Concert costs went up as sponsorships vanished

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

SM PIER Facing an 80 percent decline in corporate sponsorships, Pier Restoration Corp. officials announced in March the Twilight Dance Series was in jeopardy and rallied City Hall officials and Santa Monica residents to pitch in to save the annual free summer concerts.

What they didn't mention was the other side of the ledger.

While the decline in revenue was real, records of the concert series' budget between 2004 and 2009 provided by the PRC show the deficit may have had as much to do with sharply increased spending on the concerts as it did with fewer sponsorship deals.

Holding the event cost an average of $202,000 for the years 2004 through 2007, but by last year the series' budget had ballooned to $359,000, a 78 percent spike, the records show.

The higher price tag was mostly the result of increased spending on talent, which in turn brought in bigger crowds that required more spending on police supervision, private security and sound and lighting equipment, pier officials said.

Ben Franz-Knight, the PRC's executive director, said the higher spending on the concerts was driven by a big fundraising year in 2008, when pier officials brought in $140,500 in sponsorship money, nearly triple the average figure for the previous four years.

That bounty led to an increased investment in the quality of the shows, he said.

The PRC spent $175,005 on "talent and producer" costs alone in 2008, a 54 percent increase from the $114,000 it spent the year before.

In 2009, though, fundraising from sponsorship deals took a nose dive along with the rest of the economy, and the pier brought in just $29,218 in corporate underwriting.

Officials balked at reigning in spending on the concerts, in part because 2009 marked the

Online video tells cyclist's story

COLLEEN LONG
JENNIFER PELTZ
Associated Press Writers

NEW YORK The police officer said he was deliberately rammed by a rowdy cyclist, one of thousands demonstrating in Times Square.

But a witness's video, posted online, told a different story. Former officer Patrick Pogan faces trial on charges he purposefully knocked the activist off his bike and lied about it on his report; opening statements are scheduled for today.

Nearly 20 years after an amateur tape of Los Angeles officers beating driver Rodney King sparked a national outcry, the New York case spotlights the growing prevalence of witness and surveillance video in law enforcement in an era of YouTube and cell-phone cameras, and whether the videos show the full story.

Four officers were acquitted of criminal charges in the 1991 King beating, igniting a riot that killed more than 50 people. In the years since, videotapes of police activity have sometimes implicated suspects and exonerated officers — and at other times have suggested the opposite.

"It's very hard for offenders to commit crimes without being captured, either on a surveillance camera or a cell phone," James Alan Fox, a criminologist at Northeastern University. But the ever-expanding corps of cameras also means officers' "behavior is constantly being recorded, and that might be a potential minus."

In Maryland, two Prince George's County officers were suspended after a March 3 video taken by a University of Maryland student from a dorm room window appeared to show an unprovoked attack on a student during a rowdy post-game celebration.

A northern California transit officer is headed for trial in June on a murder charge stemming from a 2009 incident that became a widely watched video online. Johannes Mehersle is accused of shooting an unarmed man in the back on an Oakland train station platform; his lawyer has said Mehserle mistakenly pulled his handgun instead of his stun gun.

To civil liberties advocates, videotapes offer citizens the prospect of effectively countering the authoritative weight of police reports and other official statements.

"There's no question but that video evidence gives ordinary people enormous boosts in credibility when confronting contradictory police evidence," said Donna Lieberman, executive director of the New York Civil Liberties Union.

Lt. governor race is on for the state's Democrats

JUDY LIN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Eager to return Sen. Barbara Boxer to Washington and anoint Jerry Brown as their gubernatorial candidate, California Democrats paid little attention over the weekend to a race that may be crucial to the party's future.

San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom and Los Angeles City Councilwoman Janice Hahn are locked in a heated, under-the-radar primary battle for lieutenant governor, a job with few responsibilities but one that can become a stepping stone to the governor's seat. The position has remained vacant since Democrat John Garamendi won a seat in Congress last fall.

Newsom, best known for legalizing gay marriage in San Francisco before courts halted the unions, jumped into the primary at the last minute after dropping out of the governor's race last year. That has forced Hahn to campaign harder despite her family's strong name recognition in Southern California.

The endorsements each candidate has attracted have divided the party's political establishment and some of its core support groups, including gay activists and labor.

