Ethics report overshadows busy City Council agenda

BY MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

Public attention at the April 26 council meeting will likely center on discussions of the recently released ethics report, but Council has a full agenda in addition to the flagship item.

Council will revisit past decisions on tenant rights, solar energy, and the minimum wage. New business includes business participation for Expo celebrations.

Two laws will get their second reading Tuesday. Second readings are often formalities that follow the initial in depth discussion but are necessary for new rules to actually become law. A recent decision to strengthen tenant harassment laws and hire a tenant relocation coordinator will be the first item up for a second reading. The other reaches back to a 2015 decision that strengthens local requirements for water efficiency and solar power.

Santa Monica's recently adopted Minimum Wage rules will be revised Tuesday following recommendations from a working group. The law sets Santa Monica's minimum wage to $15 an hour by 2020. However some details were left vague pending the working groups report.

The item Tuesday recommends phasing in sick days up to 5 days for small businesses and 9 for large. Enforcement fines will be set at $100 with the ability to triple and the recommendation is for City Hall to revisit the education/enforcement policies after one year. The working group added specificity to the rules, expanded some definitions,

Surfboards allowed on Expo Line

Metro officials adding language to agency conduct code

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

The extension of the Expo Line to Santa Monica seemingly makes the coastal city and its beaches more accessible to people throughout the county, from residents and workers to tourists and recreation seekers.

Well, what about surfers? Will they ride the train before they ride the waves?

Surfboard will be allowed on the light-rail line, whose buildout from Culver City to Downtown Santa Monica is scheduled to open to the public May 20.

That's according to Metro spokesman Jose Ubaldo, who said the public transit agency is currently developing language about surfboards to add to its conduct code.

"The code of conduct doesn't mention surfboards," he said. "We're applying common-sense safety measures like we have for bikes. When the trains are full, we tell the bicyclists to wait for another train. We don't let them board the train — not because bikes are forbidden but because it's a safety issue.

"That's going to apply to the surfboards. We're working on the language to provide some guidance on what to do."

The main concern, Ubaldo said, is that surfboards could potentially injure riders or make it harder for people to get off the train in an emergency.

"They're allowed as long as they don't create any safety issues," he said.

Mariners working to improve despite Flores' ankle injury

When the St. Monica Catholic baseball team faced Culver City earlier this month, it didn't simply lose the game.

It also lost starting shortstop Michael Flores, who left the diamond with a broken ankle.

The injury during what turned out to be a 4-1 defeat was a significant setback for the Mariners, who are trying to establish the program's culture of commitment in their first year under coach Michael Alcala.

"We've had some challenges,

Annenberg Beach House

Space, Scape, and Scope

A reception for Space, Scape, and Scope, a new exhibition featuring works of photography by local artists Bruria Finkel, Anne Troutman and Sheila Pinkel, will be held on Tuesday, April 26 from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Annenberg Community Beach House. Visitors are invited to view the exhibition, meet the artists, and enjoy light refreshments.

On view through July 12, Space, Scape, and Scope offers images of micro and macro landscapes, depicting both mechanical devices and natural processes. Close up lens scans by Sheila Pinkel investigate light phenomena as revealed via optical glass. Anne Troutman's photo-based landscape constructions are meditations on the process of change in nature, employing techniques of un-stitching and layering fragments of a single image to create an immediate and immersive experience of seeing. Bruria Finkel's series photographs were taken on the 2012 winter solstice at Santa Monica Beach and on the 2014 summer solstice at Nancy Holt's Sun Tunnels in Utah. Taken at 4-second intervals, the images mark both the passage of time and a sense of perpetuity.

Sheila Pinkel is emerita professor of art at Pomona College, where she taught photography and computer graphics from 1986 - 2011. Since 1985 she has been an international editor of Leonardo, the publication devoted to the intersection of art, science and technology. All of her work is about making visible the invisible in nature and culture. Pinkel's most recent solo exhibition in spring of 2015 featured her light works and glass rods at Higher Pictures in New York. Her work was also included in the exhibition of experimental photographs Photography at 50 at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art and an exhibition of the Strauss Collection at the Denver Museum of Art.

