Local artists beautify deserted streets

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

With Santa Monica's nonessential businesses temporarily closed, the plywood covering storefronts across town is creating opportunities for local artists to enliven deserted streets.

Since the pandemic began, Ruben Rojas, co-founder of public art organization Beautify Earth, has painted colorful murals across town bearing reminders that people can continue caring for others even while physically distancing themselves.

Locals walking past the Chestnut Club will see the message "You can't quarantine love" on a multicolored background painted over the lounge's boarded-up window. Rustic Canyon is now embellished with murals telling passers by that "Love is standing six feet apart" and "Together we can."

ART: Beautify Earth is using public murals to promote health concerns related to coronavirus.

"Right now, we're being bombarded with negativity and fear," Rojas said. "Our eyes love color, and if I can get your attention I can take you out of this fear-based mentality and show you there's still love and beauty in this world."

Rojas said painting murals on temporarily closed businesses will deter the vandalism and break-ins that might be more likely to happen without eyes on the street. Art helps protect public spaces by indicating that people care about and respect them, he said.

"This situation could easily lead to an avalanche effect of neglect, and this is an easy, inexpensive and powerful way to protect our streets," Rojas said.

Beautify Earth co-founder and CEO Evan Meyer is preparing to scale up the effort as public health officials predict that the shutdown could last through May or June. The sooner public art is installed, Meyer said, the more effective it will be in preventing blight.

"It's urgent that we keep our streets alive," he said.

County public health official pleads with residents to skip grocery shopping

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Los Angeles County's public health director said Tuesday that residents should skip grocery shopping this week if they have enough food at home.

Barbara Ferrer, director of the L.A. County Department of Public Health, clarified a "plea" she gave the previous day for people to avoid grocery stores and pharmacies after announcing 550 new coronavirus cases throughout the county, three of which were in Santa Monica. There are now 6,910 cases in the county and 77 in Santa Monica.

"It wasn't an order, it was more of a "please do this for everyone's sake," Ferrer said. "All of us should avoid shopping as much as possible. We're at almost 7,000 cases here in L.A. County and that really means we have significant COVID-19 circulating in our neighborhoods."

Ferrer announced 22 deaths Tuesday, bringing the death toll in L.A. County to 169. Of the 22 people whose deaths were confirmed Tuesday, 16 were older than 65 and had underlying health conditions. The other six were between 41 and 65 and five of them had underlying conditions.

The mortality rate of coronavirus in the county has crept up to 2.4%, Ferrer said.

For the first time, Ferrer released preliminary information about the race of people who have died after L.A. City Council member Herb Wesson and other advocates urged

Samohi senior named Edison Scholar

BRENNON DIXSON

While their peers attempt to enjoy Spring Break as best they can while living through a pandemic, 30 high school seniors across Southern California recently received some good news in the form of $40,000.

For years, Edison International, the parent company of Southern California Edison, has awarded local students in its service area with scholarships that will allow them to further their academic pursuits in the fields of science, technology, engineering or math (STEM) at a four-year college or university. This year, Edison Scholars will receive a $40,000 scholarship that will be paid over four years by Edison International.

Half of the scholarship recipients this year are first-generation college students, according to Elizabeth Martinez — who is the sole winner

California governor sticking with mid-May as COVID-19 peak

ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

Gov. Gavin Newsom is sticking with a mid-May projection for when the COVID-19 outbreak will reach its peak in California, continuing efforts to stockpile hospital beds and protective gear for health care workers even as a new analysis suggests the virus' spread could be slowing sooner.

While confirmed cases and deaths continue rising in California, the rate of hospitalizations and intensive-care placements — a key indicator of resources the state needs — have been increasing more slowly. Both rose less than 5% over the weekend. It was enough that Newsom felt comfortable loaning 500 ventilators to other states.

Newsom on Monday gave his update on the virus efforts at the Sleep Train Arena in Sacramento as workers prepared 400 hospital beds. It's part of a plan to add an extra 66,000 hospital beds and 10,000 ventilators.

