Students fight bill that would raise community college course costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Proposed legislation that would raise fees for high-demand courses during summer and winter sessions at California community colleges is meeting opposition from students and faculty.

The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Das Williams, a Santa Barbara Democrat, who said he wants to help schools that have been forced by state funding cuts to decrease course offerings and, in some cases, drop entire sessions.

Williams cited a March Public Policy Institute of California report that found that enrollment in the state's 112 community col-

Fans sink into Cruise's 'Oblivion' in $38.2M debut

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES Movie fans slipped into "Oblivion" as the Tom Cruise sci-fi thriller led Hollywood with a $38.2 million debut, according to studio estimates Sunday.

That domestic haul comes on top of $33.7 million "Oblivion" added in overseas markets, where the film began rolling out a week earlier. "Oblivion" raised its overseas total to $112 million and its worldwide receipts to $150.2 million.

Though many people Friday were caught up in coverage of the manhunt for the suspect in the Boston Marathon explosions, it seems to have had little effect on how the film fared.

"Oblivion" took in $13.3 million on opening day Friday and $14.9 million on Saturday. That 12 percent increase is not unusual for big new releases, which typically do better business on Saturday than Friday.

While Boston was on lockdown much of Friday, that market only accounts for about 1 percent of the nationwide box office, said Nikki Rocco, head of distribution for Universal, which released "Oblivion." The manhunt mainly affected matinee business, with theaters reopening Friday night, when Dzhokhar Tsarnaev was taken into custody.

PUBLIC SAFETY FACILITY

Bring out your drugs

The Santa Monica Police Department and the Drug Enforcement Administration will give the public another opportunity to prevent pill abuse and theft by ridding their homes of potentially dangerous expired, unused and unwanted prescription drugs on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Last September, Americans turned in 244 tons of prescription drugs at over 5,200 sites operated by the DEA and its thousands of state and local law enforcement partners.

The DEA is drafting regulations to implement the Secure and Responsible Drug Disposal Act of 2010, which amends the Controlled Substances Act to allow an "ultimate user" of controlled substance medications to dispose of them by delivering them to entities authorized by the Attorney General to accept them.

Until new regulations are in place, local law enforcement agencies, like the Santa Monica Police Department and the DEA will continue to hold prescription drug take-back events every few months.

People can drop off any prescription drugs to the SMPD, located at 333 Olympic Dr.

ON TRACK: Samohi senior shortstop Mason Landis readies to make a play against Palisades on Saturday at home.

HIGH SCHOOL BASEBALL

Samohi takes down Palisades, 5-4

BY HENRY CRUMBLISH
Special to the Daily Press

SAMOHI After losing 10 of their last 11 games and mired in a nine game skid, Palisades High School's baseball team gave the Santa Monica Vikings all they could handle on Saturday.

However, in the end it would be the Vikings superior teamwork and defense that would win the day, 5-4.

Looking to rectify their record, the Pali Dolphins took the wind out the Viking's sails early by jumping to a 2-0 lead in the first inning. Samohi's ace pitcher, Conner Greene, had over 20 pitches in the first and was noticeably frustrated.

"Greene doesn't usually struggle in the first inning, but I gotta give it to Pali they turned on all his curveballs today," said Kurt Schwengel, Samohi head coach.

"The whole game my curveball was not feeling good at all, it was trash," said Greene, whose counterpart Palisades High starting pitcher, Anthony Poulos, started strong with six strikeouts in the first two innings.

It took until the bottom of the third before the Vikings settled down and started putting bat to ball. Jonathan Rakuljic got things started for Samohi by slamming a double to right field, and was followed on base by Lino Lares.

Lares stole second base and Ryan Barbarin hit a sacrifice flyout to chip away at the lead making it 2-1. The Vikings recorded three drag bunts and three stolen bases to steal the momentum and the lead, making the score 3-2.

"What changed the tempo was the three drag bunts," said Palisades head coach Mike Voelkel, who was less than thrilled to see his team blow another chance at victory. "We were able to put ourselves in situations to do positive things."

Samohi's skipper agreed.

"That's what's so dangerous about our team, the bottom half of our lineup. There's not really a weak spot," Schwengel said. "We're pretty darn versatile."

Although the Dolphins blew their early opportunity to win they persevered throughout, racking up three double plays in three innings. A late rally in the sixth even brought them one run away, but it was the classic story of too little, too late.

The Vikings defense was just as solid with two double plays of their own and an incredible stop by Mason Landis, who hurdled over his teammate Nobu Suzuki to get his glove on a line drive.

"I've been watching Mason for four years and that was the best play I've seen him do," said Schwengel.

The win on Saturday is a credit to Samohi's depth. Samohi was missing five guys from their normal rotation and yet still kept their composure to beat a team who put the pressure on them early.

"We executed, we jumped on the pitcher and we played excellent defense," Schwengel said.

Samohi's next game is scheduled for April 23 against Morningside at 3:15 p.m. It takes place at Samohi.

Fan of WISE & Healthy Aging

Editor:

I have been a volunteer a few times a week at WISE & Healthy Aging for about eight months. They are located at 1527 Fourth St. in Santa Monica. I help out at the adult day service center that services residents from all of the Westside communities.

