Women Chefs & Restaurateurs National Conference comes to L.A.

Santa Monica-based female chefs talk obstacles in the hospitality industry

BY JENNIFER MAAS
Daily Press Staff Writer

On April 17 the nation's top culinary and hospitality talent will gather for the Women Chefs & Restaurateurs (WCR) 23rd Annual National Conference for two days of mentor sessions, panel discussions, cooking competitions and celebrations at the InterContinental Los Angeles Century City.

And though many amazing female chefs will be coming from far and wide to participate, the Westside boasts its own female chef population who will be joining in the festivities.

The conference's theme for 2016 is "Imagine Your Dreams and Ignite the Future," a theme the organization hopes will offer valuable strategies for women to develop their hospitality careers and maximize opportunities.

The event will cover a range of topics, including social media, artisanal milling, GMOs, equal pay, advances in kitchen technology and much more.

Past WCR president, graduate of the Culinary Institute of America, chief creative officer of Chefwear and Santa Monica resident, Rochelle Huppin believes that the conference offers participants the truly valuable experience of connecting in person.

"There is still something to be said about getting people together in person and having the opportunity to make a lot of connections in a particular industry that way," Huppin said. "It is also very valuable to try and mentor other women, and that is a big component of WCR. It is basically about education and mentoring and that can only go so far online. But once a year we will gather for a conference and that is very valuable."

INDUSTRY LEADERS: Former Women Chefs & Restaurateurs (WCR) president, Culinary Institute of America graduate, chief creative officer of Chefwear and Santa Monica resident, Rochelle Huppin (center) is joined by past WCR president Elizabeth Falkner and current president, Ruth Gresser. WCR is a nonprofit organization that works to promote and enhance the education, advancement, and connection of women in food, beverage, and hospitality around the world.

Founded in 1993, WCR is a nonprofit organization that works to promote and enhance the education, advancement, and connection of women in food, beverage, and hospitality businesses across the world. And those are values that the Santa Monica-based conference participants can wholeheartedly get behind.

"I believe that the biggest challenge in the hospitality industry for women is to be strong enough of a woman to deal with all these crazy men," chef de cuisine at Rustic Canyon Wine Bar & Seasonal Kitchen, Brittany Cassidy, said. "You have to have thick skin and be strong and confident enough to stand next to them and blow them out of the water with your technical and social abilities."

Carla Corona, the pastry chef who runs the bakery at M Street Kitchen, believes that getting respect from male counterparts in the industry is one of the toughest challenges that female chefs face.

"Often we are smaller, we're not as strong, we can be perceived as "moody" or irrational by others," Corona said. "Because of this, and even though it's not true, we have to work twice as hard as men.

Amy Berman, owner of Vanilla Bake Shop, will tell women looking to enter the culinary industry "it's a tough business."

"I think you have to look more at long term goals and realize that it takes a lot of hard work and dedication to get there,"

Improving equity in SMMUSD a 'daunting' but worthy task

Noguera: Local district well-prepared to close achievement gap

Editor's note: This is the first installment of a multi-part series about the Santa Monica-Malibu school district's achievement gap.

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN

Officials in the Santa Monica-Malibu school district didn't need Pedro Noguera to tell them they have significant work to do to close the achievement gap.

But with the renowned reformist on board as a consultant, district leaders have reiterated their commitment to addressing longstanding disparities in academic success along racial and socioeconomic lines.

After a presentation by Noguera during which he pointed out district flaws and outlined a roadmap of solutions, the local Board of Education on Thursday afternoon expressed unanimous support for the creation of a plan to improve equity in the district.

During a well-attended meeting in the Santa Monica High School cafeteria, board members directed district staff to move forward with Noguera's recommendations and return with detailed strategies for curbing the gulfs in outcomes between minority students and their peers.

"There's no simple solution, and everyone in this community … believes in and understands how important it is to engage in this work," SMMUSD Superintendent Sandra Lyon said. "It's a daunting task, and one

But when the executive director of the Santa Monica Bay Restoration Commission thinks about ongoing environmental and climate changes, he doesn't see particularly sunny skies ahead.

