With Passover and Easter falling right in the middle of the coronavirus pandemic, religious communities are modifying traditions that date back thousands of years.

Many Jewish families are preparing to hold Passover seders Wednesday night via video chat, each participant using their own seder plate and matzah but all reading from the same haggadah, which tells the story of the Exodus from Egypt. Some Santa Monica synagogues such as Kehillat Ma'arav and Beth Shir Shalom are hosting

Local coronavirus cases rise to 81 as deaths in L.A. County approach 200

Los Angeles County officials announced 29 deaths Wednesday, setting a record for the most number of deaths reported in the county in a single day.

The death toll now stands at 198 and the mortality rate has risen again to 2.6%, said Barbara Ferrer, director of the L.A. County Department of Public Health. Ferrer also confirmed 620 new cases Wednesday, bringing the total number of cases in L.A. County to 7,530. More than 36,000 people have been tested to date and public testing sites around the county are now available to anyone with coronavirus symptoms.

"We have weeks to go before we lift any of our health officer orders," Ferrer said. "Please know that what we're doing right now is saving lives."

In Santa Monica, the number of cases rose by four Wednesday. Over the last week, cases have

City of Santa Monica broadens moratorium on residential and commercial evictions

City Hall issued an order Wednesday strengthening a temporary moratorium on evictions enacted last month in response to the economic impacts of the coronavirus pandemic.

The original order City Manager Rick Cole signed March 14 protects renters from eviction if they prove with documentation that they cannot pay rent because they have been financially impacted by COVID-19. The order requires that tenants repay all deferred rent six months after the crisis is over. The moratorium was later broadened to protect businesses and prohibit Ellis Act evictions.

The revised supplemental order Cole signed Wednesday extends

Santa Monica College to Hold Virtual Graduation on June 16

Santa Monica College (SMC) will hold a virtual graduation ceremony on June 16, 2020 and its summer session, which begins June 22, will remain remote. Classes and extensive student support services will be provided in remotely accessible environments, as the college seeks to limit the spread of COVID-19 and safeguard the health and wellbeing of the SMC community. The college–all facilities, five satellite campuses, walkways, and open spaces included–remains closed to the general public, until further notice.

Santa Monica College has rolled out a comprehensive student support network to ensure that students remain on track to achieve their academic and career goals. Nearly 200 students and 191 faculty and staff have been loaned Chromebook laptop computers to date, so that they can access the needed technologies required from home. The college's continuing free technology lending program–along with the most extensive one-on-one student support network in California including more than 170 career and academic counselors, plus psychologists–is part of a safety net developed to ensure that those who enroll in the 800-plus classes this summer are able to meet their personal goals.

SMC's online schedule of classes accessible at smc.edu/classes will be updated by Monday, April 20, to reflect the most current information on the hundreds of classes that will be available this summer. For more details on how to enroll, and assistance with the process, go to smc.edu/enroll. SMC Emeritus and noncredit classes will also be delivered remotely.

"Santa Monica College will keep delivering the high-quality education it is known for, in spite of the circumstances," SMC Superintendent/President Dr. Kathryn E. Jeffery wrote in a memo to the college community on Tuesday, April 7. She also noted that SMC's counselors are "one click away" for students. A redesigned counseling webpage gives both new and returning students the ability to find the counselor they need. "Students will be able to live-chat and/or schedule video and phone appointments with counselors who are eager to engage with them, impart information, and provide academic, career and mental health support," Dr. Jeffery wrote.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Dr. Jennifer Merlic noted that SMC's distinguished faculty members, who represent the best in their respective fields, have demonstrated great flexibility and innovation to adopt instructional methods that best enable students to master course content in the remote environment. "While these circumstances are not ideal, I have absolute confidence that SMC faculty possess both the empathy and the intellectual and creative ability to continue to guide and teach students with the highest standards of educational excellence!"

"As Santa Monica College continues to evaluate the public health crisis caused by COVID-19, it has become apparent that it will be impossible to maintain the safety and health of our graduates and guests in a traditional setting, where thousands gather in Corsair Field," SMC Superintendent/President Dr. Kathryn E. Jeffery wrote in the April 7 memo, "therefore we will have a virtual graduation ceremony."

With input and feedback from student leaders, Santa Monica College is planning a virtual ceremony that "will help make the day as meaningful and special as possible," Dr. Jeffery wrote. More details on the June 16 virtual celebration are forthcoming.

SMC is inviting the graduates of the Class of 2020 who wish to participate in a traditional ceremony to do so in 2021's graduation ceremony. The college will still produce a graduation program booklet and mail diplomas to graduates' homes.

"Without a doubt, graduation day is the highlight of the year for us, but, most of all, for the students who have given so much to achieve their dreams," Dr. Jeffery wrote. "That walk across the stage, that diploma often represents not just the hard work and sacrifice of the graduates, but also of their family members and loved ones. The decision was not an easy one to make–we did so because the wellbeing of SMC graduates, employees, and guests is our highest priority."

In addition to continuing to provide high-quality, accessible education and support services in a remote environment, Santa Monica College has also launched a food security program in the form of a drive-thru pop-up pantry to meet the basic needs of students who are unable to access the college's on-campus food security programs during this time.