A new analysis from the University of Washington, which state officials are using to inform their work, projects California will see an earlier and lower peak for deaths and needed hospital resources. The statistical model that is updated daily for all 50 states was developed to help hospitals and health systems prepare for the surge and is a tool for many government officials.

Researchers at the school say California will have an excess of hospital beds, intensive care space and ventilators when need for those resources peak on April 14. The university forecasts the highest daily total of deaths on April 17 and 1,783 overall, down from more than 5,000 last week.

Newsom said the state's forecast shows the "stay-at-home" restrictions are proving to be successful.

"This allows us to do the kinds of things that frankly some other parts of this country weren't able to do because they were overwhelmed," the governor said. "Just in ICU and hospitalizations, two most critical numbers from our perspective, that growth has been steady. And if you extend that out, we are looking at a path into May before we peak."

The University of Washington says the more optimistic picture for California and the country is because of the steps taken to keep people from spreading the disease.

"The trajectory of the pandemic will change — and dramatically for the worse — if people ease up on social distancing or relax with other precautions," said Dr. Christopher Murray, the director of the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation at the University of Washington's School of Medicine.

Two weeks ago, Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti said his city was just six to 12 days away from the kind of crushing surge afflicting New York City. He told The Associated Press on Monday he expects to see a peak in the number of fatalities in two to five weeks.

He said data shows the number of cases in Los Angeles County, the nation's most populous with about 10 million residents, continues to increase but at a slower rate. Two weeks ago, the number was climbing at an average of 27% a day, while last week it dipped to 18%.

"I'm encouraged that early action we took seems to be showing some good signs of slowing this rate of increase," he said.

But "projections are pretty fragile," he warned. "You can change an input by just a little bit, and suddenly see numbers soar or greatly reduced."

Garcetti said with testing ramping up across the county, as of Monday anyone can apply to be screened for the virus, not just those showing symptoms or considered high risk.

Los Angeles County has about one-third of California's more than 16,000 virus cases. The state has recorded at least 380 deaths, according to data collected by Johns Hopkins University.

The coronavirus is spread by coughs and sneezes and for most people it causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough, that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness, including pneumonia and death.

Local governments are taking increasingly strident measures to keep people home and better protect others when they go out. Last weekend, Riverside County ordered all its 2.4 million residents to wear face coverings. Newsom said it's a good idea but has refrained from ordering it.

He said officials reported more adherence to stay-at-home orders over the weekend, helped in part by rainy, cooler weather. As summer approaches, some have speculated the hot, dry climate will slow the spread of the virus. But Newsom said Monday it's too early to say that will happen.

"The experts and their opinions will make the determination about schools, make the determination about when people will go back to work, and sporting events like basketball and football season and the like," Newsom said. "But again, it's too early to speculate on any of that until data starts to bear the kind of clarity that is needed to make those determinations."

Hackers' new target during pandemic: video conference calls

REGINA GARCIA CANO AND AARON MORRISON
Associated Press

Ceri Weber had just begun to defend her dissertation when the chaos began: Echoes and voices interrupted her. Someone parroted her words. Then Britney Spears music came on, and someone told Weber to shut up. Someone threatened to rape her.

Hackers had targeted the meeting on the video conference platform Zoom while Weber was completing the final step of her doctoral degree at Duke University. The harassment lasted 10 minutes — the result of an increasingly common form of cyber attack known as "Zoom bombing."

As tens of millions of people turn to video conferencing to stay connected during the coronavirus pandemic, many have reported uninvited guests who make threats, interject racist, anti-gay or anti-Semitic messages, or show pornographic images. The attacks have drawn the attention of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies.

"It seemed like someone was just being silly," but then the intrusions "started to get more serious and threatening," Weber recalled. "I was really in the zone and kept presenting." She said she was more concerned about others in the chat who could have been scared. She was interrupted despite having selected "mute all" in the settings for the meeting she conducted from her home in Durham, North Carolina.

A Massachusetts high school reported that someone interrupted a virtual class on Zoom, yelled profanity and revealed the teacher's home address. Another school in that state reported a person who accessed a meeting and showed swastika tattoos, according to the FBI.

