California cities project 2-year losses of $6.7 billion

ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

California's 482 cities say they will collectively lose $6.7 billion over the next two years because of the coronavirus pandemic, prompting layoffs and furloughs for public workers and potential cuts to basic services such as sanitation, public safety and housing.

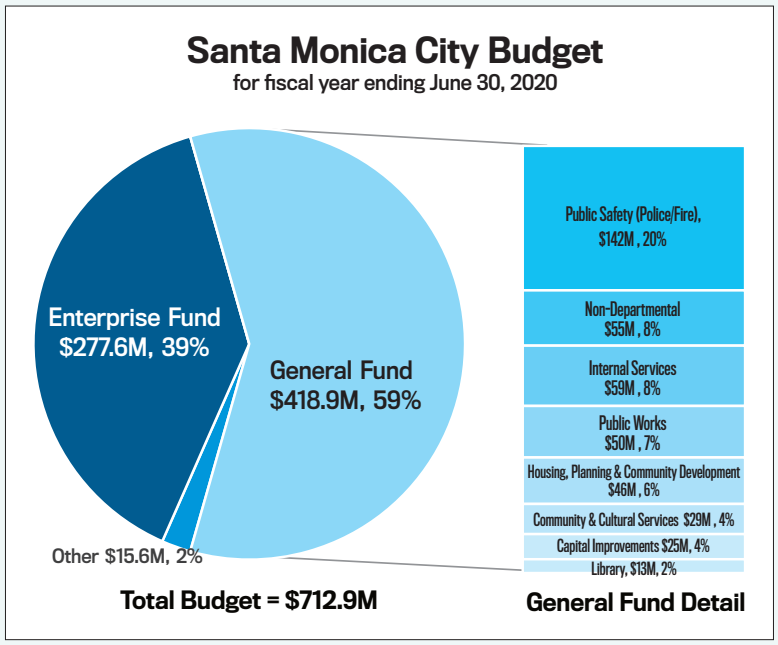

But that estimate, compiled by the League of California Cities, assumes the stay-at-home order lifts by June 1 — an unlikely scenario in a state where Gov. Gavin Newsom and public health officials have said bans on large gatherings and unnecessary travel will likely extend well into summer.

"Obviously, the longer the stay-at-home orders are in place, the longer businesses are closed, the greater the revenue shortfalls will be," said Carolyn Coleman, the league's executive director.

Cities large and small say they are feeling the pain of an abrupt economic halt as most businesses and restaurants have closed and people aren't traveling because of the mandatory stay-at-home order.

In Yountville, a city of nearly 3,000 in California's famed wine country where 74% of its annual budget comes from taxes on sales and hotel rooms, Mayor John Dunbar says a 60% loss in revenue is expected in the upcoming

County issues stricter orders for nursing homes

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Los Angeles County officials said Friday skilled nursing facilities, which have become the site of 43% of coronavirus-related deaths in the county, will be required to test symptomatic and asymptomatic residents and employees.

Public Health Director Barbara Ferrer said nursing homes will also be required to limit entry to essential workers, suspend communal dining activity and require residents to wear masks in common areas. The county is investigating 5,339 cases across 293 institutional settings, a significant increase that Ferrer attributed to increased testing of both symptomatic and asymptomatic residents and staff. Any individual in an institutional setting who tests positive must be isolated and their close contacts quarantined, she said.

"We used to just recommend, even in places where we were

Sizing up Trump's green-card halt: Is it just temporary?

ELLIOT SPAGAT
Associated Press

Pamela Austin, a recruiter at Adventist Health Bakersfield in California, made seven job offers to foreign nurses in February and just finished a first round of interviews with 12 more candidates. They are from all over the world, including the United Kingdom, Philippines, Australia and Malaysia.

The international candidates fill the private hospital's critical need for experienced nurses who can work in emergency rooms and intensive care units, Austin said — jobs that can't be met only with U.S. nurses, many of whom are recent graduates.

That need could go unfilled, however, if President Donald Trump extends a 60-day hold on green cards he ordered in the name of protecting American jobs amid the coronavirus outbreak.

"It would be a huge setback," Austin said. "Those are holes I don't have people to fill."

Trump says the measure is necessary at a time when unemployment has climbed to levels last seen during the Great Depression.

Critics have dismissed the move as the president's veiled attempt to achieve cuts to legal immigration that he previously suggested but couldn't persuade Congress or the courts to accept — and to distract voters from his handling of the pandemic.

But immigrant advocates and political opponents are not the only ones who oppose the measure: Hardliners from Trump's base say it doesn't go far enough to limit immigration.

The order "is designed to satisfy powerful business interests that value a steady flow of cheap foreign labor," Dan Stein, president of the Federation for American Immigration Reform, wrote in a letter to the president Thursday.

The Center for Immigration Studies, another hardline group, said the 60-day pause "will provide little relief to Americans" and criticized an exemption for foreigners who agree to invest at least $900,000 in the U.S.