Even as virus deaths mount, governments eye exit strategies

BY MARINA VILLENUEVE AND LORI HINNANT
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Even as coronavirus deaths mount across Europe, New York and other hot spots, the U.S. and other governments are slowly beginning to envision an exit strategy and contemplating a staggered and carefully calibrated relaxation of the restrictions designed to curb the scourge.

"To end the confinement, we're not going to go from black to white; we're going to go from black to gray," top French epidemiologist Jean-François Delfraissy said in a radio interview.

At the same time, politicians and health officials emphatically warn that while deaths, hospitalizations and new infections may be leveling off in places like Italy and Spain, and even New York has seen positive signs amid the gloom, the crisis is far from over, and a catastrophic second wave could hit if countries let their guard down too soon.

"We are flattening the curve because we are rigorous about social distancing," New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said. "But it's not a time to be complacent. It's not a time to do anything different than we've been doing."

In a sharp reminder of the danger, New York state on Wednesday recorded its highest one-day increase in deaths, 779, for an overall death toll of more than 6,000.

"The bad news is actually terrible," Cuomo lamented. Still, the governor said that hospitalizations are decreasing and that many of those who have died fell ill in the outbreak's early stages.

In Britain, meanwhile, Prime Minister Boris Johnson spent a second night in intensive care but was improving and sitting up in bed, authorities said.

In China, the lockdown against Wuhan, the industrial city of 11 million where the global pandemic began, was lifted after 76 days, allowing people to come and go. The reopening was seen as a positive sign but also reflected the communist state's surveillance tools and powers of coercion.

Wuhan residents will have to use a smartphone app showing that they are healthy and have not been in recent contact with anyone confirmed to have the virus. Even then, schools remain closed, people are still checked for fever when they enter buildings, and masks are strongly encouraged.

In the U.S., with about 13,000 deaths and 400,000 infections, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention was considering changing self-isolation guidelines to make it easier for those exposed to someone with the virus to return to work if they have no symptoms.

Under the proposed guidance, aimed at workers in critical fields, such people would be allowed back on the job if they take their temperature twice a day and wear a mask, said a person who was familiar with the draft but was not authorized to discuss it and spoke on condition of anonymity.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, the nation's top infectious-diseases expert, said that the Trump administration has been working on plans to eventually reopen the country and restart the economy amid "glimmers of hope" that social distancing is working to stop the virus's spread.

"That doesn't mean we're going to do it right now," he said on Fox News. "But it means we need to be prepared to ease into that. And there's a lot of activity going on."

The U.S. is seeing burgeoning hot spots in such places as Washington, D.C., Chicago, Detroit, Colorado and Pennsylvania. The New York metropolitan area, which includes northern New Jersey, Long Island and lower Connecticut, accounts for about half of all virus deaths in the U.S.

In Europe, Italian Premier Giuseppe Conte is expected to announce in the coming days how long the country's lockdown will remain in place amid expectations that some restrictions could be eased. Discussions are focused first on opening more of the country's industries.

Proposals being floated in Italy include the issuing of immunity certificates, which would require antibody blood tests, and allowing younger workers to return first, as they show less vulnerability to the virus.

Italy, the hardest-hit country, recorded its biggest one-day jump yet in people counted as recovered and had its smallest one-day increase in deaths in more than a month. Nearly 18,000 have died there.

In Spain, which has tallied more than 14,000 dead, Budget Minister María Jesús Montero said that Spaniards will progressively recover their "normal life" from April 26 onwards but warned that the "de-escalation" of the lockdown will be "very orderly to avoid a return to the contagion."

The government has been tight-lipped so far about what measures could be in place once the confinement is relaxed, stressing that they will be dictated by experts

French authorities have likewise begun to speak openly of planning the end of the confinement period currently set to expire April 15, without giving specifics. The virus has claimed more than 10,000 lives in France.

France's Delfraissy, who leads the scientific council advising the president, said three things are necessary for people to start leaving home regularly: intensive care beds need to be freed up, the spread of the virus must slow, and there have to be multiple tests to see if people are or have been infected and to trace them. He said the French will also need to adopt the habit of wearing masks outside.

British government officials, beset with a rising death toll of more than 7,000, said there is little chance the nationwide lockdown will be eased when its current period ends next week.

The European Union expressed privacy concerns about virus-tracking mobile apps as individual governments develop digital tools for coming out of the crisis. The apps use smartphone location data to monitor the movements of virus carriers under quarantine

Firefighters Extinguish Fire at the Gussie Moran Building

On Tuesday, April 7, at 7:04 p.m., Santa Monica Fire companies responded to a reported Structure Fire at historical Gussie Moran Building, built in 1887, located at 1323 Ocean Avenue.

The first arriving Engine company reported a 3-story building to the rear with an exterior fire that was extending to the third floor. Firefighters made an aggressive offensive attack and knocked down the exterior fire. Interior fire crews found extension of the fire on the third floor and quickly opened interior walls knocking down all fire within 16 minutes.

A total of 27 Firefighters worked to control the fire, responding with five Engines companies, one truck company, and a Battalion Command team to mitigate the emergency. The Santa Monica Police Department provided traffic control. Los Angeles City Fire Department, Engine 63, and Light Force 63 provided backfill assistance at Santa Monica's Headquarters Fire Station 1. There were no injuries to civilians or fire personnel.

Santa Monica Fire Prevention fire investigators responded for cause determination and the cause of the fire is still under investigation.