The agency's field office in Boston recommended that users of video-teleconference platforms prioritize their security by ensuring that hosts have sole control over screen-sharing features and meeting invitations.

In New York, Attorney General Letitia James sent a letter to Zoom with questions about how users' privacy and security are being protected. In a separate later, Sen. Richard Blumenthal of Connecticut sought information about how the company handles users' personal data and guards against security threats and abuse.

Zoom has referred to trolls as "party crashers," which some critics have taken as a sign the company is downplaying the attacks.

In a statement issued last week, the company told The Associated Press it takes the security of meetings seriously and encourages users to report any incidents directly to Zoom. The company suggested that people hosting large, public meetings confirm that they are the only ones who can share their screen and use features like mute controls.

"For those hosting private meetings, password protections are on by default, and we recommend that users keep those protections on to prevent uninvited users from joining," the company said. Zoom recently updated the default screen-sharing settings for education users so that teachers are by default the only ones who can share content.

Despite the update, Nevada's Clark County School District, which includes all public schools in Las Vegas, and the New York City Department of Education, which is responsible for the largest school district in the U.S., have told teachers to stop using Zoom.

Zoom-bombing was always a threat given how the video conferencing app was configured — geared more toward user-friendliness than privacy, said Justin Brookman, director of privacy and technology policy at Consumer Reports.

When shelter-at-home mandates suddenly converted Zoom into a lifeline for tens of millions of families, it became a juicy target for mischief, he said.

For years, "the usability issues outweighed the potential security issues because society was less reliant on them. Obviously, that has changed dramatically over the last month," Brookman added.

Some Zoom-bombers have been able to randomly guess meeting IDs and crash conferences not configured to keep out interlopers, he said.

In other cases, inexperienced users have exposed meeting IDs online, including U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson, who tweeted a screenshot of a Zoom Cabinet meeting that showed the ID and everyone's screen name.

Brookman said Zoom can do more to boost privacy protections for a massive user base that now ranges from elementary school children to senior citizens discussing their wills with attorneys.

"A lot of people, including us, are critical of how they enable hosts to surveil users to make sure they are paying attention to the screen, or reading DMs or recording the call when it's not entirely clear," Brookman said.

A mother in Georgia told a local TV station that her son was "embarrassed and a little hysterical" after someone hacked into his online class and showed pornography to the children and teacher.

The Rev. Jason Wells was holding a publicly advertised forum recently on Zoom when a troll entered and used the chat box to post a racial slur so many times that it made the feature unusable for other participants.

"I would not say this was a random vandal hoping to interrupt somebody," said Wells, who is executive director of the New Hampshire Council of Churches in Concord and co-chair of a state chapter of the Poor People's Campaign, part of a movement pioneered by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. The intruder was eventually removed and blocked.

Bonin, Ryu Propose Rent and Mortgage Relief package

In an expansive series of legislative efforts seeking relief for renters, homeowners, and commercial property owners during the COVID-19 pandemic, City Councilmembers Mike Bonin and David Ryu today co-introduced five pieces of legislation calling for an eviction moratorium, rent freeze in Los Angeles, as well as for state and federal action on rent and mortgage forgiveness.

"People should not be punished for doing their part and staying home in the best interest of public health. We need to eliminate confusion and make very clear - no one in Los Angeles can be kicked out of their home while this crisis continues," said Bonin. "You can't stay home if you don't have a home. We are already seeing examples of some landlords abusing existing protections and these measures will prevent abuse and help keep people in their homes."

"We are in an economic crisis unlike anything we've ever seen, and our government is not meeting the severity of this moment with the strength required," Councilmember Ryu said. "People have been forced out of work, they're scared and they're running out of money. If we want to avoid widespread default, an explosion of homelessness, and millions of people trapped under mountains of debt, we need rent and mortgage forgiveness now."

Legislation proposed by the Councilmembers at Tuesday's meeting include:

Eviction Moratorium - Landlords have reportedly begun serving three-day notices to tenants and can continue to despite a recent ruling by the California Judicial Court (CJC). While the eviction process was paused by the CJC, it continues to be initiated, and tenants are receiving threatening letters and strong-arm offers for bad deals or new lease terms. A clear eviction moratorium would protect tenants by stopping the eviction process from starting while the crisis lasts. Read the motion here.