Anne Troutman is founder and former director of the Women in the Arts Program, located in Santa Monica. As Chair of Environmental Design at Santa Monica College of Design Art & Architecture, she taught installation and performance art for five years, and while practicing architecture in the 1980s and '90s, she was a professor at Southern California Institute of Architecture where she taught innovative design studios for ten years. Troutman holds a B.A. in Art History from Tufts University, a Masters of Architecture from SCI-Arc and a M.A. in Architectural Theory and Culture from UCLA where she was also a Research Scholar at UCLA Center for the Study of Women. During that time she also worked at the Getty Research Institute, and has published essays on spatial culture and history, with a particular focus on the history of the boudoir and modernist spatial erotics.

Bruria Finkel's education in the arts started in ceramics at Greenwich House Pottery and Alfred University in New York. She arrived in California in 1959 and has lived and worked in Santa Monica ever since. She utilizes a variety of media to explore subjects from abstract geometry to figuration, and a major theme in her work is the motion of time in the human experience and in cycles of nature. In the late 1960s and 1970s her work focused on ecology, women's and survival issues. In the 1980s she created works in handmade paper, art books, paintings and bronze sculptures inspired by her translations from Hebrew to English of the writings of the Cabalist A. Abulafia, as well as a series of 'sky paintings' with Polaroid photography. In the 1990s she created temporary art installations in Germany and England and permanent installations in the U.S.A. In 2010 after a car accident she began using digital photography, iPhone and iPad in her work. In recent works called 'The Skin Series' she dealt with visuals of time passing and change.

Reflective Democracy in Santa Monica

THE BEST ELECTORAL SYSTEMS GIVE voters a realistic chance to elect candidates who reflect their views. In most industrialized democracies, this is accomplished by electing people using a form of voting called proportional representation.

Under systems of proportional representation, if there are 100 seats in a state legislature and Democrats get 40% of the vote, Republicans 30%, Greens 20% and Libertarians 10%, then Democrats would win 40 seats, Republicans 30, Greens 20 and Libertarians 10. This is how most democracies work, in countries the United States is most often compared with.

For local municipal office, there are far fewer seats than in state or federal legislatures. In Santa Monica, we elect seven members each to the City Council, School Board and College Board, and five to the Rent Board. In our compact 8.3 square mile city, all members are elected in city-wide elections. The top vote-getters in each race are elected, up to the number of seats up for election.

Key advantages to Santa Monica's current electoral system

In Santa Monica, voters can vote for as many candidates as there are seats, and candidates have to draw support from all parts of the City to be elected. This gives each voter a voice in electing the entire City Council, as well as the other local elected bodies that makes decisions upon her/his behalf.

Because candidates need support from voters across the city to be elected, they must demonstrate knowledge on a range of issues affecting many parts of the city - and to be re-elected, that they've worked for comprehensive solutions for the community. This is especially critical in a small place like Santa Monica, where what happens in one part of the city can easily affect another, and our daily lives bring us to many parts.

ADDING RANKED-CHOICE VOTING

The advantages of Santa Monica's current system can be built upon by allowing voters to rank as many candidates at they would like in order of preference. Giving voters a greater capacity to express their preferences leads to more empowered voters and more representative elections.

Such a 'ranking the candidates' system is called Ranked Choice Voting (RCV). It's already in use in Oakland (http://www.acgov.org/rov/rcv/), Berkeley, San Leandro and San Francisco (http://www.sfelections.org/demo/) in California and other cities like Minneapolis (http://vote.minneapolismn.gov/rcv/index.htm0) and St. Paul (http://votestpaul.org) in Minnesota.

