History Spotlight: The West Coast's First Concrete Pier

BY JIM HARRIS
Special to the Daily Press

Organ music emanates from the carousel building while inside hand-carved wooden horses race in an endless circle. Laughter resonates through the air as wooden deck boards creak beneath people's footsteps, the rhythmic roar of the waves never far away. A cool breeze carries the aroma of hamburgers, broiled fish, and fresh - popped popcorn, all mixing splendidly with the salt air. A roller coaster thunders along its track as passengers scream with delight. Seagulls chatter above erratic rows

A two-story office building is replacing a parking lot on Main Street.

The 4,388 square-foot building will rise at 2740 Main St. in Ocean Park. It will be fronted with gray brick veneer surrounding floor-to-ceiling windows framed in black steel. The second level is set back and sits below a rooftop deck, which features an aluminum trellis that supports solar panels. The project will also include 19 parking spots and several trees.

Local students aren't learning science by the book anymore.

Instead of memorizing facts or filling out worksheets, Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District (SMMUSD) students are building their own solar water heaters or extracting DNA from strawberries. Will Rogers celebrates Earth Week

ANGEL CARRERAS
Daily Press Staff Writer

A local school will be taking a hand in stretching their green thumbs this week.

Will Rogers Elementary will turn a celebration of Earth Day into Earth Week, a weeklong celebration of sustainability efforts the school has been involved in. Will Rogers' Earth Week kicks off Monday, April 22.

Activities will include watching a video from the school's Green Team, learning Green factoids throughout the week, focusing on using new reusable water bottles handed out by the school and a culminating "plogging" (pick up litter + jogging) event Friday.

Suzie Roth, a design tech and communications consultant and Green Team lead for Will Rogers, helped spearhead the week-long effort with SMMUSD sustainability coordinator Caroline Coster.

Coster says, in her eyes, every day is Earth Day, every week Earth Week within the district.

"Everyday we continue with our sustainability efforts and education," Coster said. "Will Rogers has been a leading site in many of our pilot programs, especially in waste reduction."

The City of Malibu Puts Out Call for Artists for the City's "Outside the Box" Utility Box Public Art Project

The City of Malibu is looking for talented artists to bring their vision and craft to the City's utility boxes. Featured artists will design original art to cover either a traffic signal or a wastewater treatment box located in the Civic Center area of Malibu.

By creatively transforming a typically mundane structure into a work of art, the painted utility boxes will broaden the understanding and appreciation of the Malibu culture and environment through public art. The power in this art lies in its ability to intrigue, stir emotion and inspire.

The selected artist will be paid $250 for supplies at the beginning of the project and $1,000 at the completion of the project, per utility box, for their original art. This budget will cover all of the artist's costs, including artwork, supplies, installation and touch-ups, if needed, for two years. The project is open to artists in the region encompassing Malibu and the surrounding area.

Any artists interested in applying should review the complete project guidelines at MalibuCity.org/BoxArt prior to submitting an application. The deadline to submit an application and supplemental information is Friday, May 17, 2019. The City of Malibu Cultural Arts Commission will select the artists for each utility box. The artists selected for this project will be contacted in June 2019 and will be expected to begin work shortly thereafter. For more information, contact Community Services Deputy Director KRiesgo@malibucity.org or call 310-456-2489, ext. 350.

City of Malibu Named "Recycled Water Agency of the Year" for Civic Center Water Treatment Facility

The WateReuse Association, California chapter named the City of Malibu the 2019 "Recycled Water Agency of the Year" for its Civic Center Water Treatment Facility (CCWTF), which was completed and started processing wastewater into clean, recycled water for irrigation in October, 2018.

"The City of Malibu and its people have always defined themselves as innovators of environmental protections and programs," said Mayor Jefferson "Zuma Jay" Wagner. "Our new water treatment facility puts us ahead of the curve of smart, environmentally sound water management practices while combating the realities of climate change and drought here in California."

The award, for a small community with beneficial water reuse of less than 1,000 acre-feet per year, was announced during the WateReuse Association's Annual Conference Awards Luncheon on March 18, 2019.