Used oil filter exchange hosted by the City's Resource Recovery and Recycling Division

Need a filter? Exchange your used oil filter for a new one - free!

Why recycle oil filters? According to the California Department of Resources Recycling and Recovery (CalRecycle) used oil filters contain 10 ounces of used oil and therefore are a hazardous waste and must be properly recycled - not thrown in the trash.

Oil filters contain used oil and steel, both are valuable nonrenewable resources.

Oil filter recycling is good for the environment and easy to do.

Each year California generates 67 million used automotive filters per year. The filters are considered hazardous waste and are banned from landfills, however, they are also completely recyclable. Each filter has about a pound of re-usable steel. All the filters sold annually in California can be recycled into 67 million pounds of steel, enough to build three large sports stadiums.

Bring those used filters to O'Reilly Auto Parts (2018 Lincoln Blvd.) to get them recycled from 9 a.m. - 3 p.m. on Saturday, April 16.

End of a stormy trip for Fair Housing Act

AT THE SANTA MONICA CITY ATTORNEY'S Office, we have three black and white photographs from the civil rights era that we've enlarged to large prints mounted on poster board. For the start of an annual April fair housing rights workshop, and to show at once why April is National Fair Housing Month and the gravity of its origins, we bring out the photographs.

One by one.

In the first photograph, President Lyndon Baines Johnson, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Whitney Young are huddled in the Oval Office in 1964 for a strategy session over the first civil rights bill. It's the beginning of President Johnson and Dr. King's fruitful if sometimes bumpy relationship. Their collaborations would soon result in landmark legislation with the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

By early April of 1968, however, Johnson and King were keenly apprehensive for the prospects of a third civil rights bill that they had been working on together since 1966. After addressing discrimination in schools, the polling booth, and public accommodations, the two men had focused legislative efforts on eradicating racial segregation and housing discrimination. Their hopes were with a fair housing bill that made it illegal to treat applicants for rental housing, tenants, homebuyers, and borrowers differently because of their race, religion, color, or national origin. However, the bill's two-year journey had seemingly come to an unfulfilled end in the Capitol; as of April 4, 1968, it was stuck fast in a legislative committee chaired by a staunch segregationist who had no intention to ever report the bill out.

Our second photograph takes us deeper into the bill's history. It shows Johnson and King in April of 1966 in the Cabinet Room for the first top-level meeting over what should be in a law for fair housing (also known as "open housing" back then) and how to get it passed. They anticipated a long fight against segregationists and states' rights advocates.

At that meeting (but not in our photograph) was Congress' godfather of civil rights legislation, New York Congressman Emanuel Celler. Celler introduced a comprehensive fair housing bill (H.R.2516) in January of 1967, and the protracted effort began. By March of 1968, the bill's supporters had seen it bottled up with a year of neglect in the House and then blocked with constant filibusters in the Senate.

But just when H.R. 2516 seemed dead in the water, it would get a breath of life from either the President himself or a hard-hitting civil rights report. Johnson wrote at least two letters to Congress to get the bill moving and demanded in official remarks that the leaders stop "fiddling and piddling" with fair housing. During one attempt in 1967 to end a filibuster, President Johnson offered to send an Air Force jet to pick up three or four absent supporters of fair housing.

A jet ride did not grab the Senate's attention the same way as the Kerner Commission's Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders and its grim picture of race and inequality in America. The March 1, 1968 report concluded that the country was "moving toward two societies, one black, one white; separate and unequal" and that racial segregation had to be addressed with a comprehensive federal fair housing law. Within three days, the Kerner report's impact had spurred the Senate to vote cloture on the filibuster. After a 71-20 vote on March 11, 1968, the bill had finally escaped the Senate.

The bill returned to the House of Representatives for the House's concurrence with several Senate amendments. A hopeful consent request was rejected and then the bill was dealt another blow; a referral to the Rules Committee. The Rules Committee was chaired by Mississippi's William Colmer, a staunch segregationist, and the only quick thing he did with the bill was to immediately defer any consideration of it. The definitive law review article on H.R. 2516's legislative history by Jean Dubofsky states that after a second continuance by Colmer delaying action until mid-April, "fears had increased that the Senate's civil rights bill might die in the Rules Committee."