Responsible Banking Ordinance - Bonin and Ryu proposed an effort to amend the City's Responsible Banking Ordinance to encourage banks that do business with the City to disclose their plans to provide mortgage and rent relief, and prioritize those banks which help Los Angeles renters and working families when deciding on future contracts. Read the motion here.

Classifying Rent Debt as Consumer Debt - In an effort aimed at helping renters reasonably repay any debt they accrue during the crisis, Bonin and Ryu are recommending that the City pursue converting unpaid rent incurred during the COVID-19 emergency into consumer debt, which can be collected as any other debt, but not through the unlawful detainer process. This will encourage landlords to work with tenants to repay the debt in a reasonable time frame without resorting to unlawful detainer orders that cause more Angelenos to lose their homes. The City of Oakland has passed such an ordinance, and it could help protect renters in Los Angeles. Read the motion here.

Rent Freeze - In a second attempt at a measure proposed by Councilmember Ryu at the last City Council meeting, Bonin and Ryu are proposing that the city not allow rent increases on any units during the crisis, limiting the amount of debt renters could accrue during the crisis. Read the motion here.

Rent and Mortgage Forgiveness - A resolution co-authored by the Councilmembers calls on the state and federal governments to create state and federal programs to forgive rent and mortgage debts created during the crisis. Read the resolution here.

Councilmembers Bonin and Ryu have previously partnered on renter protection efforts, such as Ellis Act reform, and last week, they joined a national effort with leaders from nine U.S. cities calling for nationwide rent and mortgage relief.

EZ Texting Appoints Josh Siegel as Chief Product Officer

EZ Texting, the leader in SMS marketing software for business, today announces the appointment of Josh Siegel as Chief Product Officer. With significant SaaS experience, Josh enables EZ Texting to grow its offerings and better serve unmet customer needs.

"Josh fills a vital role on our leadership team, bringing a wealth of experience across the SMB space and an expansive, proven toolkit for addressing customer needs," said Norman Happ, CEO of EZ Texting. "His customer focus and experience in companies of all sizes are why we felt Josh was such a great fit with EZ Texting. Josh has proven multiple times to have the ability to establish a compelling product vision and ensure the necessary operating rigor to deliver outstanding results. EZ Texting customers and partners will truly benefit from his capabilities and help us continue to accelerate our growth."

Siegel joins EZ Texting from Gannett, parent company of the USA Today Network, where he was the GM and SVP of Subscription and Data Products Group. There, he built and managed high-performing teams and implemented new roadmap management processes. Prior to Gannett, Siegel spent nearly five years transforming the SaaS product portfolio at ReachLocal, a leading provider of digital marketing solutions for SMBs.

"EZ Texting has the ability to pursue product innovation while furthering its position as a category leader for mobile communication tools for SMBs," said Siegel. I'm excited about helping the team enable EZ Texting customers with powerful software that helps them communicate with their clients and constituents in the most effective way possible."

Siegel's appointment is the latest part of EZ Texting's strategic plan, following the appointments of Craig Klemp as VP of Partnerships and Mark Little as Chief Customer Officer towards the end of 2019. For more information on EZ Texting, please visit eztexting.com.

A Call to Stay Home

Both Governor Newsom and County public health officials have emphasized: This is the week to stay home! We know that the next few weeks are critical to slow the spread of the virus. We are adding our plea to our entire community: Stay home and limit all out-of-home trips!

Our top health official Dr. Barbara Ferrer shared this week:

"As we expect to see a significant increase in cases over the next few weeks, we are asking that everyone avoid leaving their homes for anything except the most urgent matters. And when you do leave, please make sure to cover your mouth and nose with a cloth face covering if you will be around others, maintain a distance of at least 6 feet from everyone else, and frequently wash your hands."

We all hold the power to fight against this invisible and deadly virus by staying home. While staying indoors runs counter to our normal Santa Monica lifestyle, our ability to come together and rally around such an important call to action, embodies the Santa Monica spirit.

