Ruling: Landlords don't have to accept Section 8 tenants

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

DOWNTOWN In what was hailed as a victory for landlords, a state appellate court ruled recently that property owners have the right to not accept Section 8 vouchers from low-income tenants.

The ruling stems from a case filed by an elderly Santa Monica widow who tried to use her Section 8 voucher to remain in an apartment owned by Los Angeles Clippers' owner Donald Sterling, who recently agreed to pay nearly $3 million after settling a housing discrimination lawsuit brought by the federal government.

Section 8 is a part of the United States Housing act and provides low-income residents and their families financial aid, covering 70 percent of a tenant's rent .

"This is a fairly significant case," for landlords, said attorney Karen K. McCay with the law firm of Pahl & McCay, which joined the case on behalf of the California Apartment Association. "While we are a big supporter of the Section 8 program, it does have some restrictions on property owners. It should be voluntary. That was how it was designed."

In the last few years, however, there has been a debate about whether or not a landlord's decision to not accept Section 8 vouchers, and therefore not rent to low-income tenants, is an act of discrimination. Under the state Fair Employment and Housing Act, landlords cannot discriminate based on a person's source of income a well as their race, religion or sexual orientation. Sources of income could include welfare checks, and alimony and child support payments.

Advocates for low-income tenants say there is a growing trend amongst landlords to flatly refuse to rent to anyone on Section 8, and some have blatantly tried to evict those tenants who are because the owner no longer wants to participate in the program.

McCay said there are benefits for landlords in Section 8, such as 70 percent of the rent being guaranteed each month. Tenants have to abide by certain rules to remain in the program.

However, landlords must prepare more paperwork and allow inspections.

"This is about property rights," McCay said.

Study: Schools near traffic face increased student asthma risk

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Children at schools in high-traffic areas had a 45 percent increased risk of developing asthma, according to new research published Saturday.

The University of Southern California study found that kids' exposure to pollution at locations where they spend much of their day and may engage in physical activity influences their asthma risk.

"While residential traffic-related pollution has been associated with asthma, there has been little study of the effects of traffic exposure at school on new onset asthma," said Rob McConnell, professor of preventive medicine at USC's Keck School.

The findings were based on a model that took into account traffic volume, distance to major roadways from home and school and local weather conditions in 13 communities.

Researchers found 120 cases of new asthma. The risk associated with traffic-related pollution exposure at schools was almost as high as residential exposure.

McConnell said despite a state law that prohibits schools from being built within 500 feet of a freeway, many Southern California campuses are located near high-traffic areas, including busy surface streets.

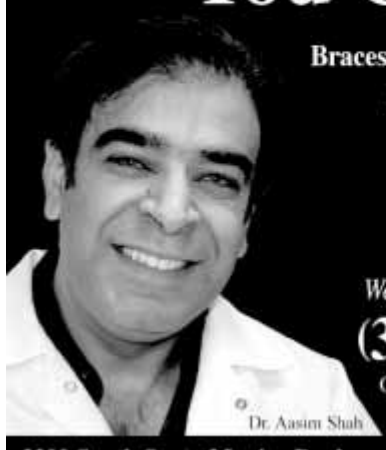

The study was published in the journal Environmental Health Perspectives.

'Titans' clashes with 'Date Night' at box office

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES Steve Carell and Tina Fey are in a box-office clash with the gods of Mount Olympus.

No. 1 bragging rights for the weekend were too close to call Sunday, with 20th Century Fox estimating a $27.1 million debut for Carell and Fey's comedy "Date Night" and Warner Bros. reporting the action tale "Clash of the Titans" at $26.9 million.

Rankings will be sorted out Monday when studios release final numbers, which can vary by $1 million or more for some films compared with Sunday estimates.

Warner executives said they tracked "Clash of the Titans" as No. 1 for a second straight weekend, with "Date Night" trailing by about $1 million.

"I'm not complaining about it," said Dan Fellman, head of distribution for Warner. "They're certainly entitled to their own projection, and we'll see. Maybe they're right and we're wrong. Monday will tell."

Weekend projections include fairly hard figures for Friday and Saturday but estimates for how much a movie will take in on Sunday. Studios base those estimates on such factors as how similar movies performed in past weekends.

Studios sometimes grumble that competitors inflate their Sunday numbers to make a debut look stronger.

"You can't do that," said Bert Livingston, a 20th Century Fox distribution executive. "What you do is you look up history, you come up with your best-guess scenario. The number is the number. Whatever it is, if it ends up being No. 1 or 5 or 6, we just estimate our numbers."

Winning the top spot at the box office is a valuable marketing edge, allowing a studio to proclaim its release as the No. 1 movie in advertising through the following weekend.

Even if rankings change on Monday, it's often the Sunday figures that linger in the minds of movie fans, who may not bother to check out the final numbers a day later.

"That's why everyone wants to be No. 1 on Sunday, because with the Internet, by Monday, it's kind of old news," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for

Celebrating Earth Month with a smile

BY TAYLOR VAN ARSDALE
Special to the Daily Press

Dr. Nushin Shir, owner of Artistic Center for Dentistry, is celebrating Earth Month by offering 120 new patients free comprehensive dental exams that will include basic teeth cleaning services and limited check up x-rays.

The Artistic Center for Dentistry partnered with Heal the Bay to promote the importance of making Southern California's coastal waters and watersheds safe, healthy, and clean, while fostering a global value shift toward a sustainable and secure future. The center itself subscribes to this philosophy and is doing its part to minimize its carbon footprint by going paperless, reducing its waste by eliminating the use of plastic products, using digital x-rays which eliminates hazardous chemicals that ultimately contaminate the waterways.

"In these tough economic times where many families are hurting, the charitable contribution to nonprofits and their important missions has fallen significantly," Shir said. "This is an ideal time to repay the support I have received from the community and to give back to one of the most important causes in Santa Monica, Heal the Bay."

Shir is committed to improving the local environment in the community to create a cleaner, safe place to live and work.

"Support from third parties, such as Artistic Center for Dentistry, are key to promoting greater awareness, broadening our member base, and generating funds to support our research, education, community action and advocacy," said Natalie Burdick, Heal the Bay's constituent development manager. "We are excited to be able partner with Dr. Shir on a health program that offers free dental exams to members of our local community."

The special runs from April 1-30. In exchange for free dental treatment, the practice is asking that all patients donate $10 to support this outreach campaign.