PASSOVER/EASTER

Zoom seders or live streamed services for the Shabbat before Passover.

But Chabad Santa Monica is advising members to video chat family and friends before Passover begins at sundown, since many Orthodox and Conservative Jews refrain from using electronic devices during holidays, said Chabad youth director Sara Levitanksy.

Chabad has distributed nearly 100 seder-to-go kits for members who can't get to the grocery store or leave their homes, she added. Local restaurants like Huckleberry, Birdie G's and Pasjoli are also offering Passover menus for delivery and takeout.

While people will miss a seder with their loved ones, Levitanksy said this year provides an opportunity to reflect on the suffering and redemption of the Passover story.

"A lot of the time we get carried away with the outer aspects — joking around, the food — and not the real intent of what Passover is all about," she said. "A message for today would be that right now we're slaves to our own fears and anxieties, and this year we can concentrate on using our faith and belief in G-d to break through those barriers."

Jews celebrating a modified Passover won't be alone this year or throughout history, Levitanksy said.

"If you feel alone or that doing it this way is so depressing and sad, you weren't the only ones. For the past 3,000 years, whether hiding out during the Spanish Inquisition, the Holocaust or Siberian exiles, many people throughout the ages have experienced Passover in this way," she said. "Even this year, you're not alone — Jews all over the world are doing the same thing at the same time."

Local churches are recording or live streaming services for Holy Week and Easter and encouraging congregants to maintain a sense of community with each other.

"It's a fine balance between trying to keep people connected, but also realizing that everyone is trying to figure out a new rhythm and every other organization in their lives is overwhelming them with information about what they're doing related to COVID-19," said the Reverend Tim Vance of First Presbyterian Church. "We want people to have the freedom to pay attention to what's happening in their own lives and travel through this season in whichever way seems helpful."

Vance and the Reverend Eric Shafer of Mt. Olive Lutheran Church said they are also leading interactive services Thursday via Zoom to give congregants a chance to discuss the Last Supper, which is usually commemorated on Thursday during Holy Week through communion and ritual foot washing.

"We'll do a service and a brief worship and then just let people talk," Shafer said. "We're suggesting they eat dinner together rather than have communion together."

For Good Friday, Vance said First Presbyterian, United Methodist Church and St. Paul's Lutheran are co-hosting a virtual Tenebrae service that combines the roughly 1,500-year-old ritual with yoga and breathing exercises.

"It will be a traditional Tenebrae reading of the last week of Jesus' life interspersed with blowing out candles — it's a movement into complete darkness," he said. "They've woven into that body movements and breathing in response to each candle being blown out. Blending such an old ritual with those new things is really interesting."

St. Monica's Catholic Church is already an established presence online, said Loreena Garcia, the church's communications and development coordinator. The church has been live streaming services online since 2012 and draws thousands of people from across the country and world each week, she said.

St. Monica's is now holding webinars on how to observe Holy Week while sheltering at home and is looking into virtual Bible study, Garcia said. Ministries within the church talk together through Zoom or FaceTime to help participants feel connected to a community while self-isolating at home.

"None of the excitement or momentum of Easter has changed, it's just taking place in a virtual room rather than the church," Garcia said.

Massive effort to get Los Angeles homeless into hotels

CHRISTOPHER WEBER
Associated Press

To curb the coronavirus spread, Los Angeles has embarked on a massive effort to bring thousands of homeless people off the streets and into hotels to protect them and others from infection.

California Gov. Gavin Newsom announced last week that money from the federal government would help pay for at least 15,000 hotel rooms during the pandemic. But Los Angeles County, with the state's largest concentration of homeless people at some 60,000, has set its own goal of 15,000 rooms.

"We're going big in LA," said Heidi Marston, interim director of the Los Angeles Homeless Services Authority. "We based our goal on what the need is here."

Marston planned to outline the effort on Wednesday during the daily coronavirus briefing by county health officials.

Coronavirus is spread by coughs and sneezes. Most infected people have mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough, that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness, including pneumonia and other respiratory problems that can be fatal.

The homeless population is particularly at risk. Many transients already have health problems such as heart disease or diabetes, and live in conditions that do not permit frequent hand washing and social distancing.

The hotel rooms set aside under the state's Project Roomkey are reserved for the most vulnerable of the county's homeless population, Marston said. These include people over 65 and those with underlying health conditions who don't have symptoms but are at high risk for hospitalization if they contract the virus.

The first hotel opened Friday in Los Angeles. A total of 1,340 beds at 15 sites across the county are expected to be ready by the end of this week. Thousands more have been identified as potential locations.

Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti said Tuesday that the number of rooms needs to increase rapidly and encouraged hotel operators to allow the government to lease their rooms.

He also warned "if it requires a more aggressive stance" he has emergency powers to commandeer rooms. "We need to get people into those thousands of rooms today," Garcetti said.

They'll be filled first by people from existing shelters that are eager to ease crowding. Meanwhile, teams are going into encampments to find people who meet the criteria.

"People are really scared and they're trying to do whatever they can to protect themselves," Marston said. "We see people who are excited to have a safe place to go."

Outreach workers assist with every step of the process: checking for symptoms, gathering belongings, transporting people and checking them into hotel rooms.

Nurses are onsite to provide regular health checks. The temporary residents will have round-the-clock security, three meals daily and access to laundry facilities, officials said.

