Bonin proposes encampments on Will Rogers State Beach

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

A proposal by two Los Angeles city councilmen to set up temporary camps or "tiny homes" for homeless people in beach parking lots is drawing opposition.

The motion asks the city administrative officer to evaluate and identify funding for temporary sites for "single-occupancy tiny homes or safe camping" at Will Rogers State Beach in Pacific Palisades, Dockweiler Beach in Playa del Rey and Fisherman's Village in Marina del Rey. Dockweiler would include "safe parking" sites.

Los Angeles Councilman Mike Bonin's plan also envisions similar camps at a half-dozen non-beach sites including parks, and land owned by Los Angeles International Airport, but the proposed beach sites have drawn the most attention.

In the motion, Bonin said his region has already made efforts to house homeless residents including permanent supportive housing, bridge housing, hotel rooms through Project Roomkey, safe parking locations and safe camping sites. However, he said more must be done.

"Despite those projects, homelessness across Southern California, Los Angeles, and the 11th District continues to increase, and much more must be done," he said. "Different interventions must be tried, and more locations must be identified."

A motion from a councilmember must be submitted to the Homelessness and Poverty Committee and is heard at the discretion of the committee chair. If heard and approved by the committee it would then move to the full council at a time of the Council President's choosing. If Bonin's report is approved, specific plans for each location would have individual hearings inside City Hall.

However, the initial proposal is already triggering strong resistance

Malibu and Santa Monica contingents continue to prepare for county hearing on district split

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

Malibu and Santa Monica officials are set to appear in front of LACOE's Committee on School District Organization during a hearing scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday, April 17, but both sides are gearing up to discuss the matter among themselves and local residents ahead of the upcoming public hearing.

SMMUSD's Board of Education is set to meet this Thursday at 4 p.m. via Zoom for a closed session meeting that will allow board members and staff to discuss Malibu unification.

"It would be inappropriate for me to speak to closed session items prior to any discussion," Superintendent Ben Drati said this week. "but I will say that it is important for the full board to meet with all appropriate counsel to discuss the latest issues regarding unification."

Drati added that he feels he has made his personal opinion very clear.

"Which is that the petition filed by the City of Malibu is inequitable and would lead to significant harm for students in the district," Drati said, echoing the remarks he made during a recent rally where members of the SMMUSD community had a chance to share their feelings on the split between Malibu and Santa Monica schools.

During the rally, Drati said he had hoped to resolve the unification issue after reopening schools but the district has been forced to adapt to Malibu's timetable after the City of Malibu reinstated an official request with county regulators.

"I was disappointed by it. I thought we'd address the school closures, then we'd have time to talk about unification," Drati said last week. "But they went forward and said, 'Nope, we want to reinstate the petition that was originally put forward,' and then that necessitated a response from us. And that's what you're seeing."

Much of the conflict over splitting the district has stemmed from revenues. Malibu as a community would bring in more money than Santa Monica and the two sides have been at odds as to a fair distribution of income. Proposals have ranged from 10 to 50 years worth of subsidies based on varying levels of service or per-student funding.

Drati said he wants to be a superintendent who gives the people what they want but he also feels all students should be

California plans to lift most pandemic restrictions June 15

JANIE HAR AND AMY TAXIN

California plans to lift most coronavirus restrictions on businesses and workplaces June 15, with officials saying enough people should be vaccinated by then to allow for life to almost get back to a pre-pandemic normal.

The mask mandate in the nation's most populated state will stay in effect, Gov. Gavin Newsom said Tuesday, and he cautioned that California will reopen more widely in mid-June only if vaccine supply is sufficient and hospitalization rates stay stable and low.

Still, the Democratic governor, who has overseen some of the most restrictive pandemic rules in the country, said it was time to forge ahead, with 20 million vaccines administered in California to date. The announcement signals an end date to more than a year of isolation after California resisted reopening too quickly even while other states pushed ahead.

"We can confidently say by June 15 that we can start to open up as business as usual, subject to ongoing mask-wearing and ongoing vigilance," Newsom said.

Study: Drought-breaking rains more rare, erratic in US West

MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

Rainstorms grew more erratic and droughts much longer across most of the U.S. West over the past half-century as climate change warmed the planet, according to a sweeping government study released Tuesday that concludes the situation is worsening.