Artistic Center for Dentistry is located at 1531 Sixth St., Ste. 100. For more information, call (310) 393-2300.

Speaking out against bus rate hike

Editor:

All those whining students and low-income people complaining about the proposed doubling of Big Blue Bus fares ("Bus fare hike troubling to SMC officials," page 1, March 26) should direct their letters to U.S. Congressman Henry Waxman.

Mr. Waxman's largesse with federal funds, the $6 million in new "fuel-efficient" buses that would supposedly "save money" have added another layer of costs to the district. These costs on top of running the usually-empty "Tide Shuttle" fleet include extra bus administrators making over 100k per year (more when health and pension costs are added in).

Mr. Waxman could have easily added language to the "Stimulus" bill, saying no new buses to cities doubling bus fares. No free lunch (or free buses) when the new buses cost twice as much to ride every day is the take home lesson here. I suppose there is validity to the argument that those at the bottom rungs of the economy should share the pain. But personally, I agree more with those who favor low bus fares to get people out of cars and reduce gridlock, even if that means less traffic ticket income for the city.

I also find myself, albeit reluctantly, unopposed to the people favoring Gridlock Days where carpoolers honk their horns to let the people Downtown and around the college know how they feel about the bus fare increase. Ordinarily, I would be against any sort of behavior bordering on rowdiness or even mildly rude, but in a city where the City Council has bypassed the voters to elect the last two new council members without the vote of the people, I think people who carpool have the right to vote on bus fares by horn honking to get the attention of city government and Mr. Waxman.

God bless you all.

City Hall's bid process not a walk in the park

ITEM 8B ON TOMORROW'S CITY COUNCIL agenda is approval of a $3.2-million contract (plus 10 percent contingency) with James Corner Field Operations for "the design and construction bid document preparation of the six-acre Palisades Garden Walk & Town Square project" in the Civic Center.

An eight person screening panel consisting of the architect and Dean of the USC School of Architecture, a landscape architect from New York City, the Vice Chancellor/Campus Architect at UC Santa Barbara and five key City Hall staffers conducted interviews and whittled two-dozen applicants down to six finalists.

The final six teams made presentations and participated in a question and answer sessions. New York City-based James Corner Field Operations was selected for the job based on its qualifications and expertise.

This past week, I've heard complaints from politicians and the public alike that there was no public process — no citizen commission, city council persons or members of the public — privy to the selection process.

Why in a city where even the paint scheme on the police cars gets a thorough public review, how come there was no local involvement in the selection of the design/architect/landscape team whose imprint will set the style and tone for this very large and important project? I e-mailed Barbara Stinchfield, City Hall's Director of Community and Cultural Services who is overseeing the project for a response.

She replied by phone that the panel interviews focused on the overall qualifications and related experience as well as the general approach used by the various design teams bidding on the project and how they thought their team best met the specific selection criteria as outlined in the RFQ (Request for Qualifications).

She also said, "It has been the city's long-standing practice to use inter-departmental City Hall staff committees to develop recommendations on design teams bidding on projects to the City Council" and that numerous informational items had been issued during the process. She explained that this is the way City Hall had handled bids on all the big city projects and that no complaints were raised about doing it this way before.

In an e-mail follow-up she wrote, "There were no concept designs or approaches presented or discussed. This was not a Request for Proposal process which would have resulted in teams presenting more specific information about design proposals." She assured me, "The community has not missed its opportunity to engage in programming and design conversations even at the project's earliest stages."

She continued, "An Information Item was sent to the City Council and made available to the public on September 21, 2009, prior to issuing the RFQ. This report clearly described the process and the selection criteria that would be included in the RFQ. City staff heard no concerns either from City Council members or members of the public and thus proceeded with its implementation."

Recreation and Parks Commission Chair Susan Cloke had a different take.

In response to questions about her thoughts on the process, she e-mailed: "I suggested to Barbara Stinchfield that we consider creating a selection process which included an opportunity for public input. Suggestions I offered were, holding a Recreation and Parks Commission hearing where the public was asked what criteria they wanted to be considered in the selection process and creating an opportunity for public review and comment on the submittals ... However, in consultation with the City Attorney, none of the public review options were accepted into the selection process."

Being that the selection of the supplier (or architect/landscape design team) will greatly influence the appearance, amenities and features of what some residents are now calling "Our future Central Park," Cloke's suggestions should have been implemented. And, the City Attorney's apparent advice to "not accept public review options" is puzzling and worrisome.

New York-based James Corner Field Operations is an excellent design/landscape firm, but there may be others equally as good if not better, or more appropriate for Santa Monica's sensibilities — noting that the final screening panel consisted primarily of non-Santa Monicans.

There is a growing concern that this contract and its funding should not be approved until presentations from the other five firms are reviewed and commented on by the City Council, appropriate city commissions or the public.

Cloke concluded, "I just wish that the choice could have been made in a transparent, public process. Then, whatever the outcome, I think that would have created more support … and better expressed who we are as a City."

Despite detailed assurances by Stinchfield about a thorough and complete public process along every step of the way, It seems we have reached a point in time — possibly due to a growing lack of confidence in City Hall to make the right decisions — when the process for awarding future bid contracts for large public projects should be open to public participation and changed to protect against possible abuse of the process.

When not bidding on City Hall contracts, Bill can be reached at mr.bilbau@gmail.com

L.A. billionaires sued over water

GARANCE BURKE
Associated Press Writer

FRESNO They grew their fortune in the California sun, turning pedestrian fruits and nuts into a vast and varied empire that secured their place in Hollywood.

Stewart and Lynda Resnick's flashy bottles of Fiji Water and POM Wonderful are now coveted across the globe. Their donations keep the lights on in art museums across the country. And Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger and Arianna Huffington count them among their dearest friends.

But as their marketshare rises worldwide, one of the billionaires' competitors is fighting back, accusing the Western power couple of profiting at the public's expense, court records and interviews show.

Now, as drought-stricken California weighs whether to give private companies more control in managing its scarce water supplies, a new lawsuit claiming the Resnicks violated utilities law by making money from a vast, taxpayer-funded underground reservoir is causing a stir in the state Capitol.

"Water is a public resource, owned by the people," said Democratic Assemblyman Jared Huffman of San Rafael. "We shouldn't be giving away public funds to private sector interests, let alone choosing winners and losers in the business world."

The Resnicks, who live in a Beverly Hills mansion and have a second home in Aspen, Colo., are among the nation's largest corporate farmers and are generous philanthropists and political donors, giving $536,000 to Democratic and Republican California governors in the last decade.

