Samohi entrepreneurs compete for cash

Students learn business skills through Project ECHO competition

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

The creators of a tracking app, a solar technology startup and a cosmetics business are all vying for cash to support their entrepreneurial efforts. And no, they're not going on "Shark Tank."

The people behind the fledgling companies are Santa Monica High School students, and they're participating in a competition organized by a local nonprofit organization to promote entrepreneurial skills.

The three Samohi teams will be among about 45 finalist groups at Project ECHO's event Sunday at the UCLA Anderson School of Management, where volunteer judges will determine the winners of a combined $6,250 in prize money.

The competition is the culmination of a monthslong program through which high school students in five Southern California counties come up with business plans, harnessing their talents while developing skills that could help them in the future.

"They're thinking about what a business is, they're thinking about who's going purchase their services or goods and they're learning how to market to a demographic," said Diane Quast, Project ECHO's exec-

Santa Monica Public Library presents 'An Armchair Visit to Monet's Giverny with Rebecca Bricker'

Santa Monica Public Library invites you on "An Armchair Visit to Monet's Giverny," a virtual journey hosted by travel writer Rebecca Bricker on Thursday, April 21, 2016 at 6:30 p.m. in the Main Library's Martin Luther King, Jr. Auditorium, 601 Santa Monica Blvd.

Join us as author Rebecca Bricker takes us on a tour of Monet's France, via the sights and characters depicted in her new book. The Secret of Marie is an art-history mystery set in Giverny, France, where Claude Monet spent the last half of his life. Marie was the favorite model of American Impressionist artist and Monet mentee Theodore Robinson (1852-1896). Marie appeared in a number of Robinson's paintings, but little is known about her, which has perplexed art historians for years. In her presentation, Rebecca shares vintage and present-day photographs of Giverny, as well as a significant discovery she made in her role as an art-history detective while doing research for this book. She also provides tips for those interested in traveling to Giverny.

Rebecca Bricker is a memoirist, novelist, travel writer and blogger, who lives out of her suitcase but finds herself at home in Florence, Italy, and Pasadena, California. Her other books are a memoir entitled "Tales from Tavanti: An American Woman's Mid-Life in Italy" and the novel "Not a True Story."

This program is free and all ages are welcome. Space is limited and on a first-arrival basis. This is an event of The Living Room ...a place for adults program series. Downtown's housing conundrum

OUR RECENTLY ADOPTED CITY ZONING Ordinance envisions adding dense new housing in the downtown area. We can now see how well that housing goal is being met. What is undoubtedly true is that recent housing approvals have been massive. In the past nine months the Planning Commission has permitted four large downtown mixed-use projects (see table on Page 5).

To put these numbers into context, we can now answer some basic questions:

1) HOW BIG ARE THESE PROJECTS?

The new area approved is equivalent to a second Santa Monica Place being added to our downtown. These additions will substantially change how our downtown is experienced, particularly in the southeast corner where two of the projects bracket the Lincoln-Colorado gateway.

2) HOW MUCH WILL THESE PROJECTS INCREASE OUR CITY"S POPULATION?

If we assume an approximate population density of 1.7 people per unit (given the higher than typical bedroom count of these buildings), this represents about an 857-person increase, a 1 percent increase in the City's current population of 94,000 and is actually a 25 percent increase in the downtown population. This is a steep increase - in less than a year, equal to 33 percent more than L.A. County's annual average population increase over the last five years. Looking forward, the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) anticipates Santa Monica's population to grow by about 453 people per year till 2040. By that standard we have just approved housing at about twice the projected annual growth rate.

3) HOW DO THESE PROJECTS FIT INTO THE DOWNTOWN COMMUNITY PLAN (DCP)?

The DCP expects to add between 155 and 201 units downtown each year over the next 15 years. So in less than a year we have already approved three years worth of new housing.

4) HOW WILL THESE PROJECTS AFFECT TRAFFIC?

