$26.45 million settlement for alleged fake COVID test results

CLARA HARTER
SMDP Staff Writer

Venice-based Sameday Health will pay a total $26.45 million settlement for allegedly faked COVID test results for at least 500 customers.

The sweeping settlement was announced on Thursday morning by L.A. City Attorney Mike Feuer. Sameday Technologies (doing business as Sameday Health) and its CEO Felix Huettenbach are to pay $22.5 for fake test results, false advertising and insurance fraud, while company partner Dr. Jeff Toll, M.D. is to pay $3.9 million for his role in Sameday Health's insurance fraud scheme.

As part of the settlement Huettenbach and Toll are prohibited from engaging in the unlawful activity alleged in the complaint and Huettenbach is forbidden from accessing test results or medical records of any Sameday Health customers. The company Sameday Health will be allowed to continue operating and there is no word yet on whether Huettenbach will be stepping down as CEO.

Sameday Health, is a healthcare start-up that launched in September 2020 with a single Venice testing center. It expanded at a ferocious pace to open 55 testing centers across the nation, including 16 in L.A. County, five in the City of LA and one in Santa Monica. In its short life the company has already made tens of millions in profit.

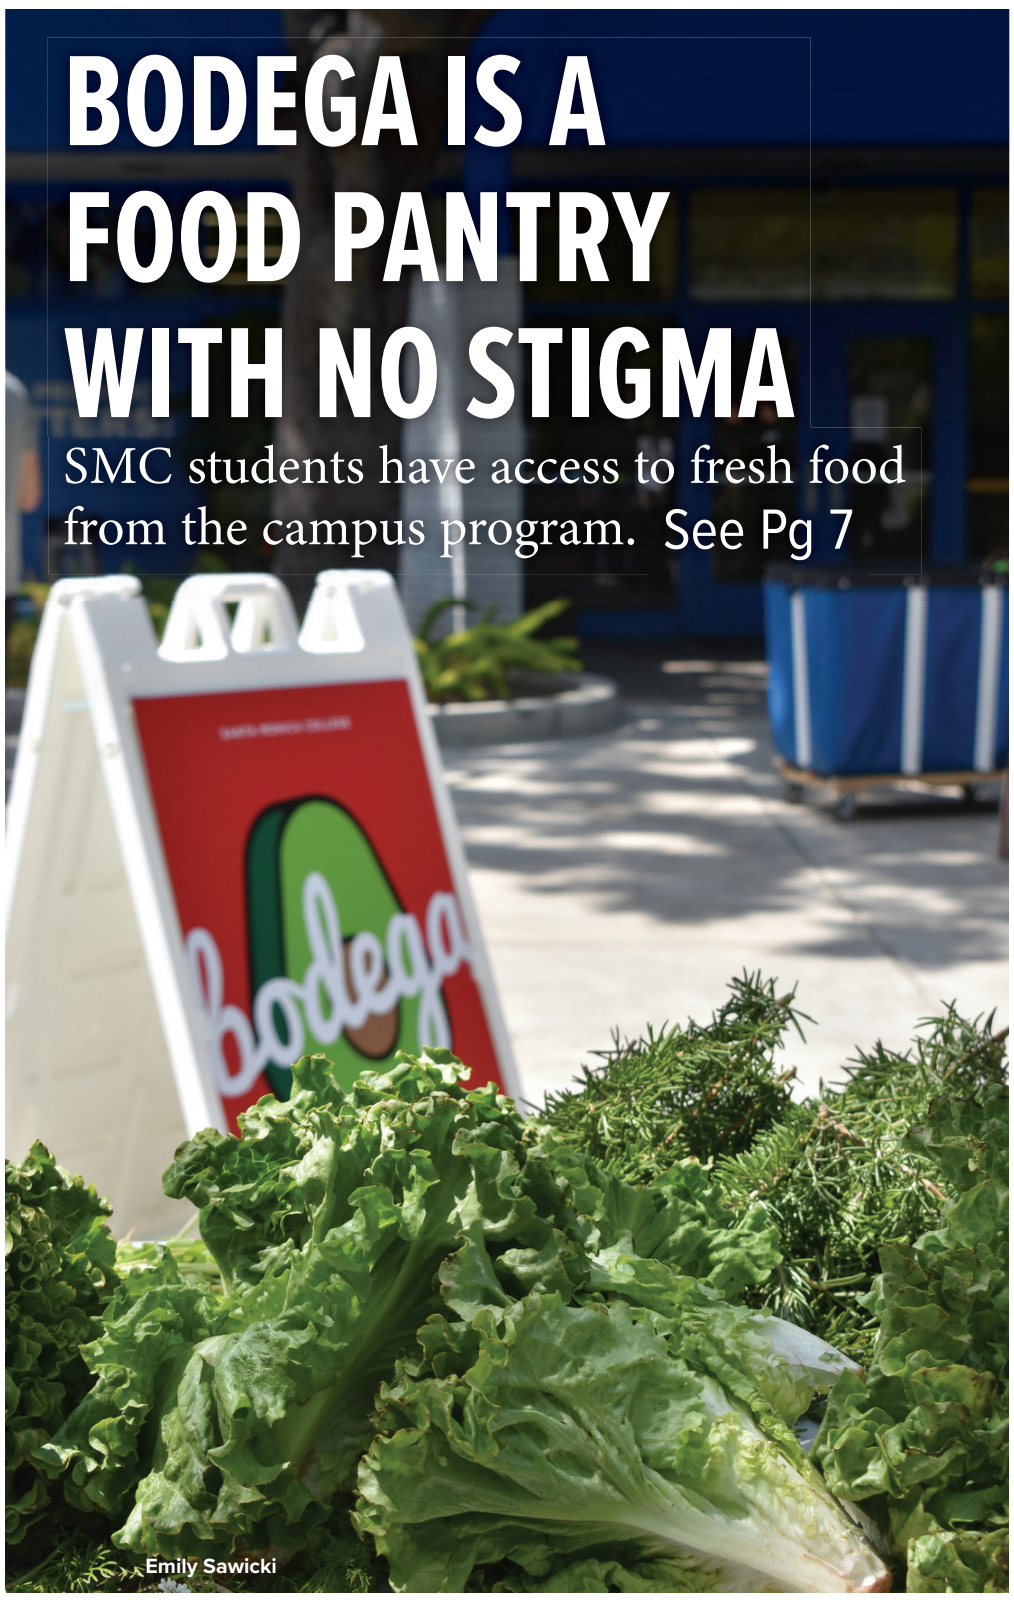

The complaint filed against Sameday Health alleges that the company promised to provide COVID test results within 24 hours, despite knowing that they could not always deliver on the commitment. The company is said to have sent at least 500 forged negative results by manipulating PDFs from prior tests when they were unable to process customers' tests in time.

In some instances, Sameday Health sent a negative result before tests were received by labs or processed by labs. The company

Thursday health order reinstates transit mask mandate

EMILY SAWICKI
SMDP Staff Writer

A new LA County Department of Public Health (DPH) order issued on Thursday afternoon reaffirmed the County's mask mandate on transit and inside transit hubs. The order stipulates masks must continue to be worn aboard trains, in stations and airport terminals, and in rideshare vehicles.

"Our public health team will work with transportation providers and transportation hubs over the next few days to ensure that they're aware of the continued requirements for masking on public transit and indoor transportation hubs and that they're able to effectively communicate this information to their customers," DPH Director Barbara Ferrer said during a Thursday COVID-19 briefing live streamed by DPH.

The current health order — which officially went into effect at 12:01 a.m. Friday, April 22 — was "revised to continue to require masks in all public transit within the County, such as, commuter trains, subways, buses, taxis and ride-shares, and indoor transportation hubs, such as, airport terminals, bus, train and subway stations, marina or port stations" for at least 30 days, unless the CDC states that it is safe to go without or the County's community transmission level drops to "moderate."