The Los Angeles Business Journal estimates the couple's empire is worth $1.5 billion. It includes about 120,000 acres in California's Central Valley — where they say they own more fresh citrus, almond and pistachio trees than anyone else in the country — and a facility akin to the Fort Knox of water.

That kind of success, Lynda Resnick said in a telephone interview, can inspire jealousy, and likely motivated this most recent "nuisance" lawsuit. Her husband declined to be interviewed.

After growing up working class in Highland Park, N.J., Stewart Resnick started a business waxing floors while in law school at the University of California, Los Angeles. The couple bought farmland in the 1980s as a hedge against inflation, gaining access to water contracts attached to those parcels.

As drought has hammered the region, leading farmers to abandon their dry fields, the Resnicks' 48 percent stake in the Kern Water Bank, an underground pool that stores billions of gallons of freshwater, has become increasingly valuable.

Court records show that in early 2007, the Resnicks' companies' combined water holdings reached 755,868 acre feet — more than twice the size of San Francisco's Hetch Hetchy reservoir. In 2007, that volume would have qualified as California's 11th largest reservoir, but the firms' water holdings have diminished significantly since, company officials said.

That cache provided enough to nourish the Resnicks' orchards, but it also offered another benefit. From 2000 to 2007, records show the state paid the Resnicks an additional $30.6 million for water previously stored there as part of a program to protect fish native to the ecologically fragile Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta.

Lynda Resnick's marketing savvy helped build cachet around her otherwise obscure brands, such as POM Wonderful pomegranate juice, Cuties mandarins and Teleflora floral bouquets.

Revered among advertisers as the "Pom Queen," she has hired medical scientists to bear out health claims that their fruits and nuts help fight disease and extend life expectancy. Last year, following a nationwide recall of pistachios over salmonella fears, she hired Levi Johnston, the teen father of Sarah Palin's grandson, to promote the snack nuts. The domestic business grew by 40 percent over the last crop year.

"We've done more for the pistachio than anyone ever since it was planted in the Garden of Eden," she said in the phone interview. "My husband should be canonized for all the work he's done."

Others in agribusiness see it differently.

Ali Amin, a Persian immigrant who owns a competing processing plant, filed a lawsuit in late March in Fresno County Superior Court claiming the Resnicks violated California public utilities laws because they turned a profit by selling water to farmers who weren't members of their Bakersfield-based water company, Westside Mutual Water Co.

"You feel like David fighting Goliath," Amin said. "If they're allowed to keep doing this, the rest of the independents and small growers won't be able to compete."

Amin's lawsuit alleges he lost $5.5 million in revenue when growers lured by water supplies sold their nuts to the Resnicks' plant, which processes almost two-thirds of the nation's pistachios. Amin controls about 5 percent of the market.

Resnick and other water users in agricultural Kern County gained control of the Kern bank — the largest underground water storage facility in the nation — in the mid 1990s, following a round of negotiations with the state Department of Water Resources. Their position was that the state had shorted rural areas in allotting water in a previous drought.

To avoid potential litigation from unhappy water users, state officials ceded ownership of the Kern Water Bank — developed with $74 million from the department and $23 million in taxpayer-approved bonds — to a local water agency. In return, water users gave back 45,000 acre feet from the amount they contracted to receive each year.

The Q Line

The final say

City planners are in the midst of finalizing the Land Use and Circulation Element, or LUCE, which will determine what shape development takes for the next two decades.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
What should Santa Monica look like in 20 years time?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press.

Bag bans gain momentum

Dear EarthTalk

How effective have plastic bag bans and restrictions been on reducing plastic litter and other problems associated with their proliferation? And is it really better to use paper bags, which will just lead to more deforestation?

Peter Lindsey
New Canaan, Conn.

PLASTIC BAGS, FIRST INTRODUCED IN the 1950s as a convenient way to store food, have since developed into a global scourge, littering roadsides, clogging sewer drains and landfills and getting ingested by animals and marine life. And in recent years we've discovered how they are so prolific that they now comprise a significant portion of the plastic and other garbage that has collected in huge ocean gyres far from land.

A few countries around the world — Bangladesh, China, India, Australia, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Israel, South Africa, Taiwan and Mumbai, among others — have taken stands against plastic bags through taxing their usage or banning them outright. The environmental think tank, Worldwatch Institute, reports that China's decision to ban free plastic bags in 2008 has cut demand by some 40 billion bags, reduced plastic bag usage there by 66 percent, and saved some 1.6 million tons of petroleum.

In March 2007, San Francisco became the first (and is still the only) major U.S. city to implement an across-the-board ban on plastic bags. Large supermarkets and pharmacies there had to ditch plastic shopping bags by early 2008 in favor of paper bags or those made from all-natural biodegradable cornstarch-based plastic. Environmentalists are particularly fond of the latter option for those who don't bring their own grocery bags, as these cornstarch bags offer the biodegradability of paper without the deforestation as well as the convenience of plastic without the damage to ecosystems. San Francisco officials had originally tried to work with retailers on reducing plastic bag use voluntarily. But after a few years of little or no cooperation, they decided to just institute the ban on anything but biodegradable bags. The result has been a 50 percent drop in plastic bag litter on the streets since the ban took effect.

Los Angeles followed suit and its city council voted in 2008 to ban plastic bags beginning in July 2010 — but the ban will only take effect if the state of California doesn't follow through on a statewide plan to impose a fee on shoppers who request plastic bags. City council members in L.A. hope the ban will spur consumers to carry their own reusable bags and thus reduce the amount of plastic washing into the city's storm drains and into the Pacific Ocean. Several other U.S. cities, including New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, have considered outright bans like San Francisco's, but each settled instead on plastic bag recycling programs in the face of pressure from the plastics industry and retail commercial interests.

While increased demand for paper bags in the wake of plastic bag bans could lead to more deforestation, most paper grocery bags in use today are made from recycled content, not virgin wood. Also, an added benefit of paper over petroleum-based plastic is its biodegradability.

Americans go through some 92 billion disposable plastic bags each year, and only five billion paper ones. If the nation banned plastic bags it is likely that paper varieties would only make up a small part of the difference, in light of the proliferation of reusable canvas shopping bags as well as the availability of biodegradable cornstarch plastic.