Upon relating this piece of civil rights history to our Santa Monica workshop participants, we unveil the third photograph, that of President Johnson signing the Civil Rights Acts of 1968 ("Fair Housing Act") on April 11, 1968. He's surrounded by some 20 men, including Celler, Senator Walter Mondale, the bill's co-sponsor, and future Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

Success at last! But April 11? How was it possible for a bill languishing in the Rules Committee on April 4 to suddenly escape that committee and its pro-segregation chairperson, and then get itself and its Senate amendments debated and passed by the House to reach the President's desk within seven days.

The answer is in , or with what's not in-the photograph from the signing ceremony. King is not in it. Nor would he be in another iconic shot of him shaking hands with and accepting a signing pen from President Johnson. King had been assassinated on April 4 and a shocked nation wanted to do something with its grief. King's death and his April 9 memorial service broke the fair housing bill free. In homage to Dr. King's great commitment and work, in response to the civil unrest, in remorse, and also to just finally do the right thing, the House quickly insisted on action from its own Rules Committee.

Resistant to the end, Chairman Colmer decried the idea of holding a vote during such a tumultuous week and even tried to force a Joint House-Senate committee to build in more delay. However, one of his key allies switched their vote and the bill passed out of the committee on April 9. The House scheduled its debate on vote on the Senate amendments for the very next day. On April 10, after the House decided to keep debate to just one hour, the bill sprinted through a

Barren medians

Dear EarthTalk:

Why are there stretches of thousands of miles of interstate systems in this country with barren medians? What are the obstacles to planting trees or other vegetation in those areas?

James Logan Cockerham
Middletown, OH

THE IDEA OF BEAUTIFYING HIGHWAY medians with plantings goes back five decades when Lady Bird Johnson pushed the Highway Beautification Act through Congress in 1965. Today, Americans are starting to think about undeveloped land alongside and between roadways as a low cost and widely dispersed strategy for carbon sequestration. Researchers from the Western Transportation Institute (WTI) at Montana State University report that roadside soils and vegetation on federal lands alone are already capturing almost two percent of total U.S. transportation carbon emissions. WTI adds that the land alongside America's four million miles of public roadways already maintained by federal, state and local governments could be planted with vegetation optimized for storing atmospheric carbon dioxide and could serve as valuable "banks" for meeting ambitious carbon sequestration goals set at the recent Paris climate accord.

At a talk at 2015's North American Congress for Conservation Biology in Missoula, Montana, WTI's Rob Ament reported that shrubs, grasses and other plants already along roads in U.S. national parks, wildlife refuges and other public lands currently are currently sequestering some seven million metric tons of carbon a year-equivalent to taking some five million cars off the road-all without trying to optimize the mix of plants and management practices for carbon storage. Ament advocates that land management authorities and departments of transportation research ways to enlist medians and other public lands in the fight to stave off cataclysmic global warming.

Of course, maintaining highway medians and other forlorn stretches of roadside for carbon sequestration may be more easily said than done, especially since drought across the American West has reduced water budgets for land management and transportation authorities to the bare minimum. While this winter's El Nino weather pattern has restored many depleted aquifers, water is still likely more valuable than some precious metals and will probably remain scarce for years to come.

Despite the drought, California's Department of Transportation (Caltrans) is currently looking into just how much carbon sequestration could be possible by optimizing the state's median and roadside plantings. "Highway roadsides may be an overlooked and undervalued component of the department's resources available to reduce greenhouse gases and assist in meeting California Air Resources Board compliance goals," says Doug Brown, a Senior Landscape Architect with Caltrans. "When managed properly, trees are proven cost-effective mitigation measures that sequester carbon." He adds that increasing tree cover also reduces the heat-island effect by shading impervious surfaces.

Much of the information we already have about vegetation management strategies that optimize carbon sequestration, says Brown, is focused on large tracts of forest land, not on smaller tracts such as along roadsides. He concludes that we need to do much more research to figure out ways to better utilize these roadside green spaces without depleting groundwater reserves. Planting highway medians with carbon-sucking plants may not be the only solution to global warming woes, we need all the help we can get.