The most dramatic changes were recorded in the desert Southwest, where the average dry period between rainstorms grew from about 30 days in the 1970s to 45 days between storms now, said Joel Biederman, a research hydrologist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture Southwest Watershed Research Center in Tucson, Arizona.

The consequences of the intense dry periods that pummeled areas of the West in recent years were severe — more intense and dangerous wildfires, parched croplands and not enough vegetation to support livestock and wildlife. And the problem appears to be accelerating, with rainstorms becoming increasingly unpredictable, and more areas showing longer intervals between storms since the turn of the century compared to prior decades, the study concludes.

The study comes with almost two-thirds of the contiguous U.S. beset by abnormally dry conditions. Warm temperatures forecast for the next several months could make it the worst spring drought in almost a decade, affecting roughly 74 million people across the U.S., the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said.

Water use cutbacks, damaged wheat crops, more fires and lower reservoirs in California and the Southwest are possible, weather service and agriculture officials have warned. Climate scientists are calling what's happening in the West a continuation of a "megadrought" that started in 1999.

While previous research documented a decline in total rainfall for much of the West, the work by Biederman and colleagues put more focus on when that rain occurs. That has significant implications for how much water is available for agriculture and plants such as grasses that have shallow roots and need a steadier supply of moisture than large trees.

"Once the growing season starts, the total amount of rainfall is important. But if it comes in just a few large storms, with really long dry periods in between, that can have really detrimental consequences," study co-author Biederman said in an interview.

The total amount of rain in a year doesn't matter to plants — especially if rains come mostly in heavy bursts with large run-off — but consistent moisture is what keeps them alive, said UCLA meteorologist Daniel Swain, who writes a weather blog about the West and was not part of the study.

The new findings were published in the journal Geophysical Research Letters. Researchers led by University of Arizona climate scientist Fangyue Zhang compiled daily readings going back to 1976 from 337 weather stations across the western U.S. and analyzed rainfall and drought data to identify the changing patterns.

Other parts of the region that saw longer and more variable droughts included the southwest Rocky Mountains, the Colorado Plateau and the Central Plains.

The rainfall study is in line with data that shows climate change already is affecting the planet.

"Climate models project that the American Southwest is very likely to experience more frequent and more severe droughts," said William Anderegg, a University of Utah biologist and climate scientist. "This study and other recent work demonstrates that this dry down has already begun."

The weather station data that was used in the study represents "the gold standard' for an accurate understanding of changes being driven by climate change, said Christopher Field, an earth systems scientist and director of the Stanford Woods Institute for the Environment.

States in the northwestern U.S. were largely spared from the accelerating cycles of drought. The researchers observed total annual rainfall amounts and shorter intervals between drought in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and portions of Montana, Wyoming and the Dakotas.

That's consistent with predicted changes in weather patterns driven by climate change in which the jet stream that brings moisture from the Pacific Ocean shifts northward, they said.

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING BEFORE THE SANTA MONICA PLANNING COMMISSION VIA TELECONFERENCE

Pursuant to Executive Order N-29-20 Issued by Governor Gavin Newsom

SUBJECT: 21ENT-0028 (Vesting Tentative Tract Map No. 80306)
1448 7th Street
APPLICANT: Carl Smith, Telemachus Studio
PROPERTY OWNER: Lee and Yen Property, LLC

A public hearing will be held by the Planning Commission to consider the following request:

The applicant is requesting an approval of a Vesting Tentative Tract Map to subdivide one land parcel into 21 airspace parcels for the purpose of creating 20 residential condominium units and one ground floor commercial condominium unit in a proposed 26,230 SF, five-story building situated above a 18-space subterranean parking garage located in the NV (Neighborhood Village) District of the Downtown Community Plan (DCP). A Vesting Tentative Tract Map (VTTM 80306) for the project site was originally approved by the Planning Commission on April 30, 2020. The proposed project's mix of uses has since been revised for consistency with the DCP's Housing Project definition which requires a at least 75% of a mixed-use development's floor area to be devoted to residential uses. Pursuant to Santa Monica Municipal Code (SMMC) Section 9.54.070(B), the Planning Commission is the responsible authority to approve, conditionally approve, or deny tentative subdivision map applications.