Almost 3/4 of the residents who reside in our downtown commute via single occupancy cars each day. We hypothesize that this tendency is not likely to change soon for two simple reasons: the EXPO line does not provide true connectivity to all the workplaces of our new residents, and the high rents charged for these new units will be primarily only affordable to people who own cars and are inclined to use them. Automobile use will increase as more new residents crowd into downtown. This is an area already projected to have 24 of its 44 studied intersections operating at "fair" to "failure" level within the next 14 years (15 of them are already operating at "fair" to "failure" level). However the good news is that these projects have as many bicycle parking spaces as car parking spaces. So hopefully, increased bicycle use and the opening of the Metro will somewhat mitigate our future traffic woes.

5) HOW SUSTAINABLE ARE THESE BUILDINGS?

These buildings will perform much better than comparable buildings built in the last decade because of stringent new energy codes. Particular attention has been given to water conservation, and some buildings will utilize the street run-off from the City's stormwater recycling system for landscape irrigation. However, rainwater is only available on a sporadic basis. It is unfortunate that the new residential projects' photovoltaic roof areas are so small in relation to their large power demands (elevators, lights, air-conditioning etc.) that they will generate less than 10 percent of their energy needs. They are also woefully unprepared for the expected surge in electric car recharging demand. Thus the new buildings are nowhere near the California stated goal of being "net-zero buildings" that generate as much power as they use.

6) HOW WILL THESE BUILDINGS AFFECT OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

Estimating school population is an inexact science. Currently the downtown population contains very few children. We may expect up to 15 percent of the new residents to be of school age (16 percent of Los Angeles County's population is school age). With no local elementary school easily accessible within the downtown boundaries, many of these new students will have to be driven to school each day, thereby increasing traffic. According to the Downtown Environmental Impact Report the closest elementary school, Roosevelt, is at capacity, and is unprepared for any expansion.

7) HOW WILL THESE BUILDINGS HELP AFFORDABILITY?

The good news is that about 23 percent of the units are affordably deed-restricted. SCAG would like Santa Monica to build 239 units per year till 2021. In fact, in only nine months, our City has approved two years worth of the SCAG housing targets. It should be noted that the 64 affordable units mandated for the 500 Broadway project are planned for a separate parcel on the eastern edge of the new downtown. These units are still in the approval process. Thus, they are not included in the area and parking data of the chart above.

Because of the desirability of Santa Monica, increasing the number of units will not reduce overall housing prices. The wealthy few will always outbid the middle class or poor for any available units that are not deed-restricted. This is not unusual when supply is limited (in our case by being a built-out, very densely populated city) and the demand is effectively infinite. Santa Monica is coveted by the wealthy of the world. We cannot satiate all the demand for beachside housing. Developers salivate at the possibilities of creating new market rate housing, hotels and offices in our town while throwing us a few bones of low cost housing. Yes, there is an affordability crisis in Santa Monica. But we must be clear - we cannot produce enough affordable units for a full spectrum of incomes in our city even if we saturate the city with multiple "Plaza's At Santa Monica".

8) IN SUMMARY: WHAT IS THE TAKE-HOME FROM THE LATEST ROUND OF DOWNTOWN APPROVALS?

A) By any rational metric, Santa Monica is exceeding its housing goals. If we were to approve no other housing for the next two or three years, we would still be meeting our fair share of regional housing.

MIXED-USE: The Planning Commission has OK'd four large downtown projects in recent months.