Hahn is backed by the California State Federation of Labor and the Service Employees International Union, which has 700,000 members in California. Newsom, meanwhile, has snapped up the support of the powerful California Teachers Association, the state's largest teachers union and among the most powerful players in Sacramento.

Newsom also lined up the endorsements of fellow political heavyweights from San Francisco, U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. Hahn has support from other party standard-bearers, including Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa.

She also been endorsed by Earvin "Magic" Johnson, the Los Angeles Lakers star turned developer, and former state Sen. Sheila Kuehl of Santa Monica, a forceful advocate for gays and lesbians during her time in the Legislature.

The split, which falls partly along north-south geographic lines, foreshadows a tight race in June, one that could be the closest on the Democratic ballot.

Combining strength for change

Editor:

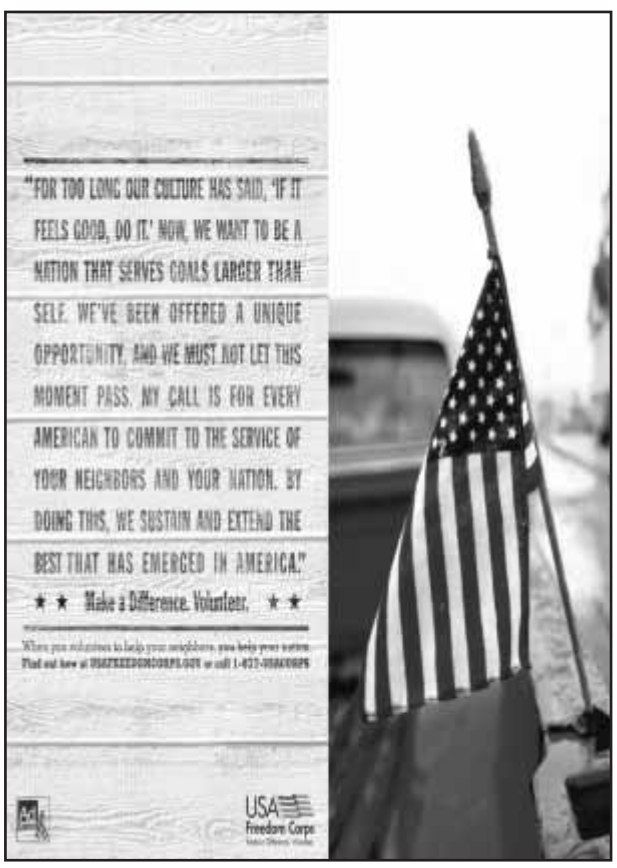

My journey started when I was 7 years old when my parents would tell me to be the captain of my own ship. What that instilled in me was the belief that my strengths and those of others when brought together can solve problems and make dreams come true.

As a practicing physician, researcher, and public health advocate uncovering the strengths and talents of people and institutions and tapping into them, and linking them to achieve health and wellness in the broadest sense is the driving force in my work. For instance, when a young mother who lives in poverty is helped to reach her breast feeding goals, this is from the combination of the mother and father's strengths of making the healthiest decision on how to feed their newborn, and the hospital and physician's strengths of helping them succeed. The end result is a mother with higher self-esteem, a father who is empowered, an infant who is healthier, reduced costs to the health care system, and a happy doctor.

It is not only individuals, but institutional assets when combined provide powerful sources of positive change. The salad bars in the Los Angeles Unified School District (LAUSD) are a perfect example of this. I will never forget the first time I spoke to a "LAUSD consultant" about the salad bar project in 1999 and he said, "oh you will never get rid of the sloppy joes!" But, today you have to go visit Hooper Elementary School in South Central where 800 children are fed lunch in 2 hours time and each one of them even the little kindergartners are grabbing the fruit and vegetables on their way to the hot lunch window. Yes it was a daunting task, but the sloppy joes are slipping away thanks to the combined forces of the LAUSD food services, the School Board, Occidental College, UCLA, Anthem Bluecross of CA, the principals, the cafeteria managers, the children and their parents.

We combined our strengths of organizing, inspiring, supporting, funding, studying, changing and trying and now there are FV bars. This victory over the sloppy joes is but a microcosm of how America works and is reflected in the much bigger victory of health reform. The passage of health reform is a historic victory and is a result of all Americans – families, seniors, young people, workers, politicians, physicians, health insurers, and small businesses working together in order to bring the security of knowing they or their family will not risk losing the American dream if they get sick or are in an accident.