During my time there, I have been extremely impressed with the staff and the program. The center is open 11 hours each day, from Monday through Friday. There are scheduled activities to about 3 or 3:30 p.m., but clients can come earlier and stay later. Among the activities are light exercise each day, art projects, puzzles, gardening, word and mind games, dominos, et al. There is music and dancing, as well as entertainers and lecturers on health and other subjects.

The staff of six that works there on a daily basis truly cares for the clients and treat them with care and respect. There are a number of volunteers such as me. (One of them has been coming three times a week for 10 years and conducts an interfaith service every Friday afternoon.) But also many different groups help out. Among these groups are nursing students from USC, students from a UCLA gerontology class, Pepperdine students, Valley College nursing students, occupational therapy students, and others. They bring special skills to their interactions with the clients.

A nutritious lunch is provided on a daily basis along with coffee for the early arrivals and an afternoon snack. Feeding help is provided if needed, as well as assistance with toileting. Special services such as showers can also be arranged. There are usually about 15-35 clients there on an average day. They range in age from about 50 to 100 (one client turned 100 last month and another turns 100 in July). Some of the clients have Alzheimer's disease. They wear a device that alarms staff in the rare case that they open one of the doors. Others have varying degrees of memory loss or physical disabilities. Caretakers sometimes accompany their patients and can either help out with their patient or use the time to take a break.

I have set forth this summary because I am so impressed with the program and want to make sure that all seniors who could use it, know about it.

Council to flex muscle on park uses

PROPOSED REGULATIONS ON FITNESS instruction in Santa Monica parks are before the City Council on Tuesday night.

Most fitness training in our parks is "one-on-one" — a private trainer with a client. Some large, for-profit organizations have also been using Palisades Park and other public parks to hold exercise classes and boot camps for dozens of clients at a time. It's a big business. Students often pay up to $275 for three weekly workouts over six weeks.

With all the exercising, the grass and landscaping takes a beating. Other park users are often asked to move away.

Aside from the standard business license, police review and other fees totaling around $284 (which are required of all independent fitness trainers working in the city), our parks are being exploited for free.

Two Mondays ago, I walked Palisades Park during the mid-morning between Wilshire and San Vicente boulevards. I observed six fitness trainers working with individual clients and no group training.

Because I've worked out in private and public gyms for well over 30 years, I know professional training when I see it. Trainers are very attentive. Their routines have continuity and are purposed to achieve specific client goals such as increased stamina, body contouring, added strength, etc. — all without injury. Equipment (weights, pulleys, cables, mats, balls and poles) also indicate other than "buddy" workouts

When a professional trainer uses a health club, they usually pay fees for each client session. Trainers are also often required to join the gym and buy memberships ranging from $50 to over $200 monthly. Training in public parks alleviates expensive gym fees or even carrying liability insurance.

Most trainers I know are notoriously frugal, even those who train Hollywood celebrities for hundreds of bucks an hour. It's only fair that all self-employed trainers pay for using our parks as they would pay in a gym or health club.

City staff is asking the council to approve regulations requiring a $100 annual fee for trainers, a 15 percent kickback on gross receipts, proof of insurance and more. The amount and kinds of exercise equipment brought into parks would be regulated. Limits on class sizes or outright training prohibitions in smaller parks are also proposed.

This is a good start, however council should consider quarterly fees of $75 for private training and $125 for groups. Forget 15 percent of gross receipts because many trainers deal in cash and there's no way to monitor revenue.

I'd limit classes to 10 or less in Palisades Park instead of two persons as staff suggests because the park is one of the training hot spots. Limiting equipment brought into the parks as well as times training is allowed would also be smart.

'THE END' FOR MOVIE THEATERS

By now, most of you are aware that the AMC Criterion 6 (formerly Mann Criterion 6) on the Third Street Promenade has closed and is being demolished.

The Criterion 6, built in 1983 and remodeled in 2001, featured big screens, digital projection and THX sound. It had stadium seating in three auditoriums — the only stadium-configured cinemas in town.

It'll be replaced by a "high-end retail center" with 37,000 square feet of space (apparently already committed to a "mystery" retailer), 12,000 square feet of offices and 32 apartments. The man behind this project is well-connected insider and Downtown Santa Monica, Inc., Vice Chair John Warfel, president of Metropolitan Pacific Capital, Inc.

Warfel was partnered with AMC Entertainment, Inc., in redeveloping the current city-owned Parking Structure 3 on Fourth Street with a new "state-of-the-art" 12 screen multiplex. A flawed City Hall bidding process gave mediocre exhibitor AMC the right to co-develop the new multiplex in 2009. AMC withdrew from the project in December 2012 because it wasn't financially feasible they said.

Warfel and City Hall are now desperately looking for another major exhibitor to co-develop the Fourth Street site. But, I'd bet the family Prius it'll be a long time, if ever, before another exhibitor comes to their rescue and new cinemas are built.

It was back in mid-November 2011, when Warfel announced the redevelopment of the Criterion 6 property into the high-end, mixed-use project mentioned above. AMC discontinued operation of the multi-plex three weeks ago because, they claimed "it was underperforming."

Think something strange is going on, huh?