B) Our City government must consider the burden that is shouldered as we provide more than our fair share of new housing in our built-out town. Our downtown is increasingly impacted and our mobility devices (streets, busses, bikes, light rail) have not yet proven to be able to absorb this growth without escalating gridlock. EXPO's impact is still unknown: it will surely be beneficial over the coming decades but traffic jams in Santa Monica will not magically end on May 20. They may actually increase because of the train's effect on intersections. The City's water supplies are not growing as fast as the potential water demand. If our population grows at about 1 percent a year, yet we need to reduce our water consumption 8 percent a year to reach self-sufficiency by 2020, then this growth does not help our water sustainability targets. Likewise, schools and open spaces are not ready for this increased burden. In short, this much growth, if continued, is unsustainable and should be slowed down to allow our infrastructure (in the broadest sense), parks and schools to catch up. All the costs of this growth are eventually borne directly or indirectly by the city's taxpayers and by the environment we all live in.

In conclusion, there is no housing production shortage in Santa Monica. There are those who are using the myth of an alleged housing shortage as a Trojan horse. They expect to cram an unsustainable amount of building into our town to increase their profits at public expense. These developers and their supporters expect our residents to meekly bear the burden of this ruanaway unsustainable growth. They want us to ignore the sustainability and livability impacts of that burden.

the state had failed to show California's hiring and firing rules were unconstitutional.

"The court's job is merely to determine whether the statutes are constitutional, not if they are 'a good idea,'" presiding Justice Roger Boren wrote in the 3-0 opinion.

A Los Angeles Superior Court judge who found evidence to "shock the conscience" had sided with students two years ago who claimed that incompetent teachers were almost impossible to fire because of tenure laws and that schools in poor neighborhoods were dumping grounds for bad teachers.

The ruling was stayed pending appeal, so it never went into effect, but if upheld had threatened to shake up public schools that teach more than 6 million students from kindergarten through 12th grade statewide.

A lawyer for the plaintiffs said they were disappointed, but called it a "temporary setback" and expected to appeal to the California Supreme Court.

"The Court of Appeal's decision mistakenly blames local school districts for the egregious constitutional violations students are suffering each and every day," attorney Theodore Boutrous Jr. said in a written statement. "The irrational, arbitrary, and abominable laws at issue in this case shackle school districts and impose severe and irreparable harm on students."

In reversing that decision, the appellate panel said the trial highlighted problems with tenure and layoff statutes and showed the "deleterious impact" of staffing decision on poor and minority students. But it said state law wasn't to blame.

"Some principals rid their schools of highly ineffective teachers by transferring them to other schools, often to low-income schools," Boren wrote. "This phenomenon is extremely troubling and should not be allowed to occur, but it does not inevitably flow from the challenged statutes."

The closely watched case highlighted tensions between teacher unions, school leaders, lawmakers and well-funded education reform groups over whether policies like tenure and firing teachers with the least seniority keep ineffective instructors in the classroom, particularly in already low-performing schools.

Teachers have long argued that tenure protects them from being fired on a whim, preserves academic freedom and helps attract talented teachers to a profession that doesn't pay well.

Attorney Michael Rubin, who defended teachers unions in the case, said the court's decision was "huge."

"It puts to rest — we believe forever — the constitutional attacks on job security for teachers," Rubin said.

The Vergara v. State of California lawsuit, including Beatriz Vergara among the public school student plaintiffs, was backed by Students Matter, a nonprofit group founded by Silicon Valley entrepreneur David Welch.

Attorneys for the state and teachers unions had argued that the case was never about helping students and should be overturned because no evidence was presented showing the disputed statutes were the cause of educational inequalities.

The case has inspired others like it.

After the trial court ruling in Vergara, a suit was filed in New York contending that teacher tenure and layoffs by seniority deprive students of a sound, basic education as guaranteed under the state constitution. Lawyers for New York's teachers union have asked for the case to be dismissed.

Before the ruling came down, a similar lawsuit was filed in Minnesota by a group of parents and a national education reform group.

ENTREPRENEURS: Samohi students have crafted business plans for Project ECHO's competition.

utive director. "They're learning how to research where they want their business to be and how to run a social media campaign.

"For that kid who's a quirky doodler who didn't know what they could do with their drawings, now they're the person behind the marketing platform and creating a logo. The girl who was a math genius, she's now the CFO. Whatever their skill is, they know what they can do with that skill when they graduate from high school."