AMC's box office disaster

WITH MOVIE ATTENDANCE RECENTLY down 30 percent, the rush is on to open a new 12-auditorium cinema with Imax, digital sound and 3D projection, stadium seating, good food and loads of amenities.I had previously written about City Hall's attempt to lure moviegoers back to Downtown last Sep. 21 and 28.

The plan is to replace an aging 339-vehicle city parking garage at 1320 Fourth St. with a new cinema complex.

Invitations for a quality exhibitor to build and operate it on a long-term lease were issued. To not overtax available parking, City Hall wanted assurances the proposed 2,200 seat complex would not add a large number of new theater seats to the current 5,500 Bayside District inventory. This could only be accomplished by removing or shrinking existing auditoriums — a condition that restricted bidders to the three firms with theaters Downtown.

AMC Entertainment, Inc., which operates the AMC 7 and AMC Broadway 4 on Third Street, in partnership with well connected, Santa Monica-based developer Metropolitan Pacific Capital, LLC, submitted a bid, as did Arclight Cinemas with no Santa Monica properties. Only AMC could meet council's mandate to limit overall seating.

At the Sep. 8, 2009 City Council meeting, housing and economic development staff asked council's permission to engage in exclusive negotiations with AMC because, "… AMC currently operates two other cinema sites in the district and they propose to close the Loews/AMC Broadway 4 and remodel its AMC 7 with reduced seating capacity. With the loss of 1,049 seats from the closure of the Broadway 4 and 548 seats by remodeling the AMC 7, the net gain in seats is projected to be 570 — an increase of approximately 10 percent over the total number of existing seats in the district."

But AMC doesn't own the Broadway 4. As a tenant , it can't permanently close and permanently terminate its theatrical use. Only AMC's landlord, Promenade Gateway, LP can permanently close the fourplex if AMC fails to renew its lease in 2014. Then, it could secure another exhibitor without City Hall approval to take over.

The late Mayor Ken Genser mentioned AMC's lack of ownership (a key point continually omitted from staff reports) and doubted AMC alone could permanently close the fourplex. He made a motion that staff continue to work with AMC and return to council with either a guarantee that AMC could permanently close the fourplex or, if not, council would decide between the AMC and Arclight proposals. The motion passed, but unfortunately council placed no deadline for obtaining a guarantee, something staff, AMC and its partner have shamelessly exploited.

Eight months later, there is still no guarantee of closure and everything is moving full speed ahead as if it were a done deal although AMC's request for a presentation at Wednesday's Planning Commission meeting has been continued.

At last Monday's community meeting, involved parties could only say, "we're confident a deal will be worked out with AMC's landlord." However, there have been no negotiations for the past six months because AMC and Metropolitan Pacific didn't want to pay anything to AMC's landlord.

Stopping movie operation at the Broadway 4 location has unconscionably been agreed upon by council, staff, AMC and its partner. If AMC were to cease movie operations for a 12- or 18-month period (depending on state coastal zone requirements), the long-allowed theater use would expire and the city would indefinitely refuse to issue the required theater conditional use permit. Promenade Gateway would be unable to lease the space to another exhibitor and forced to find a non-theatrical tenant, possibly at less income and a large capital outlay.

This conspiracy to deny Promenade Gateway of its rights — which it found out about six months after the scheme was conceived — prompted AMC's landlord to retain legal counsel, which has investigated litigation against all wrongdoers. Huge claims for damages would ensue if a settlement with AMC isn't reached.

With AMC's failure to produce a plan for permanently shuttering the fourplex, it now appears promises of permanent closure and removal of 1,049 seats was a ruse to provide it with an overwhelming advantage and a big head start over other bidders. With the proposed 12-plex being fast-tracked to the "point of no return," It appears AMC and Metropolitan Pacific will be awarded the contract by default even if they never deliver on their promise.

I don't recall when a project has been handled so poorly. The only possible explanation for this is either shear incompetence or payoffs under the table

Because of the lies and length of time that has passed, City Council needs to limit the time remaining for AMC to resolve its predicament. If there's no deal within two months, council should terminate negotiations with AMC, eliminate the reduced seating requirement and totally reopen the bid process.