250-172 vote and straight to a relieved President.

"Long and stormy" is how President Johnson described the Fair Housing Act's trip, and its passage came with thunder and lightning. We celebrate National Fair Housing Month in April in recognition of its April 11, 1968 passage into law. But we also celebrate this achievement of fair housing rights in April because, as Johnson put it in his April 5, 1968 letter to Congress, "A man who devoted his life to the nonviolent achievement of rights that most Americans take for granted was killed by an assassin's bullet."

Gary Rhoades is a Deputy City Attorney in the Consumer Protection Unit of the Santa Monica City Attorney's office, which enforces the fair housing laws in Santa Monica and promotes public awareness of fair housing. The city's Fair Housing Month activities this April include a fair housing poster contest for Santa Monica students, a public awareness ad campaign, and a workshop on April 30. BEACH

Ford and other local environmental experts are concerned that development along the coast prevents the flow of sediment from the mountains to the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

"That's much of the source of our sand for our beaches," he said. "But when we've built on this environment and altered streams, we don't get sediment transport down to the coast. The sea level is rising, and we're expecting more and more stormy weather, so we need more sand at the beach. But we've stifled that supply. ... It leads you to a dark view of where we'll be in 30 to 50 years."

A rising sea level is among the issues expected to be addressed Wednesday from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m., when city officials are hosting a community workshop about the creation of a new Local Coastal Plan. The workshop will be held at Santa Monica High School's Barnum Hall.

The event is part of an outreach campaign by the City of Santa Monica to inform citizens how the new plan could impact residents, property owners and businesses in the coastal zone, which covers an area from the beach to 4th Street between Adelaide Drive and Pico Boulevard and from the beach to Lincoln Boulevard between Pico and Ocean Park boulevards.

City staff in January presented an update to the Planning Commission on the Local Coastal Plan, which was formulated in 1992 but which yields authority to the California Coastal Commission. More than 50 community members attended the first community workshop Feb. 29.

Wednesday's workshop will include a panel discussion featuring Garrett Wong, sustainability analyst for the City of Santa Monica; David Revell, chief scientist for Revell Coastal LLC; and Juliette Hart, marine and climate science specialist for the USC Sea Grant.