County officials are not disclosing names of hotels being opened to discourage uninvited people. They'll be spread out across Los Angeles and in the Antelope Valley, northeast of downtown.

Project Roomkey is aiding a three-pronged Los Angeles County effort to get people indoors and safely distanced from one another. The county is also setting up medical sheltering sites with quarantine and isolation rooms for people who have tested positive for COVID-19, show symptoms while awaiting test results, or who have been exposed to the virus.

In addition, temporary shelters have been set up at city and county parks and recreation centers, with beds placed at the recommended distance of at least 6 feet (1.83 meters) apart.

The estimated cost to secure 15,000 hotel rooms and staff the facilities for three months is about $195 million, said Phil Ansell, director of the county's Homeless Initiative. Of that, $118.5 million will pay for the leases and the balance will cover operations, he said Tuesday.

Under the agreement announced by Newsom, the Federal Emergency Management Agency will pay for 75% of the leasing cost. The state is providing $800 million in emergency funds to counties.

Newsom said as of Tuesday, more than 7,640 rooms had been secured across the state and local officials were working to bring people in "on a daily basis, on an hourly basis."

The governor called the effort unprecedented.

"There's not a state in America that's even put a plan together to get 15,000 rooms. There's not a state that's gotten the support of FEMA to reimburse 75% of that. And I'm very proud of those efforts," Newsom said.

San Diego County, with about 8,000 homeless, has secured 2,000 rooms and is prepared to get more if needed, officials said.

San Francisco, with a similar number of homeless people, has leased 945 rooms in eight hotels to house the homeless and those unable to safely self-quarantine at home.

California on Tuesday had more than 17,000 coronavirus cases and at least 452 deaths, according to data compiled by Johns Hopkins University.

So far the confirmed cases among the homeless population is low — Los Angeles County has only about a dozen — but there has been little testing of that population.

Local Musicians Making Face Shields

MUSIC: 2 Andrews, 1 Rollins. Henry Rollins is starting a new radio show this week.

HOW Y'ALL DOIN'?

Without live music. I know it's been less than a month but it seems like a year, doesn't it?

DISCLAIMER

Do I need to have one every NOTEWORTHY column? Every other column? Maybe. To say that as precious, vital, inspiring and life-affirming as music is, it's not life or death. It's not going hungry, losing your job, losing your home, losing your education, losing your religion, getting really sick, watching good friends and family die a painful demise, and I certainly know that.

But I think we're all trying to retain as much normalcy in our lives as we can, and this is my way, and maybe yours. Music.

So no live music for possibly many months more. But I've always loved talking about it, thinking about it, learning and understanding more, feeling more, and sharing that with others. I hope this column can occasionally bring a smile, even bittersweet, in this constricting/expanding world.

As so much of our normal lives drains away, I think we must continue to feel. There is so much to be in touch with, hidden worlds we are slowly unwrapping. The music of our lives, is the memory of our lives. All of our thoughts and emotions are there, in a song. We still have recordings. Magical recordings. And musicians are more than ever streaming it in real time. It is the worst of times, and the best of times. Listen, and feel the creativity, and the love.

LIVE STREAM RECOMMENDATIONS POUR IN

Here's one I had to watch because my wife told me to. No, seriously, I'm a fairly recent friend of Nick Connolly but he and Diane go way back, to when he used to play keyboards in one of her long ago bands out of Santa Barbara, Big Money. Nick has stayed in music and stayed in Austin, where he's had a regular Friday night gig there for 12 years.

No more, of course. So Nick went out to his backyard April 1 and played the gig, with lots of New Orleans-style songs, excellent singing and some nice patter, his out-of-sight neighbors cheered from a safe distance, Diane sang along (here in SM) to the songs they used to do together and I enjoyed the entire show. I recommend it. You'll find it on his FB page, the Nick Connolly in Austin TX. And apparently he dug it so much he did another one three days later, this time, indoors. Maybe the temperature dropped. But I liked the backyard setting.

NICOLE RECOMMENDS:

HENRY ROLLINS' "COOL QUARANTINE" FEAT. IAN MACKAYE — (Esteemed crate digger and gifted gabber Henry Rollins has just launched a new show on KCRW, free- long-form style, where he will be going through his record collection, sometimes with a guest — in this case Ian MacKaye, co-founder of Dischord Records, former frontman of Fugazi and Minor Threat, and longtime collaborator and friend of Rollins — playing songs and sometimes full albums, sharing stories, memories, etc., maybe not a revolutionary idea, but something fun for music lovers to sink their teeth into during this safer at home period.) — search "KCRW Cool Quarantine" or follow this link to stream the first episode: https://www.kcrw.com/music/shows/music-special/henry-rollins-radio-longform-joy-division-ian-mackaye.

— An aside from Charles: Here are the notes I wrote for a photo I posted on 10/11/14, the night I was king, oh those were the heady days...

"Tonight Derwood Andrews played some mean lap steel at Farmers Market. He used to be known as Bob or Rob Andrews when he helped form Generation X when he was 17. On hand to hear him was someone I've been a big admirer of for decades, Mr. Henry Rollins. We chatted about music for a good 20 mins. This has raised my status immensely in the eyes of my two kids, both of whom I introduced to the work of HR and both became big fans on their own. Now I'm off to see an all-female Sabbath cover band, Black Sabbitch. Upon hearing this news my

The Shows Must Go On ... Line

It's hard keeping it together, isn't it? You can stream endless entertainment via Netflix, Hulu, Prime Video and other platforms to fill your head with comedy, drama, mystery, mayhem and more. I hear Criterion Collection is outstanding, there's also BritBox, FlixFling and who knows how many others where you can spend 24/7 watching whatever your heart desires.