DATE/TIME: WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 2021 AT 5:30 PM

LOCATION: In an effort to reduce the risk of spreading Coronavirus (COVID-19), members of the Planning Commission and City Staff will participate via teleconference. The meeting will be broadcast on CityTV Channel 16 and streamed on the City's website as normal but participants may also join the teleconference via https://primetime.bluejeans.com/a2m/live-event/yusgrffp or by dialing in at 1-415-466-7000 (PIN: 6013659 #)

Nearly half of new US virus infections are in just 5 states

RUSS BYNUM AND MICHELLE R. SMITH
Associated Press

Nearly half of new coronavirus infections nationwide are in just five states — a situation that is putting pressure on the federal government to consider changing how it distributes vaccines by sending more doses to hot spots.

New York, Michigan, Florida, Pennsylvania and New Jersey together reported 44% of the nation's new COVID-19 infections, or nearly 197,500 new cases, in the latest available seven-day period, according to state health agency data compiled by Johns Hopkins University. Total U.S. infections during the same week numbered more than 452,000.

The heavy concentration of new cases in states that account for 22% of the U.S. population has prompted some experts and elected officials to call for President Joe Biden's administration to ship additional vaccine doses to those places. So far, the White House has shown no signs of shifting from its policy of dividing vaccine doses among states based on population.

Sending extra doses to places where infection numbers are climbing makes sense, said Dr. Elvin H. Geng, a professor in infectious diseases at Washington University. But it's also complicated. States that are more successfully controlling the virus might see less vaccine as a result.

"You wouldn't want to make those folks wait because they were doing better," Geng said. "On the other hand, it only makes sense to send vaccines to where the cases are rising."

The spike in cases has been especially pronounced in Michigan, where the seven-day average of daily new infections reached 6,719 cases Sunday — more than double what it was two weeks earlier. Only New York reported higher case numbers. And California and Texas, which have vastly larger populations than Michigan, are reporting less than half its number of daily infections.

Though Michigan has seen the highest rate of new infections in the past two weeks, Democratic Gov. Gretchen Whitmer has said she does not plan to tighten restrictions. She has blamed the virus surge on pandemic fatigue, which has people moving about more, as well as more contagious variants.

"Taking steps back wasn't going to fix the issue," Whitmer said as she got her first vaccine Tuesday at Ford Field in Detroit, home of the NFL's Lions. "What we have to do is really put our foot down on the pedal on vaccines" and urge people to wear masks, keep their social distance and wash their hands.

Whitmer got the shot the day after Michigan expanded eligibility to everyone 16 and older. She asked the White House last week during a conference call with governors whether it has considered sending extra vaccine to states battling virus surges. She was told all options were on the table.

In New York City, vaccination appointments are still challenging to get. Mayor Bill de Blasio has publicly harangued the federal government about the need for a bigger vaccine allotment almost daily, a refrain he repeated when speaking to reporters Tuesday.

"We still need supply, supply, supply," de Blasio said, before adding, "But things are really getting better."

On the state level, Gov. Andrew Cuomo has not called publicly for an increase in New York's vaccine allotment, even as cases ticked up in recent weeks and the number of hospitalized people hit a plateau.

In New Jersey, where the seven-day rolling average of daily new infections has risen over the past two weeks, from 4,050 daily cases to 4,250, Democratic Gov. Phil Murphy said he is constantly talking to the White House about demand for the coronavirus vaccine, though he stopped short of saying he was lobbying for more vaccines because of the state's high infection rate.

Vaccine shipments to New Jersey were up 12% in the last week, Murphy said Monday, though he questioned whether that's enough.

"We constantly look at, OK, we know we're going up, but are we going up at the rate we should be, particularly given the amount of cases we have?" Murphy said.

New virus variants are clearly one of the drivers in the increase, said Dr. Kirsten Bibbins-Domingo, chair of the department of epidemiology and biostatistics at the University of California at San Francisco. Failure to suppress the rise in cases will lead to more people getting sick and dying, she said, and drive increases in other parts of the country.

"More vaccine needs to be where the virus is," Bibbins-Domingo said, adding that people should get over the "scarcity mindset" that has them thinking surging vaccine into one place will hurt people elsewhere.

In Florida, relaxed safeguards during a busy spring break season likely helped spread virus variants, said University of South Florida epidemiologist Jason Salemi. The state's seven-day average of daily new infections has exceeded 5,400, an increase of 20% in the past two weeks.

While many new infections appear to be among younger people, Salemi said he's worried about Florida's seniors. About 78% of residents age 65 and older have received at least one vaccine dose, but roughly 1 million more still have not gotten any shots.