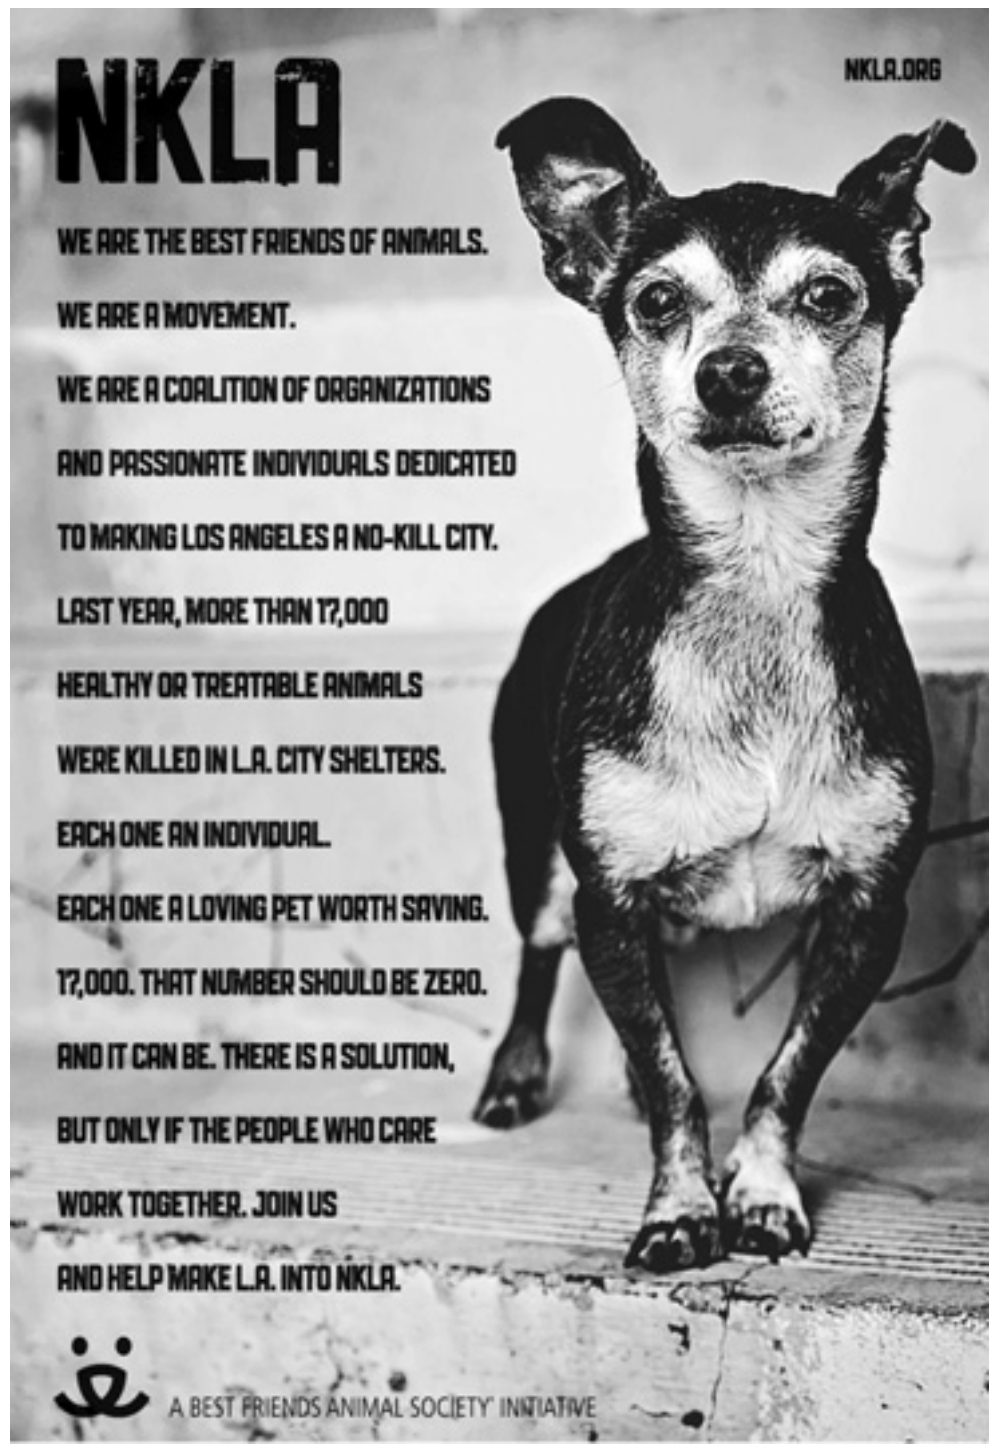

The state coastal commission will require the new Local Coastal Plan to address "forecasts for sea level rise and storm event impacts along the Santa Monica coastline," according to a City report. The plan is expected to include sections on "preparing for future changes and protecting critical infrastructure."

"It is time to adopt new standards and criteria so that coastal development review will reflect and be guided by policies that foster a more sustainable future," the City report reads.

Guang-yu Wang, senior scientist for the Santa Monica Bay Restoration Commission, said local beaches play will an important role as sea levels rise.

"With the consideration of Los Angeles in 2000 and 2100, we are looking at our beaches as a place to hold back rising waters, while supporting wildlife and sequestering carbon," Wang wrote in a five-year State of the Bay report released last year. "Los Angeles' iconic beaches are a great resource for us to rehabilitate and protect, and if we're successful, those beaches will protect us in turn, while allowing us to recreate and surf into the next century."

What remains to be seen is how the district will get past the buzzwords of "shared vision," "culturally responsive teaching" and "differentiated learning" to make lasting dents in the achievement gaps that persist between black and Latino students and their white and Asian counterparts.

