County estimates 4% of population could have had COVID-19

A new study suggests about 4% of Los Angeles County adults could have already had COVID-19 before testing began in early April.

USC and the Los Angeles County Department of Public Health released preliminary results from a collaborative study Monday that traced the presence of COVID-19 antibodies in a small sample of the population. Of the adults in that study, 4.1% were found to have the antibodies, suggesting they had already been infected.

"Adjusting this estimate for statistical margin of error implies about 2.8% to 5.6% of the county's adult population has antibody to the virus, which translates to approximately 221,000 to 442,000 adults in the county who have had the infection," the department said in a press release. "That estimate

Samohi senior named finalist in National Shakespeare Competition

Forty-nine students from across the nation were supposed to head to New York next week after securing a spot as finalists in the National Shakespeare Competition. But with the restrictions on travel, local Santa Monica High School senior Rosalind Jewett is forced to compete from home.

After winning first place in the 2020 English-Speaking Union's Los Angeles Shakespeare Competition last month in Pasadena, Jewett moved onto the National Shakespeare Competition.

"Normally, we would get to see the students compete live at Lincoln Center in NYC, but due to recent events they have gone online with taped recordings for the judges," Samohi English teacher Chon Lee said as he detailed how approximately 20,000 students compete in the various ESU competitions held throughout the country every year.

In order to make it to the finals of the prestigious contest, students must win their high school's

City Attorney to fill newly vacant City Manager position

MATTHEW HALL

City Attorney Lane Dilg has been chosen as an interim replacement for City Manager Rick Cole, who announced his resignation Friday.

At a special meeting on Saturday, City Council voted unanimously to accept the resignation and place Cole on immediate paid administrative leave as part of a negotiated settlement.

Cole announced Friday that he would step down as city manager, citing the challenges of attempting to balance the city's budget amid a steep drop in revenue caused by the coronavirus shutdown, which has evaporated the tax dollars the city collects from retailers, restaurants, hotels and parking. The city predicts a $226 million budget gap through fiscal year 2020-2021 and is offering buyouts to employees who

California reports 1st prison inmate death caused by virus

CHRISTOPHER WEBER AND DAISY NGUYEN
Associated Press

California reported the first prison inmate death from COVID-19 on Sunday as the state steps up efforts to prevent outbreaks among vulnerable populations, including people living in nursing homes, on the streets or in homeless shelters.

The inmate died at a hospital after contracting the coronavirus at the California Institution for Men in San Bernardino County, the state Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation said in a statement.

No further details were released to protect the inmate's medical privacy, and next of kin was notified. Statewide, 115 inmates and 89 corrections employees have tested positive for the coronavirus, corrections officials said.

In recent days, California released for the first time details about nursing homes facing outbreaks as the numbers of COVID-19 cases and deaths across the state continue to rise.

The information released by the Department of Public Health showed nearly 260 skilled nursing facilities with more than 3,000 total positive cases among patients and staff.

Redwood Springs Healthcare Center in Visalia, a town in the agricultural Central Valley, was among the hardest-hit facilities with 91 residents and 46 staff members who tested positive.

Skilled nursing facilities are a particular concern because of the age and health conditions of residents, as well as their close living arrangements. Outbreaks have been reported in facilities in much of the state, and dozens of residents have died.

Facilities have limited visitors since March. Workers said they now undergo temperature checks and fill out questionnaires before their shifts to try to limit the spread of the disease.

Meanwhile, prisons were following isolation and quarantine guidelines laid out by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and tried to increase physical distancing by bringing in tents, cots and temporary bathrooms. Already, 3,500 inmates were granted early release to reduce overcrowding.

For most people, the coronavirus causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough, that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe life-threatening illness, including pneumonia, and death.

As of Sunday, the state had recorded more than 31,000 confirmed cases and more than 1,175 deaths, according to John Hopkins University. Los Angeles County has 600 — more than half the statewide deaths.

There are concerns the virus could sweep through the state's 150,000 homeless people, many of whom have chronic health conditions and lack safe places to quarantine themselves. San Francisco reported a large-scale outbreak at a homeless shelter after more than 100 people tested positive, including 10 staff members.

The state is on its way to acquiring nearly 16,000 hotel rooms to house the homeless during the pandemic, and already more than 4,200 people have been moved out of shelters or off the streets into hotel rooms, Gov. Gavin Newsom said Saturday.