NOTICE OF AVAILABILITY OF PROPOSED FY 2010-15 CONSOLIDATED PLAN AND FY 2010-11 ONE-YEAR ACTION PLAN ALLOCATING FEDERAL CDBG AND HOME FUNDS

Notice is hereby given that the City of Santa Monica has developed the Proposed FY 2010-15 Consolidated Plan and FY 2010-11 One-Year Action Plan. The Consolidated Plan, submitted every five years to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), is required in order for the City to receive Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) and HOME Investment Partnerships Program (HOME) funds.

The Consolidated Plan outlines the City's housing and community development needs and presents the City's strategy in addressing these needs over the next five years. The Action Plan details specific projects and activities for one-year use of CDBG and HOME funds, per the needs specified in the Consolidated Plan. The City is seeking community comments on the Proposed Consolidated Plan and One-Year Action Plan.

Copies of the Proposed FY 2010-15 Consolidated Plan and FY 2010-11 One-Year Action Plan are now available to the public for a 30-day community review period ending May 11, 2010. Copies are available at City Hall (Room 212) and on the web at www.smgov.net, or you may contact the Human Services Division, 1685 Main Street, Room 212, Santa Monica, CA 90401, telephone (310) 458-8701; TDD (310) 458 8696. Please send your written comments to the above address by May 11, 2010, or you may present your comments verbally at the City Council public hearing on that date.

Divisions arise over push for adoptions from Haiti

DAVID CRARY
AP National Writer

NEW YORK Logistical challenges and potentially bitter disputes lie ahead as passionate advocates of adoption press for changes that might enable thousands of Haitian children affected by the earthquake to be placed in U.S. homes.

The obstacles are daunting, starting with a need to register Haiti's dislocated children. If done right, this would enable authorities to distinguish between children who might be good candidates for adoption and those with surviving relatives who could care for them.

There also will be efforts to overhaul Haiti's troubled child protection system, update its adoption laws and boost support for family reunification programs in Haiti.

But even before those goals are pursued, there are sharp divisions over how vigorously and quickly to seek an expansion of adoptions.

A prominent leader of the campaign to bring more orphans to American homes is Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., who believes some of the major aid organizations active in Haiti — including UNICEF — are not sufficiently supportive of international adoption.

"Either UNICEF is going to change or have a very difficult time getting support from the U.S. Congress," Landrieu said in a telephone interview.

Landrieu and a few other members of Congress visited Haiti last week, meeting with top Haitian officials to discuss the plight of the devastated nation's orphans.

Since the Jan. 12 earthquake, about 1,000 Haitian children have been brought to U.S. families who had filed adoption applications before the quake. That pool of children in Haiti is dwindling, and adoption advocates are now ratcheting up their efforts to get a new, larger stream of adoptions in the works.

"There is great support in the United States to begin to open up opportunities for adoption as soon as possible," Landrieu said. "There are thousands of children who don't have parents or even extended families to be reunified with."

UNICEF says a time may come when large-scale foreign adoptions would be appropriate — notably for older children and those with disabilities. But the U.N. agency and like-minded groups are asking for patience, saying the next priorities should be to register vulnerable children and try to improve conditions for them and their families in Haiti.

"It's complicated," said Susan Bissell, UNICEF's chief of child protection. "We've got to get a registration system in place. Once we have that, we want families for children — and that includes adoption. We are not against intercountry adoption, but we are against exploitation."

Bissell said she was frustrated by the hostility toward UNICEF that is commonly expressed by leading supporters of international adoption in the United States.

"I find myself saddened by it, but it's not going to take the wind out of our sails," she said.

The chief operating officer for Save the Children, which is deeply engaged in helping Haitian orphans, said the tensions and disputes were likely to revolve around timing — with some groups seeking to resume large-scale adoptions much more quickly than other groups.

"It's hard to know how big the problem is without taking the time to go through this registration process, and I know for many it's an excruciating process," Carolyn Miles said.

"There are no records," she added. "To be sure that a child is an orphan, that will be difficult — going back to their villages, trying to find people who know their families."

An estimated 40 percent of Haiti's pre-quake population was under 14, including about 50,000 living in orphanages and more than 200,000 others not living with their parents. It's been commonplace for poor parents to abandon their children, and some are taken in by wealthier families who use them as household labor.

Hundreds of thousands of Haitian children lack birth certificates or other identification, which could complicate adoption efforts. The Organization of American States is proposing a plan to provide all Haitian minors with ID cards, but estimates this wouldn't be completed until 2013.

> Sen. Mary Landrieu
> D-La.,

Landrieu hopes significant headway on registration can be made much faster than that — but says the many groups working on the task need to coordinate better.

Looking ahead, she hopes for a sizable number of new foreign adoptions by the end of this year — compared with just a handful at present now that the backlog of pre-quake applications has been largely dealt with.

In recent years, about 300 Haitian children annually were adopted by Americans. Landrieu believes that number could rise to several thousand a year in the future.

"Children belong in families, not in orphanages or in some amorphous kibbutz," she said. "Americans take this call very seriously."

Landrieu and other members of her delegation to Haiti came away convinced that government officials there would support expansion of adoption as long as steps were taken to guard against trafficking and ensure that children weren't being sent away from parents who wanted them.

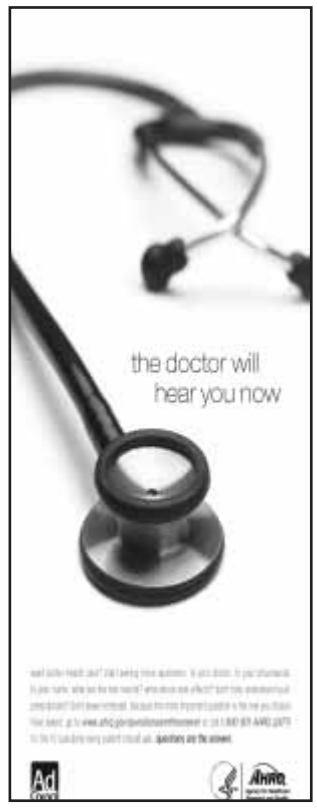

Indeed, Haitian authorities say they are now accepting new adoption applications, though it isn't clear how long these might take to process.

The head of Haiti's child welfare agency, Jeanne Bernard Pierre, has conveyed some skepticism about efforts to speed up adoptions, saying Americans have taken advantage of the disaster to flout Haitian adoption laws.

"Since the earthquake, the U.S. Embassy has said, 'If you see a kid you like, here's the paper, you can take them with you,'" Pierre told The Associated Press.