Staying at home will save lives and preserve the health care system we all rely on.

After all this is over, we will have the luxury of debating exactly what should have been done by whom and when. But there can be no debate about this now: You have the individual power to make a difference by heeding this urgent call!

According to the latest information from the LA County Department of Health Services, there are 1,406 hospital beds available countywide with 258 intensive care unit beds able to receive a patient. COVID-19 positive tests countywide now number 6,910 and approximately 1,000 new cases are reported every two days. There are 169 tragic deaths. We must closely monitor the capacity of our healthcare system in the context of COVID-19 cases because it demonstrates why public health officials have taken this next step in illness mitigation.

It is with this in mind that your Council and City management ask that you stay safe and stay home for the next two weeks.

Please consider modifying outdoor exercise routines, leaning on delivery systems — we have hundreds of restaurants in Santa Monica that offer delivery — and continuing to phone vulnerable friends and neighbors whom you can support from afar.

Every choice you make to stay home helps protect the 17% of our residents who are over age 65, as well as neighbors with fragile health or who are immuno-compromised.

Your City is here for you and will continue to take bold action to protect your health and safety. While you remain indoors, the Santa Monica Police and Fire Departments will remain at full capacity. Public Works will collect your trash and recyclables, and deliver high quality water. Our Emergency Operations Center is responding to daily challenges and planning for what's to come. Our COVID hotline at 310-458-8400 remains open daily from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. to answer your questions and connect you to resources.

COVID-19 is taking a profound toll on all of us. Thousands of families and businesses in our community and across the nation are devastated by forces no one has the ability to control. And we know that the limitations on human connection can make daily life difficult. Please take care. Be kind to yourself and those around you. Continue to reach out to those you love through weekly or daily video chats. If you need support, the LA County Department of Mental Health's 24/7 call line is available at 1-800-854-7771. And sometimes giving to others delivers back dividends. Virtual volunteerism opportunities are available at santamonica.gov/coronavirus.

Make sure you get the latest local information by signing up at santamonica.gov/newsletter for daily updates direct to your inbox. Get emergency alerts by texting SMCOVID to 888-777. Check santamonica.gov/coronavirus regularly.

Throughout this emergency we've asked you to stay calm, stay informed, and stay healthy. Please also stay home.

Be Kind, But Vigilant

MY WIFE SAID I SHOULD BE NICE

But why should I start listening to her now?

Ha! I wouldn't have had half the fun in my life if I hadn't listened to her. In fact I do listen to her at least twice a week because, like Mark Twain (sadly, it's the only thing we have in common, I can't even grow a great thick 'stash like his, no lip for it), I let my wife edit my precious, very personal copy. So now that you know that, anything you don't like in any of my columns, any mistakes — her fault.

I try not to bring my family into my columns too much — what could go wrong, right? — but since I have, and you're reading this on April 8th...

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, DIAN!!!

I'm really glad you were born, and that I found you. In a bar. In North Hollywood. (The Palomino.) On stage singing like the star you are.

And glad that's out of the way. Now I don't have to buy her that Tesla she's been whining about.

I AM NICE

She knows that, and will tell you so. When pressed.

No, really sweetie, she said, I know how incredibly loving and kind and thoughtful you are, that's why I married you... well, there's the money too, but sometimes, in your columns, and in your social media posts, you come across as... well, a little snarky.

Of course, I thought. Snarky is my badge of honor. But she was saying it like, maybe, it wasn't always a good thing. Hmmm.

I think she was mostly reacting to a note I got from City Councilmember Ted Winterer, who had some... disagreements with my previous column. I acknowledged him for writing to me — I believe in communication and accountability, for politicians and journalists — and for the very reasonable tone of his disagreements.

We did agree on one thing. "Maybe in these troubled times it would be preferable to offer some support for all the hard work being done at City Hall to keep us safe?" Absolutely, Ted.

"These are unique times, and you didn't sign up for this," I pointed out, "and like our medical and other heroes you guys are stepping up to a job that is absolutely needed but certainly not wanted by you. So — thank you." Big time.