The WateReuse Association is the nation's only trade association solely dedicated to advancing laws, policy, funding, and public acceptance of recycled water. WateReuse represents a coalition of utilities that recycle water, businesses that support the development of recycled water projects, and consumers of recycled water. Learn more at https://watereuse.org.

The Recycled Water Agency of the Year awards recognize small, medium, and large entities that have developed recycled water, on a significant level, as an alternative water source within their service area. Recipients demonstrate leadership, creativity, and persistence in developing a comprehensive program, as well as outreach to the community to expand awareness and implementation of water recycling.

The City of Malibu also received the 2018 Project of the Year Award from the Southern California Chapter of the American Public Works Association (APWA) for the CCWTF.

Main Street," associate planner Gina Szilak wrote in a report to the Architectural Review Board (ARB), which will provide feedback on the design of the building at its Monday meeting.

Szilak wrote that the building will fit in on Main Street.

"Main Street from Pico Boulevard to Marine Street retains an eclectic one-story character of a 1920s street though most of the buildings have been renovated ... along the ground floor," she wrote. "The proposed building's mass and scale and its relationship to the street will be comparable to the existing Main Street fabric although the building's appearance is modern."

Two much-discussed projects will also reach the ARB on Monday. The Rainbow Garden, an educational garden and kitchen for elementary schoolers that will replace a vacant apartment building at Montana Avenue and 4th Street, gained approval from the Planning Commission in January despite concerns from neighbors about noise and parking.

Commissioners praised the idea of providing free food education to local children and asked applicants Thao and Sherman Ma to refine the design to convey a consistent landscape concept and make the side of lot facing 4th Street more pedestrian-friendly.

Since the Planning Commission review, the Mas' architect, Marmol Radziner, has added windows to the sides of the building facing 4th Street and the alley. Radziner also added wood panels and red trim to the previously all-black, corrugated metal facade, and interspersed the black chicken wire fence that was proposed with hedges, wood panels and low walls of black brick.

The landscaping has also been redefined. Renderings submitted to the Planning Commission showed an edible garden extending to the sidewalk, but new renderings include a stonefruit orchard facing Montana Avenue.

"The proposed garden strives to integrate a strong landscaping plan designed to engage children with a low-key building that is bright, airy and functional," senior planner Elizabeth Bar-El wrote. "The building materials have been selected to reinforce the purpose of the school as a learning garden."

The long-awaited City Yards revamp will come before the board Monday. Most essential services the City of Santa Monica provides operate out of City Yards, including street maintenance, custodial services and traffic operations. It's been slated for a $115 million reboot since 2015 and the Planning Commission granted the project a development review permit on Jan. 16.

Michigan Avenue along City Yards will look altogether different. The long, windowless building will be replaced with several buildings interspersed with fenced openings that are meant to provide windows into daily life at the yards. Landscaping, including trees, will be planted along the stretch, which will terminate at a plaza with seating.

Bar-El wrote that the plaza is a major improvement over the current entrance to the yards, but will need some design changes.

"The plaza design may consist of too many raised planters and may lack additional details that would improve its use as a functional plaza and gathering place," she wrote. "For instance, benches could be rearranged for pairs or groups of people to sit together, and trees could be strategically placed to provide shade. In addition, the design as proposed might create hiding places."

Bar-El also wrote that the buildings alone Michigan should feature some points of visual interest. At its January meeting, the Planning Commission asked the ARB to consider installing art on and between the buildings along Michigan Avenue.

"Staff is recommending ... providing some individuality to the Facilities Buildings reflective of their distinct purposes through providing windows, differentiating building material and or incorporation of art," she wrote."

The board will meet at 7 p.m. on Monday at City Hall.

about concepts. After making solar water heaters, students at Will Rogers Elementary School collected temperature data to understand which materials in the heaters made the water heat up the most and wrote scripts of commercials to sell their heaters.

"We're looking at practices scientists really use every day, like asking questions, using tools and analyzing data," said Dr. Irene Gonzalez-Castillo, director of curriculum and instruction.