The proportional representation form of RCV for multi-candidate elections - as we could employ in Santa Monica - is used in Cambridge (MA) (https://www.cambridgema.gov/election2015/ccouncil/15CouncFinal%20Round15.htm) and by every voter in at least one elections in, Australia (http://www.eca.gov.au/systems/proportional/), Ireland (http://www.environ.ie/sites/default/files/publications/files/guide_to_ireland_pr-stv_system_0.pdf), Malta and Scotland (http://www.gov.scot/Topics/Government/Elections/guidance/VotingSystems2).

Under ranked-choice voting, voters can freely rank as many candidates as they want in the order of their preference. Voters can rank freely knowing that second and lower preferences will never count against their top, first choice - and so on with lower preferences versus higher ones (http://www.fairvote.org/rcv#how_rcv_works). This option to rank candidates is especially relevant and valuable in competitive elections like for City Council in 2014, when there were eight strong candidates for three seats, including two incumbents. All eight candidates had long community records, and all were within the 'no growth'/'slow growth'/'smart growth' development spectrum. That produced many hard choices for voters.

Under our current voting system, what happens if you favor more candidates than there are seats, or if you prefer one candidate over another, but have several votes to cast? Who gets your votes? The candidates you favor most? The ones you think have the best chance at being elected? Will one of your votes for a less favored candidate, undermine another of your votes for your more favored candidate? Is it a waste to vote for someone expected to win, or is it a risk not to? Is it better to cast all of your votes or some of them? How can you know the answer to any these questions when casting your vote?

With ranked choice voting all these problems disappear - and the voice of the voter is more clearly reflected in the final results, making our local elections more reflective and fair.

PREVIOUS CITY COUNCIL DIRECTION

In 1992 the City Council appointed a Charter Review Commission to look at district elections. The Commission came back recommending ranked choice voting instead. In 1997 the Council hosted a study session on RCV. In 1999, the City Council gave City Staff direction to look into RCV for use in Santa Monica elections. The City Clerk's office conducted a public workshop on it, in conjunction with the Santa Monica League of Women Voters. Afterwards the League took this position: "The League of Women Voters of Santa Monica supports consideration of alternative voting systems for Santa Monica elections with a special emphasis on the Single Transferable Vote (STV) or Choice system [earlier names for RCV]. (http://www.lwvsantamonica.org/files/votingsystemsfinal09.pdf)

But in late 2001, a pro-electoral districts measure qualified for the November 2002 ballot - Measure HH. In response, the City Attorney's office advised that City Staff couldn't work any further on RCV while HH was on the ballot, lest the City be seen as partisan. The result was that by the time that HH was routed 64% to 36% at the polls, the Council had moved on to other issues, and the momentum to complete the study dissipated.

Measure HH failed at the polls for the traditional reasons districts have been considered a bad idea in Santa Monica - residents would be restricted to choosing only one of seven

Volkswagen scandal's environmental impact

Dear EarthTalk:

What has been the environmental impact of the Volkswagen emissions cheating scandal?

Emily Warden
Philadelphia, PA

AN ANALYSIS BY THE GUARDIAN last September 2015 revealed that affected VWs in the U.S. are likely emitting between 10,392 and 41,571 tons of toxic nitrogen oxides (NOx) into the air every year, based on typical annual mileage counts. If those vehicles had complied with federal pollution standards, they would have emitted just 1,039 tons per year. Researchers believe Volkswagen has added between 10 and 40 times more NOx pollution into our atmosphere than the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) considers safe for people to breathe. According to the Guardian, the 11 million affected diesel-engine VWs on the road worldwide could be emitting some 237,161 to 948,691 tons of NOx emissions annually. In contrast, Western Europe's biggest electrical power station emits just 39,000 tons each year.

Meanwhile, a study released in October 2015 by public health researchers from Harvard and MIT found that 59 Americans will die prematurely from the excess pollution caused by Volkswagen having cheated emissions tests in the U.S. Researchers calculated the amount of extra particulate and ozone pollution put out by the rigged vehicles between 2008 and 2015 to arrive at their conclusions-and recommend that VW prevent another 130 early U.S. deaths by recalling all affected cars in the U.S. by the end of 2016. The health implications in Europe are even more troubling given that half of the passenger cars on the road there are diesels (including eight million affected VWs), compared to just three percent in the U.S.