AMC still operates both the dated AMC 7 and the depressing AMC Loews Broadway 4 on the Third Street Promenade. I'm still wondering how the third rate Broadway 4 could be a better "performer" than the far superior Criterion 6.

Then, we have Warfel, who saw an opportunity to redevelop and make a pile of money while AMC goes bust on two movie multi-cinemas and leaves us a pair of subpar multiplexes?

Santa Monica loses our best screens and 1,500 prime movie seats. And, the Third Street Promenade will most likely experience an accelerated erosion of its most coveted customers — the young, hip, movie-going shopping and dining crowd. What a disaster!

It's too bad the lead actors who were supposed to resurrect Downtown Santa Monica as a premiere performing movie-going locale have delivered such bad performances. Our top movie theaters are history and a new cinema complex will probably not happen.

The good news is that AMC won't be involved in the proposed 12-plex which, by the way, should really be across Fourth Street on city land at Fifth Street and Arizona Avenue.

But, in the meantime, there's another Downtown mixed-use shopping/apartment complex in your future. Aren't you thrilled?

M.L. JOHNSON
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE There's no question that Eric Ciula picked a bad year to get into a competition for growing the biggest tomato. The worst U.S. drought in decades was gripping two-thirds of the nation, and many gardeners were spending hours watering just to keep their plants alive.

But Ciula won his family's 2012 contest with an heirloom tomato that was just shy of 2 pounds. He credits his soil preparation and some experimental growing techniques, but he admits it was largely "dumb luck."

"I didn't know we were going to have a drought, I was just trying something new," Ciula said.

April is a planning month for gardeners throughout the middle of the country, and many are trying to figure out what to do amid rapidly shifting weather conditions. Ciula himself spent a recent rainy day going through his notes, researching tomato and pepper varieties and combing gardening blogs for new ideas.

A cold spring and recent rain helped break the drought in parts of Wisconsin and to the east, but areas west remain dry. More rain than usual is expected this spring, said Brian Fuchs, a climatologist with the National Drought Mitigation Center. But he noted last year's drought sneaked up on everyone, emerging over a couple of weeks in June.

With nothing certain, one expert said there a few things gardeners can do to foster success — regardless of weather conditions.

Mulch works wonders, according to Tim Johnson, director of horticulture at the Chicago Botanic Garden. It helps keep moisture in the soil, protects plants from extreme temperature, helps control weeds and, as it breaks down, improves the soil. Johnson said shredded hardwood bark mulch is commonly used for flower gardens where he lives, but for vegetable gardens, he would use leaf mulch or apply compost.

Many gardeners water each day, but Johnson recommends saving time by doing it once a week with a big drink. Perennials, trees and shrubs can be starved of water a bit without permanent damage, but gardeners need to watch for drooping or discolored leaves.

"If you have a perennial garden or a shrub garden, and things are starting to brown up, you probably should water to save them," Johnson said.

Jean Roach, a 71-year-old retiree from Joliet, Ill., took that approach last summer with her perennials. She gave extra water to a few new plants she was trying to get established, but unless the older ones started wilting, she left them alone.

"They survived," she said, noting that her Lenten roses have already bloomed. "Thank God. Perennials are just so hardy."

Vegetable gardens, however, are another story. Johnson said those need more water and on a regular basis. To help, till in compost to add nutrients and break up the soil so roots can more easily push down to moisture below the surface.

Ciula, a 40-year-old civil engineer, said he put peat moss into his 12-by-22-foot garden in Cottage Grove, Wis., and then layered mulch and straw on top to help hold in moisture. He let his tomatoes — the focus of the family competition — get 6 or 7 feet tall, but only caged them to 4 feet. The tops flowed over and created a canopy that he believes also helped hold in moisture.

Despite the drought and an abnormal number of days over 90 degrees, Ciula got 100 pounds of tomatoes from seven plants. He said he's not sure he would try the canopy in a wetter year, but he plans to stick with the layering, as it helped reduce weeds.

Alison Hess, a 35-year-old graphic designer from Columbus, Ohio, largely gave up last year. A number of her tomato plants didn't blossom, and then an animal began eating the fruit that did grow.

The one bit of success she did have was laying four tomato plants out in a Japanese ring. She shaped a trellis into a square, placed burlap inside and then filled it with compost. Then, she planted the tomato plants around the outside of the trellis. She would pour water into the middle of the trellis, allowing it to flow through the compost before spreading out to the plants.

"I think the idea is that the plants are getting a constant drip of nutrition," Hess said, adding, "It worked, and I got a lot of tomatoes off of those four plants."

She plans to do the same thing again this year.

The best water, however, is always stormwater. Rain cools down the atmosphere, washes dust from leaves and helps clear the air of pollutants — three things that foster photosynthesis, said Boyce Tankersley, the director of living plant documentation at the Chicago Botanic Garden.

Tankersley, who monitors the garden's plants and growing conditions, said thunderstorms are even more beneficial because lightning gives off some nitrogen.

The Q Line

A place to rest

City Hall and the Elks club are battling over burial plots at Woodlawn Cemetery that the club says rightfully belong to them. The city disagrees as legal proceedings continue.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Do you think the Elks have the right to the burial plots or is City Hall right in denying them ownership?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call 310-573-8354.

