopped there. Whether it's fabric pick-ups, sewing machine drop-offs or looking for businesses who are willing to donate fabric and other supplies, Held is busy throughout the day doing what she can to make sure hospitals are prepared.

"Everyone is doing their part in their own way, and I think that's how we'll get through this," Peppard said, adding anybody who is interested in joining the effort can request to do so online at bit.ly/Maskapolooza.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 06)

Your cosmic birthday gift will be motivation. You'll be ultraproductive, highly effective and driven by the challenges you take on. It will all start with a new venture that shows itself in the next six weeks. There are personal reasons you want this prize, though it will contribute to your bottom line financially, too. Libra and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 30, 2, 12, 14 and 25.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll become aware of a desire that you may not have been fully conscious of until now. The part of you that wants will go on in kind until it gets what it longs for.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You are slow to anger, but you are also slow to let anger go. For this reason, you'll do what you can to turn the heat down on potentially incendiary situations.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Despite your brave face, people know you are sensitive. They can tell in the tiny reactions that flicker across your being and the way you follow up with questions and care.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Like a pearl, you'll turn irritations into things of beauty. This is accomplished not through rejecting the problem but embracing it, wrapping yourself around it until it becomes smooth and lovely.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Just because you happen to be self-sufficient doesn't mean you shouldn't ask for and accept help from others. Working together, you'll strengthen the team while keeping things interesting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Change doesn't have to be such a serious matter. You'll take a playful approach, experimenting to find the behaviors, people and environments that feel like a natural fit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). People show and interpret feelings differently. What some people do because they like you won't automatically register as affection to you. You'll need to learn one another's language for this to work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Life without dreams is a mundane existence. If you can't remember your dreams at night, be sure to do some dreaming during the day. Mentally send yourself to places that delight you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It seems you're rating yourself on a value scale that you've outgrown. What once seemed important is now less so, and new matters take precedence. Perhaps it's best not to rate yourself at all.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You sense you've gotten all you can out of a situation. You can continue doing what you know or risk a new experience. The unknown is scary, but that's where the opportunity to grow exists.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). There are certain people who seem to bring out the strong emotions in you, and conflicting ones at that. You needn't sort through it all at once, but there is a karmic bond here to untangle over time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). If you were to only accept your strengths, you'd be missing out on your chance to connect with others, which usually occurs around weaknesses and vulnerabilities.

REVENUES

evaporated as residents self-isolate at home and would-be visitors refrain from travel, forcing at least 18 of the city's hotels to close. Big Blue Bus fare revenues have zeroed out since the agency eliminated fares to facilitate contactless boarding. At the state level, the collapse of the stock market has delivered another shock to CalPERS.

"Like every other business and institution and nonprofit, we're looking at our sources of revenue, and frankly, it looks bleak across the board," City Manager Rick Cole said in an interview last month. "The economic impacts are going to hit the city of Santa Monica, but ... we will do everything we can with the business community and residents to work our way through it together."

Ed King, director transit services, said BBB typically takes in $1.1 to $1.2 million in fare revenue each month. That funds about 20% of its operating budget, which is separate from the city's General Fund.

King said while the loss of fare revenue is significant, BBB has cash reserves and he expects CARES Act funding allocated to transportation agencies to offset some of the lost revenue. BBB has also cut three routes and reduced service frequency, but is still carrying more than 10,500 passengers each day, he said.

In the long term, King said he is concerned about the recession's impacts on the funding BBB receives from L.A. Metro and the state, which is generated from sales tax.

"I think the biggest hit for us won't come until next year at this time, when sales tax revenue will give us a better idea of what impact this has had on the larger economy," King said.

Deputy City Manager Anuj Gupta said the $2 trillion CARES Act President Trump signed into law last week includes $139 billion in financial assistance for cities and counties, but only jurisdictions with a population larger than 500,000 residents will receive a direct allocation. Santa Monica will get a cut of the funding set aside for smaller cities that will be distributed by state governments.

However, the funding can only be used to cover costs directly related to COVID-19 from March to the end of 2020 and can't replace the lost revenue used to fund regular city services.

"We have already worked through our state lobbyist team to be well-positioned to receive that state emergency funding and reimbursement, because we, like any local government, are going to be facing significant challenges in the weeks and months to come," he said.

The city's finance department has planned for how different economic scenarios could impact the General Fund, Gupta added. A baseline scenario would put the fund $12 million in the red by fiscal year 2022-2023 and a worst-case scenario would result in a deficit of $40 million by that fiscal year, according to forecasts released in February.

"While this sudden and significant hit at this particular moment in time was not something we expected, the long-range planning the (finance department) has been doing makes us a little more prepared for something like this," Gupta said.

Gupta said the city is developing an economic recovery effort that will connect businesses and residents to resources, technical assistance and emergency funding and programs, and may modify some local policies to help get businesses back up and running as quickly as possible.

He said the city will also focus recovery efforts on vulnerable communities, including seniors, people experiencing homelessness and undocumented residents.

"Our most urgent task is to get through this public health crisis and keep our community safe, but at same time, we need to stand up and plan for a broad economic and community recovery," Gupta said.