But why not keep your mind and heart open to other ways of thinking, viewing and participating? So many arts organizations, restaurants, small businesses are desperately trying to find ways not to close their doors. Take a peek at some of what they're doing online, in lieu of in-person events. And consider a donation for those organizations sharing events without charging for them. It's only right. The Internet only LOOKS free, but costs are always involved.

JEWISH WOMEN'S THEATRE

The season was cancelled for this Santa Monica-based performance and arts salon, but some form of the show must go on. Jewish Women's Theatre started by asking members of their community to send stories of how they're coping, and the actors, artistic directors and others in the company are reading those stories, and others, from their homes via smartphone video. It's touching, tender, intimate and these personal story readings are posted Monday-Friday, with a slightly more spiritual leaning on the Friday posts, since sunset brings the Sabbath.

Additionally, Artistic Director Ronda Spinak will be curating stories from JWT's archives that featuring a Passover theme. The holiday began last night and the offerings will continue for 7 more days. Also, catch up with JWT on their hour-long Passover 2020 Zoom panel discussion, called the "Un-Loneliness of the Long-Distance Seder," featuring local chef and cookbook author, Amelia Saltsman.

For more information and links to their videos, visit https://www.jewishwomenstheatre.org.

VERDI CHORUS ON APRIL 18

On April 18, at 7:30 p.m., you can tune to the Verdi Chorus website https://www.verdichorus.org or to Facebook https://www.facebook.com/VerdiChorus/ to enjoy a free concert on the night they would have been performing their previously scheduled performance. As the only choral group in Southern California focused primarily on music for opera chorus, you'll hear selections from three Verdi operas – La forza del destino, Nabucco, and the opening party scene of La Traviata,concluding with beloved melodies from Strauss' Die Fledermaus.

PERFORMANCE: The Jewish Women's Theatre is closed thanks to COVID-19 but offers comfort by way of virtual programming.

The program features four guest soloists: soprano Shana Blake Hill, mezzo-soprano Karin Mushegain, tenor Alex Boyer, and baritone Ben Lowe, who returns to the Verdi Chorus by popular demand.

BERGAMOT GALLERIES

There are plenty of museums opening up their doors for virtual tours of their collections, but local galleries are keeping pace.

To receive a daily message called "The Power of Photography," sign up for the email newsletter from Peter Fetterman Gallery This brilliant photo gallery presents inspiring, beautiful, haunting, often powerful images from their collection. — technology the EU said raises questions of "fundamental rights and freedoms."

The desire to get back to normal is driven in part by the damage to world economies.

The Bank of France said the French economy has entered recession, with an estimated 6% drop in the first quarter compared with the previous three months, while Germany, Europe's economic powerhouse, is also facing a deep recession. Expert said its economy will shrink 4.2% this year.

Japan, the world's third-largest economy, could contract by a record 25% this quarter, the highest since gross domestic product began to be tracked in 1955.

Worldwide, more than 1.4 million people have been confirmed infected and over 80,000 have died, according to Johns Hopkins University. The true numbers are almost certainly much higher, because of limited testing, different rules for counting the dead and deliberate underreporting by some governments.

For most, the virus causes mild to moderate symptoms such as fever and cough. But for some older adults and the infirm, it can cause pneumonia and death. Over 300,000 people have recovered.

VP talk could intensify with Harris-DNC fundraising deal

BILL BARROW
Associated Press

California Sen. Kamala Harris has made an unusual fundraising move that is sure to fuel speculation about her prospects to be Joe Biden's running mate on the Democratic presidential ticket.

Harris, who dropped out of the White House race in December, has set up the kind of arrangement with the Democratic National Committee that is typically reserved for nominees trying to attract large donations from the party's biggest boosters.

Harris, 55, will host her first virtual fundraiser Thursday under the new agreement. It allows contributors to give the maximum of $357,800, with $2,800 going to retire Harris' presidential campaign debts and the rest going to the national party.

The senator and the DNC filed paperwork for the arrangement Wednesday with the Federal Election Commission, in the first deal of this kind for Democrats this election cycle. Biden and the party chairman, Tom Perez, had been hesitant to enter into the arrangement while Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders was still actively campaigning against Biden. But Sanders suspended his campaign Wednesday, making Biden the presumptive nominee.

Party officials did not say whether they have asked other former candidates for a similar fundraising arrangement, but that could become moot now that Biden no longer must navigate Sanders as a rival. Regardless, it's a testament to Harris' good standing among some of the party's top donors.

Harris has tried to sidestep speculation about joining the Democratic ticket. "I know that conversation is taking place in the press and among the pundits, and I'm honored to even be considered, if that's the case," Harris said Wednesday on ABC's "The View"

Biden has committed to selecting a woman as his running mate, and there's a considerable push in the party for him to select a woman of color, recognizing both black women's place as anchors of Biden's coalition and the rising influence of Hispanic voters. Harris is the daughter of Indian and Jamaican immigrants.