Greenwashing of the mind

Dear EarthTalk:
I hear the term "greenwashing" a lot these days but am still not sure exactly what it means. Can you enlighten?

Ruth Markell,
Indianapolis, Ind.

In essence, greenwashing involves falsely conveying to consumers that a given product, service, company or institution factors environmental responsibility into its offerings and/or operations. CorpWatch, a nonprofit dedicated to keeping tabs on the social responsibility (or lack thereof) of U.S.-based companies, characterizes greenwashing as "the phenomena of socially and environmentally destructive corporations, attempting to preserve and expand their markets or power by posing as friends of the environment."

One of the groups leading the charge against greenwashing is Greenpeace. "Corporations are falling all over themselves," reports the group, "to demonstrate that they are environmentally conscious. The average citizen is finding it more and more difficult to tell the difference between those companies genuinely dedicated to making a difference and those that are using a green curtain to conceal dark motives."

Greenpeace launched its Stop Greenwash campaign in 2009 to call out bad actors and help consumers make better choices. The most common greenwashing strategy, the group says, is when a company touts an environmental program or product while its core business is inherently polluting or unsustainable.

Another involves what Greenpeace calls "ad bluster": using targeted advertising or public relations to exaggerate a green achievement so as to divert attention from actual environmental problems-or spending more money bragging about green behavior than on actual deeds. In some cases, companies may boast about corporate green commitments while lobbying behind the scenes against environmental laws.

Greenpeace also urges vigilance about green claims that brag about something the law already requires: "For example, if an industry or company has been forced to change a product, clean up its pollution or protect an endangered species, then uses PR campaigns to make such action look proactive or voluntary."

For consumers, the best way to avoid getting "greenwashed" is to be educated about who is truly green and who is just trying to look that way to make more money. Look beyond advertising claims, read ingredient lists or ask employees about the real skinny on their company's environmental commitment.

Also, look for labels that show a given offering has been vetted by a reliable third-party. For example, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Certified Organic label can only go on products that meet the federal government's organic standard. Just because a label says "made with organic ingredients" or "all-natural" does not mean the product qualifies as Certified Organic, so be sure to look beyond the hype.

Even some eco-labels are suspect. If you see one you don't recognize, look it up on Ecolabel Index, a global directory tracking 400+ different eco-labels in 197 countries across 25 industry sectors. The free online resource provides information on which company or group is behind each certification and whether or not independent third-party assessments are required.

JASON STRAZIUSO
Associated Press

OPEN WILDERNESS NEAR ARUSHA, Tanzania Pratik Patel gazed glumly as the herder's scrawny brown dogs moved between piles of bones to eat the rotting elephant flesh. He pointed to the nearby road and wondered aloud: How could poachers kill an elephant just 5 kilometers (3 miles) from Tanzania's main safari highway?

Conservationists have long warned of the existential danger that poachers pose to Africa's elephants. And it's in Tanzania, home of the Serengeti game reserve and one of the world's two largest elephant populations, that the scale of the killings and the involvement of government employees may be the most chilling.

The three elephant corpses seen by an Associated Press reporter eight weeks ago lay in a game park just a few miles from a busy junction outside Arusha, a city of 500,000 people.

"Twenty-four elephants were shot within 10 square miles over the last three months. Thirty miles from here there are another 26 carcasses," said Patel, a safari tour operator trying to raise the alarm about the country's dying elephants. "And this is just a teaser. If we go to southern Tanzania I can show you 70 carcasses in one day," he said, referring to the Selous, the world's largest game reserve.

The man tasked with saving Tanzania's elephants is Khamis Suedi Kagasheki, minister for natural resources and tourism. Patel believes Kagasheki, a former intelligence officer, is trying hard to beat the poachers, but is up against a government cabal unwilling to give up illegal profits.

Much of the demand for ivory is in Asia, especially China, luring poachers across Africa to slay the giants and cut out their tusks for rewards far beyond the daily wage. According to CITES, the international body that monitors endangered species, the illegal ivory trade has more than doubled since 2007.

Every week brings new reports of elephant deaths and the government workers alleged to have killed them — soldiers, game wardens, police, customs officials, all complicit in the killings of the top tourism treasure for this poor East African nation of 50 million people.

Botswana, the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo and Kenya are also suffering from elephant poaching. But Iain Douglas-Hamilton, the founder of the London-based nonprofit Save The Elephants, says he is most worried about Tanzania's because of its huge population — somewhere between 40,000 and 70,000.

Poaching here "is far bigger than is happening anywhere else in Africa," he said.

Accurate death tolls are nearly impossible to come by. Thirty a day, the government reported at the end of 2012. That's 10,000 a year. Double as much, some government leaders have suggested. The truth, conservationists say, is that the government doesn't know, and that many in the government don't want to know, given the suspicion of official connivance in the illegal trade.

Tour operators in Tanzania and neighboring Kenya, fearing for their livelihood, are increasing the pressure on the government to act. Kagasheki acknowledged to the AP that the poaching problem "is not a pleasant story to tell."

"It's a big problem, it's a huge problem," he said of government officials' complicity in the killing. "But I'm not saying it's beyond resolution. We are trying our best and we are getting there."

Too late for Jonathan Howells' family, however.