According to a tentative deal reached between the U.S. government and Volkswagen in April 2016, Americans may be able to breathe a sigh of relief soon. VW tentatively agreed to compensate some 500,000 U.S. customers who own 2-liter diesel-engine vehicles (including certain Jetta, Golf, Beetle and Passat models) that were rigged to cheat emissions tests. While details are not finalized, VW reportedly has committed to either buying back or fixing the cars to meet emissions standards and providing "substantial compensation" - $5,000 each is a figure floating around the rumor mill-to affected car owners. This deal doesn't apply to the 90,000 3-liter diesel-engine vehicles in the U.S. implicated in the scandal, let alone the 10+ million other affected vehicles worldwide, but it does establish a precedent and some guidelines which should direct VW's compensatory efforts moving forward in Europe and beyond.

Environmental groups aren't letting Volkswagen off-the-hook just yet, and not only because the company hasn't agreed to any specifics yet. "The final settlement needs to fix or remove all of the polluting cars still on the road, make whole the consumers who trusted the vehicles were lower-polluting, and compensate for the pollution the faulty cars created," says Kathryn Phillips, the Sierra Club's California director. It's unclear if there is any nod to Phillips' last requirement - a key sticking point for greens intent not to let the German automaker off the hook - in the as-yet unreleased agreement.

For its part, VW isn't taking the scandal lightly, recently announcing that it was setting aside $18.2 billion - more than double the amount it originally anticipated - to help fix the situation amid an environment of overall declining sales. Hopefully VW is now committed to solving the problem and will stay on the right side of regulators moving forward, but who knows how many other large industrial companies are skirting rules and spewing dangerous levels of pollution into our skies, land and water?

VOTE

Council members that represent them, and would lose their voice on the other six. At the same time, six of seven council members would no longer need votes from any given district to get re-elected - structurally disempowering neighborhoods and individuals, and reducing city-wide accountability of elected officials.

SOLVING VOTE-SPLITTING AND NEXT STEPS

One of the common frustrations for many voters from the 2014 City Council elections was the concern about significant 'vote-splitting' among the multiple strong candidates - as well as what could be done about it, other than to wish fewer candidates had been in the race.

The best electoral systems reward more democracy, not discourage it. Ranked-choice voting addresses vote-splitting conflicts by empowering voters to rank as many candidates as they'd like, then consolidates voters preferences to elect the winners. Because different voters will rank candidates in different orders, the result is more proportional and reflective of the diversity in the community. In this way RCV promotes more fair representation, while simultaneously rewarding a broad community base.

The City Council last looked at ranked-choice voting in 2005, giving City Staff direction to review San Francisco's upcoming first-time election with it. It's now been ten years since RCV has been in use in San Francisco and five years in Alameda County. It's no longer theoretical. There is an empirical record within our state to study and learn from.

By giving voters more voice and choice, ranked-choice voting could improve and enrich our local democracy. It's time for City Council to establish a process to explore how it could work in our community.

included "healthcare surcharge" and "benefits surcharge" in the service charge definition and use, removed regulations for other surcharges and added directions for use of healthcare surcharges. The working group recommends decreasing the hours in the first time worker exemption to match the state learner provision to 85 percent of the minimum wage for 160 hours. Additional recommendations were for more information on some definitions and monitoring of the impacts to answer questions related to youth employment, job turnover, or pier affordability. The recommendations also call for aligning Santa Monica's multiple wages to their Los Angeles Counterparts in the coming years.

City Halls ongoing process for naming the new park adjacent to the Expo Line could come to a head Tuesday. Debate around a final name for the so called Buffer Park has swirled around several names but focused on Gandara Park and George Ishihara Memorial Park after to veterans who lived in the area. A compromise proposal called for naming Buffer Park after one of the veterans and possibly renaming Stewart St. Park after the other. However, the Parks and Recreation commission rejected renaming Stewart Street Park and recommended Gandara Park, Heroes Park or Citizens Park for the Buffer location. That recommendation will be before Council Tuesday night.

