Beach-front housing appeal heads to Council

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

A group of residents are continuing to fight plans to build a five-story apartment building near Santa Monica State Beach.

City Council will vote Tuesday whether to deny appeals filed by South Ocean Avenue Residents (SOAR) and UNITE HERE Local 11 that claim that the hoteliers behind the developments at 1828 Ocean Ave. and 1921 Ocean Front Walk will treat the buildings as an extension of their two adjacent hotels, Shutters on the Beach and Hotel Casa Del Mar. SOAR also argues the five-story 1828 Ocean Ave. building will box in the low-slung homes along Vicente Terrace.

City of Santa Monica staff is recommending Council deny the appeals and uphold the Planning Commission's approval of both projects.

SOAR raises a number of issues with 1828 Ocean Ave. in its appeal, including that the development does not align with the City's goals for the neighborhood and would lower surrounding property values. The group also contends that traffic generated by the project would compromise emergency access.

SOAR writes in its letter to Council that it is not opposed to the idea of a new building along Vicente, but asks that its design meshes with the street's older buildings, not exceed 36 feet in height and sit 20 feet away from the curb.

Staff refutes the claims SOAR and UNITE HERE made in their appeals.

"The proposed building complies with the building height volume for the district, is consistent with the height and mass of surrounding buildings, and provides an additional voluntary setback along Vicente Terrace," staff wrote. "Additionally, the proposed project complies with the goals and policies in that it is a mixed-use building with a small ... ground floor café with

THE THINGS WE DO: A local man has transitioned from working in politics to a play write.

ANGEL CARRERAS
Daily Press Staff Writer

A prominent Santa Monican has gone from politics to playwriting.

Grant Woods, formerly John McCain's first chief of staff, wrote the play "The Things We Do", now at the Odyssey Theatre through May 12. The dramedy, based in Santa Monica, centers on couples and the intersection of their lives together after decades of marriage — should they continue together or make a change in their lives?

Woods himself was at an intersection himself many years ago as a young man straight out of Occidental College, having to choose between a more practical career and artsy ambitions. He struggled with wanting to be a writer or lawyer.

"There was no real direct path to be a writer whereas a lawyer, you go to law school and you're a lawyer. I felt I had a better chance of doing both if I got a law degree."

Woods served as a public defender for three years and wrote in his downtime, writing anything that would stretch his imagination.

He wrote as often as he could — until he met John McCain.

"That's no offense to him, God rest his soul," Woods said with a laugh. "He supported my hobbies and dreams. But he was just a 24/7 guy. Never stops. That's the way it was."

Years passed as Woods supported McCain's senate run and served as Attorney General of Arizona himself.

"At some point, you step back and say, 'Hey, it's now or never with this writing thing.' That's how I started devoting myself to writing again."

Since his later-in-life devotion to writing (only

May at SMC's Drescher Planetarium Features Star Parties, Telescope Viewing, and More on the Flights of Apollo

The Santa Monica College John Drescher Planetarium will present special feature shows in May with tips on where to find star parties and how to be a welcome guest at them, a telescope viewing session with a focus on the Moon and a double star, and "Apollo 10: The Dress Rehearsal," the next chapter in the ongoing 50-Year Retrospective: The Flights of Apollo series. The feature shows – as well as the planetarium's popular Night Sky Show – will be held on Friday evenings.

The evening events are at 8 p.m. and are preceded by "The Night Sky Show" at 7 p.m., offering the latest news in astronomy and space exploration, a family-friendly "tour" of the constellations, and the chance to ask astronomy-related questions.

The May events are:

• May 3: "Summer Star Party Planner" – A practical guide to "star parties" (gatherings of amateur astronomers to observe the evening sky) explains when to go, where to go – from local urban and suburban locations to high mountains and deserts – and what to bring to be a welcome star party visitor and participant.