In February 2011, his father-in-law, Andre de Kock, a hunting guide for 35 years, was accompanying two clients in search of buffalo on the Maswa Game Reserve, a part of the Serengeti ecosystem.

At 8 a.m. they stopped their car to investigate a blue plastic bag across a river.

"Then 11 guys with AK-47s opened up. No warning. No shouting. They opened up, killing Andre with three shots. One in the foot, one in the belly and one in the temple, while he was sitting in his car," Howells said.

The gunmen — 11 by police count — fled. Help arrived five hours later. In the blue bag were more than a half dozen tusks, each 1 meter (3 feet) long or less — all from young bulls. Scattered in the grass by the river's edge were hundreds of shells from armor-piercing bullets, military-grade ammunition available only to government security forces.

A manhunt began, but within two days all the local police — the first responders — had been reassigned, because, Howells said, they had been tipping off the poachers.

Four people were eventually arrested, he said. More than two years later they are still in prison awaiting trial.

Motioning toward his wife, Howells said her father had died "for less than 18 kilos (40 pounds) of ivory, which two years ago had a street value of less than $1,800."

Today, according to the Born Free Foundation, an international wildlife charity, black market ivory sells in Asia for around $1,300 a pound (nearly $2,900 a kilogram). Poachers in Tanzania's bush get $100 for a pound ($220 per kilogram), Patel says.

In the region around Lake Manyara National Park and Tarangire National Park, where the three elephant carcasses lay, the elephant population is about 3,000 and falling.

Charles Bujiku runs a unit called Village Game Scouts, low-paid Maasai villagers trying to protect the animals on their communal land. Asked if government agents are involved in poaching, Bujiku flashes a big smile, and says: "I think I don't know."

But then he notes that the army, the Tanzania People's Defense Force, has a camp just up the hill, and he pulls out a recent poaching report.

On Jan. 20 an army sergeant was caught helping to transfer a tusk. The report shows a man in army fatigues sitting cuffed in the back of a truck. Beside him sits curved tusk.

"A lot of the junior game scouts in wildlife division and junior police officers are involved," said Patel, the safari operator.

"For elephants to be shot at the magnitude they are being shot at, being able to have the ivory transferred from game reserves to port, being shipped to the Far East — it's not the guy at the village level that has the capability. It goes all the way to customs, Tanzania Revenue Authority, Port Authority. It needs influence and influential people."

Anti-poaching units hired to patrol private reserves have found text messages between poachers' phones and government officials, Patel said. "Game scouts, poachers and security forces are all talking to each other. Orders were being placed. Orders were being fulfilled. Accomplices were brought in. The transport of the goods from the source to the city was being facilitated at a high level," he said.

Santa Monica Pier: Renewal Projects

The city of Santa Monica is rejuvenating the structure of the Santa Monica Pier. The original structure was built in the early 1900s and has been through several remodels over its 100-plus year life. The pier renewal will upgrade a significant portion of the pier stretching from the edge of the sand to approximately 365 feet westward over the Pacific Ocean, providing increased structural soundness and extending the pier's service life.

The Pier Renewal Projects will involve:
- Construction of a 20-foot wide pedestrian trestle on the south side of the pier, beginning at the western edge of the Newcomb Pier and extending 175 feet west around the construction zone.
- Installation of new concrete columns.
- Removal of the existing timber columns, timber substructure, and installation of the new concrete substructure.
- Installation of the new timber decking.

Construction is expected to begin April 25 and conclude in spring 2014. The pier and its businesses will remain open during construction. Please contact Curtis Castle, civil engineer, at (310) 458-8721 if you have any questions.

Fencing and deliveries work will take place in the alley behind the parking structure (Second Court), with partial alley closures taking place through April 27. All work will take place Monday through Saturday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. For more information about the Parking Structure 6 project, visit www.SMConstructs.org or call (310) 458-2205.

Alley Resurfacing Project

Construction will occur daily at 7:30 a.m. and end time is 5:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Permeable concrete gutters will be installed in portions of the alleys in the 1200-1400 blocks of Berkeley Court, 1300 block of Stanford Court, 1500 block of Yale Court, 1700 block of Franklin Court, 1400 block of 18th Court, 1500 block of 18th Court, 1400 block of 16th Court and the 900 block of Euclid Court. Approximately 200 feet of the southern portion of each alley will be closed 24 hours per day during the construction dates. Please be advised that concrete operations will generate noise and dust. Questions should be directed to the Public Works Street & Fleet Services Division at (310) 458-4991. For more info on the Alley Renewal Program, visit smgov.net/streets/alleyprogram.

BOX OFFICE

"Once the guy was arrested, I think people got back into their regular routine," Rocco said.

The previous weekend's top film, the Warner Bros. baseball drama "42," held up well, slipping to second-place with $18 million in its second weekend. The Jackie Robinson biography starring Chadwick Boseman and Harrison Ford raised its domestic total to $54.1 million and is on its way to the $100 million mark, said Dan Fellman, Warner's head of distribution.

Overseas, Paramount's "G.I. Joe: Retaliation" got a lift with $40 million, most of it coming from a $33 million debut in China. The action sequel has topped $200 million internationally and $300 million worldwide.