The only item of new business is temporary rule facilitating business participation in the June 5 open streets event, Coast. Current rules limit the number of sidewalk sale events businesses and business districts can hold in a year. This year, some businesses have already hit their limit but the City wants to facilitate business participation in Coast by allowing business to host sidewalk events without violating the pre-established limit. The proposal would be specific to events held in conjunction with a public street event and would waive the filing fee for temporary use permits.

Council will meet at 5:30 p.m. in City Hall, 1685 Main St., on Tuesday, April 26.

SURF

But Metro officials don't anticipate surfboards being much of a problem.

For one, surfers often get to the water early in the morning and leave well before the crowds arrive. So even if surfers take the Expo Line, Ubaldo said, the trains likely won't be crowded at those times.

Secondly, the fact that the terminus station is still a significant distance from the shore will likely make surfers consider alternatives to the the train. Otherwise, they would have to carry their boards while walking from the Downtown Santa Monica station (at Colorado Avenue and 4th Street) to the Santa Monica Pier via the Colorado Esplanade before hauling it down to the sand.

"They mostly travel in their own vehicles," Ubaldo said.

Plus, many surfers in the county probably wouldn't choose Santa Monica as a destination in the first place due to the tourist crowds, preferring to ride the waves down towards Huntington Beach or up towards Malibu.

The light-rail line that services Australia's eastern coast has special racks for storing surfboards, according to a 2014 article in that country's Courier-Mail newspaper. That kind of accommodation won't be available on the Expo Line.

Meanwhile, there's another mode of transportation for which Metro officials are trying to cope up with rules and guidelines: hoverboards.

The battery-powered two-wheeled balancing boards, which have become increasingly popular in recent years, are allowed on the transit system as long as they're carried. People are not allowed to ride hoverboards on the trains or platforms, Ubaldo said.

"We are preparing language to make changes and address that issue," he said.

The same general principles apply to skateboards, scooters and other personal transit devices.

Gangster's girlfriend faces sentencing on contempt charge

A woman who spent 16 years on the run with Boston gangster James "Whitey" Bulger faces sentencing this week for refusing to testify before a grand jury investigating whether other people helped Bulger as a fugitive.

Catherine Greig is already serving an eight-year prison term for helping Bulger avoid capture. She pleaded guilty to a criminal contempt charge in February for refusing to testify.

Greig is scheduled to be sentenced in U.S. District Court on Thursday. The contempt charge has no fixed maximum penalty.

Bulger fled Boston in late 1994 and remained a fugitive until he and Greig were captured in Santa Monica, California, in 2011.

The 86-year-old Bulger was convicted in 2013 for playing a role in 11 murders. He was sentenced to life in prison.

Los Angeles marches, rallies commemorate Armenian killings

Weekend vigils, marches and demonstrations were held across the Los Angeles area to commemorate the killings of an estimated 1.5 million Armenians under the Ottoman Empire more than a century ago.

Tens of thousands rallied Sunday afternoon outside the Turkish Consulate just hours after a procession marched through the Little Armenia neighborhood.

Demonstrators carrying banners reading "Never Again" and "Turkey Must Pay" were met at the consulate by a small number of counter-protesters kept by police behind a barrier.

There were no immediate reports of any arrests.

A vigil was held Saturday outside City Hall in neighboring Glendale, home to a large number of Armenian-Americans. There was also a special observance at the Armenian Genocide Martyrs Monument in Montebello, California.

Gov. Jerry Brown issued a proclamation Sunday declaring April 24 a statewide "Day of Remembrance of Armenian Genocide" in honor of those subjected to "torture, starvation, mass murder and exile."

Historians estimate that up to 1.5 million Armenians were killed starting in April 1915. Turkey denies the killings were genocide and contends those who died were victims of civil war and unrest. Turkey also insists the death toll has been inflated.

some hiccups in the road," Alcala said. "But the boys are getting at it."