On recent state tests, district pass rates in English ranged from 45 percent for African-American students and 48 percent for Hispanic students to 78 percent for white students and 83 percent for Asians. Similarly, just 30 percent of black test-takers in SMMUSD and 33 percent of Latino students met or exceeded the math standard, while white and Asian students' rates stood at 69 percent and 77 percent, respectively.

"This community is better-positioned than most to make progress and address this issue," Noguera said. "But there's a tendency to confuse talking about something with doing it. We can't think, 'We had a meeting, and we knocked that one out.' It's a step in a long journey."

Noguera's arrival in the district followed his appearance about a year ago at Santa Monica College, where Lyon and assistant superintendent Terry Deloria heard him speak. The education scholar's consultancy is being paid $185,000 to assess the district's problems and help implement long-term fixes.

"We determined it would be a great benefit to our district if we could partner with Dr. Noguera and conduct an equity review to ... make sure we were doing the best for each and every one of our students," Lyon said.

Board members and stakeholders praised the district for attempting to tackle the problems and lauded Noguera for his thorough approach. Longtime board member Jose Escarce, for one, said the current effort to close the achievement gap feels different than previous attempts in the district.

"Whether we've misfired or not in the past is not the point," he said. "I sense much more commitment than I ever have before. ... Today is the first day of a plan that will, over time, take us to the place where we want to go."

Sarah Braff, president of the Santa Monica-Malibu Classroom Teachers Association, said it will take substantial effort to enact the culture changes outlined by Noguera.

"This opportunity will not succeed if we don't all take ownership of the fact that we have not yet succeeded," she said. It will only work if we open up our hearts and our minds to real change. We must all take this as serious as a heart attack. That's how important it is."

GETTING STARTED

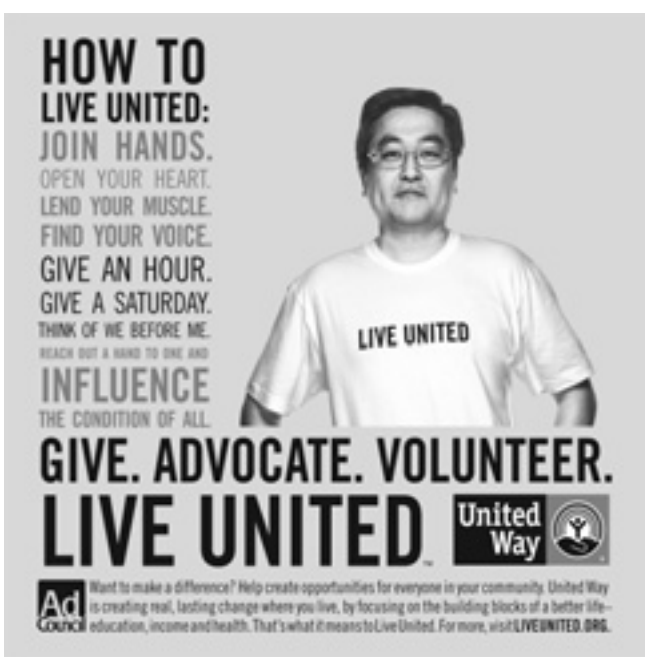

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Department of Veterans Affairs employee Elizabeth Rivera Rivera, 39, was fired after her arrest (followed by a February guilty plea) for armed robbery, but when she was sentenced only to probation, an arbitrator ordered the VA to rehire her -- and give her back pay she "earned" while sitting in jail awaiting trial. (She had been the driver for a man arrested for a street robbery in San Juan, Puerto Rico.) Rivera's union had demanded the reinstatement without salary penalty -- for "fairness" -- because the same Puerto Rico VA office had earlier hired a convicted sex offender, and the office's hospital director, recently charged with DUI and drug possession, avoided VA discipline because of technicalities about the traffic stop.

■ Turmoil in Selma, Alabama, March 1965: The historic "Bloody Sunday" at the Edmund Pettus Bridge ultimately became a turning point in the battle for voting rights. Turmoil in Selma, Alabama, March 2016: The town is riven by demands for stricter enforcement of the ordinance requiring horses on the street to be wearing diapers -- a campaign led by Ward 8's Councilman Michael Johnson (an African-American): "I'm tired of it because there's other things I could be doing than dealing with horses."