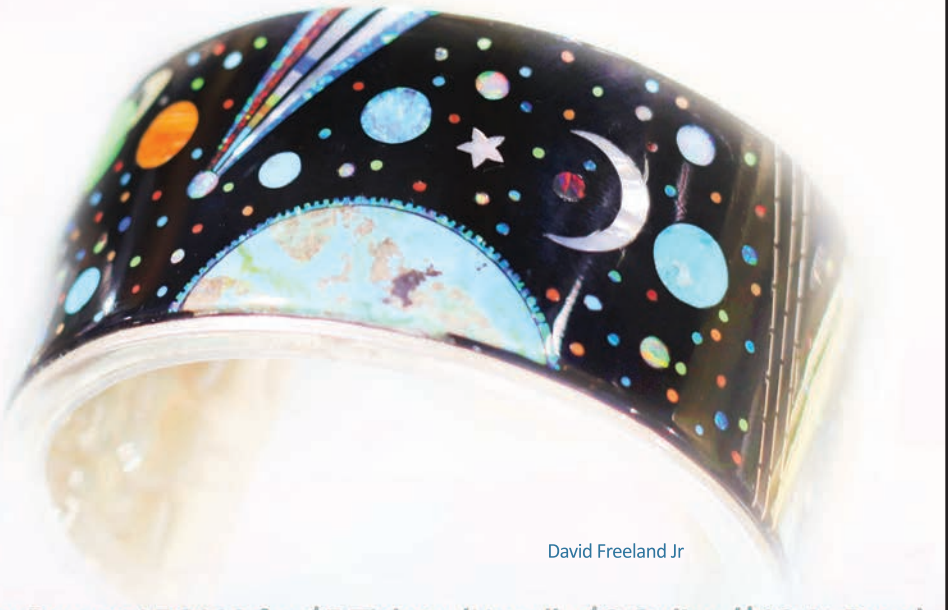

• May 10: Special Observing Event: "The Crescent Moon and a Famous Double Star" – An opportunity to view the Moon, the landing sites of the first and last Apollo landings, and its dramatically lit crater Theophilus - and gaze at the famous visual binary of Mizar and Alcor, the middle stars in the handle of the Big Dipper - through a variety of telescopes, with guidance from the planetarium's director. If clouds intervene, the program will stay in the planetarium with high-resolution images.

May 17 and 31: 50-Year Retrospective: The Flights of Apollo: "Apollo 10 - The Dress Rehearsal" – Apollo 9's successful tests in orbit led to practice operations that would take Commander Tom Stafford and Lunar Module Pilot Gene Cernan to within 10 miles of the Moon's surface, while Command Module Pilot John Young flew solo. A few harrowing moments at a critical point led to some salty language from Cernan on an open mic, an unintentional NASA "first."

The John Drescher Planetarium, which features a Digistar projection system, is located near the elevators on the second floor of Drescher Hall on the main SMC campus (1900 Pico Blvd., Santa Monica). Tickets are available at the door and cost $11 ($9 seniors and children) for the evening's scheduled "double bill," or $6 ($5 seniors age 60+ and children age 12 and under) for a single Night Sky or feature show or telescope-viewing session.

For information, please call (310) 434-3005 or see smc.edu/eventsinfo or smc.edu/planetarium. All shows subject to change or cancellation without notice.

¡Beth, Blase and Gary - Presente!

When someone close to you passes away, you often think about how to keep them in your heart and mind.

Three great Santa Monicans passed away recently — Beth Leder-Pack (March 30), Blase Bonpane (April 8) and Gary Stewart (April 12). All three lived progressive values in their daily lives and in their activism - and sometimes both were one and the same.

BETH LEDER-PACK

Beth made her mark locally in Santa Monica. An Ocean Park resident from the Borderline Neighborhood, Beth practiced her values working in Santa Monica's Rent Control Department for 25 years, patiently and thoughtfully providing comprehensive information to people feeling vulnerable in their tenancy and their homes, about how rent control laws applied to them.

Outside of her day job, Beth was a board member for a range of community organizations, pursuing issues of social justice and affordable housing in a classic, bottom-up way: on the board of her neighborhood organization (the Ocean Park Community Organization), her neighborhood church (the Church in Ocean Park), and the local non-profit affordable housing provider (Community Corporation of Santa Monica). And where there wasn't an existing organization to help promote progressive values, Beth helped create one, being a founding member of Santa Monicans Allied for Responsible Tourism (SMART), which brought Santa Monicans together to support fair wages and working conditions for workers in our local tourism industry.

I first got to know Beth well in her role with SMART, and we penned an op/ed together "Santa Monica Hotel Workers Deserve Their Fair Share Treatment" in December 1997 that laid out the philosophical and practical arguments for what would become the local living wage campaign over the next many years. Beth spoke her mind directly from conscience — without putting her finger to the political winds to see which way they were blowing — yet you could also have a open and respectful dialogue with her if you didn't agree.

BLASE BONPANE

Blase was an ordained priest sent to run a Maryknoll program in 1967 in Huehuetenango, Guatemala, where he was fundamentally transformed by seeing the United States on the wrong side of oppression there. In response, he wrote a column in the Washington Post exposing the killing of thousands of Guatemalan dissenters by US-backed government death squads, and blasting U.S. support for "an oligarchy of 2% of the Guatemalan people who possess 80% of the land and resultant power."