"We've certainly flattened the curve. The question is when are we going to see those numbers start to decline on a consistent basis as opposed to an episodic basis," he said.

Newsom, who made solving the state's homelessness crisis a priority even before the pandemic struck, announced Project Roomkey two weeks ago, a program in which the federal government will pay 75% of costs associated with housing some of the homeless. It covers people who test positive or may have been exposed to the virus, older homeless people and those with underlying health conditions.

The program has acquired nearly 11,000 rooms, and Motel 6 has promised to set aside 5,000 rooms in 19 counties, Newsom said.

In Los Angeles, where more than 30 homeless people have tested positive for coronavirus, medical teams will begin screening people for the virus on the streets, along with fast-result field tests, Mayor Eric Garcetti said. Those who are infected will be offered transportation to shelters and have hotel rooms set aside for them.

Not all cities are embracing Project Roomkey. Los Angeles County prosecutors filed court papers Friday saying Lawndale and Bell Gardens threatened to terminate city permits for hotels and motels participating in the program.

There have been signs the outbreak is slowing in the month or more since most of the state's 40 million residents were ordered to stay at home. Social distancing rules are being praised for that development, but they have hit the economy hard, shutting down schools, tourist spots and most restaurants and retail businesses.

Garcetti announced on Sunday that thousands of city workers will have to take furloughs as he warned of an economic downturn that will be far worse than the 2008 recession.

Some have chafed under the restrictions, including dozens of people who rallied in San Diego and Orange counties over the weekend against California's stay-at-home order.

Ventura County on Saturday modified its stay-at-home order to permit some businesses that don't serve the public to operate using no more than 10 employees. Gatherings of up to five people are now permitted, as are gatherings in vehicles, the county said.

Meanwhile San Francisco Mayor London Breed urged people to stay away Monday from the city's Golden Gate Park, where thousands of marijuana enthusiasts traditionally gather every April 20 to celebrate the unofficial high holiday.

To start lifting restrictions and allow businesses to reopen statewide, Newsom has said California needs to test 25,000 people a day and better track those who are infected. The state is testing about 20,000 people a day now.

Several areas have begun offering tests to people without symptoms. Until now, there has been a shortage of test swabs and the chemical agents needed to process the tests.

Nguyen reported from Oakland.

LA mayor calls for cuts as virus shakes City Hall

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
Associated Press

Mayor Eric Garcetti released a pandemic-wounded spending plan Monday for the coming year that he called "a document of our pain" that includes service cuts and nearly 16,000 worker furloughs to manage economic fallout from the coronavirus crisis.

If approved, residents will wait longer to have trees trimmed, graffiti removed and streets and sidewalks fixed. Core services including police, trash pickup and firefighting will be largely safeguarded, but just about anything else is likely to take a hit. Even funds for closing illegal marijuana shops that proliferate in the city would be slashed.

And it could get worse, with much uncertainty about the spread of the virus, the direction of the state and national economy and when government stay-at-home orders will be lifted.

The spending reductions in Los Angeles are likely to be a sign of what's to come at city halls across the nation, as jobless lines grow and local treasuries see steep drops in sales, hotel and other taxes they rely on to operate and provide services.

In New York, Mayor Bill de Blasio is proposing deep cuts in services over the next year, as the city grapples with the virus and its aftermath. His plans include suspending a summer-job program for young people, delaying expansion of a free prekindergarten program for 3-year-olds and closing city pools this summer.

A survey conducted by the National League of Cities found nearly universal agreement that cities would be hit by revenue shortfalls this year related to the outbreak, and in many cases furloughs and layoffs would be used to close budget gaps.

In Los Angeles, Garcetti warned in a letter accompanying the $10.5 billion proposed budget for the year that begins July 1 that "the road back to where we were will be long and difficult."

He called the city's financial future "unpredictable."

Revenue growth in the coming year is expected to slow to less than 2%, compared to an average growth of 4.5% over the last six years. And since the crisis began, revenue estimates for next year dropped by over $230 million.

Life in the nation's second most populous city has been largely unrecognizable with most residents staying at home. Notoriously congested freeways have been wide open, with only workers deemed essential still on the job. Even so, there are few places to go, with gyms, bars, beaches and restaurant dining rooms closed to the public.

A day earlier, the Democratic mayor recalled the 2008 recession and said, "This is bigger and it will hurt more." In a tourism-reliant economy, he said hotel reservations had collapsed and airport passenger traffic had all but vanished.