"Oblivion" came in a bit higher than industry expectations. But despite its strong opening, Hollywood's 2013 revenue funk continued, with overall domestic receipts at $109 million, down 19.4 percent from the same weekend last year, according to box-office tracker Hollywood.com.

A year ago, two new romances — the comedy "Think Like a Man" and the drama "The Lucky One" — combined for $56 million that weekend, while the blockbuster "The Hunger Games" remained strong with nearly $15 million.

"Even Tom Cruise was unable to beat the strength of two really strong newcomers that were devoid of stars anywhere near in his league," said Hollywood.com analyst Paul Dergarabedian. "That tells you the difference between last year and this year. Even when we have a good weekend like this in 2013, generally these weekends, they pale by comparison to what happened last year."

Domestic revenues in 2013 total $2.76 billion, down 11.2 percent from where business was at last year, when Hollywood took in record cash.

Business slumped a bit in summer 2012 with some high-profile duds, so studios have a shot at gaining ground over last year with this season's upcoming blockbusters, which include "Iron Man 3," "Star Trek Into Darkness," "The Hangover Part III" and "Man of Steel."

Still, the gap almost certainly will continue to rise in the early part of the summer season.

Disney's Marvel Studios sequel "Iron Man 3" is expected to open with a whopping $125 million-plus domestically over the first weekend in May, Dergarabedian said. But that would fall far short of the record-breaking $207.4 million debut for the Marvel ensemble smash "The Avengers" over the same weekend last year.

Even so, Cruise's "Oblivion" provides a solid action lead-in to summer. The film stars Cruise as a repairman fixing machines in the wastelands of Earth after an alien attack.

Despite upheavals and odd behavior in Cruise's personal life in the last six or seven years, he remains one of Hollywood's surest box-office draws. Universal reported that in exit polls, fans cited Cruise as the No. 1 reason they saw the film.

"He's a global star," Rocco said. "People love Tom Cruise. If you put him in the right vehicle, they love him even better."

In narrower release, Rob Zombie's latest horror tale "The Lords of Salem" flopped with $622,000 in 355 theaters, for a dismal average of $1,752 a cinema. That compared to an average of $10,085 in 3,783 theaters for "Oblivion."

The low-budget hip-hop drama "Filly Brown" opened solidly with $1.4 million in 188 theaters, for an average of $7,250. The film stars Gina Rodriguez and the late Jenni Rivera in the story of a young talent with a shot at stardom on Los Angeles' hip-hop scene.

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Where available, latest international numbers are also included. Final domestic figures will be released Monday.

STUDIO

Samohi team has a special opportunity.

They will film and produce their shows in a professional environment called Studio 16, a creation of Santa Monica City Hall that's used to create award-winning local content broadcast to thousands of homes on cable channel 16, the same that carries city shows, public meetings and other content.

It's an unusual chance, and one that both excites and weighs heavily upon Colin Kornfield, a senior at Samohi and director of this episode.

After all, he's partially in charge of half a million dollars of equipment.

"It's intimidating," Kornfield admitted, but very exciting.

THE HISTORY

CityTV staff, some of whom are on hand for the Samohi taping, are new to the facility as well.

CityTV only gained its own studio a season ago after it finished major renovations on the building on 19th Street, which once housed an auto repair shop.

For fiscal hawks out there, don't worry — the cash used to transform Studio 16 from a fully-operable auto garage into a professional filming studio came from a settlement with a local cable company and a $250,000 fee connected to a 1984 law that allows a charge to cable companies for public, educational and governmental use.

The space may be new, but staff has already made it look like home — upon opening the door, a visitor is greeted by a slew of Emmy Award statues, slightly more imposing for the slightly haphazard angle at which they stand. To the right an office, held by station manager Robin Gee, cluttered with bright yellow chicken suits.

"They're for the Boards and Commissions Dinner," Gee said.

Sure.

As for the Emmys, the channel holds 12 of them now, and will go for 13 — or more — in 2013, turning a traditionally inauspicious number on its head.

They work their magic on a budget, something they achieve by using props picked up in local thrift shops and other discount shopping opportunities, reused from show to show in slightly different configurations to mask their true identities.

One of the most unique pieces — a cook top with storage underneath for mixing bowls — rolls out for cooking shows.

It only helps the bottom line that the studio operates on volunteer labor from Gail Fetzer's Santa Monica College students, who hone their craft by crewing the 80 to 90 episodes produced for CityTV over the course of the 10-week shooting schedule.

Those programs range from discussions on senior issues and environmentally-friendly topics to a program put together by young women at the YWCA where show participants give "snaps" and advice to their peers in an attempt to empower viewers against youth issues, like bullying.

An adult even helps on the show, answering questions about crushes, and other topics better handled by those with more experience.

Each show has a two-hour time slot to film. An ambitious host tries to shoot two episodes in the time allotted, although Gee often only recommends attempting one.

Gee hopes that the diversity of programming strikes a chord with viewers, and that the ability to produce professional-quality and topical shows cements the channel's reputation as a go-to for those interested in Santa Monica issues.

"All of our shows have to have some kind of community benefit. We're looking for what resonates with viewers," Gee said.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

That community benefit extends from content and into the classroom.