Michele Bond, one of the U.S. State Department's senior officials dealing with international adoption, firmly disagreed, saying the post-quake transfers of Haitian children to the United States were rigorously monitored.

Fight over New Jersey beach project gets ugly

WAYNE PARRY
Associated Press Writer

LONG BEACH TOWNSHIP, N.J. The line in the sand is drawn in this New Jersey shore community, where township officials say they'll use "peer pressure" to pit neighbor against neighbor in an effort to persuade 230 oceanfront property owners to let a beach restoration project proceed.

The holdouts are refusing to sign on because they don't want their views of the ocean blocked and because they fear the government might build a boardwalk or toilets next to their homes. So the township says it hopes neighbors will coax, shame or force holdouts to sign, and it's even encouraging them to picket outside the homes of those who won't give in.

"Long Beach Township is talking about anarchy here," said Kenneth Porro, an attorney for the holdouts.

"They're asking for people to harass those who won't sign," he said. "All these homeowners want is to be able to continue to enjoy their ocean views, breezes and access. Why would anybody buy an oceanfront property to look out at a wall of sand?"

Mayor Joseph Mancini counters that the community wants the beach restored because everyone uses and enjoys it.

"We're not going to let holdouts hold up the project," he said. "We want to get their neighbors involved and tell them what's going on. If they get some phone calls from their neighbors and longtime friends, that may help change some minds."

Few people deny the need for more sand on Long Beach Island, a narrow 18-mile barrier island growing narrower with each passing storm.

Particularly exposed is Long Beach Township's 12 miles of coastline, where erosion has caused sand around the 90th Street beach to fall off to a 30-foot drop. Once-buried wooden pilings that used to support an oceanfront house's deck and rear stairs now jut into the air; steel support beams that keep the house itself from slipping into the waves are exposed to the pounding surf; and a concrete base that holds up a utility pole is half-exposed.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers hopes to begin the beach project this summer but can't until all oceanfront property owners have signed easements permitting new sand to be pumped ashore onto part of their property. So far, 225 have signed, but 230 others have not.

Phone calls are not all the mayor has in mind; Mancini suggests "peer pressure" and says people should picket outside the homes of particularly stubborn holdouts.

Hank DiPasquale, who has lived near the beach for nearly 40 years, is ready to grab a sign and march.

"The holdouts are affecting everyone on the island because we're all endangered," he said. He said he plans to call or visit neighbors who haven't yet signed the easements.

William Kunz owns an oceanfront house and initially refused to sign his easement, fearing public toilets and parking near his beach. But he changed his mind last year after a court decision striking down state regulations mandating public bathrooms and parking at certain intervals along the coast.

Now he's phoning recalcitrant neighbors and is willing to picket in front of their homes.

"We should all be in this together," he said. "I've spoken to some very reasonable people who feel the government is taking away their property rights. Nothing could be further from the truth. It's just an easement to put more sand there."

> "LONG BEACH TOWNSHIP IS TALKING ABOUT ANARCHY HERE."
> Kenneth Porro
> Attorney

Bob Irvine also signed after having his fears eased about boardwalks and bathrooms. Two of his neighbors, however, have not, and he plans to discuss the issue with them.

"This year, with the five nor'easters we've had, numerous homes in Long Beach Township are in serious jeopardy," he said.

So far, no protests have been scheduled. But the prospect of demonstrations outside the million-dollar homes on the tranquil beachfront has upset many oceanfront homeowners.

Porro represents 67 oceanfront homeowners on Long Beach Island, about half of whom live in Long Beach Township. Many of them fear that signing the easements will give government the right to build a boardwalk or place public toilets or allow vehicles to drive on the sand behind their homes, he said.

But township attorney Richard Shackleton sent letters to each affected homeowner pointing out that the easements do not permit the Army Corps to do any of those things.

The sand dunes would be no higher than 22 feet — less than the height of some of the better-developed dunes that exist now. Mancini said the township has tried to accommodate oceanfront homeowners' concerns about not being able to see the ocean by allowing them to raise their houses 24 feet off the ground.

Farther north on Long Beach Island, the borough of Harvey Cedars was faced with a similar predicament two years ago, with a handful off property owners refusing to sign easements for the beach replenishment project. Harvey Cedars used eminent domain to condemn the land that owners wouldn't sign over but had to pay compensation for lost views and breezes as determined by a court-appointed panel.

The borough offered $300 apiece as compensation, but the first few properties won in excess of $400,000 apiece — amounts that the borough is appealing. Long Beach Township homeowners are well aware of what the oceanfront land of their neighbors to the north is worth.

"If the township wanted to pay me $600,000, I'd do it," said Dan Lundy, one of the oceanfront holdouts. "Why should I give it away?"

Long Beach Township officials say eminent domain and its potential costs are a last resort.

Mancini said he or other township workers call six to 10 holdouts each day, trying to explain the benefits of beach replenishment and assure them that government has no plans for boardwalks or other major changes to the coastline.

"I don't know what they're thinking," he said. "To take a $3 million investment in your home — where your children and grandchildren come to go to the beach — and allow it to slip into the waves is the stupidest thing I can imagine."

Multiple tours a recipe for PTSD

SHARON COHEN
AP National Writer

It wasn't his first tour in Iraq, but his second and third when Joe Callan began wondering how long his luck would last — how many more months he could swerve around bombs buried in the dirt and duck mortars raining from the skies.

It was only natural, considering the horrors he'd seen: One buddy killed when a mortar engulfed his tent in flames. A fresh-faced Marine sniper dead (also a mortar) on his first day in Iraq. A 9-year-old Iraqi boy, blood trickling from his head, after he was mistakenly shot by U.S. troops. An Iraqi grandmother collapsing from a heart attack after her home was searched (she later died).

Three tours in four years and Callan wanted out. Out of Iraq, out of the Marines.

"I became numb," he says. "None of it mattered. I just wanted to be home. And that became more intense each time."

When Callan did return to New Mexico, he couldn't sleep. He drank heavily. He had a short fuse. "I knew," he now says, "I was different. But I didn't think it was going to be that bad."

Maj. Jeff Hall's world imploded after his second tour in Iraq.

Overwhelmed with guilt and rage, the 18-year Army veteran became so depressed that one day he lay on the ground and pointed a pistol at his head. The only reason he didn't kill himself, he says, is he didn't want his two daughters to discover him after school. "I couldn't do that to my kids," he says. "I had seen people with their heads blown off."