Flores, who could return to the lineup in early May, was batting .306 with 11 hits, eight runs and three RBI when he was sidelined by injury. St. Monica has lost three consecutive games since then, dropping a two-game series against Montebello-Cantwell-Sacred Heart and falling 15-1 to San Pedro-Mary Star of the Sea on the road April 19. The squad is scheduled to host Playa Del Rey-St. Bernard on Tuesday at 3:15 p.m.

But despite their recent skid and the loss of Flores, the Mariners are pressing on.

Alcala said he's set goals for the season while also empowering his players with the responsibility of setting expectations for future student-athletes at the Santa Monica private school.

"It's always nice to make the playoffs, so we'll strive for that," Alcala said. "We want to improve our record, but also our dedication. We're working towards that."

St. Monica was 8-10 through 18 games, including 1-5 in Camino Real League games. But the squad has already bested its record from last season, when it earned just five total victories under then-coach Jack White.

"We're working towards establishing the program," Alcala said. "It's work in progress. We're trying to build it up and prove that you don't have to be a big, power school to be successful in baseball."

Several current players have taken the task to heart, including a senior class that features Declan Kearney, Cameron Nuslein, Marco Rubio and Tony Farina.

Kearney had an earned-run average of 2.22 through 28 1/3 innings on the mound, racking up 32 strikeouts during that span. He fanned 16 combined batters in March wins over St. Bernard and Ontario Christian.

"He's pitched well all year," Alcala said.

Kearney highlights a rotation that also features sophomore Vincent Diaz, who had an ERA of 0.40 and 11 strikeouts through 17 1/3 innings of work.

Nuslein, meanwhile, is leading the charge on offense. The standout quarterback is batting .500 with 17 hits, 10 runs and nine RBI, blasting a home run in the Mariners' loss to Fillmore last month.

"The seniors are leading and everyone's trying to push each other to get better," Alcala said.

That push is aided by assistant coach Anthony Angel, a St. Monica alumnus described by Alcala as "more of a co-head coach."

"He brings a lot of knowledge, a lot of passion, a lot of pride for the school," Alcala said of Angel, who played at Loyola Marymount before being drafted by the Houston Astros in 2000. "He's tried to pass that on to the kids."

Alcala said it's also helped to have a boss who is supportive of the baseball program. Frank Cruz, the athletic director at St. Monica, coached the sport at LMU and USC.

"He's a great person to bounce things off of," Alcala said. "He's been really helpful. He doesn't want to step on my toes and get in my way, but I always ask him. It's been a real big plus. That's really helped us. Even the players, they'll seek him out, and it's great for them to get feedback right away."

Solar-powered plane completes journey across Pacific Ocean

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

A solar-powered airplane on a mission to fly around the world landed in California, completing a risky, three-day flight across a great expanse of the Pacific Ocean.

Pilot Bertrand Piccard landed the Solar Impulse 2 in Mountain View, in the Silicon Valley south of San Francisco, at 11:45 p.m. Saturday following a 62-hour, nonstop solo flight from Hawaii without fuel. The plane taxied into a huge tent at Moffett Airfield where Piccard was greeted by the project's team.

"You know there was a moment in the night, I was watching the reflection of the moon on the ocean and I was thinking 'I'm completely alone in this tiny cockpit and I feel completely confident.' And I was really thankful to life for bringing me this experience," Piccard said at a news conference after he landed. "It's maybe this is one of the most fantastic experiences of life I've had."

The landing came hours after Piccard made a fly-by over the Golden Gate Bridge as spectators below watched the narrow aircraft with extra wide wings.

Piccard and fellow Swiss pilot Andre Borschberg have been taking turns flying the plane on an around-the-world trip since taking off from Abu Dhabi, the capital of the United Arab Emirates, in March 2015. It made stops in Oman, Myanmar, China, Japan and Hawaii.

The trans-Pacific legs were the riskiest part of the plane's travels because of the lack of emergency landing sites.