Read between the lines, Libra

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ You could feel off at first today, but after all, it is Monday. Make calls, reach out to another person, and indulge in one seemingly impulsive act you have been considering. You find that you naturally gravitate to doing what you want, as it seems to work well for you. Tonight: Visiting with a friend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You could be at the end of the line and wondering what would be best to do. A close associate or partner points to a new direction and choice. You could feel let down by this person, as you feel he or she doesn't get where you are coming from. Tonight: Be open to fast changes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ A personal situation could be even more irritated by the other party, who in some sense seems relentless. Don't allow this situation to drag you down. You cannot change this person; he or she needs to make a decision. A friend could be surprised. Tonight: As you want.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ You will choose to say very little and listen a lot. You might feel tired or out of sorts. Is it time for a checkup? The unexpected occurs when you least anticipate it. Rather than get upset, enjoy the humor and spontaneity of the moment. Tonight: Get some extra R and R.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ You might want to get past an immediate hassle involving what you feel is a wonderfully creative idea. A child also could be challenging. You might opt to schedule a vacation after your experience this morning. Your fuse seems to have shortened considerably. Tonight: Read between the lines.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ You want to take a stand, but a matter involving your domestic life could be coloring your actions and decisions. You might not be able to change someone's attitude. The unexpected occurs when dealing with a matter that involves you and another person. Tonight: The center of action.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Look beyond the obvious when dealing with another person you really care about. Listen to feedback that comes forward from another party. Still, a loved one or a partner takes off in an unexpected direction or says what is close to impossible. Tonight: Read between the lines.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Your intensity could be marked by a quick change of pace. You could be tired of hitting the same log jam. Certainly being reasonable and having endurance has not worked. To many people's surprise, you could do the irrational. Tonight: Allow someone else to make the first gesture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You might go to excess trying to deal with others. You could feel pushed to the extreme as you juggle different concerns. A child or new friend could be creating a lot of uproar. Tonight: Sort through the possibilities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You could be rather tired and drawn. You might not be sure which way to go with a child or loved one. You see a personal matter very differently from in the recent past. However, you still might feel somewhat down by what you are visualizing. Let go of the emotions. Tonight: Full of fun.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Allow your imagination to flow. Pressure becomes impossible to walk away from. A friend could become very demanding, knowing exactly what he or she wants or desires. You might not be up for pursuing this course. Tonight: Acting as if you do not have a care in the world.

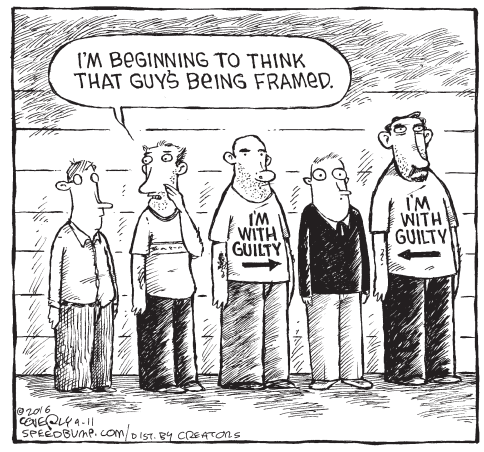

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★ Stay close to home. It might be difficult to complete a project. You will want to find a way around that problem. Be careful with your spending, especially when it comes to making a purchase. Tonight: Allow someone else to make the choice.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year you enjoy more levity and your communication skills soar. You are capable of doing the unexpected, surprising others, but also opening new pathways at the same time. Often you have to make choices about your schedule and daily life. If you are single, your social attributes emerge, often making you the life of the party. Others clearly enjoy your company. Expect to keep your dating life light and fun through the summer. After that period, you could meet someone who is quite significant to your life history. If you are attached, the two of you often can be seen swapping news, laughing and enjoying each other's company. Plan on some old-fashioned dates; go out to dinner just the two of you or take off for the weekend. Your bond is enhanced by these special periods. GEMINI makes you laugh and gain a perspective.