Ferrer said the order was in support of current Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) guidelines.

Following the federal mandate being lifted, transit systems around the country began to announce their own mask rules would be suspended, including both the Big Blue Bus and LA Metro systems, which announced the move to drop masking on Wednesday.

That suspension will now be superseded by the new DPH order.

"Effective April 22, 2022, Big Blue Bus customers and Operators will be required to AWARENESS: The Clothesline Project is a national initiative created to raise awareness about the prevalence and impact of sexual violence and abuse. The T-shirts on the clothesline were created by survivors of sexual violence: Red shirts represent a survivor of sexual assault, blue shirts represent a survivor of childhood sexual abuse. The Rape Treatment Center (RTC) Clothesline Project was on display in Harman Garden adjacent to the cafeteria at UCLA Santa Monica Medical Center.

Fewest Americans collecting jobless aid since 1970

MATT OTT
AP Business Writer

Applications for unemployment benefits inched down last week as the total number of Americans collecting aid fell to its lowest level in more than 50 years.

Jobless claims fell by 2,000 to 184,000 last week, the Labor Department said Thursday. The four-week average of claims, which levels out week-to-week volatility, rose by 4,500 to 177,250.

About 1.42 million Americans were collecting traditional unemployment benefits in the week of April 9, the fewest since February 21, 1970.

Two years after the coronavirus pandemic plunged the economy into a brief but devastating recession, American workers are enjoying extraordinary job security. Weekly applications for unemployment aid, which broadly track with layoffs, have remained consistently below the pre-pandemic level of 225,000.

Last year, employers added a record 6.7 million jobs, and they've added an average of 560,000 more each month so far in 2022. The unemployment rate, which soared to 14.7% in April 2020 in the depths of the COVID-19 recession, is now just 3.6%, barely above the lowest point in 50 years. And there is a record proportion of 1.7 job openings for every unemployed American.

The U.S. job market and overall economy has shown remarkable resiliency despite ongoing supply chain breakdowns, the economic consequences of Russia's war against Ukraine and the highest consumer inflation in 40 years.

CRIME WATCH

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

SUNDAY, APRIL 10 AT 2:45 P.M.

Officers responded to Parking Structure 10 on the 1100 block of 3rd St. regarding a suspicious person. The reporting party witnessed a subject drop a knife at the entrance of the parking structure and proceed to sit nearby. Upon arrival, officers noticed the individual look into a car's passenger seat and sit back down. Officers approached the vehicle and were told that the subject had attempted to get them to open their door. A search of the subject found methamphetamine and a bulbous glass pipe, along with brass knuckles. Ultimately, Victor Rogelio Flores was arrested for possession of brass knuckles, methamphetamine, and drug paraphernalia.

The Revolution Generation

Mark Twain once observed, "Everybody complains about the weather but nobody does anything about it." That said, I know of one person who does. (And no, it's not Al Roker the weatherman on the Today Show.) Josh Tickell has directed 14 films on environmental issues, and his latest, co-directed with his wife, Rebecca, is "Revolution Generation."

This will be my third review of the Tickells' eco documentaries but this may be the most important. Coinciding with Earth Week-end and the 52nd anniversary of Earth Day, Rev Gen premieres today and tomorrow at the Laemmle Monica Film Center on 2nd Street. (Josh and Rebecca will be at three screenings for Q & A including at the matinee.)

I first discovered Josh in 2008 when he had an office on Main Street and was releasing his documentary "Fuel" which won the Audience Award at Sundance. "Fuel" revealed America so addicted to oil it needed an intervention. Enter Tickell, with his bio-diesel Veggie Van in which he toured America. Like an eco Johnny Appleseed, he educated us on how to wean off dirty fossil fuels and transition to renewable energy.