Then, council should ask for a thorough investigation of this entire affair because this taint smells all the way to Montana Avenue.

Airlines eager to end ban caused by volcanic ash

ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

AMSTERDAM Major airlines that sent test flights into European air space found no damage Sunday from the volcanic ash that has paralyzed aviation over the continent, raising pressure on governments to ease restrictions that have thrown global travel and commerce into chaos.

Is it safe to fly yet? Airline officials and some pilots say the passengerless test flights show that it is. Meteorologists warn that the skies over Europe remain unstable from an Icelandic volcano that continues to spew ash capable of knocking out jet engines.

European Union officials said air traffic could return to half its normal level on Monday if the dense cloud begins to dissipate. Germany allowed some flights to resume.

Eighty percent of European airspace remained closed for a devastating fourth day on Sunday, with only 4,000 of the normal 20,000-flight schedule in the air, said Brian Flynn, deputy head of operations for Eurocontrol, which supports the air traffic control network across the European Union's 27 states.

"Today it has been, I would say, the worst situation so far," Flynn said.

The test flights highlighted a lack of consensus on when to reopen the skies. The microscopic but potentially menacing volcanic grit began closing airports from Ireland to Bulgaria on Thursday, stranding countless passengers and leaving cargo rotting in warehouses.

"It is clear that this is not sustainable. We cannot just wait until this ash cloud dissipates," EU Transport Commissioner Siim Kallas told reporters at the European capital in Brussels.

KLM Royal Dutch airlines, the national German carrier Lufthansa, Air France and several regional airlines sent up test flights, probing altitudes where the cloud of ash has wafted over Europe since the volcano turned active on Wednesday. British Airways planned an evening flight over the Atlantic from Heathrow, one of Europe's busiest hubs.

None of the pilots reported problems, and the aircraft underwent detailed inspections for damage to the engines and frame.

"Not the slightest scratch was found" on any of the 10 empty long-haul planes Lufthansa flew Saturday to Frankfurt from Munich, spokesman Wolfgang Weber said. The planes flew at low altitude, between 3,000 and 8,000 meters (9800 and 26000 feet), under so-called visual flight rules, in which pilots don't have to rely on their instruments.

Steven Verhagen, vice president of the Dutch Airline Pilots Association, said he would not hesitate to fly an aircraft today carrying his own family.

"With the weather we are encountering now — clear blue skies and obviously no dense ash cloud to be seen, in our opinion there is absolutely no reason to worry about resuming flights," said Verhagen, a pilot of Boeing 737s for KLM. "We are asking the authorities to really have a good look at the situation, because 100 percent safety does not exist."

Civil aviation authorities in each country must decide whether to resume commercial traffic, but the 27-nation EU said if weather forecasts are correct it expected half its flights to operate normally on Monday. While it was still unclear how the dust would affect jet engines, the EU said it was encouraged by promising weather predictions, at least for the next 24 hours.

> "TODAY IT HAS BEEN, I WOULD SAY, THE WORST SITUATION SO FAR."
> Brian Flynn
> Deputy head of operations for Eurocontrol,

"Probably tomorrow one half of EU territory will be influenced. This means that half of the flights may be operating," said Diego Lopez Garrido, state secretary for EU affairs for Spain, which holds the rotating EU presidency. He did not provide details about which flights might resume.

France's transport minister, Dominique Bussereau, said there will be a meeting on Monday of European ministers affected by the crisis to coordinate efforts to reopen airspace.

Meteorologists warned that the situation above Europe was constantly changing because of varying winds and the continuing, irregular eruptions from the Icelandic volcano. That uncertainty is bumping up against Europe's need to resume flights.

"There is currently no consensus as to what consists an acceptable level of ash in the atmosphere," said Daniel Hoeltgen, a spokesman for the European Aviation Safety Agency. "This is what we are concerned about and this is what we want to bring about so that we can start operating aircraft again in Europe."

The ranks of stranded passengers, meanwhile, were growing, and many would be stuck for days even if restrictions were fully and immediately lifted.

Great Lake problems

Dear EarthTalk

What are the major threats to the Great Lakes in the United States and what's being done to address them?

Saul G.,
Racine, Wisc.