"We seemingly have the supply," Salemi said. "Are these people not planning to get vaccinated?"

Talk of sending extra shots to some states comes at a time when the number of daily infections in the U.S. has fallen dramatically compared to a January spike following the holiday season. However, the seven-day average of daily infections been rising slowly since mid-March.

The five states seeing the most infections stand out. As of Tuesday, 31 U.S. states were reporting seven-day averages of fewer than 1,000 new daily cases.

White House coronavirus coordinator Jeff Zients said Tuesday more than 28 million doses of COVID-19 vaccines will be delivered to states this week. That allocation will bring the U.S. total to more than 90 million doses distributed in the past three weeks.

than 150 million coronavirus shots have been administered since he took office, and that all adults will be eligible to receive a vaccine by April 19.

About 40% of U.S. adults have now received at least one COVID-19 shot, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. About 23% of American adults have been fully vaccinated — including more than half of Americans 65 and older.

Geng said the nation should take a step back and go slow. Even just a few more weeks of Americans sticking with social distancing and other precautions could make a huge difference.

"The take-home message here is, let's not jump the gun," Geng said. "There's light at the end of the tunnel. We all see it there. And we will get there. Slow and steady."

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

LOS ANGELES

Project will identify Black heritage places in Los Angeles

Places linked to African American heritage in Los Angeles will be identified in an effort to preserve them, the Getty arts organization and the city announced Tuesday.

The three-year Los Angeles African American Historic Places Project will work with local communities and cultural institutions to identify places that best represent the African American experience in the city, the collaborators said in a statement.

Just over 3% of the city's 1,200 designated local landmarks are linked to African American heritage despite extensive efforts to record LA's historic places, they said.

The project will be led by the Getty Conservation Institute and the city's Office of Historic Resources.

"Historic preservation is about the acknowledgment and elevation of places and stories," said Tim Whalen, the institute's director. "The point of this work is to make sure that the stories and places of African Americans in Los Angeles are more present and complete than previously."

The work is also about making sure that preservation methods are examined for systemic bias, he said.

The project was announced after a virtual roundtable that sought input from national and local leaders in urban planning, historic preservation, African American history and grassroots or community organizing.

MONTEREY PARK

Gunman targets, kills 2 at Southern California restaurant

A gunman shot a man and woman to death at a Southern California restaurant in an apparently targeted attack and then fled, authorities said Tuesday.

Officers called to Music BBQ Bar in Monterey Park on Monday found both victims with multiple gunshot wounds to the upper torso and both were pronounced dead at the scene, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department said in a statement.

"It appears the suspect knew and specifically targeted the victims," it said. "This incident does not appear to be a random act of violence."

The two victims and the suspect, a man in his late 30s or early 40s, were all described as Asian but no names were released.

Sheriff's homicide bureau Lt. Charles Calderero said the shooting did not appear to be a hate crime.

IMPERIAL BEACH

5 arrested after suspected human smuggling in California

Three men and a teenager suspected of swimming around a U.S.-Mexico border wall were arrested in Southern California, federal authorities said.

The Border Patrol said two other men suspected of picking up the trio in an SUV on the U.S. side were also taken into custody Monday in Imperial Beach.

The San Diego Union-Tribune reported all five were identified as Mexican nationals who were not authorized to be in the U.S.

Agents patrolling the coastline approached the two men and the teen after spotting them wearing torn wetsuits on the beach around 6 a.m., the Border Patrol said.

All three ran but the 17-year-old was arrested after a brief chase, officials said. A short time later agents spotted the two men getting into an SUV, which was pulled over.

The SUV's driver and a passenger were expected to face charges of human smuggling, the newspaper said.

HUNTINGTON PARK

Son arrested after mother's body found in LA-area trash bin

The body of a 66-year-old woman was discovered in a Los Angeles-area trash bin and her son was arrested in connection with her death, authorities said.

Teresa Pasillas Iniguez was found dead Monday in Huntington Park, near where she was reported missing by a relative the night before, the Los Angeles Times reported.

It was not immediately clear how or where the woman died.

The relative who reported Iniguez missing late Sunday also said the woman's car was stolen, Los Angeles County sheriff's officials said.

The missing car was found the next morning.

Iniguez's son, whom authorities have not identified, was detained as part of the investigation and later arrested in connection with his mother's death.

FUTURE: We must work to stop this future from coming to Santa Monica.