Soon afterwards the Guatemalan government expelled Blase, complaining that he was meddling in politics. Instead of accepting relocation by the church to Hawaii where he would have been under a gag order, Blase returned to California and begin his political activism, first taking a job with the United Farm Workers to be Cesar Chavez's "right hand man", then founding the Office of the Americas (OOA) in 1983 with his wife and life/activist partner Theresa (and with the help of donation from actor, activist and family friend Martin Sheen).

During the 1980s when U.S. military and covert intervention in Central America was at its zenith, the OOA played a key intercultural role promoting peace and anti-militarism - organizing trips there so people could see firsthand the devastation and poverty resulting from US-backed conflicts; and bringing key social movement and political figures from Central America to the U.S. to tell their stories. In December 1985 and January 1986, Blase led the International March for Peace in Central America, marching through seven countries from Panama to Mexico. In the decades since, Blase continued to be a major and respected voice for peace and justice, including going to Iraq in before the US 2003 invasion to try and prevent war, and hosting his "World Focus" radio show local Pacifica station KPFK. Said Noam Chomsky "If you can aspire to a fraction of what [Blase] has achieved, you will look back on a life well-lived."

A Sunset Park resident, Blase loved walking along the beach in Ocean Park starting at lifeguard station #26. Being a station #24 person myself, I was lucky to run into him there on many occasions. As Blase got up in years (he passed away just two weeks short of his 90th birthday), I was always amazed to see him bouncing back from occasional health maladies that had many of us worried, to an incredibly vibrancy when he would be walking along the beach.

"Faith for me" said Blase, "is more a matter of what we do, what our conduct is..When Paul speaks about faith, he's talking about what people did, their willingness to take risks...Don't wait for the perfect solution before acting or you will never do anything."

Blase certainly didn't take risks in siding with the oppressed. Maybe that's one reason he lived such a long, full and vibrant life.

GARY STEWART

Gary brought his progressive values into the music industry through his long career with Rhino Records. Called a 'musical savant' by Billboard Magazine, Gary started by working behind the counter at the Rhino Records store on Westwood Bl. in the mid 1970s. Over time, his vast knowledge of music grew him into a leadership role there, becoming Rhino's senior vice president of A&R (Artists and Repertoire). In that role he cataloged, compiled and published otherwise unheralded and diverse artists, genres, eras and styles of music - empowering voices and cultures that would otherwise not be heard.

Gary also was the impetus at Rhino of a program where employees who donated 18 hours of volunteer time per year for community work would get off the week between Christmas and New Year's Day with pay.

Outside of Rhino, Gary (a Sunset Park resident) worked on issues like living wages, progressive taxation, marriage equality, affirmative action and immigrant rights. He served on the boards of the Los Angeles Alliance for a New Economy and the Social Venture Network, and was also active with the Community Coalition and the Liberty Hill Foundation. When there was an important regional progressive discussion among activists going on, Gary was likely at the table as a respected voice. He was also personally generous in financially supporting progressive causes and was an effective fundraiser for them.

I first met Gary in the late 1970s when he worked behind the counter at Rhino, long before he was a major LA progressive or music exec. I was visiting LA on vacation from Minnesota and went into Rhino looking for live bootleg albums that you couldn't find anywhere in the Midwest (other than in Madison, WI). Gary was just this really cool guy working there who knew music. It was impressive to watch him grow from those grassroots origins into a respected leader in his profession, industry, and the activist world. Again, someone acting upon their beliefs.

LIVING IS REMEMBERING

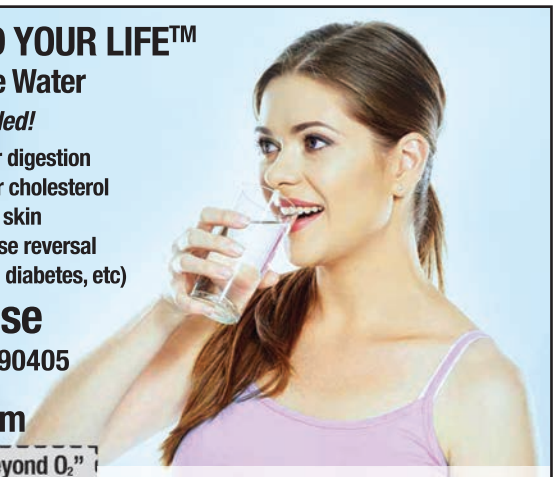

As different as they were as individuals, Beth Leder-Pack, Blase Bonpane and Gary Stewart shared an innate sense of justice, and acted upon that in their daily lives. One way to honor and remember them, is to do the same in ours.