THE GREAT LAKES WATERSHED IS A unique and important ecosystem that contains some 95 percent of America's fresh water surface area, and is a continental hub for birds, fish and other wildlife. According to the National Audubon Society, the Great Lakes provide habitat for some 400 bird species. But it is the region's exploding human population — now at 42 million — that is causing many environmental problems.

Major threats include toxic and nutrient pollution, the growing presence of non-native invasive species, and the destruction of critical wildlife habitat. In addition, the region's residents worry that other parts of the country and world facing water shortages will find ways to divert Great Lakes water to quench their far-off thirsts. Also, it remains to be seen what kind of impact global warming will have on the region.

Perhaps the issue that gets the most attention in the region is the menace of invasive species. They arrive via heel, tire, railway and ship, and are profoundly altering the region's ecology. The most notorious case is that of the zebra mussel which, originally native to southeast Russia first arrived in the late 1980s on ocean-going ships via the St. Lawrence Seaway. Aside from outcompeting native species for food, they have absorbed toxic PCBs dumped years earlier and transferred them up the food chain in being eaten by round gobies (also a non-native species), which in turn are preyed upon by walleyes, a popular sport fish.

Another major problem is pollution itself. Tons of pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers run off of farms and into the water every month. Coal-fired power plants spew mercury into the air and factories of all kinds emit other pollutants that all eventually end up in the water. Converting farmers to organic agriculture and cleaning up smokestacks are top priorities for regulators and green groups in the region.

Federal, state and local authorities and nonprofit and community groups are working diligently to help restore compromised areas in the region. The Obama administration's 2010 budget allocates $475 million to the Great Lakes Restoration Initiative. Led by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Initiative is assessing the threats to the region and laying out a roadmap for remediation through the Great Lakes Interagency Task Force, which includes representatives from the EPA as well as the departments of State, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Transportation, and Housing and Urban Development.

Some of the beneficiaries of this funding will also be some of the 100+ nonprofit and community groups that have formed the Healing Our Waters Great Lakes Coalition. These groups hope to leverage each others' expertise and work together on on-the-ground restoration projects throughout the region.

Meanwhile Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, Quebec and Ontario have come together as the Great Lakes Basin Compact to ward off drought-stricken far-off places from taking fresh water out of their region. Member states and provinces have delineated a border around the region beyond which water cannot be shipped. The agreement came about in 2005 when a Canadian company announced that it wanted to ship water in tankers from Lake Ontario to Asia.

Training program uses sport craft

enjoying the lessons, I was just worried that the engine is on and therefore it was costing me hundreds and hundreds of dollars an hour," Thomson said.

He then heard of light-sport aircraft [LSA] which is safer and much less expensive due to its fuel efficiency, and he saw the opportunity to start a flight training company with one. His plane, the Sportcruiser, takes about three and a half gallons of fuel an hour, which means that on a trip to Las Vegas, it is more fuel efficient than a SUV.

Thomson started the company four months ago with the hope that he can help Santa Monica residents view the airport as a community resource, as opposed to the more negative portrayal of the airport that he feels some residents hold. He wants others to know that these people flying aren't only comprised of a rich, elite crowd, but rather that almost anyone who would like to do it can afford it.

Thomson's love of flying has made him eager to share it with others, and he said that he sees many other companies making a bigger profit on keeping an old plane and charging more for classes.

"My philosophy was different. I'd like to make a little bit of money off a lot of people," he said.

Although, Thomson more strongly emphasized the safety benefits of the Sportcruiser, which became even more important to him after he experienced a plane crash which he narrowly survived. The crash occurred because of that plane's old age and condition, he said. Thomson was in the older aircraft about two years ago when the engine literally fell out.

Standing on the side of the runway at Santa Monica Airport [SMO] he pointed to one plane parked next to his which, with a glance inside, was noticeably older than the Sportcruiser. He seemed disappointed at this prospect and asked what could it be worth to use this older plane when the chances of it malfunctioning are so much greater.

With this, the lesser cost of the LSA and the sport pilot license which became available in 2004, there is a better opportunity to become a pilot. The sport pilot license in itself has made piloting a plane much more accessible to the average person, requiring only half the amount of hours logged than a private pilot license.