The aircraft faced a few bumps along the way.

The Solar Impulse 2 landed in Hawaii in July and was forced to stay in the islands after the plane's battery system sustained heat damage on its trip from Japan. The team was delayed in Asia, too. When first attempting to fly from Nanjing, China, to Hawaii, the crew had to divert to Japan because of unfavorable weather and a damaged wing.

A month later, with better weather conditions, the plane left Nagoya in central Japan for Hawaii.

The plane's ideal flight speed is about 28 mph, though that can double during the day when the sun's rays are strongest. The carbon-fiber aircraft weighs over 5,000 pounds, about as much as a midsize truck.

The plane's wings, which stretch wider than those of a Boeing 747, are equipped with 17,000 solar cells that power propellers and charge batteries. The plane runs on stored energy at night.

Solar Impulse 2 will make three more stops in the United States before crossing the Atlantic Ocean to Europe or northern Africa, according to the website documenting the journey.

"The adventure continues," Piccard said. "The story is not finished."

The project, which is estimated to cost more than $100 million, began in 2002 to highlight the importance of renewable energy and the spirit of innovation.

"I think innovation and pioneering must continue," Piccard said. "It must continue for better quality of life, for clean technologies, for renewable energy. This is where the pioneers can really express themselves and be successful."

Solar-powered air travel is not yet commercially practical, given the slow travel time, weather and weight constraints of the aircraft.

"Maybe it will be boring in 20 years when all the airplanes will be electric and people will say 'Oh it's routine.' But now, today, an airplane that is electric, with electric engines, that produces its own energy with the sun, it can never be boring," Piccard said.

GETTING STARTED

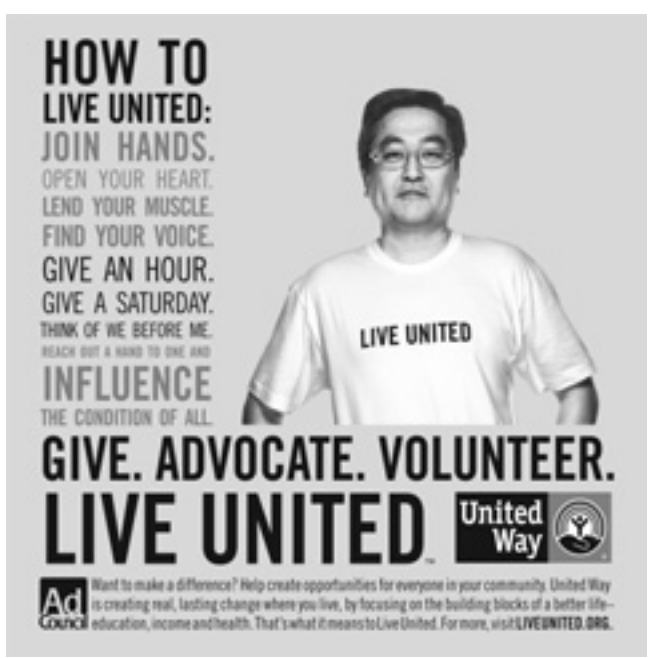

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Tennessee state Rep. Jeremy Durham has such a reputation as a "dog" around women working at the capitol that the house speaker issued a directive in April relocating Durham's office to a less-populated building across the street. Further, Durham is allowed access only to certain legislative meetings and to certain staff (i.e., no free-ranging among female staff members). After interviewing 34 people, the state attorney general said he believed that Rep. Durham's unwanted sexual approaches and commentaries were impeding legislative business.

■ (1) Chinese courts (according to figures reported by Amnesty International in March) dispense justice so skillfully that more than 99.9 percent of cases result in convictions (1,039 acquittals in 1.2 million cases last year). (2) During its first 33 years (through 2012), the U.S. government's applications for secret search warrants to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court have been approved all but 11 times out of 33,900 cases. (FISC defenders say that is because all requests are finely honed by guidance from the judges, but of course, both the Chinese and U.S. numbers, and reasoning, are, by designation, unverifiable.)