IT'S A TRICKY LINE I ALWAYS WALK

As a columnist and political observer. Yes, I see the good that's done by our City Council. Maybe, conceivably, the Trump administration has even done some little something somewhere that was good, and/or right. By accident, probably. (— nah.)

Being a negative person is too much work, and stress. I'm an optimist and idealist, but also a realist. I believe it is good to have a sense of righteous anger for things that are unfair, and when I see that, and write about it, yeah, I might sound angry. Some people don't hear you until you take a tone of urgency. I quickly learned in Army boot camp that I wouldn't be understood unless every other word began with an F. (Fortunately, the Daily Press doesn't require that.)

I feel anyone fortunate to have a platform has an obligation to speak for those who don't have a voice. To try to persuade, to make things better. That pursuit doesn't pay much. Hate speech does. Rush Limbaugh made almost $90M last year. And that's after he lost advertisers.

AM I ANGRY?

Part of me is. I'm angry about race, gender and income inequality. I'm angry about City Councils and their abettors who want to strip the heart and soul of this unique beach town for their vision of a high rise Miami Beach-dense future. I'm angry about the way veterans and the military, and immigrants, the history and lifeblood of this nation, are being treated. I'm angry about the way this City Council has spent our tax dollars like Monopoly money, bankrupting our future for their shiny resumes and hold on power. I'm angry that any kid in America goes hungry, and millions do, one in six, or that anyone has to worry about getting sick because it will break them. I'm angry that just barely enough misinformed fools voted for a failed, corrupt businessman so clearly unqualified and inept that now hundreds of thousands of Americans will die because our preparation and response to this pandemic was so terribly mishandled.

I hope everyone becomes angry about things like this, or at least fed up enough to change them, with their vote.

Some say now is not the time. Be positive, we all must pull together — true. I will. But it is still the time, maybe the most important time, to keep an eye on things. If there were no one trying to take advantage of this situation for their own political or personal gain, at the expense, even the health and very lives, of others, I would be all sweetness and light, all the time. But until we're there, there is a need for a loving snark in our warm, friendly waters.

California's winter-like spring brings more snow and rain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

More snow and rain fell on parts of California on Tuesday as spring delivered a taste of the kind of weather that winter forgot.

The late-season cold weather system arrived in California during the weekend and continued to spin moisture into state as it moved southward, leaving peaks coated in white and setting rainfall records despite lengthy breaks between bouts of precipitation.

Winter weather advisories were expected to be replaced with storm warnings Tuesday afternoon in the southern Sierra Nevada, the mountains of Kern County and in ranges stretching across Southern California. Chain controls were in effect for some mountain highways.

Resort webcams showed slopes buried in new snow, but all were off limits to boarders and skiers due to coronavirus closures.

Flash flood watches were posted for a swath of Southern California extending from Orange and San Diego counties eastward and northward across the deserts to the Arizona and Nevada state lines.

Downtown Los Angeles received 1.1 inches of rain Monday, toppling the April 6 record of 0.85 inch set in 1958. Lytle Creek, in the San Gabriel Mountains 45 miles east of Los Angeles, neared 6 inches of rain since Sunday.

owners and businesses to donate walls or boarded-up doors and windows via marketplace.beautifyearth.com. Covering artists' labor and materials costs less than $2,000 for smaller murals and a few thousand dollars for larger pieces, he said.

Meyer said he also plans to collaborate with neighborhood groups, business organizations and the city of Santa Monica, and may launch a crowdfunding campaign.

"Like so many others, artists in our community are in a hard place right now and they need to get paid," he said.

As new murals proliferate throughout Santa Monica, Rojas said people can safely view them by making them part of their walking, jogging or biking routes, or taking a drive-by tour.

"As long as you're keeping your distance from other people and wiping down your bike, you'll be safe, get some vitamin D and exercise, and enjoy our amazing city," he said.

Medicare for all

EDITOR:

Well, so much the American way of tying our health care to our work, as millions are losing their jobs as we speak. We'll soon lose our private medical care coverage.

People are facing the dismal prospect of having no medical care except to pay the big bucks for the American for profit medical complex service.