It's also what will pave the way for you to advance other goals you haven't been able to think about (or have yet to conceive) because you've been so busy running around trying to solve a hundred little problems. Aquarius and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 2, 27, 30 and 11.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). With a deadline drawing near, you'll have a choice. You can do it very well. You can do it on time. Or you can do it within the budget. Choose two. Only two are possible.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). What's clear about today is that the issues of society are your issues, too. You almost feel your connectedness to the human race as a heavy responsibility, and perhaps that's exactly right.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Quiet confidence is attractive. Arrogance is repellent. There's a line to walk, and you walk it like a tightrope artist. Your genuine care for others will be like the long pole you use for balance.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You can't always make what you want to do and what you end up doing match. But today you can, and so, you should. It will be an important cornerstone win that you can build on.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). If the needle of time could be set back to the beginning of the record, it would play the same song. So there is no need or use for longing, regret or wishing things were any other way than they are right now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Achilles had his heel. Sampson had his haircut. And you have your own version of a small vulnerability that has a disproportionately huge impact on your strength. Protect yourself accordingly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll do something that makes perfect sense to you. Some of the others won't understand. How could they? Without anything close to your experiences to draw from, puzzlement is natural. Believe in yourself. No need to explain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Resisting peer pressure isn't just hard; sometimes it can be downright unnatural. Humans are hard-wired to stick together! That's why it's so important to be around people with similar values who do the things you admire.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Love brings out the best in you. It makes you more creative, happier and more energetic. When you have to be strong for someone else, you'll realize just how strong you really are.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You don't always have the luxury of choosing what style you'll receive your life in. Some things only come one way. The rarer a thing is, the fewer your options. Luckily, if you don't like them, you'll just do without.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). How many times can you read the same book, see the same movie or hear the same song before you're sick of it? Yet there are works you can return to again and again – soul nutrition that you never tire of.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You will be uplifted by the camaraderie of people doing what you like to do. Whether it's business, sport or art matters little. If you like it and they like it, you'll all be lifted when you do it together.

Earth Day Alignments

The way it goes with seeds is they are completely absorbed in the process of becoming. There is nothing left of the seed once the plant is fully formed. It's almost as though the seed was one lifetime and the plant is an entirely different one. This Earth Day, the Taurus sun and Uranus in Taurus favor our becoming. Trust the process.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"I subscribe to a service that alerts to me to astrological changes that will affect my life. I received a letter in the mail that stated my luck would change on March 10, and my husband got very sick after that. He is in jail, but he was taken to a hospital. Now he is doing better and back in jail. This service wants me to send more money for alerts next year. I want to know what will happen, but I'm afraid, too, especially since I can't do anything about it. What should I do? I'm a superstitious Scorpio."

Take back your power. Instead of waiting to find out what will happen and reacting, decide what you want to happen and get to work. Each sign has a superpower. Scorpio's is transformation. And though you cannot change your husband, his health or the penal system, you can work on yourself and your own life. What improvements can you make to yourself and your part of the world? You may decide to seek guidance from external sources, but don't rely on them more than your internal compass. You are abler, wiser and more magical than you know. Trust yourself.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

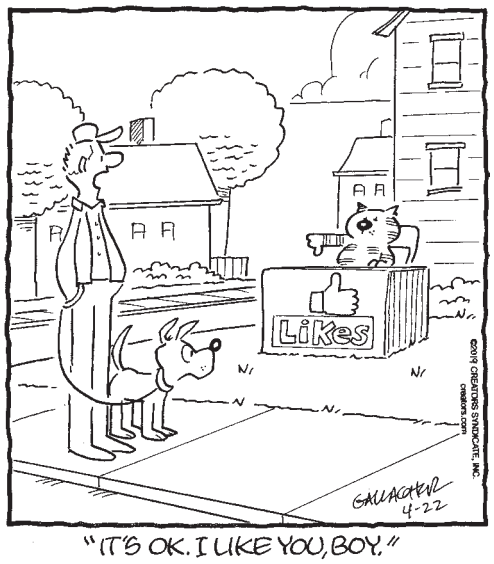

Those born under the sign of the bull are renowned for their stubborn streaks, but this quality also translates into tenacity, nonconformity and iconoclastic style. Actor Jack Nicholson is a perfect example, known for taking on the world exclusively on his own terms. "I'm not good with being told," Nicholson admitted, like a classic Taurus. "I just immediately start resisting the situation." Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis@gmail.com.

residential as the proposed use on the upper floors."

Staff also maintains that residents were given a fair public hearing on the project and that traffic generated by the project would not impact emergency access. There is no proof the building would impact property values, according to the staff report.