But the war had pushed Hall to the brink. "I wanted everything to stop," he says. "I had no peace at all."

No peace — on the battlefields of Iraq and Afghanistan, or in the minds of men and women who fought there. Callan and Hall are among hundreds of thousands of U.S. troops who've served multiple tours; they're also among the tens of thousands diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder.

That is not a coincidence.

With two long wars — Afghanistan is in its ninth year and Iraq just entered its eighth — the U.S. military finds itself straining to maintain a steady flow of troops. More than 2 million men and women have been deployed to serve in both conflicts, and more than 40 percent of them have served at least two tours, according to military records.

Nearly 300,000 troops have served three, four or more times. And, records show, more than half of those currently at war are at least on their second tour. (The vast majority of deployments last more than six months.)

For these men and women, life becomes a revolving door of war, home, then back to combat — sometimes within months — as they face the same dangers, the same stresses and the same agonizing separation from family. Some soldiers are gone so often, they're more comfortable being away.

"You feel as if Iraq is your home, you feel that's where you ought to be," says Justin Taylor, who says he suffered a mental collapse after his third deployment to Iraq.

Multiple tours, according to several studies, have been linked to stress, anxiety and PTSD, which is often marked by nightmares, flashbacks, angry outbursts, insomnia and social withdrawal.

"It's common sense," says Dr. Judith Broder, founder of The Soldiers Project, which provides free, confidential counseling to returning troops and their families. "The more deployments there are, the greater the danger not just of combat stress but depression. ... Virtually everyone comes back with some kind of sleep disorder. Many people also feel alienated and isolated from their family."

After two Iraq stints 10 months apart, Maj. Jeff Hall wanted to be left alone.

He felt he'd been a failure; he believed he hadn't helped the Iraqis or really accomplished anything. He urged his wife, Sheri, to take their two daughters and leave. She refused.

So Hall would take off by himself some days, hopping on his Harley and driving 1,000 miles to west Texas, the Oklahoma Panhandle — any place, just to get away. Other days he couldn't bear to go to his job at Fort Polk, La.

Looking back, Hall can pinpoint the day he realized something was terribly wrong. It was after his first tour, when his family was having dinner at a restaurant and his daughter, Tami, then about 12, refused to touch her steak because sour cream had gotten on it.

> "I BECAME NUMB. NONE OF IT MATTERED. I JUST WANTED TO BE HOME. AND THAT BECAME MORE INTENSE EACH TIME."
> Joe Callan
> U.S. Marine

Hall began crying.

His family was stunned. So was he.

"What's wrong with dad?" Tami asked.

What Hall didn't reveal was his daughter's fussiness had dredged up memories of a very poor family in Iraq that would regularly pick up gas for cooking at a propane station he had guarded. Their two girls — close to his daughters' ages — were so emaciated their skin hung like loose cloth.

"I could just see the faces of the little girls," Hall says. "It kept recurring to me. It triggered a feeling of sadness and anger and all kind of emotions."

But suicidal thoughts didn't surface until after Hall's second deployment, which was even bloodier and more aimless than the first. "It was like we were driving around until we got blown up," he says. Roadside bombs — called improvised explosive devices — had become so common that when Hall studied a map of where they'd been found in the last six months, it was one giant red blob, without a hint of road.

In the first few months, Hall's brigade lost more guys than the entire year in his first tour. One day a Humvee under his command ran over a massive IED, blasting a huge crater in the soil, killing two soldiers, seriously wounding another.

"I felt shame, absolute shame," Hall says, recalling how he smoked a pack of cigarettes in 20 minutes and couldn't sleep for days. "I was suffering from guilt, from the loss. We were having no results. I described it to the psychologist two years later ... It was like a complete loss of identity, a loss of ideals and how you think life is or should be."

Sheri, who had been encouraging her husband to get help, finally called his commander. That led to a civilian psychologist and a diagnosis of PTSD.

"I thought my career was over," Hall says. "I thought, 'What am I going to do?' At the same time, I had this feeling of 'Aha, there IS something wrong. I'm not making this up.'"

There's no way to know for sure how a soldier will react to multiple tours.

Some go to war four times and never have a problem. Some deploy once and are forever changed. Others never leave the United States and develop PTSD.

Justin Taylor's breaking point came on his third stint in Iraq. The former Army sergeant started having anxiety attacks. He vividly remembers the first one.

"I couldn't breathe," he says. "We had mortars coming in. I was shaking and (a friend) said, 'Dude, are you OK?' When I had to go on patrol, I started feeling it. I had to suppress it. I couldn't tell my boss I couldn't go."

Back home, he began drinking so heavily, he'd black out. Within months in early 2007, he got his marching orders for a fourth tour and told his (then-estranged) wife: "If I go back, I'm not coming home.'"

He knew that was a dangerous feeling.

"If you've got a death wish or think you're going to be die," he says, "you're not going to be able to lead your soldiers or perform your duties."

Court ruling strengthens property rights

The tenant in the Sterling case, Elisheba Sabi, moved into her rent-controlled apartment in 1987, two years after emigrating from Iran. Disabled, she lived with her husband on disability payments, according to records filed with the state Court of Appeal, Second District.

After her husband died of cancer in January 2004, Sabi's income was not substantial enough to cover her rent, which was $1,233 a month, Her sons helped cover the rent while Sabi applied for a Section 8 voucher. After roughly five years, she was granted a voucher.

Sabi's daughter asked the apartment manager if they would take her mother's voucher, however, the management company refused. Sabi and her family enlisted the help of the Legal Aid Foundation of Los Angeles, and a lawsuit was filed in April 2004.

Sabi is said to still live in her apartment. Family members felt it was best to have her remain there instead of relocating, according to court records.

Sabi's attorneys argued that the Section 8 voucher she received from the Santa Monica Housing Authority was a source of Sabi's income in the form of cash paid to her landlord by the housing authority.

The court ruled that the voucher only represents Sabi's eligibility to participate in Section 8 and does not represent actual cash money, even if money is paid directly to the landlord from the housing authority. The funds are not anyone's income, the court ruled.

The court also dismissed Sabi's argument that by refusing to accept her Section 8 voucher, they were discriminating against her because of her disability, which restricts her income.

Attorneys for Sabi could not be reached for comment. McCay said she would not be surprised if Sabi takes the case to the state Supreme Court.

'Letters to God' surprises

Hollywood.com.

"Date Night" casts Carell and Fey as a married couple whose attempt to spice up their romantic life leads to misadventure after thugs mistake them for blackmailers.