WE'RE DOING IT ALL WRONG

A lot of stuff. Most stuff. Many cities do, I suppose. Bureaucracies can screw up the best of plans. But for the most part, we have the worst of plans, or no plans at all. Our piecemeal approach to "city planning" seems intentional, allowing the deeply entrenched "nothing wrong with this project" thinking that gives predators their lucrative openings. And means never having to say you're sorry because, who knew?

Long-term, big picture vision should be driving our future here, but isn't. New way out of the box post-pandemic thinking! Why? It's very hard to reverse accepted notions after years or decades. We have begun, with the unprecedented unseating last election of three incumbents at City Council, replaced by three whose credo is, SM for residents first, not outside interests. What a concept. Now there is a grass roots, parents-driven move to recall some members of the School Board, another step in the right direction of getting transparency and community input back into our school operations, and putting the brakes on insane spending.

I'M THANKFUL

Every day, to live in this beautiful place. But a lot less thankful than I was 15 years ago, or even two years ago. How about you? Driven down Lincoln lately? You may need your lights, even mid-day. Downtown SM? Did you try to squeeze onto the Pier last weekend? Ah, the Pier, I'll always cherish those great concerts we were able to have for 30 years…

The positives are disappearing before our eyes, and they don't need to. Palm trees, cool ocean breezes, the blue sky above, a low rise beach city. You can keep those, moving into the 21st century.

Santa Monica is a treasure, to Los Angeles and to the world. Progress and growth, evolution and change are inevitable, but when they reel out of control, we call it cancer.

Santa Monica governance is a very complex beast. Most regular folks throw up their hands in despair of sorting it all out. We the residents, the electorate, need to look at these big issues and use common sense in asking at least two questions:

does this make sense, and who benefits?

A lot of it doesn't make sense and has been long proven wrong, like trickle down Reaganomics. But there's little accountability so it keeps getting trotted out. Baloney is baloney. Call spades spades. Don't be distracted by shiny objects. Here are a few.

HOUSING

Seems all you ever hear, for decades. Housing, housing, housing..."Affordable" housing. To preserve our diversity (what's left of it).

First of all, we don't have a housing crisis here. We have an affordability crisis. And the Council/staff solution? Build our way to affordability. Ask any local real estate agent if that will work.

How's this for a plan? Get a handful of "affordable" units by allowing developers to build hundreds of market rate units. So now we have runaway development, raising our skyline, our population, the cost of new and existing housing, causing stress, inviting crime, depleting our resources, snarling our traffic, ruining so many things about our city, unnecessarily. We are already one of the densest cities in CA.

We have at least 4,500 empty units now, by best estimates (and I'll bet that's low). But previous Councils kept signing off on more and more, to get those few "affordables." That won't solve the problem, when you can make nearly six figures and still qualify for an "affordable" unit. What if your family of four makes only $30,000?

Our new Council members are invoking common sense to find better solutions than building our city out to the sidewalks and up to the sky. "Supply and Demand" doesn't operate on real estate this expensive, on the coast.

Who benefits from all this overdevelopment? What kind of mess will it leave us?

THE UNSHELTERED

The intractable problem. Trying to solve it only in SM is like roping off a pee section in a public swimming pool. We can't alleviate the income inequality that's at the core, and the mental health and addiction problems that complicate it, but we can focus on what will help now: social services combined with immediate if temporary housing. Don't try to do it all at once. Get people off the street, so they are safe (and in a pandemic, we are too), then work on services and more permanent housing. And it's all useless unless you get other cities to recognize that it's a regional problem, and do their share.

We've been holding back because we're told that to build even one individual mini-unit here costs $3/4-M. But looky there! LA is doing it for one-fifth that cost. Does that make sense?

CRIME

Our city government's reluctance to act after the invasion and looting of May 31 tells you a lot. This was so preventable. But we were woefully unprepared, so the damage was massive. It was one of the worst moments in our city's history. To top it off, we kept our police busy two blocks from the looters, using tear gas and rubber bullets on legal, peaceful BLM protesters. But no consequences, no real changes to policing. (Two study committees, though.) What did we learn, what have we changed? Not nearly enough.

Everyday crime? Our Council and staff trot out selected stats to show there is no crime problem. But if so many in the city think there is, and have experienced it. isn't that what needs to be addressed, instead of denial?