SOAR and UNITE HERE have concerns about the project beyond its design, however. They believe the hoteliers behind the projects will run them as de facto hotels, although the Planning Commission stipulated that the buildings must not be used as corporate housing when it approved them.

Santa Monica has been grappling with property owners converting rent-controlled apartments into corporate housing. Council moved last December to prohibit month-to-month leases in residential areas, agreeing that medium-term rentals are chipping away at the city's permanent housing stock. SOAR and UNITE HERE say that the Ocean Avenue and Ocean Front Walk projects are an example of that trend.

"The project is arguably an extension of the Casa del Mar/Shutters hotel complex," UNITE HERE wrote in a letter to Council.

Staff said the City has made it clear to the developers that the apartments must be used as permanent residences.

"If the project operates as corporate housing, lodging, or anything else not permitted in the Oceanfront District as defined by the Santa Monica Municipal Code (SMMC), the City would consider it an illegal operation," staff wrote.

City Council will meet Tuesday, Apr. 23 at 6:30 p.m. at City Hall, 1685 Main St.

FIRM

anniversary earlier this month, she worked late and took herself out to dinner at 9 p.m.

Even with a busy schedule, she said, she feels free. The transition from a large, prestigious law firm to her own practice may be challenging, but Millier said it offers more time to focus and strategize on each case, form deeper relationships with her clients and take on more rewarding work. She also has bragging rights as one of the roughly 300 women-owned law firms in the United States.

"I'm celebrating later this month," she said with a laugh.

Millier graduated from UCLA and attended UC Hastings College of the Law, starting her career at a small law firm in Sonoma County before moving to a large firm in San Francisco. She came to Santa Monica in 2012 to practice business litigation at a small firm in Marina del Rey and got involved in SMBA a few years later.

She enjoyed her work, but she began dedicating more time to revitalizing SMBA, helping quadruple its size by organizing popular networking nights and classes. When her firm made her partner, she started to question whether she would be truly happy at a law firm for the rest of her career.

"I wanted to create something I could see myself building and enjoying for the long term," she said. "I realized the traditional law firm model wasn't really what I wanted to be doing for the next 30 years. I knew I wanted something different."

So she decided to start her own practice on her own terms. For the first time, Millier was able to make decisions about sustainability, steering clear of the paper documents most law firms rely on, and her working hours, which gave her the flexibility to take on greater responsibility at the bar association. Instead of concentrating on billable hours, she could connect on a deeper level with her clients and think longer and harder on cases.

It's more satisfying to win a case, she said. A few months ago, she was approached by a small company who had already hired two attorneys to settle a trademark infringement case. Millier took on the case and resolved it within a month.

"The gratitude that clients express when you've helped solve a problem they thought couldn't be solved is a great feeling," she said.

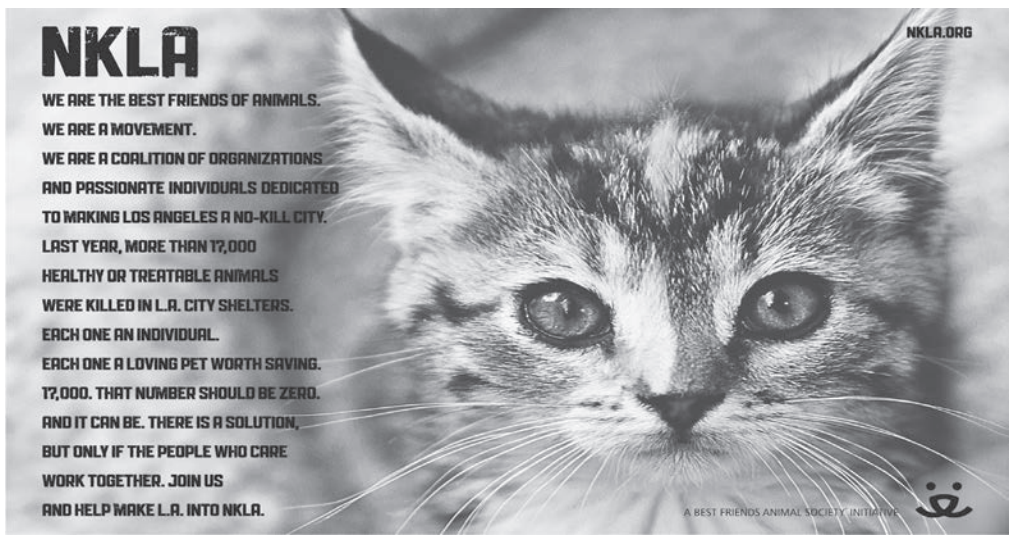

But it wasn't always clear that independence would lead to success, Millier said.