"Clash of the Titans" features Sam Worthington as a warrior caught in a battle between men and the gods in ancient Greece. The movie raised its 10-day total to $110.5 million.

Running a close No. 3 was DreamWorks Animation's "How to Train Your Dragon," which took in $25.4 million, lifting its 17-day total to $133.9 million.

In narrower release, Vivendi Entertainment's inspirational drama "Letters to God" opened at No. 10 with $1.3 million. The movie centers on a boy who writes letters to God to help cope with his fight against cancer.

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Final figures will be released Monday.

L.A. teachers union votes to shorten year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Los Angeles teachers have voted to approve a deal to shorten the school year by at least five days in an attempt to deal with a budget shortfall and fend off layoffs.

The United Teachers Los Angeles said in a news release that teachers on Saturday approved the two-year agreement struck last month between the union and school district administrators.

Under the deal union members will take five furlough days in the next school year and seven the following year in exchange for saving more than 2,000 jobs, including those of 284 librarians, nurses and counselors threatened with layoffs this summer.

The release says about 21,000 of the roughly 27,000 union members voted for the agreement.

The LAUSD board will vote on the agreement Tuesday.

Mickelson wins Masters

DOUG FERGUSON
AP Golf Writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. Even sweeter than Phil Mickelson slipping into another green jacket was seeing his wife waiting for him behind the 18th green at Augusta National with tears streaming down her face.

Amy Mickelson had not been at a golf tournament since being diagnosed with breast cancer 11 months ago.

He had not looked the same ever since.

A shattered world seemed at peace in the fading sunlight Sunday at the Masters, where Mickelson made one last birdie for a 5-under 67 and a three-shot victory over Lee Westwood.

The conclusion was far more emotional than anyone expected.

Mickelson shared a long embrace with his wife behind the 18th green, and as he walked to the scoring trailer to sign for the lowest score at Augusta in nine years, a single tear trickled down his cheek to his lip.

"We've been through a lot this year. It means a lot to share some joy together," Mickelson said, his voice cracking as he struggled to keep control. "It's been such an incredible week, an emotional week. And to cap it off with a victory is something I can't put into words.

"It's something we'll share for the rest of our lives."

Determined to win one for his family, Mickelson made two remarkable par saves from the trees, seized control with a 15-foot birdie putt in the heart of Amen Corner and then made a gutsy play with a 6-iron off the pine straw and over Rae's Creek on the par-5 13th to set up a birdie. It was the kind of shot that has brought Mickelson so much criticism for taking unnecessary risks.

There was simply no denying him in this Masters.

His final birdie only mattered on the scorecard, 16-under 272, the lowest by a Masters champion since Tiger Woods in 2001. Mickelson had this won as he walked up the 18th fairway to a massive ovation. He raised both arms when the putt fell, had a long embrace with caddie Jim "Bones" Mackay and then walked toward the scoring hut and into his wife's arms.

Standing behind them was Mary Mickelson, his mother, who was diagnosed with breast cancer in July.

So ended a Masters unlike any other.

It began with Woods returning from a humiliating sex scandal that brought a sharp rebuke from Masters chairman Billy Payne and scrutiny of Woods' behavior as he broke par all four rounds and tied for fourth, five shots behind.

It ended in tears for Mickelson and his wife — and in heartache for Westwood, who saw his best chance at winning a major end with too many missed short putts.

"Phil being the champion he is hit some great shots coming down the stretch," said Westwood, closed with a 71 in this one for his best finish ever in a major. "He's been through hard times recently, and he deserves a break or two."

Anthony Kim closed with a 65, the best score of the tournament, and finished alone in third.

Bonds says he's 'proud' McGwire

JANIE MCCAULEY
AP Baseball Writer

SAN FRANCISCO Home run king Barry Bonds said he is "proud" of slugger Mark McGwire for returning to baseball as the St. Louis Cardinals' hitting coach and for admitting his use of performance-enhancing drugs.

"I have a really good friendship with Mark McGwire. I'm proud of him," Bonds said Sunday. "We've had a great relationship throughout our entire lives and throughout our career. I'm proud of what he did. I'm happy for him."

While Bonds didn't rule out also going into coaching one day, his six-minute session with the media was stopped after the question about McGwire.

In January, McGwire ended more than a decade of denials and evasion and finally acknowledged he used steroids and human growth hormone during his career, including in 1998 when he hit 70 home runs and broke the single-season record.

Bonds, who topped that mark when he hit 73 homers in 2001, has long denied ever knowingly using steroids or performance-enhancers in his pursuit of the career home run record — arguably the most prized record in all of American sports.

Bonds was indicted on charges he lied in 2003 to a federal grand jury investigating BALCO, the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative, and obstructed justice.

McGwire was told of Bonds' comments in Milwaukee, where the Cardinals were playing the Brewers.

"It's very cool. Barry is a great player, was a great player in this game, many MVPs," McGwire said. "The guy could do it all. It makes me feel really good. It's really cool to be back in the game. ... I'm a big boy, I understand that things happen in your life and you've got to confront them, and you also have to move on from them and learn from them."

The 45-year-old Bonds, back in the Bay Area for a reunion at AT&T Park of the Giants' 2000 NL West champion team, said he doesn't believe now is the right time to retire. Though he also insists he's not in shape to play immediately if an interested club came calling.

"I don't have any plans at all," he said of trying to play again. "No, it's not necessary at the moment (to retire). The timing isn't that important."

Bonds arrived separately — and more than an hour later — from other members of the 2000 team and walked hand in hand with 11-year-old daughter, Aisha.

"This is weird. Where are the big guys?" Rich Aurilia asked of Bonds and Jeff Kent, whose flight was delayed because of bad weather.

Bonds, dressed in a dark pinstriped suit and orange paisley tie, had a heavy security presence around him of police officers and ballpark officials.

It was a flashback to a few years earlier, when Bonds was trailed everywhere by reporters and fans. On Sunday, he signed some 15 autographs on his way into the ballpark then was driven around on an electric cart. He disappeared into a freight elevator to be taken to the reception with his former teammates.

"They got me in a freight elevator. That's the first time," the slugger said, sporting a huge smile.

Bonds later got in the broadcast booth.