In 2020, I reviewed the Tickells' "Kiss the Ground," narrated by Woody Harrelson. It was a fascinating film depicting farmers, scientists, celebrities and even cows working together to spread the word about regenerative agriculture's potential to mitigate climate change. Initially pessimistic, Harrelson calls regenerative agriculture "a viable step toward healing our planet." He asked viewers to "Save our soil in hopes the soil might save us."

The Tickells' films have won awards at Sundance, have been shown in the White House, and have been viewed by over 50 million people worldwide. (Take that Kardashians!)

"The Revolution Generation" is narrated by award-winning actress and frequent voice for eco issues, Michelle Rodriguez (Lost, Avatar, The Fast and The Furious.) Powerful and inspiring,"Rev Gen" is a manifesto for the often ridiculed Millenials who, at 80 million strong, are the most diverse generation in our country's history and also America's biggest work force. It examines the societal forces that have both shaped and held back their generation.

Simply put, if we want to understand the future, we have to understand this generation. While the film's target audience is Millenials, the message to those of us who want desperately needed change is "all hands on deck."

By definition, Millennial refers to those born between 1981 and 1996. Though it makes me dizzy to memorize, Millennials follow Generation X and precedes Generation Z. The term "Echo Boomers" is sometimes used when referring to Millennials because they are the offspring and, forgive me, of "my homies," baby boomers.

MOVIE: "The Revolution Generation" premieres today and tomorrow at the Laemmle Monica Film Center on 2nd Street.

Rev Gen humorously discredits the negative Millenial stereotypes, that they're annoying, lazy, narcissistic and entitled. (Ouch!) Historically, older generations always mock younger generation and are prone to brag about "The good old days". (Except "The good old days" are likely why we're currently in these "not so good days.")

Fortunately Rev Gen advances a more accurate view of Millennials who are, as a group, often socially liberal, identify as independents, care deeply about climate change, gay rights and equality among the races. Generally they don't care where you were born, what religion you practice or who is in your bedroom. Many don't accept the world the way it is and are working to revolutionize systems that have failed their generation,. (And all of us, for that matter.)

The fast paced 80-minute film takes viewers through the world that young people are inheriting. It paints a powerful and actionable picture of how today's youth can help solve the global political and environmental crises. At the risk of being overly dramatic, Millenials have to succeed if we are to survive.

The Tickells' hope for "The Revolution Generation" is that people from different generations empathize with one another. As Josh put it, "This is ultimately a film about connecting in new ways so we can work together to do great things. The

Celebrate Earth Day Every Day by Recycling Your Organics

California is a leader in tackling climate change. The state passed Senate Bill 1383, requiring all Californians to recycle organics beginning January 1, 2022. Decayed food and green waste in landfills emit methane, a potent greenhouse gas that contributes to global warming. By separating organics into green containers, these materials are sent to a special facility and recycled into compost, mulch, and renewable energy. We CAN make a difference in combating climate change, one apple core at a time!

How Can I Comply?

Request a Green Container

If you pay Santa Monica utilities,email your name, account number, and address to recycling@santamonica.gov to request a green container.

even sent results for tests that were never processed.

"It's beyond outrageous that anyone would falsify COVID tests, as we allege happened here. If you get a negative test, you assume it's safe to go to work, visit family and friends, or take a vacation. But the victims of this alleged scheme might unknowingly have spread COVID to others or failed to receive timely and appropriate care themselves," said LA City Attorney Mike Feuer.

Sameday Health was additionally accused of engaging in insurance fraud by giving customers paying for their COVID test with insurance unnecessary additional consultations and charging their insurers for the cost. This included two to three minute long telemedicine consultations for which insurance companies were charged $450 a pop.

Los Angeles-based doctor Jeff Toll administered these superficial consultations and allegedly provided Sameday Health with a significant portion of the profits in return for sending these customers to him.