"From a fiscal perspective, this is the worst it's ever been," he said.

The spread of the potentially lethal virus has reshaped an administration that had been largely focused on an intractable homelessness crisis.

As tax revenues sink, millions have been invested in testing and other costs related to the outbreak: an estimated $60 million by the end of April, though much of that spending could eventually be covered by federal aid.

The city had been under a hiring freeze. Under the mayor's proposal, thousands of civilian city workers would take 26 furlough days, the equivalent of a 10% pay cut, in the coming year.

Families sue helicopter company in deadly Kobe Bryant crash

Family members of four of the eight passengers killed in a helicopter crash with Kobe Bryant and his daughter have joined the NBA star's widow in filing wrongful death lawsuits against the companies that owned and operated the aircraft.

The suits on behalf of three members of one family, and a woman who helped coach Bryant's 13-year-old daughter in basketball, were filed electronically in Los Angeles Superior Court.

The pair of lawsuits comes about two months after Bryant's widow, Vanessa, the mother of Gianna, also sued Island Express Helicopters Inc., which operated the Sikorsky, and its owner, Island Express Holding Corp.

Unlike Vanessa Bryant's lengthy lawsuit, the new identical 7-page cases do not name the dead pilot, Ara Zobayan, or his representative, as a defendant. All the suits allege that the two companies were careless and negligent.

One suit was filed by two children of Orange Coast College baseball coach John Altobelli, his wife, Keri, and their daughter Alyssa, who played basketball with Gianna. Another suit was filed by the husband and three children of Christina Mauser, who helped Bryant coach the team

.The group was heading to a basketball tournament Jan. 26 when the chopper crashed in thick fog northwest of Los Angeles.

An initial National Transportation Safety Board report said there were no signs of engine failure from the wreckage recovered. Zobayan had nearly navigated the helicopter out of blinding clouds when the aircraft suddenly turned and plunged into the mountainside.

Vanessa Bryant, who filed the suit the same day as her husband's large public memorial service in February, alleged that Zobayan was careless and negligent to fly in the fog and should have aborted the flight.

Also killed in the crash were Sarah Chester and her daughter Payton, who was another of Gianna's teammates.

Oil price goes negative as demand collapses; stocks dip

STAN CHOE, DAMIAN J. TROISE AND ALEX VEIGA
AP Business Writers

Oil futures plunged below zero on Monday, the latest never-before-seen number to come out of the economic coma caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

Stocks and Treasury yields also dropped on Wall Street, with the S&P 500 down 1.8%, but the market's most dramatic action by far was in oil, where the cost to have a barrel of U.S. crude delivered in May plummeted to negative $37.63. It was at roughly $60 at the start of the year.

Traders are still paying $20.43 for a barrel of U.S. oil to be delivered in June, which analysts consider to be closer to the "true" price of oil. Crude to be delivered next month, meanwhile, is running up against a stark problem: traders are running out of places to keep it, with storage tanks close to full amid a collapse in demand as factories, automobiles and airplanes sit idled around the world.

Tanks at a key energy hub in Oklahoma could hit their limits within three weeks, according to Chris Midgley, head of analytics at S&P Global Platts. Because of that, traders are willing to pay others to take that oil for delivery in May off their hands, so long as they also take the burden of figuring out where to keep it.

"Almost by definition, crude oil has never fallen more than 100%, which is what happened today," said Dave Ernsberger, global head of pricing and market insight at S&P Global Platts.

"I don't think any of us can really believe what we saw today," he said. "This kind of rewrites the economics of oil trading."

Also exacerbating the volatility is that few traders are buying and selling U.S. oil to be delivered in May. They won't even have the opportunity to do so after Tuesday, when trading contracts for it expire and the earliest delivery they'll be able to buy is for June.

Brent crude, the international standard, fell nearly 9% to $25.57 per barrel.

The plunge in oil sent energy stocks in the S&P 500 to a 3.7% loss, the latest in a dismal 2020 that has caused their prices to nearly halve.

Halliburton lurched between gains and sharp losses, even though it reported stronger results for the first three months of 2020 than analysts expected. The oilfield engineering company said that the pandemic has created so much turmoil in the industry that it "cannot reasonably estimate" how long the hit will last. It expects a further decline in revenue and profitability for the rest of 2020, particularly in North America.

The S&P 500 fell 51.40 points to 2,823.16. The Dow Jones Industrial Average lost 592.05 points, or 2.4%, to 23,650.44, and the Nasdaq dropped 89.41, or 1%, to 8,560.73.