Order in tonight, Scorpio

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ You might be surrounded by an element of confusion, as someone switches mental stations on you. You can adapt, but this person might really act and feel as if he or she is off the wall. Tonight: You might have difficulty gaining a perspective.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ A close interaction between you and another person could make you feel uncomfortable. You might not be sure you will get what you want. Friends could be getting another impression, but it's what you feel that counts. Tonight: Listen to a loved one's opinion.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Defer to another person, though on some level you might not be sure that this person's interest is the same as yours. A sense of direction and knowing what you want helps you through a problem. Defer to a roommate or loved one who is close. Tonight: Do some wish fulfillment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Pace yourself. You have a lot of ground to cover. You know when you have had enough of all the talk and swapping of ideas. Your interest is to get to the bottom of a problem and, if possible, eliminate it. Recognize you might need to break from this conversation after a while. Tonight: Curl up with a game or a good book.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ You could hear another person share his or her feelings. You could be confused by a partner. Excess could mark spending right now. Expect ramifications, even if it might be someone else's upset. Tonight: Slow down and don't have any expectations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ You might be coming from a different space, where you need to look at a situation from a different point of view than your own. What is great is that you realize your vision is limited simply by your experience, and one can always open up. Tonight. Try for a quiet night at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Conversation happens easily, though you might be confused by what another person might share. You could have difficulty making a decision, but you don't need to come to a final conclusion just yet. Tonight: Get some extra R and R.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You could be quite exhausted from dealing with another person's needs and qualms. Your lack of patience comes out when dealing with a younger person or loved one. Try not to misdirect your feelings. A friend pitches in, making your day a lot easier. Tonight: Order in.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You feel as if you're finally in your element and not easily distracted. You know what is expected and what you want to do with a touchy situation. A lot of confusion runs through a domestic issue. You don't necessarily see a matter from the same point of view as a roommate or loved one. Tonight: Whatever feels right.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You might be well advised to stay mum and not share everything you know with another person. Fatigue marks a decision, no matter how you look at a personal matter. Pull back in the midst of confusion, and you will hear many different versions of what has happened. Tonight: Feel free to refuse calls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Expect some hoopla around a friendship and what his person is doing. One-on-one relating with this person proves insightful and points to a new direction. Fatigue or irritation could become an issue if you keep having to wade through the same misunderstanding. Tonight: Where people are.

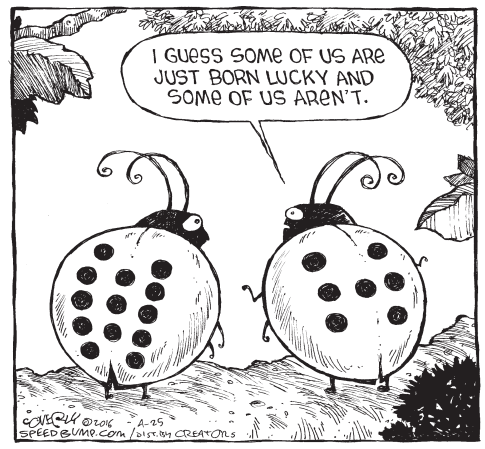

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ You could be in a situation where you are not sure what is best yet you must take the lead. Get as much feedback as possible. If need be, slow down and don't make any impulsive decisions. Don't be too serious. Tonight: Could go to the wee hours.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, focus on your strengths, knowing what needs to happen. You have a friend who often misrepresents situations. Confirm his or her information. Others express so much energy and vitality, especially when it comes to being with you. You have many choices to make if you are single. You could find dating exhausting, as you often have difficulty choosing which person to relate to. Trust that you will know the right person when he or she appears. Sometimes, once you are in a relationship, you find that the other party often is holding back. If you are attached, accept this person for who he or she is, and try to understand what motivates this person. The qualities that might not please you make up the person you love. Maintain a sense of humor, and relating will become far easier. SAGITTARIUS can be authoritarian at times.