Under the $26.45 total settlement Sameday Health and Huettenbach will pay over $9.5 million in restitution and almost $13 million in civil penalties, while Toll will pay $2.8 million in restitution and $1.15 million in civil penalties.

Feuer said he recommends Angelenos book COVID tests through Health Services of L.A. County or a trusted medical provider. A map of County and partner testing sites is available at dhs.lacounty.gov/covid-19/testing/.

wear a face covering on board until further notice, due to a new health order issued by @lapublichealth. Thanks for your patience and understanding," Big Blue Bus tweeted on Thursday afternoon following the DPH announcement.

"Transportation settings are often crowded with limited and inadequate ventilation, and deemed to be higher risk settings for virus transmission," Ferrer said Thursday. "Traveling on public conveyances increases a person's risk of getting and spreading COVID-19 because it brings people in close contact with others often for long periods of time and often in crowded settings. When people wear a welding mask or respirator and indoor travel or public transportation settings, they protect themselves and those around them and they help keep travel and public transportation safer for everyone."

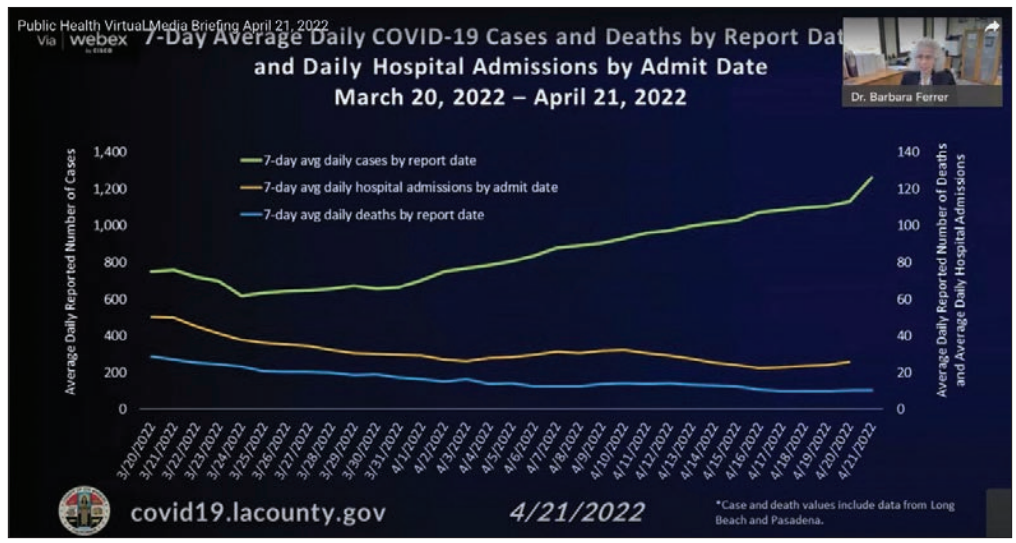

Ferrer warned that COVID-19 cases were steadily increasing in LA County, with 2,123 new cases of COVID-19 recorded within LA County on Thursday.

"Although our current seven-day average of daily cases ... are lower than they were in the winter surge, you can clearly see ... they've been increasing steadily since the end of March," Ferrer said during a slide presentation of a graph showing the seven-day averages for daily cases, hospitalizations and deaths. Ferrer later added, "While from day to day, the rate of increase is relatively low ... the seven-day average number of daily cases is now more than twice what the average was on March 24, when the number of daily cases dipped to about 614 cases a day."

Ferrer pointed out that hospitalizations and deaths were continuing to remain low, not rising in line with the consistent increase in cases reported.

Despite the rules whiplash, the majority of LA Metro riders on Expo "E" Line trains in and out of Santa Monica on Wednesday and Thursday continued to don masks, according to an informal survey of riders recorded by the Daily Press.