The losses ate into some of the big gains indexes have made since late March, driven lately by investors anticipating the potential reopening of businesses as infections level off in hard-hit areas. Pessimists have called the rally overdone, pointing to the severe economic pain sweeping the world and continued uncertainty about how long it will last.

"The government can declare whatever they want in terms of encouraging people to get out and do stuff," said Willie Delwiche, investment strategist at Baird. "Whether or not broad swaths of society do that remains to be seen. It's going to take seeing people start to get out and do stuff again. That will be the necessary positive development, not just declaring getting things open."

More gains from companies that are winners in the new stay-at-home economy helped limit the market's losses. Netflix jumped 3.4% to set another record as people shut in at home look to fill their time. Amazon added 0.8%.

In Asia, Tokyo's Nikkei 225 fell 1.1%. The Hang Seng index in Hong Kong lost 0.2%, and South Korea's Kospi fell 0.8%.

European markets were modestly higher. The German DAX was up 0.5%, the French CAC 40 was up 0.7% and the FTSE 100 in London gained 0.7%.

In a sign of continued caution in the market, Treasury yields remained extremely low. The yield on the 10-year Treasury slipped to 0.62% from 0.65% late Friday.

Stocks have been on a general upward swing recently, and the S&P 500 just closed out its first back-to-back weekly gain since the market began selling off in February. Promises of massive aid for the economy and markets by the Federal Reserve and U.S. government ignited the rally, which sent the S&P 500 up as much as 28.5% from a low on March 23.

More recently, countries around the world have tentatively eased up on business-shutdown restrictions put in place to slow the spread of the virus.

But health experts warn the pandemic is far from over and new flareups could ignite if governments rush to allow "normal" life to return prematurely. The S&P 500 remains nearly 17% below its record high as millions more U.S. workers file for unemployment every week amid the shutdowns.

Many analysts also warn that some of the recent rally for stocks is due to expectations the economy will pivot quickly and rebound sharply once economic quarantines are lifted. Those could prove to be too optimistic.

"There's still uncertainty surrounding the reopening of the economy," said Julian Emanuel, chief equity and derivatives strategist at BTIG. "Come fall, are we going to be back on airplanes? Are we going to go out and eat?"

'Erasing Family' Documentary About Child Custody After Divorce Premieres April 25

Parental Alienation. Two words that will strike terror into the heart of a parent going through a child custody battle. It's a concept that dates back to probably the second generation of humanity. The true meaning of parental alienation is where one parent tries to sever the relationship between a child and the other parent. It happens with mothers and fathers, straight couples and gay couples. Rich people and poor people. Highly religious families and completely atheistic ones.

It ALWAYS damages the children, and for those of us who are most active in the Family Law industry, it's considered child abuse. The long term effects of destroying the relationship between a child and a parent are a laundry list of societal ills, and personal traumas.

I've represented mothers and fathers who are the targeted parent, the alienated one, and frequently the mental anguish they go through literally drives them to thoughts of suicide. I still have in my filing cabinets the DVDs of an alienated parent who was so close to killing themselves that they sent me DVDs for their children to watch when they came of age.

As a legal theory, it is not allowed in court. We can only speak about the effects, we can never use the term 'parental alienation' because certain lobbying groups are very powerful in the courts and psychiatric world. But make no mistake, it exists, and judges know it.

I have a website dedicated to the topic, www.parentalienationsucks.com where I post information about the subject. I've done YouTube videos about it, and blogged on my www.mensfamilylaw.com website about how to handle it. Which is why I am considered a resource for people to reach out to, and how I met my friend Ginger Gentile, who is an activist filmmaker. She has a movie premiering on Vimeo this week as part of Parental Alienation Awareness day. Her groundbreaking documentary "Erasing Family" premiered in the middle of a sold-out screening tour just as the Coronavirus pandemic began in the U.S. Based on the immense success of its tour, Gentile will be premiering the film online on Saturday April 25 to coincide with Parental Alienation Awareness Day.

"We were in the middle of a sold-out community screening tour with over 25 cities when the Coronavirus pandemic shut us all inside. Many are isolated from loved ones, missing holidays and not being able to visit in a hospital, a reality too familiar to families erased by the divorce courts," said Gentile.