Santa Monica has played a major role in the growth of Project ECHO, an acronym for Entrepreneurial Concepts Hands On. Samohi was one of the first area high schools to partner with the organization, which was launched 20 years ago.

With the help of the nonprofit, which was originally created to help high school students start on-campus businesses, Santa Monica High students launched a flower shop, a catering company and a valet service.

A former Samohi teacher, Terry Jones, later helped Project ECHO develop the curriculum that it now offers to high school throughout the region.

Starting each school year, students attend business boot camps and mentor days. The aspiring entrepreneurs form groups, develop formal business plans and figure out how they would sell their products and services. About 75 teams attended the semifinals March 13 at Loyola Marymount University.

The remaining finalists are now vying for top-three recognition in three separate categories: technology, retail and food/beverage.

At Samohi, Amy Matsushima, Emily Flavin and Leslie Vasquez devised software called Attendachip that would digitally track school attendance. Coby Sayyah and Mike Choi conceived Solartron, which would harness solar energy to control vehicle temperatures. And Madison Ambriz and Emily Dorsey came up with Healthy Skin Cosmetics, which includes an aloe-infused moisturizer for sensitive skin and a concealer that features tee tree oil.

Samohi teacher Mariam Shafiey serves as their advisor. Evan Milnor, an MBA candidate at UCLA, has been available as a mentor.

Real-world business leaders will serve as judges at the upcoming contest, assessing the students' written proposals and oral presentations to decide which projects they would be most likely to fund.

"A lot of coaching and mentoring goes on between the leaders and the students," Quast said. "It's a phenomenal networking opportunity."

ent and also different in many other ways. Thank goodness!"

But along with the compliments she would receive, she would also get comments that she didn't find so complimentary.

"As a fighter, I was told often that I was too pretty to be a boxer," she said. "Which really meant in their mind, that I was not capable … fast forward five years and it dawned on me that I was not the only girl/woman experiencing these comments. There were business owners, surfers, managers, racecar drivers, writers, bodybuilders and the list goes on."

And so, due to her experiences with this kind of response to her boxing, Williams created the Too Pretty brand in late 2015 with a few lines of T-shirts and halter tops. "They were a hit. No pun intended," Williams said.

Williams has since taken her brand to social media.

"I feel like in order to keep the brand authentic and create a community and culture around it, social media must be one of the main avenues," Williams said. "With social media you can engage with those who follow you and that is what should be happening. The #tooprettymovement launched April 1 and has really taken off. Our social media platforms started to grow and the #tooprettymovement began."

Williams that that, currently her movement is in full effect with an Instagram project.

"Girls and women are posting a black and white photo of them holding a cardboard sign on which they have written what they are 'Never Too Pretty' to do. They use hash tags #nevertoopretty, #tooprettymovement and #thebeautyinstrength and explain what it means to them. We then ask them to send us the pics and text and post [them] on our profile."

Amanda McGrew, a P.E. teacher and basketball coach at the Willows Community School in Culver City, got involved with the Too Pretty brand after taking an introductory lesson at William's boxing club.

"She could tell I was an athlete of some sort, and she reached out to me and asked if I would be interested in discussing the brand and what it stands for," McGrew said. "Being so involved in youth physical education and athletics, I thought it was an incredible message for young kids, females especially."

McGrew said that the brand is important because it gives young girls a new perspective.

"It allows them to be comfortable in their own skin, and reminds them that they can be whatever they want to be and should be proud of it. The power of social media has done wonders for the Too Pretty Brand movement. It allows young girls all over the world to see other women of all ages, demographics, and backgrounds who are proud to be who they are.

"The other women involved with the Too Pretty Brand are amazing role models for females who might struggle fighting against a stereotype or a stigma that they can't seem to get away from. I have honored and proud to be part of such an incredible brand, with a message that makes me want to keep working hard and connecting with my students and athletes.