SMC food program offers fresh produce to students in need

EMILY SAWICKI
SMDP Staff Writer

Mounds of vibrant green peas, crispy lettuce and emerald bunches of rosemary lie in the dappled sunlight beneath a leafy green tree, patiently waiting to be selected by a choosy shopper. One by one, customers inspect the offerings, harvested minutes earlier from a local organic garden, to take their picks, together with avocados, bananas, potatoes, onions, fresh eggs and a variety of other tempting options.

Is this the latest farmers market to pop up around Santa Monica? Perhaps a food co/op or farm stand proffering its tony wares?

Far from it.

Midday every Wednesday, a team of workers, led by associate clinical social worker Sharlyne Massillon, offers fresh produce, together with prepared foods, artisan baked breads, shelf-stable staples and hygiene products, all free of charge, at Bodega on the Santa Monica College campus.

Bodega is a bright, inviting and stigma-free modern take on what might otherwise be called a food pantry, where food insecure students enrolled at SMC can get supplies to help get through the week with full stomachs. Organizers estimate around 200 students visit the free market each week.

"There were students who would say that they were hungry and couldn't focus in class," Massillon, who helped create Bodega, described. "There were students who were taking a smaller class load because they needed to work to provide their own basic needs for themselves. And so it just dawned on me: Basic needs is really where it starts for schools."

Massillon came to SMC as a USC social work intern about five years ago; there, she began working with the college's food security programs. At the start of the pandemic, Massillon was instrumental in creating a drive-through food pantry to help support students beginning back in March 2020. After more than a year operating the weekly drive-through pantry, in the late summer of 2021, Massillon and her team transformed the program into what is now Bodega.

Originally from Orlando, Fla., Massillon said after college she did a service year through the AmeriCorps City Year program, tutoring high school students. That was when she realized she wanted to go into social work, which eventually led to a scholarship to USC for graduate school.

While enrolled at USC, Massillon said she herself sometimes struggled to make ends meet, but didn't know where to turn on their campus to find help for students like her.

"I didn't know who I was supposed to talk to about these things, and I felt like I couldn't talk to anybody. So I realized that I wanted to be that support system for students," Massillon said. "I wanted to be the person that told them, you know, 'I got it. It's really hard here. This is what you can do. You can come through here. Grab some food.'"

More than just providing food and other necessities, Massillon said her mission is "teaching the student how to fish" — in other words, showing students in need how to find support and resources in their own communities outside SMC. "We don't have a lot of students who live in the Santa Monica area, so we need to reconnect them with their own communities and the resources in their communities."

One key aspect of Bodega is its openness: Students who utilize the service come from all sorts of backgrounds, reflecting the spectrum of experiences SMC students represent, from teenagers living on their own for the first time to mid-career students hoping to advance their job prospects to emeritus students, senior citizens taking classes.

"The community college population lends itself to a variety of people and a variety of walks of lives, and we're seeing that in the students who are waiting in line and who are coming as well," Massillon said.

On Wednesday, Massillon and another SMC counselor, Thaddeus Phillips, were busy checking students in as they lined up to enter Bodega. The two agreed that creating a welcoming, open environment was key to keeping the program vibrant and viable for community use.

"I take a lot of responsibility in making sure the place is really welcoming — like, I make sure that the shelves are really stocked and everything looks nice," Phillips said, adding, "It's all about presentation. It's about being respectful about stuff. It's about being understanding … that's why there's music, because that makes it sort of a more exciting atmosphere."

Massillon said the last thing they wanted for Bodega was for it to be "hush hush" around campus.

"We've got our music playing. We have our great logo and sign. This is a welcoming place," Massillon said. "We want it to be fun and exciting for students. Students are coming here with their friends, you know, they're like, 'Oh, yeah, I just come here and I grab whatever I need.' So the more we talked about it, the more comfortable students become with utilizing the resource." By offering services through Bodega, Massillon and Phillips said, the college was able to create stability in the lives of its food insecure students, which in turn creates positive educational outcomes.