TRAFFIC, TRANSIT

Cars are evil. If you allow parking spaces, that creates cars, and traffic. So we bend the rules to let developers build units with little or no parking. Problem solved. Except for the irate neighbors. Who does this benefit? Developers, you think? It is so much cheaper to not have to build those parking spaces.

We can build like crazy if it's near a transit route. Buses, trains, etc. By that measure, all of SM is exempt. But would you call what we have here, mass transit?

INFRASTRUCTURE

We're fast depleting our resources, especially water, but we keep building because this particular building will have enough water. Oh, you think we should take into account the other two dozen buildings coming very soon? Don't be silly. All that building downtown, and where is our downtown school?

TOURISM

We're doing all we can to bring back the tourists! All 9,000,000 of them. Is it possible, all things considered, we might be better off with half that number, or less? Maybe our police and fire could spend more time serving residents, than this tourist city of 9Mwithin a city of 92,000?

STAFF

We've made only token efforts to cut staff, which greatly affects our hemorrhaging budget. And our ticking pension bomb. More code enforcement, fewer lawyers. You can rent them.

I don't have many answers, but I do keep saying we have to bring Santa Monica back differently. Communicate with your Council members. Demand better, leaner ways of doing things, and accountability. We will never have this opportunity again.

Refugee families urge Biden to keep promise to up admissions

JULIE WATSON
Associated Press

The families of refugees and their supporters, including 124 elected officials, sent President Joe Biden a letter Tuesday urging him to make good on his promise to boost refugee admissions to the United States during the current budget year, replacing the record low number set by his predecessor.

Biden presented a plan to Congress two months ago to raise the ceiling on admissions to 62,500 and to eliminate restrictions imposed by former President Donald Trump that have disqualified a significant number of refugees, including those fleeing war.

But Biden has not issued a presidential determination since his administration notified Congress, as required by law. The action does not require congressional approval and past presidents have issued such presidential determinations that set the cap on refugee admissions shortly after the notification to Congress.

The Biden administration has given no explanation as to why the president has kept the refugee admissions cap of 15,000 set by Trump, the lowest it has been in the 41-year-old U.S. Refugee Resettlement program's history. The White House had no immediate response to the letter Tuesday.

"This continues to have a devastating impact on people in dire need of humanitarian protection," states the letter signed by the families of refugees, resettlement agencies and 124 state and local elected officials from 35 states.

Only about 2,050 refugees have been allowed in to the United States because of the restrictions set by Trump, agencies said.

Every day that passes without any action "leaves hundreds of refugee families in limbo in refugee camps and many waiting to be reunited with their loved ones here in the U.S. waiting for us to uphold our promise to protect," the letter states.

"We hope that President Biden will listen to our voices," said Nejra Sumic, one of the refugee organizers of the letter.

State Department spokesman Ned Price said the president is committed to "ensuring that the United States is, again, a leader when it comes to refugees," but it will take time to restore the program that was decimated by the previous administration. The drop in admissions under Trump forced many resettlement offices to close and let staff go.

"There's a great deal of rebuilding that needs to take place in order to have a refugee program that allows us to achieve what we wanted to achieve in a way that is both effective and that is safe," Price said without elaborating.

The State Department, which coordinates flights with resettlement agencies, booked 715 refugees to come to the United States with the anticipation that Biden would have acted by March, but those flights were canceled since the refugees were not eligible under Trump's

Matthew D. Redick

Matthew (Matt) Redick, 32, passed away in Albuquerque, New Mexico on March 30, 2021. Matt served as a Staff Sergeant in the United States Army and was assigned to that location this past November.

Matt grew up in Santa Monica, attending local elementary and middle schools before graduating from Santa Monica High School in 2006. After enrolling in Samohi, Matt joined Coach Mark Black's wrestling team, moving from Frosch to Varsity in his second year. Wrestling became a big part of Matt's life.

After graduating from Samohi, Matt moved to the Del Rey area, working locally in clothing retail and tile distribution. He was also active in community works, including cleaning the Los Angeles River and assisting his dad Mark with the Annual Del Rey Day held at Glen Alla Park.

In November 2008 Matt joined the United States Army. He was deployed to Afghanistan (twice), Kuwait and Iraq. Additionally, Matt was attached to a NATO unit in Poland and later served in Southern Germany. In August, 2009, Matt was married to Suzzet Figueroa Garcia in El Paso, Texas. The couple built a home there together. They loved to travel, and visited many cities throughout Europe. In addition to his love of family and travel, Matt was a HUGE L.A. Dodgers baseball and Oakland Raiders football fan.