The studio provides a learning opportunity for students at both Samohi and SMC, skills that translate into real-world employment in a way that few other classes can boast.

That mentor-mentee relationship is the way of the film world, and the city studio is a valuable asset in forging those bonds because students need to see how the class they're taking and the internship they're working will translate into their future, Fetzer said.

"The staff have been terrific in sharing their knowledge," Fetzer said. "We all started as interns and needed to be taught by someone else."

Over the course of 10 weeks filming actively in the studio, Fetzer's 32 students evolve from nervous wrecks around the expensive studio equipment to professionals who move through the space with confidence and poise.

Tilt, zoom, truck — students leave with the same skills necessary to film an episode of the "Tonight Show," or any other famous broadcast, Fetzer said.

"I love to see the excitement. It's great to teach kids things they want to learn," Fetzer said.

BACK ON SET

On the docket for this show — Livestrong Club, which raises money to fight cancer, Team Marine, which fights environmental battles across the county, Circle of Friends, which pairs students with disabilities with able students to forge fast friendships and Junior Steering, a group that raises money to bring down the hefty price of prom tickets and otherwise improves the experience of juniors at the school.

The high school students have already planned out the guests, written the scripts, chosen the sets and thought out the shots to be edited together for each club's video introduction.

They too are a far cry from where they started — a bunch of high schoolers frightened of the equipment and late for their first attempt at filming.

That was the vision for Studio 16 — a place to not only create content that the community can rely on, but to open doors for those same community members in a whole new way.

"To have our own studio after all of these years is just a dream come true," Gee said.

Michaels worked NFL games and other sports for ABC, and called "Monday Night Football" for nearly 20 years. He also is known for his call of the U.S.-Soviet Union "Miracle on Ice" game at the 1980 Winter Olympics and the earthquake-interrupted Game 3 of the 1989 World Series.

Last year he received the Vin Scully Lifetime Achievement Award in Sports Broadcasting.

BILL

leges had plunged to a 20-year low, the Los Angeles Times reported.

The report suggested several fixes, including charging higher fees for those who can pay. Under Williams' measure, fees would approximate those for nonresidents at about $200 per unit.

The measure is similar to a controversial plan attempted — and then dropped — by Santa Monica College to offer core education classes at a cost of about $180 per unit, alongside state-funded courses set by the Legislature at $46 per unit.

Opponents said that plan created a pathway to a two-tier education system favoring those who can pay.

Williams' legislation is supported by several college districts and some employee unions and nonprofits.

But students and some faculty are organizing protests and outreach efforts to legislators and the public in opposition to the new bill, which they say compromises open access.

"The idea of moving to a two-tier system is anathema to us even in leaner years," said Jonathan Lightman, executive directors of the Faculty Association of California Community Colleges.

Harrison Wills, the former president of the Santa Monica College student government, told the Times that such legislation would violate what should be a public trust and generate money "on the backs of those who can least afford it."

Williams said his intention is to help students be able to get classes.

"Everyone advocates for access, but I'm disappointed that no one supports any ideas," Williams told the newspaper. "This is a modest attempt that is voluntary on the part of students and community colleges. Opponents of the bill should not be able to make decisions for every community college student in the state."

Last week the bill passed the Assembly's higher-education committee on a 10-2 vote. It will now be considered by the committee on appropriations.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Kebede wins London Marathon amid tight security, cheering fans

ROB HARRIS
AP Sports Writer

LONDON They crossed the line in front of Buckingham Palace with black ribbons on their chests and the Boston Marathon victims on their minds.

Six days after bombs exploded near the Boston finish line, the London Marathon sent out a powerful message of solidarity with the U.S. city and its victims Sunday and put the spotlight back on the sport and away from terrorist fears.

The men's race began with a poignant 30-second period of silence to remember Boston's dead and injured and ended with a thrilling finish.

Under clear blue skies, Tsegaye Kebede chased down Emmanuel Mutai in the closing stages and overtook the tiring Kenyan to secure a second London title on The Mall in 2 hours, 6 minutes and 4 seconds, while compatriot Ayele Abshero was third.

"What happened in Boston, it shocked everybody — I didn't want to believe it," said Kebede, who also won in London in 2010. "Sport is not like that — sport is not political. Sport is free from everything. We have to focus more on sport. This is for them (in Boston).

"This is education for those who made this accident."

The women's race was won by Olympic silver medalist Priscah Jeptoo of Kenya in 2:20:15.

About 34,000 runners competed in London, and organizers pledged to donate 2 pounds ($3) for every finisher to "The One Fund Boston" set up to raise money for the bomb victims.

Before the silence at the start of the race, announcer Geoff Wightman urged athletes to "remember our friends and colleagues for whom a day of joy turned into a day of sadness."

Tributes to Boston were visible all around the course, including a banner that said: "Run if you can, walk if you must, but finish for Boston."

"It speaks volumes for London and this race," London Marathon chief executive Nick Bitel said. "It was the perfect response to the horrors we saw in Boston. This shows the solidarity with the British and American people."

Prince Harry mingled with the crowds and said he had never thought about canceling his visit following the bombings.

"It's fantastic, typically British," he said. "People are saying they haven't seen crowds like this for eight years around the route. It's remarkable to see."