Although, the quicker access to flying which a sport license comes with more restrictions, such as not being able to fly at night and being limited to one passenger. Chris Dancy, spokesman for the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association [AOPA] described the sport pilot license as more of an entry level one. On average, earning a sport pilot license costs $3,500 to $4,000, and a private pilot license, which Santa Monica Flyers also offers, costs roughly $8,000.

SMO Director Bob Trimborn said that there are many other training programs at the airport, but he believes it is unique that Santa Monica Flyers is actually using the LSA to train.

"If you're learning to fly for purely recreational purposes, light sport aircraft might be perfect for you," AOPA's Dancy said.

Dancy added that the LSA certainly has the potential to make flying more accessible to the public, and its popularity is still picking up since it has only been around for about five years. He said that for the first three years, LSA sales more than doubled each year, but slowed with the fall of the economy.

Rich Festa, who received his license two weeks ago after training with Santa Monica Flyers, said that although he began taking classes with them because of their location, Thomson is a great instructor and his plane is like the Cadillac of the light sport planes.

"Charles articulates very well. I got more out of him than any previous instructor I've had. He really is good, he's got patience," Festa said.

TDS producer says she's a bargain

25th year of the series, as well as the pier's centennial anniversary, and there was a feeling the concerts should be part of the celebration. There was also hope fundraising would improve in 2010 and a reluctance to scale back an event that seemed to be gaining momentum.

"We weren't in a position where we wanted to back off what we were doing," Franz-Knight said. "And that's one of the things that contributed to the position we were in in January."

Franz-Knight said the PRC didn't spend recklessly in 2009, it simply tried to keep the popular event from declining.

"I would say any time you're working on a project and you attain a new level, the goal is always to build on that level," he said.

In 2009, one way officials tried to improve the event was by adding a wine garden during the concerts, which was paid for with $26,000 budgeted for miscellaneous expenses. While the wine bar didn't turn a profit last year, Franz-Knight said pier officials hope it will become a revenue generator for the concert series.

Even though 2008 was a standout year for fundraising, Franz-Knight said it was the first time the PRC had "fully leveraged the concerts" to bring in sponsorship money, so it was realistic to expect underwriting levels would soon return to or exceed that benchmark.

Since the call for fundraising help in March, the PRC has already raised $156,000 in sponsorships and donations, Franz-Knight said, though $85,000 came from City Hall and $20,000 came from the Bayside District Corp., the public private organization that oversees Santa Monica's Downtown commercial district.

The PRC's board, meanwhile, has set up an ad hoc committee tasked with developing a 3- to 5-year plan for keeping the concert series financially viable.

PRC Board Chairperson Kent Smith said the committee will be looking at a range of options for putting the series on firm financial ground, including examining ways to partner with a radio station to put on the shows more cheaply.

CBS Radio this year proposed sponsoring nine concerts while saving the PRC money, but pier officials opted to stay with longtime Twilight Dance Series producer Katharine King. Instead of working on a deal with CBS, the PRC approached City Hall with an increased funding request, which was granted, and started soliciting donations from the public.

Smith said rushing into a deal with a radio station would have been a mistake.

"Our minds are open to that but we want to examine it really closely," he said. "When you look at other ways of having the Twilight Dance Series, there's nothing that doesn't have some strings attached."

The ad hoc committee will begin holding meetings in May to discuss ways to fund the concert series. Its plan will be presented to the PRC board and then to the City Council.

While noting the need for a long-term plan to keep the concert series going, Smith denied the budget deficit this year was the result of poor decision making.

"I think the money has been well spent. We just have to find a way to do this where we're not at the 11th hour on our knees pleading with the community to find the dollars," he said.

King, who has produced the series since its beginning 25 years ago, said the fee she charges is a bargain for the community.

She declined to say how much of the "talent and producer" fee is profit for her company, but said the event's overall production budget is a quarter or less of what other similar events cost.

"It is just so fractional compared to other like concert series around the country," King said. "We get far more people and spend a lot less money."

Dodgers send Russ Ortiz to Triple-A

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES The Dodgers optioned struggling reliever Russ Ortiz to Triple-A Albuquerque on Sunday and promoted right-hander Jon Link from the team's top farm club.

Ortiz allowed eight runs, 10 hits and five walks in his six appearances spanning seven innings. The 12-year veteran right-hander spent last season with Houston and signed a minor league deal with the Dodgers as a free agent on Jan. 22.