Williams hope for Too Pretty is that it touches those girls and women who are in or thinking about getting involved in something that is not traditionally "for gals."

"To empower them so that they know they are 'never too pretty' to do anything! Financially my hope is to grow large enough that I can support girls and women out there who are starting something. It could be a business, an art project, a sport, etc. Overall the goal is to support all of my sisters out there of any age."

Williams is launching a Kickstarter campaign for the brand May 1. The rewards that will be available are all new to the brand, including a new youth t-shirt, women's sleevless flowy shirt, women's slouchy long sleeved shirt, men's long sleeved hoody t-shirt, Too Pretty designed boxing gloves and hand wraps as well as a training day with Williams. All of the items will have unique gold designs and the slouchy long sleeved shirt will have a one-of-a-kind design created by artist Kyra Kendall.

Mountain lion found at area high school

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Students and teachers at a Los Angeles high school missed their lunch break Friday after a mountain lion strolled onto campus and tried to join them.

The big cat was spotted walking across the quad at John F. Kennedy High School shortly after noon. Instead of sitting down to eat, students and teachers quickly secured themselves in their classrooms and called authorities.

Police officers and wildlife officials responded, and the mountain lion dashed off campus and into a nearby backyard.

Officers eventually tranquilized the large animal, which wandered around the yard for several minutes looking confused as it tried to find a way around a fence that kept it off a residential street.

Eventually it sat down and dozed off. Officers moved in to remove it after it was fully asleep.

It wasn't clear how the animal got on campus. It is in the city's Granada Hills area, not far from foothills leading to rugged backcountry.

Still, the mountain lion would have had to make it through a large residential neighborhood and around a freeway to get to the school.

A recording left on the school's voicemail said, "Students are all secure in their classrooms. Proper authorities are on campus to remove the animal."

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON APRIL 2, 2016 AT ABOUT 10:45 P.M.

Officers responded to a disturbance call at 1442 2nd St., Buca Di Bepo. When they arrived, the restaurant manager pointed out a woman inside who yelling at other customers and refusing to leave. Officers were able to get her outside of the restaurant and detain her to find out what was wrong. As they spoke with her, it became obvious she was very intoxicated. The woman, Jean Keenliside of Santa Monica, began to walk away from the officers, but the officers tried to stop her because they believed she was too drunk to care for herself. As they grabbed her arm to take her into custody, the woman swung her purse and struck the officers. The officers were ultimately able to place her under arrest for public intoxication and assault on a police officer for hitting them with her purse. Bail was set at $20,000.

Sudoku

Fill in the blank cells using numbers 1 to 9. Each number can appear only once in each row, column, and 3x3 block. Use logic and process of elimination to solve the puzzle. The difficulty level ranges from (easiest) to (hardest).

Difficulty Level ★★★★

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Albuquerque police encountered Leonard Lopez, 26, inside a Chevy Cobalt car (that was not his) just after midnight on March 30 after neighbors reported a man screaming inside, flashing the car's headlights. A panicked Lopez was upside down, with his feet on the dashboard and his head and shoulders wedged under the steering wheel, hands and arms tucked inside his sweatshirt. He was charged with burglary, and police guessed he was probably going through opiate withdrawal.