"The film has one of the largest organic audiences, as half of all families go through divorce and over 25 million parents in North America report being erased from their children," said Gentile. Similar subject matter propelled the 2019 movie A Marriage Story to an Oscar-nomination, but Erasing Family features real people with their actual, very personal and at times gut-wrenching stories.

The film follows young adults fighting to reunite with their broken families. It took years for the filmmakers to find young adults willing to go on camera to tell their stories as many did not want to talk about being brainwashed to hate a parent after divorce, due to shame. Family courts are often overwhelmed with cases, and few protocols exist to help these families, forcing them to fight for custody instead of helping them to be co-parents. Yet there is a happy ending as these broken families are being reunited on screen which will inspire other children to reach out to their own erased parents. It also highlights how showing the reforms to make separation of the parents healthier are urgently needed.

"Joint Custody is still not the norm, and many bar associations oppose making it the default option as there is a lot of money to be made in custody battles," said Gentile. "Right now, only one state, Kentucky, has such a law passed in 2018."

I saw the film when I attended the Parental Alienation Study Group Conference in Philadelphia last year. Even for a hardened, seasoned attorney like me, it made me cry. The emotional journey Gentile brings us on, was painful, but worth it.

A special phone number for those who might need emotional support after watching the film has been set up. The number to text between 8:00 am and 10:00 pm (EST) is (865) 4-FAMILY (865-432-6459).

"'Erasing Family' brought me to tears as Ginger Gentile's brilliant production looks through the eyes, hearts and words of children as their childhood is erased, as one of their parents is erased. This film wisely refrains from taking sides but leaves us with the indelible impression that if we don't wish to leave a child behind, we need to not leave a parent behind," quoted Dr. Warren Farrell, co-author (with John Gray) of The Boy Crisis.

Gentile met President & Co-Owner of Glass House Distribution, Tom Malloy, through a Father's rights group on Facebook. After screening the film, Glass House immediately made a deal to sell the film worldwide.

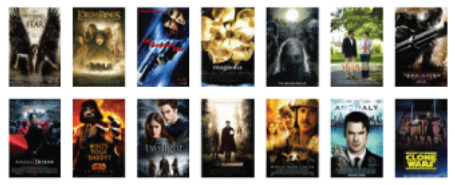

"A film like this is so important because it doesn't favor one side or the other but focuses on the damage inflicted on children from misguided egos of parents and calls for social change. We knew we had to do our best to get this film out into the world," says Malloy.

Erasing Family starts its Exclusive Screenings through Vimeo on Demand on April 25, 2020 with a Q&A with Director Ginger Gentile at 8 p.m. EST on www.facebook.com/erasingfamily. Tickets are available at https://vimeo.com/ondemand/erasingfamily. The film will be released to VOD platforms everywhere, including Amazon, Tubi and YouTube this upcoming summer.

I suggest you watch this if you have family that is facing a child custody battle or divorce. It's a realistic view of how much harm the battle does.

COVID-19 UPDATE

is 28 to 55 times higher than the 7,994 confirmed cases of COVID-19 reported to the county by the time of the study in early April. The number of COVID-related deaths in the county has now surpassed 600."

Dr. Neeraj Sood, a professor at USC Price School for Public Policy and one of the study authors, said the implication is that current estimates will need to be revised to account for the new data.

"It says that mortality rates estimated based on confirmed cases are going to be much higher than mortality rates estimated based on the number of infections or the estimated number of infections," he said. "So we could say that maybe the good news is the fatality rate is lower than what we thought it would be, but the fatality rate is not the only number we should focus on. That is not the only number that determines the burden of disease. What the findings show is that only 4% of our population has been infected, which means we are very early in the epidemic and many more people in Los Angeles County could potentially be infected and as those numbers of infections rise, so will the number of deaths, the number of hospitalizations and the number of ICU admissions."

Public Health Director Dr. Barbara Ferrer said the figures reinforce the need to observe stay-at-home orders and maintain physical distancing because many more people throughout the county could be positive without showing symptoms.

"I've talked before about the need to observe universal precautions," she said. "This means that given the high rate of people that may have been infected at some point, we need to assume that at any point in time we could be infected and that all of the other people we come in contact with could also be infected and that means keeping our distance, using our cloth face coverings when we are in close contact with people and staying home if you are sick so that you don't expose anybody else to any of your germs."

Participants in the antibody study were recruited via a proprietary database that is representative of the county population. The database is maintained by LRW Group, a market research firm. The researchers used a rapid antibody test for the study. The FDA allows such tests for public health surveillance to gain greater clarity on actual infection rates. The test's accuracy was further assessed at a lab at Stanford University, using blood samples that were positive and negative for COVID-19.