Link, making his first trip to the big leagues, spent the previous five years in the Chicago White Sox and San Diego Padres organizations. He joined the Dodgers on Dec. 17 along with right-hander John Ely in a trade that sent backup outfielder Juan Pierre to the White Sox.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Find a favorite person tonight, Taurus

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Today, fatigue plagues you. An active dream life replenishes your creativity. If you can, call in and take this day for yourself. Recycle. Deal with a pending life conflict. A situation actually might be as you see it or define it. Tonight: Be lazy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ An underlying sense of insecurity might be a warning. Trusted friends give you feedback. A power play could be exhausting. Remember to give this person space to transform and change. You revive as the workday ends! Tonight: Find a favorite person.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ You wake up a force to behold, but get tripped up by a financial matter. Perhaps you are trying to close a business deal or make a purchase. Out of the blue, the other party twists his or her agreement. Let go and continue on your own. Tonight: Treat yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Others sense your poise and self-confidence. Is there anything you cannot do? A discussion with a formerly agreeable associate or partner turns difficult. Detach and give this person space. He or she is in a mini-identity crisis. Tonight: All smiles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ If you suddenly feel like the cards are stacked against you, back off. If you can extricate yourself from the situation, all the better. You could see a key person or part of your life as demanding and controlling. Tonight: Vanish. Mystery becomes you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Your mind flips from work to the lighter side of life. Network and schedule meetings. You might have a great idea, but no one seems to be able to accept it. The timing is off. Work with others, and develop a better sense of give-and-take. Tonight: Hook up with a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Your mind keeps wandering to someone at a distance. As you deal with work and/or an authority figure hands-on, you might look at a situation as black-and-white or either-or. Let go of this type of thinking, and you will see a solution. Tonight: A must appearance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Reach out for experts. If you feel that you could benefit from taking a seminar, class or workshop in your field, then do. You long for more understanding, and cannot always accept what you hear. Tonight: Try some exotic cuisine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ All signs were go; don't blame yourself for another person's mood. You could get into a power struggle if you continue on your present path. Veer and plug in your energy where it counts. A key associate or friend appreciates your efforts. Tonight: Chat over dinner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You might be a lot more testy than you realize. Think through a decision with care. The smart Goat will let a hot issue die, allowing for greater give-and-take without resentment later. A child unknowingly gives you a great idea. Tonight: Where the fun is.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Get into work and logically eliminate one to-do after another. You could be surprised by another person's requests. Review a matter that's close to your heart. Could you be overreacting? Don't lose sight of your personal life. Tonight: Squeeze in some exercise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Your imagination comes up with solutions. Others admire your resourcefulness. Keep communication flowing, especially if someone suddenly becomes very difficult. Tonight: Let more fun in.

Happy birthday

This year, you open up to new possibilities. Stay centered, despite life's bounces. You have a strong style of communicating. You are vested in being heard. As a result, sometimes you could be more difficult than you realize. Travel and those at a distance often could react and act in ways that force you to reflect. If you are single, you will meet people easily. Please don't settle. If you are attached, the two of you learn to enjoy each other more and more. You might say too much when CANCER people are around!

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ The city health office in London, Ontario, created an online sex-education game that officials hope will appeal to teenagers in that its messages are delivered by a cast of iconic superheroes. According to a February report by Canwest News Service, the players are Captain Condom (who wears a "cap"), Wonder Vag (a virgin girl), Power Pap ("sexually active") and Willy the Kid, with each fighting the villain Sperminator, who wears a red wrestling mask and has phalluses for arms. The characters answer sex knowledge questions and, with correct answers, obtain "protection," but a wrong one gets the player squirted with sperm. At press time, the game was still accessible at www.GetItOnLondon.com/.

■ The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals almost never encounters an "improper" conviction, but managed to ease up in February by taking the death penalty off the table for double-murderer Charles Hood, who had been sentenced to die by a jury in Plano in 1990. Hood had learned in subsequent years that his prosecutor and his judge had had a sexual relationship during his trial, but both denied it, and courts refused to investigate. Finally, by 2008, both had confessed to the affair, but the Court of Criminal Appeals still declined to call the trial unfair. In March 2010, several days after a New York Times report on the case, the court found a technical, face-saving ground on which to lessen Hood's sentence (while still ignoring the issue of the affair).