"USA, USA" is the chant, but this system is by far, the most expensive and most inefficient health care system in the world. For, we're obviously not prepared for this coronavirus crisis with not enough tests, not enough masks, ventilators, hospitals, and beds.

Enter Medicare for all.

Americans may not see the cure for the virus for a long time, but Medicare for all is the health care remedy we need now.

And only with Medicare for all will all of us, and the poor, the homeless, the uninsured, the under insured, and the undocumented—who may be afraid to seek help due to deportation threat, can we get the care that will help all of our health and safety.

Work for Medicare for all now before forgetful Americans again return to accept to same old money draining American private for profit medical complex.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 08)

Good things will happen. This is not what makes a year good, though. Fortunate events are like bricks. As the architect, you'll build your gifts into a sound and pleasing life structure. It will take creativity and some finagling with the people around you to get the space, resources and leeway you need to boldly be yourself. Scorpio and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 2, 20, 18 and 40.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). When you have clear standards to aspire to, you don't need a bunch of rules mucking up the vision. You expect yourself to deliver in a manner that is fair, timely and excellent, and this you'll do.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). If your efforts spark interest, jump in. If your efforts fall flat, pull back and become unavailable to the disinterested party. Try a different audience. The right people love you back immediately.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). In some arenas, the rules are upheld as sacred. In other arenas, breaking the rules is not only valued; it's glamorized. As long as you don't get the arenas mixed up, you'll do mighty fine in both.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Inspiration comes while you're working. So don't wait to be inspired. Just dive in, and by the halfway mark, the unseen forces will have joined in to carry this project along.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Expectations will not serve you well now, so you may as well trade them in for something more useful like close observation or appreciation. Set out to learn all you can and the day will go very well.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Bitterness is a prison. You'll let go of the past because you don't want to stay trapped. You have better things to fill your mind with than the ruminations of what's already happened.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). They say self-love is the best love, but the particulars of being the superstar of your life can be hard to wrap your head around. Regardless, you won't be sorry you put the time and money into supporting yourself now.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). If you feel like you want to impress someone, let that alert you. If they speak your language and value the same things you do, they'd already get you, and you wouldn't feel you have to strive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It's usually easy for you to be reliable, though it hasn't always been so. You're grateful for situations like the one today in which you're genuinely interested and commitments are easy to keep.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You'll recognize that you're really satisfied with a certain aspect of your life. You built this. Now you'll take pleasure in sharing your fulfillment with another person.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Though much of your life is organized, there are also those higgledy-piggledy areas — a drawer, a trunk, maybe a swath of emotional history... You'll be willing to dig in and sort some of that out today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). What was terrible in the moment gave you great strength later on. In a weird way, you're glad for it. You wouldn't have chosen it, but you're remarkable because of it.

from Santa Monica.

As a member of Samohi's mathletes (as well as its softball team and Spanish Honor Society), Martinez said she's had an interest in mathematics so next year she intends to attend Washington University in St. Louis as a student in the McKelvey School of Engineering majoring in computer science or applied math.

"I feel that their school has a lot of resources and it's really focused on the student body and helping them accomplish a lot of things," Martinez said.

According to a video submitted by Martinez during the application process, the Samohi senior aspires to live in a society where all children can learn freely and without the burden of financial responsibilities. Martinez added Monday she hopes to one day build a program to give low-income children hands-on opportunities to learn STEM-related concepts outside of the classroom.

"I'm really thankful for Edison International helping me out with this scholarship and allowing me to be a part of the program," Martinez said. "I think it's a really great program for not only me, but the other kids who are involved as well."

Each of the Edison Scholars were supposed to be surprised at school but Edison officials had to adapt due to social distancing orders.

"So it was pretty crazy when I found out," Martinez said. "They sent me an email basically saying, 'Can you double-check some information on this link?' So, I clicked on the link and a video popped up that said I'd won the scholarship. I remember I went to my mom yelling 'Look!' And then I called a lot of my family members."