Biden praised Harris when she ended her presidential bid. He said she was qualified to be president or vice president and noted that the former prosecutor could be an able attorney general or Supreme Court justice. His aides have dismissed any notion that hard feelings carried over from Harris' aggressive attacks on Biden in a June presidential primary debate.

Harris said on ABC that she has "a great deal of affection" for Biden and believes "he'll be an extraordinary president."

Sanders drops 2020 bid, leaving Biden as likely nominee

WILL WEISSERT
Associated Press

Sen. Bernie Sanders ended his presidential bid on Wednesday, making Joe Biden the presumptive Democratic nominee to challenge President Donald Trump in a general election campaign that will be waged against the backdrop of the coronavirus pandemic.

Sanders initially exceeded sky-high expectations about his ability to recreate the magic of his 2016 presidential bid, and even overcame a heart attack last October. But he couldn't convert unwavering support from progressives into a viable path to the nomination, with "electability" fears fueled by questions about whether his democratic socialist ideology would be palatable to general election voters.

"The path toward victory is virtually impossible," Sanders told supporters Wednesday. "If I believed we had a feasible path to the nomination I would certainly continue the campaign, but it's just not there."

He called Biden a "very decent man" but didn't offer an explicit endorsement of the former vice president. Sanders said his name would remain on the ballot in states that have not yet held primaries so he can gain more delegates and "exert significant influence" on the Democratic platform.

Biden, who is backed by much of the party's establishment, told supporters at a virtual fundraiser that he had a "short conversation" with Sanders on Wednesday.

"He didn't just run a political campaign. He created a movement," Biden said. "That's a good thing for our nation and our future. His campaign has ended, but I know his leadership will continue."

Trump sought to foment the tension among Democrats by tweeting Wednesday that the party stacked the race against Sanders. The president said the senator's supporters "should come to the Republican Party."

Sanders began his latest White House bid facing questions about whether he could win back the supporters who chose him four years ago as an insurgent alternative to Hillary Clinton. Despite winning 22 states in 2016, there were no guarantees he'd be a major presidential contender this cycle.

But Sanders used strong polling and solid fundraising — collected almost entirely from small donations made online — to quiet early doubters. Like the first time, he attracted widespread support from young voters and made new inroads within the Hispanic community, even as his appeal with African Americans remained weak.

Sanders amassed the most votes in Iowa and New Hampshire, which opened primary voting, and cruised to an easy victory in Nevada — seemingly leaving him well positioned to sprint to the Democratic nomination while a deeply crowded and divided field of alternatives sunk around him.

But Biden won a crucial endorsement from influential South Carolina Rep. Jim Clyburn and a subsequent, larger-than-expected victory in South Carolina, which propelled him into Super Tuesday, when he won 10 of 14 states.

In a matter of days, Biden's former Democratic rivals lined up to endorse him. His campaign had appeared on the brink of collapse after New Hampshire but found new life as the rest of the party's more moderate establishment coalesced around him as an alternative to Sanders.

Things only got worse the following week when Sanders lost Michigan, where he had campaigned hard and upset Clinton in 2016. He was also beaten in Missouri, Mississippi and Idaho the same night, and the results were so decisive that Sanders headed to Vermont without speaking to the media.

The coronavirus outbreak essentially froze the campaign, preventing Sanders from holding the large rallies that had become his trademark and shifting the primary calendar. It became increasingly unclear where he could notch a victory that would help him regain ground against Biden.

Though he will not be the nominee, Sanders was a key architect of many of the social policies that dominated the Democratic primary, including a "Medicare for All" universal, government-funded health care plan, tuition-free public college, a $15 minimum wage and sweeping efforts to fight climate change under the "Green New Deal."

Sanders began the 2020 race by arguing that he was the most electable Democrat against Trump. He said his working-class appeal could help Democrats win back Rust Belt states that Trump won in 2016, including Michigan, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania. But as the race wore on, the senator reverted to his 2016 roots, repeatedly stressing that he backs a "political revolution" from the bottom up under the slogan "Not me. Us."

Sanders, 78, also faced persistent questions about being the field's oldest candidate. Those were pushed into the spotlight on Oct. 1, when he was at a rally in Las Vegas and asked for a chair to be brought on stage so he could sit down. Suffering from chest pains afterward, he underwent surgery to insert two stints because of a blocked artery, and his campaign revealed two days later that he had suffered a heart attack.

A serious health scare that might have derailed other campaigns seemed only to help Sanders as his already-strong fundraising got stronger and rising stars on the Democratic left, including Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, endorsed him. Many supporters said the heart attack only strengthened their resolve to back him.

Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren outshone him throughout much of the summer, but Sanders worked his way back up in the polls. The two progressive candidates spent months refusing to attack each other, though Sanders offered a strong defense of Medicare for All after Warren offered a plan for a transition to it that would take years.

But they clashed bitterly, if briefly, in January, when Warren said that Sanders had suggested during a 2018 private meeting that a woman couldn't be elected president. Sanders denied saying that, but Warren refused to shake his outstretched hand after a debate in Iowa.