This winter in Florida, he worked with Phillies slugger Ryan Howard on his swing.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Sort through your options, Libra

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You start this Monday with a jolt, wishing perhaps that it was still the weekend. Never fear -- with the Moon cheering you on, there is nothing you cannot accomplish. Don't be surprised about an obstacle. Look at it as a bump in the road that you will skip over. Tonight: Let go of the day's stress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★ To be blunt, there are simply some days you are better off calling in sick or pretending you are invisible! Take in everything that goes down, knowing you do have a choice -- your response. Curb immediate reactions. Tonight: Have a necessary chat with a family member.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Whatever your first few thoughts are this morning, they supply you with enough adrenaline to keep you running in high gear. You might wonder which is the best course. A partner chooses to be difficult. A meeting produces key information. Tonight: Where people are.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Let your mind drift until it is clear that you must take action. With the exception of a partner, others seem pliable, informative and supportive. Work as a team, delegating and letting others feel important. Tonight: Easy works.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Another person expresses his or her dominance. You could establish yours, or you could rise above the issue and just let it go. Put your mind toward finding better solutions and learning more. At work, though you could be an expert, there is always more to learn. Tonight: Discuss an idea until you make a decision.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Others electrify your morning, for better or for worse. Let a partner who thinks he knows more run the show. Meanwhile, go off and do your thing. Your creativity will need to emerge in order to find the right path. Tonight: Talk over dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ You have a list of to-do's, and you just might toss them to the wind. You might discover that staying on track isn't a goal after certain events or discussions. Defer to associates and let them run with the ball. Tonight: Sort through your options.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Whether you are the source or someone else is, the unexpected occurs when you least anticipate it. Your flexibility is tested, as a boomerang heads in your direction. Stay easy when dealing with a difficult partner or associate. Tonight: Focus on one item at a time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ If you encounter obstacle after obstacle as you are trying to get out the door, maybe you need to understand the message: Stay home. Some days are best spent not fighting city hall. A child or new friend would adore the extra time. Tonight: Act as if there is no tomorrow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You could be upset with news that suddenly is dropped on you. Know that you can handle it, and get past the immediate problem. Your ability to move past a hassle might need some extra help. Cocoon if you want to get anything done. Tonight: Say "yes" to living.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Investigate a financial offer or issue. You are working with a double-edged sword. Recognize the risk you are taking, and decide if it is worth it. Only you truly understand the damages as well as the plusses. Tonight: Join a friend and visit.

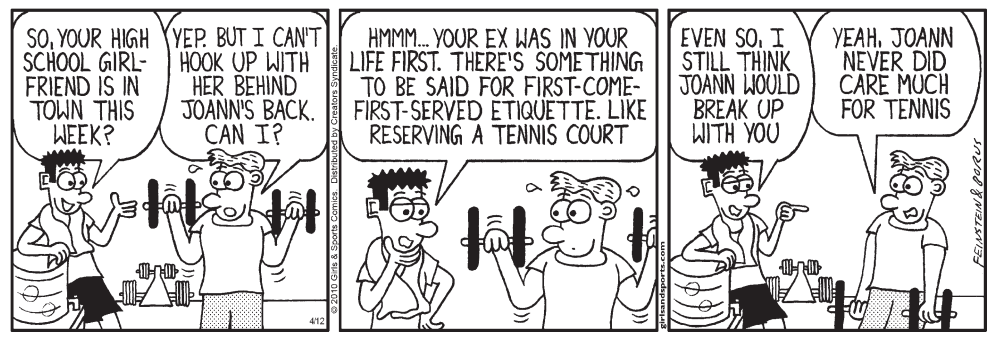

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You continue to surprise others. The problem comes in establishing strong, trusting relationships. If people's nerves are always on edge with you, it could be difficult to really relate. Is the cost of this behavior worth it? Tonight: Pay bills first.

Happy birthday

This year, break patterns and open up to innovative thinking. Many times you could be shocked by your choices. A new life cycle begins in January 2011. Don't carry any unneeded baggage. Accept change, and you will float through issues. If you are single, you might have an unusual amount of suitors. Date until you meet the right person. If you are attached, you become more assertive than in the past. Expect a reaction. A fellow ARIES knows how to "light your fire."

GETTING STARTED

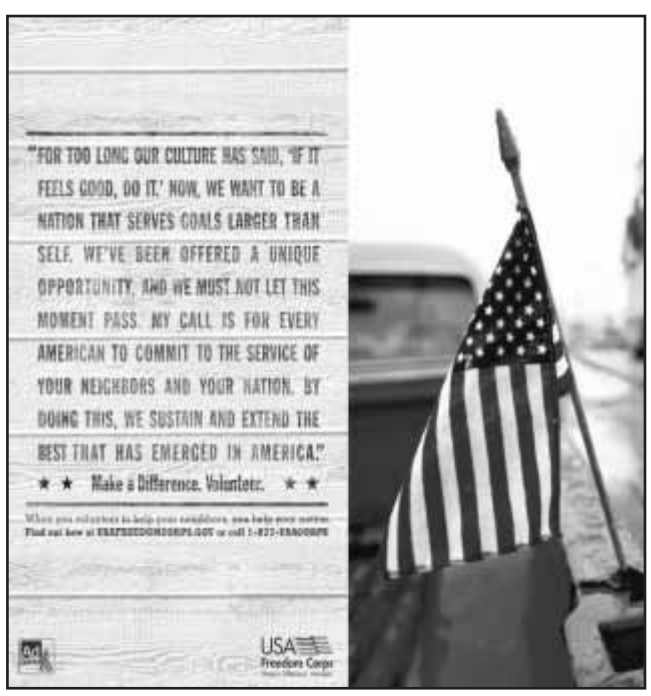

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Seventh-grader Rachael Greer was suspended from River Valley Middle School in Jefferson, Ind., in February, even though she apparently did exactly what her parents and the school want kids to do ("just say 'no'" to drugs). When a classmate handed her a prescription pill in gym class, she immediately handed it right back. Nonetheless, an assistant principal, after investigating the incident, suspended her for five days because she had touched the pill. (He expressed regret but said it is school policy.)

■ A recent epiphany caused millionaire Austrian businessman Karl Rabeder, 47, to be depressed about his wealth, and by February, he was in the process of giving away an estate worth the equivalent of about $5 million. Two luxury properties are for sale, with proceeds going to charities he established in Central and South America, and he plans to move into a small hut in Innsbruck. "Money is counterproductive," he told a reporter. "I had the feeling I was working as a slave for things that I did not wish or need." (According to London's Daily Telegraph, Rabeder's wife was with him at the time of the epiphany, but the story curiously is silent about her view of his decision.)