SMMUSD has been working to incorporate the Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS) since 2016 and set a three-year plan in motion last fall. The NGSS were developed by a consortium of 26 states and are intended to help students understand core scientific concepts and the scientific process of developing, testing and explaining ideas. California adopted the standards in 2013 and released the California Science Framework in 2016 for districts across the state to implement.

"NGSS really makes it explicit that it's just as important for students to learn about data collection and observing as what's in their schoolbooks," said Laura Simon, Will Rogers' STEM coordinator.

Teachers from SMMUSD elementary and middle schools provided the Board of Education with an update on NGSS implementation at the board's Apr. 3 meeting. High school teachers will address the board on May 16.

The district is shifting science instruction to emphasize the real-world applications of science and engineering, how different scientific disciplines are interwoven and learning through inquiry, Gonzalez-Castillo said. Teachers typically begin a unit by asking students to observe a phenomenon, which they then research and build projects off of. Students read, write, speak and listen about the topic throughout the process.

Lincoln Middle School science teacher Marianna O'Brien said the approach is meant to give students hands-on experience with each topic.

"You can't just know a type of chemical reaction, you have to see it happen and … interpret the data to be considered proficient," O'Brien said. "You can't know science unless you do it. It would be like someone just reading a lot of cookbooks and considering themselves a chef."

UCLA and California State University, Northridge have been helping teachers roll out the new pedagogy throughout the school year and the partnership will continue next year. Elementary schools will now identify science teachers leaders on each campus and pilot new instructional materials, while middle schoolers will refine curriculum guides and develop benchmark assessments for students.

PIER

of fishing poles propped up along the blue railing, joining in the hope for a successful day's catch. Dancing lights invite passersby to board the Ferris wheel...

Who can imagine this pier as anything less than a fanciful getaway? Ironically, its original purpose was far from magical — it was born as a simple public utility. The growth of Santa Monica in the early twentieth century forced the city to confront a very serious sewage disposal problem. After considering several options, officials agreed that the best method was to cast it out to sea.

L.G. Osgood of the California Ornamental Brick Company recommended using concrete to construct the pier. Wooden piers were notorious victims both of the weather and of infestation by wood - burrowing clams called shipworms or Teredo Worms. The City Council concurred, and committed to the first concrete pier on the West Coast. On September 28, 1907, the public voted in favor of a $150,000 bond to build the proposed pier.

Of eleven plans submitted for the new pier, the City Council chose local architect Edwin H. Warner's design, which proposed a 1,600-foot-long pier supporting an eighteen-inch outfall pipe running underneath the entire length of the pier's floor, inclined so that gravity would carry the treated waste to the ocean. The plan included a treatment plant on the beach at the foot of the pier, designed to purify the sewage and pump it into the outfall pipe for disposal.

The construction contract was awarded to the Stutzer Cement and Grading Company and on April 8, 1908, work on the new pier began. Journalists arrived from across the country to observe the construction of the West Coast's unique new concrete pier, and in turn became well acquainted with the charming seaside community where it stood.

On August 18, 1909 the new pier was completed with only a few minor finishing details remaining, and Mayor T.H. Dudley declared September 9 the official opening day of the new Santa Monica Municipal Pier.

Thousands of people attended the grand opening and dedication ceremony, a full day of festivities and activities commemorating the City's magnum opus — the West Coast's first concrete pier. The celebration commenced with a parade that began at Santa Monica City Hall and ended at the foot of the new pier, where Mayor Dudley dedicated it and the featured speaker, State Senator Lee C. Gates commended the citizens of Santa Monica for their energy, spirit and courage for using groundbreaking technology. Santa Monica, he declared, had set the precedent for all future piers.

Rogers, wanted to encourage more students within the school — and in a hopeful domino effect, students throughout the district — to enjoy themselves while preserving the planet.

"The goal of the week is fun and engagement," Roth said. "I hope it encourages staff and students to participate."

Roth was inspired to help with Earth Week after feeling Will Rogers was lacking in some of their landfill diversion methods.

One of her goals is getting students to commit to an actively greener lifestyle and being more mindful of their waste and usage.

Instead of using a disposable plastic spoon, she'd encourage students to bring a spoon and napkin from home. "Reusing, reducing, reusing and purchasing less," Roth said are her tenets.