"We are very proud of these students and their outstanding academic achievements," said Pedro Pizarro, president and CEO of Edison International. "The scholarships provide financial support to these deserving scholars and their families so they can focus on their studies. We are counting on them to help us innovate and turn big ideas into real-world solutions and we know they have a bright future ahead."

Applications for the 2021 Edison Scholars scholarships will be available in October 2020, and prospective applicants are encouraged to visit edisonscholars.com for more information.

the county to quantify racial disparities in testing, health outcomes and deaths. Several cities and states across the country have noted that black people are being infected with and dying from coronavirus at disproportionate rates.

Of the 93 deaths for which the county has demographic information, 28% are Latino, 27% are white, 19% are Asian, 17% are African American and 9% were reported as some other race, Ferrer said. African Americans have a slightly higher rate of death than other races, she said.

Ferrer said the county will report more demographic information on deaths, infections and testing to better understand racial and socioeconomic disparities at play in the outbreak.

She also acknowledged that wealthy communities have had much better access to testing than poor communities, promising that the county would produce a report on access to testing next week. More than 35,000 county residents had been tested as of Tuesday.

On Monday, L.A. Mayor Eric Garcetti announced that any L.A. County resident with coronavirus symptoms can be tested at 13 sites across the county via coronavirus.lacity.org. Previously, only people older than 65 or with chronic health conditions could be tested.

Christina Ghaly, director of the L.A. County Department of Health Services, said Tuesday that the county has 1,418 open hospital beds, including 258 ICU beds. The bed counts do not include the U.S. Navy hospital ship Mercy, which has 1,000 beds for non-coronavirus patients, or the L.A. Surge Hospital, which will add more than 250 beds for COVID-19 patients when it opens later this month.

There are 1,010 available ventilators, another 150 in a county stockpile and 170 being refurbished, Ghaly said.

Ferrer said 869 people are currently hospitalized, including 132 individuals in the ICU. Forty-three percent of hospitalized cases are older than 65.

The county is investigating cases at 121 institutional settings. Thirty-seven of the 169 people who have died after contracting coronavirus were residents of nursing homes and assisted living facilities, Ferrer said.

Ferrer said there are 30 confirmed coronavirus cases in jails, 10 cases in a state prison within the county and two cases at a juvenile detention facility.

Two staffers and one resident of homeless shelters have tested positive, she said.

In Santa Monica, The Manor, The Rehabilitation Center of Santa Monica and Beachwood Post-Acute and Rehab have at least one confirmed coronavirus case and are under investigation.

To slow the spread of coronavirus locally, Santa Monica public schools are closed indefinitely and county beaches, beach bike paths and public trails will close through at least April 19. The city's public buildings, nonessential businesses, playgrounds, Santa Monica Pier and beach parking lots are closed through the end of April.

The city of Santa Monica fenced off Palisades Park after people continued to walk and exercise in the park last weekend. Other city parks are still open, and Santa Monica Farmers Markets remain open with enhanced physical distancing controls.

Baptist Church, a user who had seen the church service advertised entered the video conferencing session and shouted homophobic and racist slurs. Everett said she had tweeted the link to the sermon because she wanted "the doors of the church to be open to every weary soul who is looking for a word of comfort."

"This was, for all intents and purposes, a house of worship that was violated," she said. "Zoom and every other business bears the primary responsibility for users' safety."

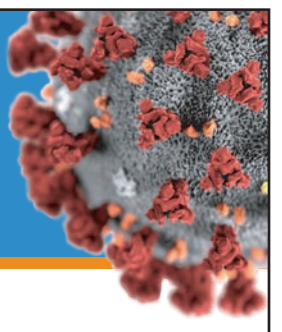

In Oakland, California, Malachi Garza reported an attack on a Zoom conference she hosted for roughly 200 participants, including formerly incarcerated people who have experience with solitary confinement and are struggling with the pandemic's stay-home orders.

The conference organized by the philanthropic Solidare Network was interrupted by racist, anti-transgender language, and pornographic images were flashed on a shared screen.

Zoom needs to "tell the truth and call this what it really is," Garza said. "It's racial terror, not party crashers."

Morrison reported from New York. Associated Press Technology Writer Frank Bajak in Boston also contributed to this report.