Matt is survived by his wife Suzzet, his father Mark Redick, Mother Cynthia Ford Barlese, sister Jennifer (Barlese) McLaughlin, brother Daniel Redick, Judy Swank, in-laws Roberto and Reina Garcia and numerous cousins, uncles and aunts.

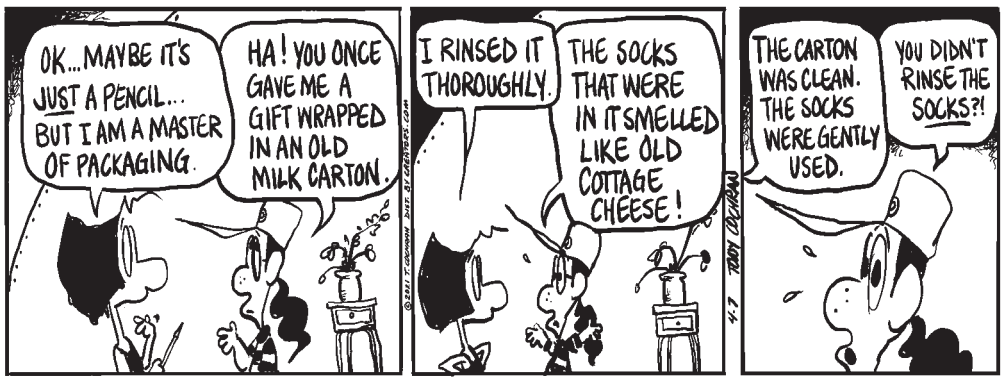

Services will be held in El Paso, Texas on April 12. He will be accorded a military service with full honors. Per Matt's wishes, his ashes will be scattered in Santa Monica Bay at a later date.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests that donations be made in Matt's name to the Wounded Warrior Project (SSG Matthew D Redick, www.woundedwarriorproject.com)

SURF FORECASTS

WATER TEMP: 57.2°

WEDNESDAY - POOR TO FAIR - SURF: 2-3ft+ Waist to stomach high
AM wind light and conditions clean. Small NW swell mix continues to creep up, blending with reinforcing SSW swell for fairly peaky shape at the exposures west of Pt Dume.

THURSDAY - POOR TO FAIR - SURF: 2-3ft+ Waist to stomach high
AM wind/conditions could be alright. Peaking SSW swell and modest NW energy make for fairly peaky shape at the beachbreaks. Probably still worth a surf..

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 7)

You'll reach a goal that has been personally important to you for many years. You used to think it would take a great deal of discipline to get there, but you find another route, leading yourself through your curiosities and attractions. This one shining change has transformative power that touches every other area of your life. Pisces and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 32, 1, 19 and 9.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You already know what you want. Now the focus is on figuring out what other people want. In many situations, it's implied. But when it's not, you discover just the thing and include it in your deal.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Self-doubt isn't always a bad thing. In fact, it can be quite useful and is often the mature stance to take. Some actions warrant doubt. A good question to apply: "Who else is this helping?"

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There's a type of trust given out of gullibility, inexperience and weakness. Then there's the trust that comes with clear, wide-open eyes. To know the risks and still invest in another person is trust born of strength.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). So many systems and group cultures downgrade the relevance of integrity. You reject the notion and seek others who are on a moral pursuit, the likes of which will never be outdated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Memory is imperfect. Perception even more so. This is why even though you know where you came from, parts of your personal history still seem mysterious to you. Today, a blank will get filled in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You set out to show someone how to accomplish a certain aim but what occurs instead is an unfolding of discovery that you embark on together, teacher and student learning just as much as the other.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). When you keep your feelings undercover, it's for a variety of reasons, like to avoid giving away your position or inspiring jealousy. When you show your feelings today, it's for one reason -- you can't help it!

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). What do competition, pressure, wealth, anger, power, passion and desperation all have in common? They are all states that teach a person what they are capable of.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). When the people you love are happy, so are you. Their quests and concerns are your own. The lines get blurry and in some spots are nonexistent. There's no shame in drawing them anew though. Sometimes, it's necessary.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Avoiding problems is the name of the game in dodgeball. But in life, it works better when you go on the offensive, meeting the problems with all you've got, essentially catching the balls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Mercy is a better approach than hard justice, not because it's the moral thing to do but because rehabilitation and improved action is more likely to follow. The soft song of better angels is easy for everyone to sing along to.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You make way for a positive day. At first, it takes no effort at all. Nothing to clear, just start doing you. Then people, media and circumstances challenge you. Employ the fine art of ignoring that which doesn't fit your positive premise.

from residents.