"[The week] is a good tool for educating kids because they see [waste]. It's not something that's not very tangible like electricity usage. They can see waste. If you take 25 bags of landfill waste reduce that with recycling and compost to 2 bags, kids organically jump in and get involved."

Will Rogers has already been in several pilots of the district's sustainability efforts, such as water conservation, perfecting district waste set up in cafeterias and a food recovery.

All these efforts are bearing (compostable) fruit.

"It's been cool to see," Roth said. "Second and third graders sorting trash, taking it on and understanding. They see things work and how they make an impact."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (April 15)

Your gumption will be invigorated, and your dreams never seemed more possible – largely because of your "no excuses, no quitting" attitude. You'll change something in the next three weeks that makes it more possible to devote yourself to your work. Surprises will further enliven the journey, including support people and funding. Virgo and Cancer adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 40, 1, 38, 20 and 16.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You're not threatened by other talented people, because your creativity allows you to see how melding your talents together makes everyone shine brighter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). This game you're playing requires strategy. Think far ahead, and then work backward to determine how to get there, imagining the variables you're likely to encounter along the way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). What's ailing you may seem like a matter of psychology, but it can be handled just as easily with a rearrangement of schedule and some other practical matters. It's all about your system. Make things easier for yourself.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Atmosphere can make or break things such as dates, dinner parties and even simple conversations. The good news is that you have a lot of power over this. If a place doesn't feel right, just take the action elsewhere.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The manual for fiction writers suggests that in a good story, characters drive the plot and not the other way around. Similarly, today you decide who you want to be, and your actions advance the plot.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). This is a new you, so clear your environment of all the unwanted reminders of the old you doing the old habits, and fill the space with symbols, tools and fuels that represent the new you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Once upon a time, the role you're in now seemed like a distant impossibility, and now you've set your sights on another equally improbable (yet eminently possible) reality.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). How you feel about the decision right now is different from how you'll feel tomorrow and next year. Keeping the perspective of time in mind helps you set future you up for success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). No matter what the problem is, you can be sure that someone else has had it or is having it right now. So find out who's in the club, and see what you can learn. This one will be solved more easily than imagined.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). When people see you the way you want to be seen, it feels somewhat satisfying at first, if a little hollow. That's because there's nothing quite as fulfilling as being fully embraced for who you really are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). What you see is never all that is. Magic shows are built on this premise, and so are drama, branding and dating. Your edge today is your curiosity. You'll follow it to answers that are out of the frame and behind the scenes.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Once you're in temptation's living room, it will seem impolite to turn down the offerings. You're lucky that you know where temptation lives. Don't even go down that street.

Self-Conscious Square of Venus and Jupiter

At the time of this writing, the self-awareness of computers and most of the animal kingdom still hovers around zero, with the exception of a handful of mirror-gazing birds, fish and the like. For better or worse, humans seem to have the lion's share of self-consciousness on the planet, which is amplified during this square of Venus and Jupiter.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION: "I'm a Virgo whose self-esteem is really low, and I'm depressed. My husband works all the time. I'm a virtual assistant by day, and I take care of our school-age son in the afternoon and evenings. All the household chores fall on me, and I don't think I do a very good job. I love my husband, and I know he's doing his best so we can keep our heads above water financially. But it doesn't change how tired, hopeless and lonely I feel most of the time. What can I do to get through this strange time?"

Virgos are among the finest caregivers of the zodiac, though they sometimes forget to take care of themselves first. They often take on too much, with too high an expectation, and succeed at it nonetheless – but at what cost? It is particularly challenging for Virgo mothers to make their own needs a priority. But if you're not loving life, you're not setting a good example for your son, either. Bottom line: You need to make yourself happy every day as a rule. So make a list of what you love and what makes you smile and gives you pleasure, and do something on it every single day, no exceptions.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

Seth Rogen was a teen stand-up comedian who dropped out of school to make his Hollywood dreams come true. Born when the sun, Mercury and Jupiter were all in daring Aries, the director, writer and movie star now enjoys A-list perks and responsibilities. Look for him in the upcoming comedy "Long Shot," in which he charms a presidential candidate played by Charlize Theron.