"In law school, you're told you have to get the summer internship with the big firm and follow a set path from there to be a successful lawyer, and the truth is that success looks different for different people," she said.

After a year on her own, Millier said she plans to start hiring attorneys and eventually wants to build a team of four to six. She will also serve as president of SMBA through October. Millier sees both roles as a chance to mentor young attorneys, she said.

"When I was starting out, there were a couple of attorneys who informally mentored me and it was very helpful to talk with others who had been where I was," she said. "Now that I own my own firm, I want to show young attorneys that it's possible to be successful without following a traditional path."

occurring within the last ten years for the 64-year old) he's written a crime novel, songs, films, columns and of course, plays.

Woods developed his current play "The Things We Do" while commuting back and forth between his home in Phoenix, Arizona and his home in Santa Monica.

"It's a six hour drive and not the most interesting drive at that," Woods said, laughing. "You get on the I-10 and you're done, theres nothing along the way. I always had a lot of time to think."

Woods said that for this particular play, he had a basic idea in his head for the premise and whittled away on characters and dialogue. He found that in a story about balancing relationships, the play should be well-balanced.

""The play has a light, comic, sexy feel at the beginning, which draws you in," Elina de Santos, director of the play, said. "But then, because of the things people do, it gets darker and more real. It's fresh and surprising."

The play has been out for a week now with positive reactions from reviewers and actors alike. Actor Stephen Tobolowsky recently tweeted that he and his wife had been talking about the play for several days, its themes still resonating.

Despite writing in almost all forms of media, Woods says his heart will always belong to theater. The instant reactions and near-tangible connection keep him coming back.