However, the study's results have not yet been peer reviewed and the authors said they will continue to test new participants on an ongoing basis to track the spread of the infection.

"Though the results indicate a lower risk of death among those with infection than was previously thought, the number of COVID-related deaths each day continues to mount, highlighting the need for continued vigorous prevention and control efforts," said Dr. Paul Simon, chief science officer at the Department of Public Health and co-lead on the study.

To date, Public Health has identified 13,816 positive cases of COVID-19 across all areas of LA County, and a total of 617 deaths. Eighty-nine percent of people who died had underlying health conditions. As of April 20, 3,465 people who tested positive for COVID-19 (25% of positive cases) have been hospitalized at some point during their illness. Testing capacity continues to increase in LA County, with testing results available for over 80,500 individuals and 13% of people testing positive. Santa Monica has 124 cases.

There may be periodic increases in positive cases and total cases due to unevenness in daily reporting from testing labs.

New Housing Opportunities Open May 1 for Santa Monica Residents and Workers

As greater numbers of individuals and families struggle with unemployment and the economic impacts of the novel coronavirus (COVID-19), the City of Santa Monica will open online applications for its Section 8 and Below Market Housing (BMH) programs beginning Friday, May 1, at 8 a.m.

This is an opportunity for Santa Monica residents and workers at varying income levels - from extremely low income to incomes as high as $94,700 for single households and higher for bigger families. You do not have to be experiencing a financial hardship as a result of COVID-19 to apply, but the City's Housing Division recognizes that this comes at a particularly important moment as more and more people are vulnerable to economic hardship.

"While we are in a public health emergency like nothing we've seen, we are still in a deep housing and affordability crisis that is only compounded by the pandemic," said Barbara Collins, Housing Manager. "We hope the many people who need housing take advantage of the waitlist opening, now more than ever. This is a rolling process, so there's no cut off on applying unlike previous application periods."

Applications will be available in English and Spanish and will only be accepted online at www.santamonica.gov/housing. Applications will be accepted on an ongoing basis but documents to support income and city priorities will need to be downloaded with the application.

The Housing Division is available to help walk applicants through the process, particularly those who require reasonable accommodation or language assistance. To get support, leave a message at (310) 458-2232 after the applications open May 1. If you know someone who could take advantage of the program, but does not have access to a computer, the City encourages you to help by providing support on the phone or in other ways that enable physical distancing.

The Section 8 program provides rental subsidies to low-income families to help pay rent. The Below Market Housing program offers housing opportunities for a range of households at varying incomes.

For more information on the waitlist, housing programs and to apply visit www.santamonica.gov/housing.

As part of the COVID-19 local emergency, the City has put a temporary moratorium on evictions to protect residential and commercial tenants. For more information on that, visit https://www.santamonica.gov/coronavirus-eviction-moratorium.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (APRIL 21)

You travel lighter this year, both emotionally and physically! Life illuminates the essentials, and you'll have the courage to throw out what you don't need. As your energy rises, you'll uplift those close to you and attract a crew of fans and supporters. A fresh chapter begins in August, and you'll be teaching as well as amassing skills. Cancer and Scorpio adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 8, 39, 2, 22 and 40.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The habit you've been trying to change has served you well for a very long time. You're probably feeling a little sentimental about it now. Perhaps it shouldn't be tossed away but gently coaxed out of your life instead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll be focused on attracting the sort of people who are a good fit for you, a key component of compatibility being their ability to pay the price you charge, which encompasses more currencies than one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There are some things that people don't see naturally. They have to learn to see them, or maybe they have to unlearn ignoring them. You'll become informed, and things will look different to you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). In an oxymoronic statement, Henry Ford wisely suggested, "A business that makes nothing but money is a poor business." Indeed, you're looking for a demonstration of heart.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Frustration is caused by unrealistic expectations. Lower the bar a little and see if things don't get a more manageable. Small steps will take you the same distance as hops and stretches.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You'll create possibilities for the next person. This is how a legacy is built, with keys made for doors that exist in future realms beyond what you or anyone around you can see.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). People have various ways of demonstrating status and power. When they can't throw a party or call a meeting or assemble a group to witness their work, a different kind of creativity comes out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Perhaps the high-maintenance person in your life lacks a fundamental understanding of the value you provide. It's better to surround yourself with people you don't have to work so hard to please.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Change your environment. Distance yourself from a problem you don't feel ready to take on. Give yourself time to think and build a strategy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Your confidence reads loud and clear. You've earned this, and yet you're not entirely content with it. This is nowhere near your resting place. You'll continue to flex your skills and improve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). What things are physically is not as important as what they mean. An object has value because of what it represents in the world, or because of the story you've personally attached to it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The ocean is made in drops. Perhaps you can't see your contribution today, but the more people you involve, the better your chances of watching this thing rise.