Hundreds of thousands of spectators lined the route and showed they would not be cowered.

"I was surprised to see so many people there," said Mutai, who blamed hip and thigh problems for losing his lead near the end. "But I think what gave the people guarantees is, after what happened in Boston, the people came out to say in terms of security everything is fully covered."

Police manpower was increased by 40 percent to provide a security operation that, while noticeable, was not intrusive along the 26.2-mile course.

Several of those competing in the wheelchair race had raced in Boston last Monday. It seemed fitting that American Tatyana McFadden, who won the women's wheelchair race in Boston, marked her 24th birthday with a second title in a week on Sunday.

"There was never a doubt that I was not going to run," she said. "And I was going to run for the people back in Boston — the people who lost loved ones or who are newly injured."

In the women's marathon, Jeptoo was a runaway winner ahead of compatriot Edna Kiplagat and Japan's Yukiko Akaba.

"I was surprised so many people on the way cheering us," Jeptoo said after clocking the fastest time this year. "And that shows there was no fear for those people."

The only blot on a day marked by the defiance of athletes was the dispute that broke out during the women's race.

Olympic champion Tiki Gelana was angry that her hopes were thwarted by a collision about a third of the way in with Canadian wheelchair racer Josh Cassidy as she went to get a drink.

The Ethiopian finished 16th after losing ground on the leading pack, while Cassidy had to settle for 20th in his race.

"The safest thing would be to have the chairs start first because one of these years a woman is going to have a leg broken, a career ruined," Cassidy said. "It's just not worth having this program if the races are going to suffer."

Happy Birthday

Paul Rollens: Local Musician, SUPer

Head home tonight, Gem

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ In your mind's eye, you have a vision of what you want to do today. So many responsibilities and requests head your way that you have little choice but to proceed in a different direction. Tonight: Go with the moment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Allow your creativity to flow, and follow the winds of fate. You have the ability to turn a mundane chore into a happy adventure. Others appreciate your positive attitude and ability to transform the most difficult situations. Tonight: So what if it is Monday? Be naughty.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ You could feel unusually tense about how much is being tossed on your plate. Though you might not want to say the words "stop" or "enough," know that you can convey your preferences through your facial expressions and body language. Tonight: Head on home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Your words have impact, but perhaps they affect someone you would prefer they wouldn't. A loved one could take a comment personally. Listen to your inner voice as to how far you can push this person. Be aware of your limits. Tonight: Meet a friend for a chat.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Recognize a tendency to go overboard. You simply might be having too good of a time and not even realize it. Listen to your sixth sense, and it will point you in the right direction. Tonight: Stay within your budget.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Don't allow someone to take your power away from you. You might decide to head your own way, no matter what happens. You could become emotionally exhausted from a conversation that goes on for way too long. Know when enough is enough. Tonight: All smiles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Know when a retreat is practical, and decide the correct move to make. You don't want to step into an emotionally charged situation. You could feel insecure. Regroup and center yourself. Tonight: Get some extra zzz's.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You might be too strong-willed right now without intending to be. A loved one or someone you were attempting to impress could distance him- or herself as a result. Know that your way is not always right for others. Tonight: Indulge a partner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Tension keeps building, no matter what you do. Stay positive. A partner or loved one will come toward you, as this person is determined to be with you. You could be eyeing something that could break your budget. Tonight: Anchor in.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Follow your whims right now. If you want to take off, do. You need a change of pace, so being in a different setting will be good for you. A friend could disappoint you at the last minute. Tonight: Follow the music.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Deal with a partner directly. You know a situation could radically change, no matter what you do. Creative opportunities pop up from out of the blue. Don't try to impress a parent or higher-up. Tonight: Out and about.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Defer to others. You might feel as though you have the best idea, but taking a step back will work out well for you. Focus on what is happening within your immediate group of friends. A response to an inquiry might be too late coming in. Tonight: Follow someone else's lead.

Monday, April 22, 2013

This year you express a precision that is quite unique. Your attention to detail makes it possible to manifest a long-term desire. You have endurance and the ability to home in on what is important. If you are single, you could meet someone who gives you an instant case of butterflies. Explore what exists between you. If you are attached, the two of you will add a lot of romance to your bond. VIRGO can be very critical.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ So, For a While There, It Actually Worked: The maker of the "all-natural herbal extract" Super Power (which promises "powerful erections") issued a voluntary recall in January after "independent" lab tests revealed that the supplement mistakenly contained a small amount of sildenafil, the active ingredient in Viagra. Such unregulated dietary supplements cannot legally contain drugs without Food and Drug Administration approval. (Also, in March, the Federal Trade Commission ordered three retailers, including Neiman Marcus, to relabel some fake-fur garments because they, mistakenly or intentionally, contained real fur.)

■ A Boston Herald reporter said in March that he had been kicked out of a State Ethics Commission training session (which might not be unreasonable, as the meeting was for Massachusetts House members only). However, at least two people in attendance refused to give their real names to the reporter as they left. Rep. Tim Toomey insisted he was not a member (though he is) but was "just passing through," and Commission chairman Charles Swartwood III (a former federal judge magistrate) refused to give his name at all, telling the reporter, "I'm not saying because that's a private matter."