Warren left the race after a dismal Super Tuesday showing in which she finished third in her own state. Any lingering tension

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 09)

Power moves, like being the first to volunteer, will have people gravitating to your leadership. You'll make and cause connections. Be patient, as your projects will take time. Playing the long game, you will eventually net ample financial and personal gains. Family will rely on you, and your service will ultimately enrich you. Leo and Libra adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 1, 4, 44, 48 and 19.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The day's conflict has to do with two people trying to occupy the same space. Neither one is more correct. When ego and pride are put aside, there is a way to take turns.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Cynicism is among the most erosive emotional tones to adopt, and you'll avoid anything that smacks of this dark view. On the other hand, it doesn't help to be gullible either. Mix healthy skepticism with your optimism.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There's a way to make peace with every moment. Finding it requires you to drop knee-jerk reactions and decide to think something different. You're willing because you love peace more than you love arguing.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Loved ones have their own lives and adventures and when those journeys take them in different directions, you stay the course of your own knowing that the road of love always circles back.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Luckily, your comfort is not based on other people being present, attentive, informed or anything else. You have a talent for maintaining good cheer regardless of how others show up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Hard work is fine with you today. Boring work is fine, too. Whatever the work, it is your attitude about it and the inner life you bring to it that makes it worthwhile.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Things won't look the way you expected them to, and they will deliver far beyond your projections. You'll stay open, looking for results and trying not to get swayed by packaging.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Waste no time fretting about what could happen, especially if it's negative. Lots of things can and will happen. Good lives are lived in the margins of hope and possibility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). The bottom line is that influence comes from understanding. The ability to take on another person's perspective will serve you in many situations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's not like your intuition comes and goes. It's part of you that is always there. The volume sometimes ducks under louder sounds in your brain caused by more intense thoughts and emotions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Though you sense your multidimensional nature, honoring the minutes is a show of respect for the rules of this plane of existence in which life seems to be made out of time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). People around you have ever-growing demands of you. It's because you're so capable and have always risen to the occasion. Don't go into auto-fulfillment mode. Prioritize your own needs.

risen by roughly 50% from 56 last Thursday to 81. Of the 131 institutional settings the county is investigating, three are in Santa Monica: The Manor, The Rehabilitation Center of Santa Monica and Beachwood Post-Acute and Rehab.

Officials have not released information on whether any people who have died after contracting coronavirus lived in Santa Monica.

Of the 29 county residents whose deaths were reported Wednesday, 17 were older than 65 and 16 of those elderly individuals had underlying health conditions. Seven individuals were between 41 and 65 and one person was between 18 and 40. All but one, an individual between 41 and 65, had underlying conditions.

More than 1,700 COVID-19 patients have been hospitalized at some point. Christina Ghaly, director of the L.A. County Department of Health Services said the county has 1,548 open hospital beds, including 247 ICU beds. The Navy ship Mercy is also providing 1,000 beds for non-coronavirus patients and the L.A. Surge Hospital will bring more than 250 beds for COVID-19 patients later this month.

There are 1,010 available ventilators, another 150 in a county stockpile and 170 being refurbished, Ghaly said Tuesday.

On Wednesday, Gov. Gavin Newsom said the state had secured 41.5 million N95 masks to distribute throughout the state and is sinking more than $1.4 billion into additional personal protective equipment for essential workers such as grocery store employees and homeless outreach teams in addition to healthcare personnel.

Two of the more than 600 new cases confirmed in L.A. County Wednesday are among the homeless population, which now has a total of 12 confirmed cases. Two homeless shelter employees and two residents have tested positive.

Heidi Marston, interim executive director of the Los Angeles Homeless Services Authority, said the agency is working to secure 15,000 hotel and motel rooms across the county to house people experiencing homelessness during the pandemic. There will be 24-hour security at each site and residents will be served three meals a day in their rooms, she said.

"Project Room Key" follows earlier efforts by the city of Los Angeles to convert 13 recreational centers into temporary shelters, with a combined capacity of more than 550 beds.

To slow the spread of coronavirus locally, Santa Monica public schools are closed indefinitely and county beaches, beach bike paths and public trails will close through at least April 19. The city's public buildings, nonessential businesses, playgrounds, Santa Monica Pier and beach parking lots are closed through the end of April.

The city of Santa Monica fenced off Palisades Park after people continued to walk and exercise in the park last weekend. Other city parks are still open, and Santa Monica Farmers Markets remain open with enhanced physical distancing controls.

Local officials are asking Santa Monica residents and workers to wear masks in public at all times following an order from L.A. Mayor Eric Garcetti requiring people to wear masks.

City Garage, our bold and adventurous local theatre, is putting up an eclectic mix of videos, including one of their mascot dog and Artistic Director Frederique Michel's adorable granddaughter, in addition to monologues, songs and other pieces from works they've presented onstage. Join the fun at City Garage Virtual Cabaret: https://chuffed.org/project/citygarage.

FOR THE KIDS

The Cayton Children's Museum also closed its doors but created a video series called "#CaytonRecess to connect with their young patrons. Join them LIVE weekdays at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. on Instagram for storytelling, music and singalongs to keep the little ones entertained. Videos will be later be housed at YouTube. For the live feed follow @CaytonMuseum on IG (look for the "live" button), otherwise, visit their YouTube Channel here: Bit.ly/caytonrecess

ON A LARGER SCALE

London's National Theatre has created National Theatre at Home and offers FREE recorded versions of plays they've produced for stage. Every Thursday, there's a new full-length production. Last week it was James Corden (the late-night host) in the hilarious comedy "One Man, Two Guvnors," and today (April 9) tune in for the literary classic, "Jane Eyre." There's a LOT of fine content on their YouTube channel; immerse yourself in behind-the-scenes, actors warming up, "how we made it" features, and so much more. SXSW FILM FEST FREE ON AMAZON

One of the most disruptive discontinuations caused by COVID, SXSW (South by Southwest festival) was cancelled by the City of Austin. It's a place where new artists are launched so it was a major blow. But saving the day for filmmakers, the ten-day SXSW film festival will be available FREE, streaming on Prime Video; you don't even need to be a Prime member. All you need is an Amazon account (free to set up). I'll be watching, as so much creative filmmaking energy comes out of this festival. The only info I have is that it will be streamed sometime late in April so keep your eyes open for news!

daughter declared, Dad, musically, you rule tonight - you rule Oct. 11."