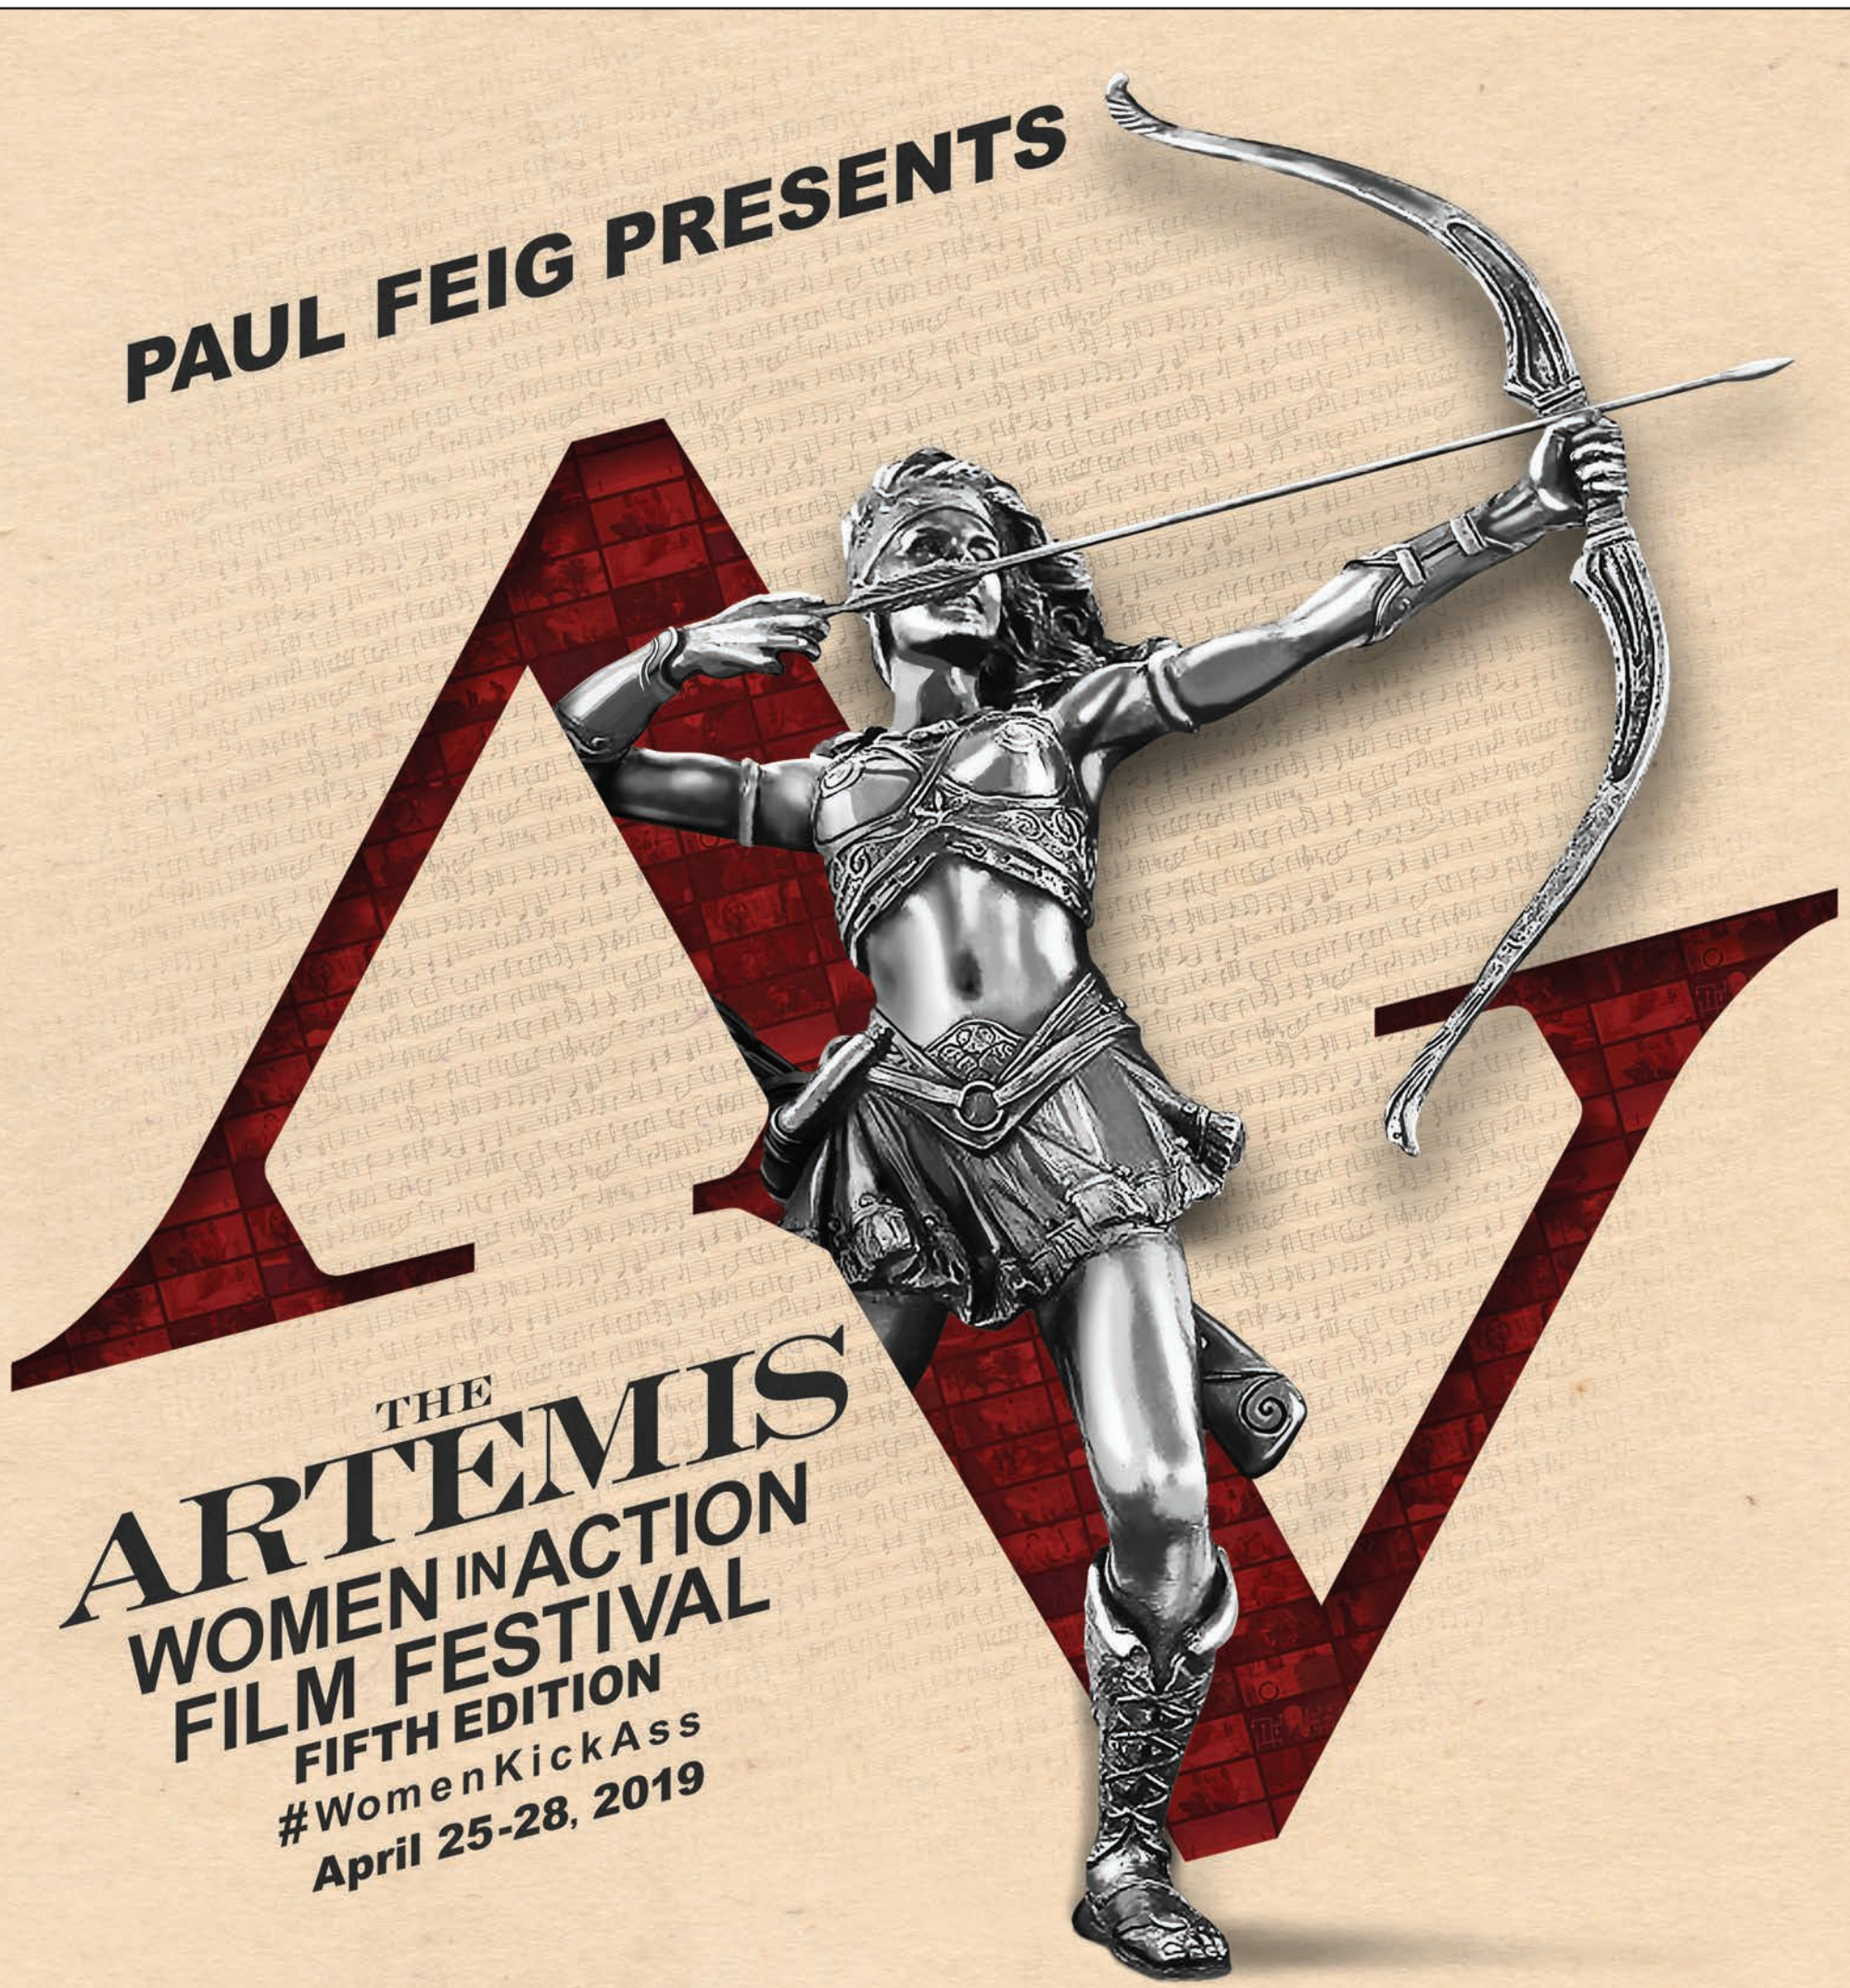

"There's a reason theater has been so popular for so many centuries," he said. "It's a good product, nothing else like it. With the recent success of musicals, Hamilton in particular, it shows a new generation can have their lives changed by it. With writing, you're only limited by your imagination. I'm glad I started writing again."