COMPETITION

competition before heading on to the semifinal round, which is always held at Marlborough School in Los Angeles, according to Lee. Then, the top performers move on to the regional finals that are traditionally held in Pasadena at the Shakespeare Club.

Rosalind is the second Samohi student to have made it all the way to New York, or she was supposed to be until COVID-19 hit.

"Everything was all set," Lee said, mentioning he and Catherine Baxter, a former Dean Of Students at Santa Monica High School for nearly 4 decades, intended to go see Jewett compete. "This year it was supposed to be on Monday, April 27 but they sent us an email saying the live competition is canceled..."

Lee said he has had his students participate in the competition for many years because it shows them that Shakespeare and other literary works aren't only meant to be read or studied on paper, "but they really can be performed and enacted."

"It's always fun to watch," Lee added, and Jewett has brought a very authentic voice this year.

"You can tell that she really enjoyed herself and really, really loved it," he said. "She really thrives when she's left to her own devices to recite and perform because she always senses the audience and whoever's in the auditorium or the venue and then she adapts her piece to the live space, which is something you can't always do from the home."

Instead of canceling the event, contest officials opted to hold it online and asked students to post prepared readings from home. Also, for the first time ever, according to Lee, the National Shakespeare Competition has announced a 'People's Choice Award' that will be given to the participant who receives the most votes from the public.

"Right now, the judges are looking over all of the videos and they will choose the top 10 finalists," Lee said. "They're going to eventually pick a date when they're going to do the 'live' rounds as they call it because they'll be streamed."

Jewett chose to perform sonnet 38 and a Helena monologue from "A Midsummer Night's Dream," for her video.

"We practiced a lot on the cold read," which would have been part of the final routine in New York, Lee said, but now his young pupil has to hope for the best and believe her video is enough to convince judges or the public that she's number one.

"I mean it's a big deal (because) it's not just our city or our school's competition," Jewett said. "Every year only one student from L.A. can go and I'm glad it was her this year.

CITY MANAGER

leave their jobs.

The council praised Cole for his five years of service to the city before announcing their choice.

Several council members said Cole's resignation will help preserve jobs for other employees while allowing new ideas to come forward as the city faces an impending budget crisis.

"His actions will allow us to make room for other folks to keep their jobs, and to lead going forward so we are in a great position as a city to tackle this challenge and that is in part due to the work he has done over these five years," said Mayor Pro Tempore Terry O'Day.

Councilwoman Gleam Davis said Cole helped her during her stint as mayor and said the decision would aid in the council's upcoming debate over restructuring the city.

"I think this has been remarkably gracious of Rick to make this offer, and I want to make this clear that we are accepting it because of his recommendation, as well as our recommendation, that the city is about to embark on some difficult choices," she said.

City Attorney Lane Dilg will step into the role as the city faces a pending financial crisis brought on by the ongoing fight against coronavirus.

"Our city of Santa Monica is fortunate indeed to have as interim city manager someone as qualified and prepared to lead as Lane Dilg," said Mayor Kevin McKeown.

Lane said her work would not be easy given the gaping hole in the budget but she said the city's staff were prepared to handle the problem.

"Like you, I believe we have a very bright future and we are going to get to that future as fast as we possibly can," she said.

Dilg, a graduate of Yale Law School, has served as City Attorney since 2017, leading an office of attorneys and staff who advise City Council on legal matters, represent the city in civil litigation and code enforcement matters, prosecute misdemeanor criminal violations and litigate on behalf of consumers and tenants.

Prior to coming to Santa Monica, Dilg served as senior counsel to UCLA and prosecuted federal criminal offenses as an assistant United States attorney in the Public Corruption & Civil Rights Section of the U.S. Attorney's Office in Los Angeles.

Dilg also served as Counsel to the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary, where she was a trusted legal adviser to Senator Dianne Feinstein in confirmation hearings for Supreme Court Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan.