Right after that show I was picking her up somewhere and as she got in the car I showed her the photo on my phone, of me smiling between Rollins and the Other Andrews. I wasn't sure she would recognize Henry. But I will never forget the jaw-drop look on her face. Yep. that's my girl.

MORE LOCAL MUSICIAN NEWS

A few years ago I was in the corner of the Townhouse in Venice, on Windward Ave, a former speakeasy dating back more than 100 years, for a friend's birthday celebration. Unexpectedly, a quartet started playing, old time music, and they were really good. They weren't even on a stage (though they do have shows in the basement there). After a few numbers four more musicians squeezed in, including some horn players, and then they really soared.

Turns out this was an early appearance of The Dustbowl Revival, and when I found out that's who I saw, I became a big fan. Mostly through my daughter's connections, we became friends with their exceptional fiddler Connor Vance and his wife Arianne, a very talented, delightful singer. Connor is a wizard also on mandolin, guitar and who knows what else and is now attempting to conquer the cello.

He decided to leave the band earlier this year, about the time they released their fourth album. He said he wanted to work on raising the level of his various talents, and would challenge himself with a weekly task, which he would stream on social media. He has a Patreon fundraising page, patreon.com/connorvance, to support those efforts and make the creations available to fans.

Connor is a local product of Samohi and UCLA, with deep roots in Santa Monica, where he and Arianne bought a house. They have done a few shows together and when I caught them at McCabe's I thought, who needs a band? She is a captivating singer and he can play anything, really well.

But now Connor has set himself another challenge. He is helping his bass-playing dad Ron make much-needed face shields for medical workers fighting this pandemic. Looks like they're working in a studio or garage.

Ron is looking to cover the costs of materials, about $3k, which will create 1500 face shields. "Even $10 or $20 is a huge help," he said.

Ron, you raised a great son, someone for Santa Monica to be proud of, not only for talent, but heart.

RIP

It starts to really hit home, this horrible, unstoppable plague, when it takes our best.

Tuesday night we lost the great songwriter and performer John Prine, to coronavirus. He was in "that category," over 65 and weakened by pre-existing conditions of throat and lung cancers, and heart conditions he had survived.

Prine was one of our greatest songwriters ever, period. His insight to the human condition and ability to capture it in a phrase, his melodies, that voice, using just a few words to paint an entire canvas. "Hello in There," "Sam Stone," "Donald and Lydia," "Angel from Montgomery," "Your Flag Decal" — I love him, but I'm so envious. My entire writing career doesn't add up to two of his lines.

His duet with the incomparable Iris DeMent on "In Spite of Ourselves" isn't his most profound song, but it sure is a hoot. https://youtu.be/P8tTwXv4glY.

I hope that angel is taking good care of you now, John.

Charles Andrews has listened to a lot of music of all kinds, including more than 2,000 live shows. He has lived in Santa Monica for 34 years and wouldn't live anywhere else in the world. Really. Send love and/or rebuke to him at therealmrmusic@gmail.com the end date for the moratorium to May 31, which may be extended again in the future, and requires landlords to notify tenants of the eviction moratorium by the end of April.

After the moratorium is lifted, a landlord may not evict a tenant who did not pay rent during the pandemic if the federal or state governments already compensated the landlord for the unpaid rent.

All no-fault evictions are prohibited — previously, only renters impacted by COVID-19 were protected from no-fault evictions — and landlords may not evict tenants who have unauthorized occupants or pets in their homes. Tenants can refuse to let their landlord enter their unit unless the landlord needs to remedy a dangerous situation.

Additionally, the fine landlords face for violating the city's tenant harassment laws has been increased from $10,000 to $15,000.

"The city has strengthened its eviction moratorium to ensure that our community members – both tenants and businesses – can stay in their homes, restaurants, shops and offices during this emergency period, even if they are temporarily unable to pay rent," Cole said.

Tenants must notify their landlord in writing of their inability to pay rent due to COVID-19 and its impacts and provide supporting documentation, said city spokesperson Constance Farrell. A form that can be used to provide the required notice is available here.

Tenants may file complaints about eviction activity in violation of the order with the Public Rights Division of the City Attorney's Office at (310) 458-8336 or Consumer.Mailbox@smgov.net.

seemed to fade by Wednesday when Warren tweeted her thanks to Sanders for "fighting so relentlessly for America's working families."

With the leading progressive now out of the race, Biden moved to appeal to their supporters on Wednesday.

"I hope you will join us," he said in a statement. "You are more than welcome. You're needed."

But Sanders made clear that while he is exiting the campaign, he will still be a force.

"Please stay in this fight with me," he told his backers. "The struggle continues."