Save time for a friend, Aries

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You might be prone to having so much fun that you lose all sense of time. You will continue to do the unexpected, which seems to make you feel independent and free, whether you are or not. Indulge a child or loved one. Tonight: Save time for a close friend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Pressure builds, as you can only be housebound so long or deal with a domestic matter past a certain period of time. You'll gain insight into others as well as yourself. Express a nurturing quality. Tonight: Be discriminating when determining your plans and company.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Make an effort to explain yourself to someone who frequently expresses at least surprise at your behavior and actions. Sometimes this person might be shocked. Tonight: Entertain at home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Juggle your finances, though try to avoid robbing Peter to pay Paul. That type of situation can only get worse. If you don't see an answer immediately, beyond getting a second job and/or cutting back, go get advice. You might be a lot happier if you do. Tonight: Hang out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Use the daytime hours for anything important or serious. You will find the end result surprising and not what you'd anticipated. Even if you doubt it, in the long run you will see how much better off you are with the unexpected finale. News from a distance could easily provoke some travel. Tonight: Treat a loved one to dinner at a special place.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Make it OK to vanish during the daylight hours. You don't need to confess what your plans are. You might just want to snooze or visit with an old friend. Tonight: Take on a challenge.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Use the daylight hours to get together with friends or indulge in doing some activity you might not usually do. How about scheduling a massage? Whatever your choices might be, you'll feel great. Tonight: Not to be found.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Once more, others follow your lead. You call the shots, whether you know it or not. Do stop and check in with an older friend or relative. Your time might be precious, but you have no idea how much your attention is appreciated. Tonight: Paint the town red.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You love adventure. Why not take off for one of your explorations to see a new area or visit a friend at a distance? You need to get out of your normal setting. You will be surprised at how relaxed you will be once you return. You'll have a renewed perspective. Tonight: Plan on being out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ A close loved one enjoys being on a one-on-one level with you. Take off for the day to go to a mutually favorite spot or maybe go to a baseball game. You need that type of change of scenery. You will feel much better as a result. Tonight: Continue the theme.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Don't feel as if you need to make a choice. In fact, you might be happiest just moving around from here to there visiting different people. You rarely do this type of meandering, but you do enjoy it. Tonight: Be a duo.

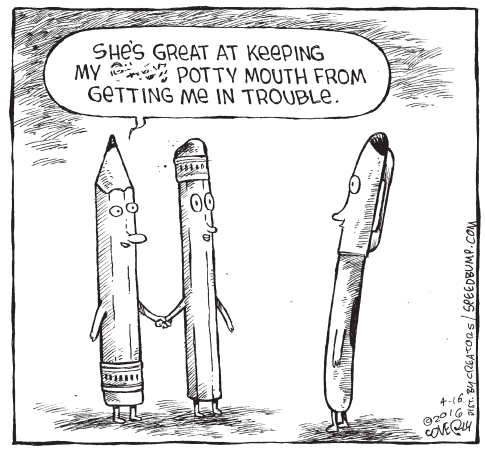

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Go into the office if you have to complete a project. You will feel good with the sense of accomplishment you gain. In fact, you might quickly finish up more than one pending must-do. Later today, sort through invitations; decide who, where and when. Tonight: You are not allowed to be alone.

Weekend Edition, April 16-17, 2016

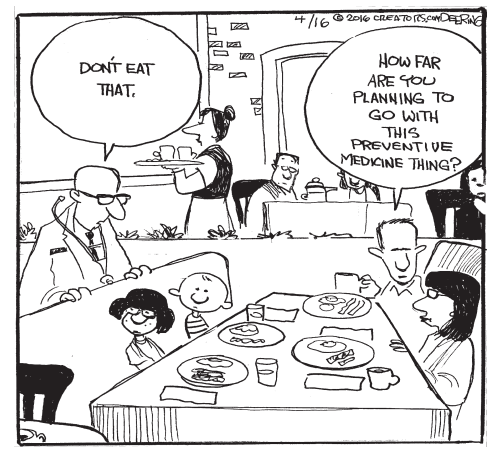

This year others find you to be unusually exciting. Hence you will have quite the entourage of people around you. You also notice that a friend or two might not be so available. This person liked the quiet you! If you are single, you will have many choices to make. Play through the summer and look to manifest a more intense and committed bond afterward. Even with a commitment, you will enjoy yourself. If you are attached, you act like new lovers. If you are at the right age, you are likely to have a new addition. Be sure you want that extra person in your life. VIRGO sometimes is so fussy that you dislike being around him or her.