Judi Jensen, a 50 year resident of the Santa Monica Canyon, said her neighborhood has mounted successful grassroots efforts to reduce homelessness but Bonin's proposal has caused uproar.

"The name Bonin has become a dirty word in our neighborhood," she said. "We all think he has lost his mind, we know there are better ways to solve the homeless problem than putting them in the parking lot at the beach."

An online change.org petition opposing use of the Pacific Palisades parking lot had more than 6,000 signatures as of Tuesday morning.

The petition asserts that the proposed camp is not a solution to homelessness and would bring the problems of drugs, mental illness, crime and danger to the community.

"Supervisor Kuehl and Councilman Bonin — My family and I do not feel protected by our local representatives," said Jan Stanton in a written response to the proposal. "I grew up in Brentwood and have lived in the area for over 50 years. This is the first time I feel that it is unsafe for me and my family due to the homeless situation. My daughter lives in Venice and recently a homeless person climbed over her fence and stole her electric bike in broad daylight. My stepdaughter just sold her house in Venice because the homeless were living in her alley and she no longer felt safe. Every day I read about someone being chased or knifed or attacked — and this week murdered. Something must be done. Based on everything that I have seen and read, bringing the homeless to Will Rogers State Beach will only contribute to the problem."

However, Bonin said the scale of the homelessness crisis requires new approaches.

"We need all kinds of solutions — and we need them everywhere we can put them," Bonin wrote on his website after submitting the plan in a City Council motion also signed by Councilman Mark Ridley-Thomas.

PANDEMIC

"So this is a big day."

The announcement comes as states across the country have lifted health restrictions as more people get vaccinated. California had some of the nation's strictest pandemic rules, becoming the first to institute a statewide stay-at-home order last spring and adopting a complex, color-coded tier system in August that dictated which businesses could open and at what capacity depending on how widespread the virus was in a county.

Newsom said he expects 30 million doses to be administered by the end of April, putting them on track to inoculate many of the estimated 32 million people eligible for the vaccine.

The pandemic has taken its toll in California, with more than 58,000 people dead, businesses closed and students who have been out of classrooms for much of the year. Newsom, who has pushed for in-person instruction to resume, said he expects no barriers to getting students back into classrooms safely by June 15, including college students.

Under the plan, businesses can open with "common-sense risk reduction measures," including mandated masking and encouraging vaccinations. The state will continue contact tracing and testing.

Most capacity limits will be lifted, although large-scale indoor events, such as conventions, will be allowed only with testing or vaccination verification requirements, said Dr. Mark Ghaly, the secretary of health and human services.

Vaccine eligibility will expand to people in California 16 and older starting April 15, although some counties have already started vaccinating young adults.

The two-month advance notice should give people enough time to schedule their first dose, wait the recommended three to four weeks for a second shot and get through the two-week period for the vaccines to fully kick in, he said.

Taxin reported from Orange County. Associated Press writer Kathleen Ronayne contributed from Sacramento, California.

provided the opportunity for success and the current petition does not allow for that.

A recent letter to Santa Monica City Council from Malibu officials disputes this notion though. Instead, the letter states, each of the two independent school districts will remain one of the five top school districts in Los Angeles County as it relates to per pupil revenue.

Even with the correspondence between the two sides, there have been no signs the cities will come to terms any time; however, they both agree that community involvement is important.

rules, according to resettlement agencies.

Most of the refugees are from Africa and fleeing armed conflict or political persecution. Most spots are allocated for people fleeing religious persecution, Iraqis who have assisted U.S. forces there, and people from Central America's Northern Triangle, the resettlement agencies say.

Among those who had their tickets canceled was a pregnant woman from Congo who can no longer fly because she is now in her third trimester, said Mark Hetfield, president of HIAS, a Maryland-based Jewish nonprofit that is one of nine agencies that resettles refugees in the U.S.

"There is simply no rationale for not making this change at this time," he said, adding that it is creating "so much extra stress for refugees."

Associated Press writers Aamer Madhani and Matthew Lee in Washington contributed to this report.