"It's really hard to be successful in your education when you have other needs that are more important, such as food. It's hard to study if you're hungry and you don't know where your next meal is coming from," Phillips said, later adding, "I think this is giving them a quality resource that lets them say… 'I can rely on this. And this can help me sort of get through this period while I'm trying to get my education together.'"

Donations for Bodega come from Westside Food Bank, FoodCycle LA, the Santa Monica College Foundation, local grocery stores such as Vicente Foods and Sprouts, and local bakery Jyan Isaac Bread, among other organizations and businesses. Organic vegetables are harvested out of SMC's Learning Garden, located on campus.

Massillon said anyone interested in donating financially should contact the Santa Monica College Foundation. Bodega is also very happy to accept donations of goods, particularly baby supplies (including diapers, food and wipes) in bulk amounts. Visit santamonicacollegefoundation.org/donate.php to make a monetary donation.

'revolution' that the film speaks about is a revolution of love and the heart. When we learn to love people who we typically judge, the world shifts."

It's fitting that Rev Gen's premiere is in Santa Monica because for years Tickell had an office in Ocean Park and the film includes Santa Monica College students. In addition, one of the film's Co-Producers, Dr. Sheila Laffey, teaches at SMC, while among the Executive Producers, Bill and Laurie Benenson, also have their offices in Santa Monica.

To encourage you to see "The Revolution Generation," and hopefully get involved, I offer Gandhi's inspiring quote, which was eventually turned into a popular bumper sticker in the 1960's, "When people lead, leaders follow." (It just dawned on me, this may be the first time Mark Twain, Mahatma Gandhi and the Kardashians have appeared in the same sentence.)

"The Revolution Generation" is streaming on Apple TV and I Tunes while the DVD and book on which it's based are available on Amazon. Sadly, with nothing to sell, Jack is at: jackdailypress@aol.com.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (April 22)

This solar year, it's as though the universe knows you are not impressed with shallow prizes and so will bring you relationships and situations that are impressive in scale, effect or loveliness. Community feeds your soul, and you'll rack up the goodwill as you make people's lives easier and more interesting. Cancer and Libra adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 22, 15, 4 and 18.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). One thing you'll be extremely good at is forming friendships and weaving them into larger networks. This opens many resources for this weekend's projects.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Being generous feels wonderful but don't cheat yourself, or feelings turn to shades of loss, sadness, anger and pain. When in doubt, do nothing until you're sure about what you can afford, emotionally and otherwise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There will be deals presented to you. Beware of situations where the money is more important than the work. Tonight will be like a fast car: safety first, then have a blast.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Group goals should technically be easier to reach because the work is divided. Keep in mind that if the work isn't more or less equally divided, there will be resentments when it's time to divvy up the prize.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You'll achieve what only mature people are able to: You'll be an objective witness to your own behavior. Feelings are not puppeteers. You will acknowledge your emotions without letting them drag you around.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Peer pressure is a fact of humanity. Wherever people are, there's a pressure to conform to their opinions and behaviors. It's a good reason to spend as little time as possible with people who undervalue you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Stories get exaggerated, pictures get altered, facts get tampered with. You'll get a better sense of things you witness firsthand, but even then, there are obstacles to perfect perception.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The logic you followed before suddenly seems less reliable. You'll navigate with something different. An innate knowing rises up to move you past other kinds of processing. It's like the decision is making itself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You don't have to be perfect to be loved, liked or included. You don't have to be perfect to be persuasive, effective or accomplished. You don't have to be perfect, period.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's as though you can feel someone thinking about you and sense the subsequent reach out before it happens. It's because you are connected at a deep level, working through a joint karma.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Keep pushing through the challenge. Things may not come to fruition as quickly as you'd like, but you can trust that eventually you will know the deep satisfaction of having accomplished what you set out to do.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You bring warmth to interactions. People feel safe with you and there's a sense that you're all on the same side. Where mysteries and manipulation once existed, someone will let down their guard and tell you how it really is.