The proclamation, signed Wednesday, excludes temporary nonimmigrant visas for hundreds of thousands of workers a year, including farm workers, software engineers and others in fields deemed to have labor shortages. It doesn't apply to green-card applicants already in the United States.

Many families will be barred from immigrating as long as the freeze lasts — more than 200,000 people at last year's levels. Spouses of U.S. citizens and their children under 21 are exempt, but parents, adult children, grandchildren, adult siblings and other relatives aren't.

Carl Shusterman, a Los Angeles immigration attorney who advises hospitals, said he had hoped Trump's proclamation would provide a blanket exemption for nurses, who often arrive on green cards. Instead, it only exempts health care workers whose work is deemed essential to recovering from the COVID-19 outbreak.

"Embassies and consulates make the decisions," he said. "They don't have any special expertise in COVID-19, like none of us do."

Houston immigration attorney Raed Gonzalez said he doesn't expect the suspension to have much of an effect — at least in the short term — because embassies and consulates had already halted routine visa processing last month in response to the pandemic.

"This is more of a show from the administration than anything else," he said.

But other immigrant advocates predict profound changes if the measure becomes permanent.

Doug Rand, co-founder of Boundless, a company that advises families and individuals on green cards, estimates 358,000 applicants a year would be unable to get permanent residency if the order were extended.

He said the casualties would include roughly 50,000 diversity visas each year for countries that send fewer people to the U.S., and that the measure would have a big impact on immigrants from Asia, Central America and eastern Europe.

Rand says Trump is using the pandemic to achieve changes to the immigration system that he couldn't get past Congress or the courts. He called the 60-day halt a "double fig leaf" to make the measure more palatable.

"I don't think it takes much guesswork that President Donald Trump is going to use his discretion to extend it 60 days from now and again and again and again," Rand said.

The edict has similarities to legislation Trump tried unsuccessfully to pass in 2017 that would slash legal immigration, largely through family-based visas that the president has referred to derisively as "chain migration."

Last month, the administration effectively suspended asylum by rapidly expelling anyone who enters the country along borders with Mexico and Canada. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention this week extended the policy through May 20 on public health grounds.

Trump told reporters that he may extend the most recent order or modify it next week, in two months or "as we go along" to be "made tougher or made less tough."

"We don't want to hurt our businesses, and we don't want to hurt our farmers," he said Wednesday. "Very important."

Joe Biden, Trump's presumed Democratic rival in November's election, echoed those who called the measure an attempt to divert attention from the president's handling of the pandemic.

"Rather than execute a swift and aggressive effort to ramp up testing, Donald Trump is tweeting incendiary rhetoric about immigrants in the hopes that he can distract everyone from the core truth: He's moved too slowly to contain this virus, and we are all paying the price for it," Biden said Tuesday.

Matt Hill, a campaign spokesman, said Thursday that Biden would not maintain the policy if elected.

Associated Press reporter Nomaan Merchant in Houston contributed to this report.

U.S. states build stockpiles of malaria drug touted by Trump

BRADY MCCOMBS AND LINDSAY WHITEHURST
Associated Press

State and local governments across the United States have obtained 30 million doses of a malaria drug touted by President Trump to treat patients with the new coronavirus, despite warnings from doctors that more research is needed.

At least 21 states and Washington, D.C. secured shipments of the drug, hydroxychloroquine, according to information compiled from state and federal officials by The Associated Press. Fifteen of those states were won by Trump in 2016, although five of them including North Carolina and Louisiana are now led by Democratic governors.

Supporters say having a supply on hand makes sense in case the drug is shown to be effective against the pandemic that's devastated the global economy and killed nearly 200,000 people worldwide, and to ensure a steady supply for people who need it for other conditions like lupus.

But health experts worry that having the drug easily available at a time of heightened public fear could make it easier to misuse it. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Friday warned doctors against prescribing the drug, hydroxychloroquine, for treating the new coronavirus outside of hospitals or research settings, because of reports of serious side effects, including dangerous irregular heart rhythms, and death among patients.

It's the latest admonition against the drug that Trump mentioned 17 times in various public appearances, touting its potential despite his own health advisors telling him it is unproven.

Utah and Ohio have spent hundreds of thousands to purchase the drugs, and the rest of the cities and states have received free shipments from drug companies and the U.S. government in the last month. Ohio also received a large donation from a local company.

Several states including New York, Connecticut, Oregon, Louisiana, North Carolina and Texas received donations of the medication from a private company based in New Jersey called Amneal Pharmaceutical. Florida was given 1 million doses from Israeli company Teva Pharmaceutical.

And FEMA has sent 19 million doses of hydroxychloroquine to 14 cities including Washington, D.C., Philadelphia and Baltimore from the federal government's national stockpile, a source that also provided South Dakota and California with supplies. The U.S. government received a donation of 30 million doses from Swiss drugmaker Novartis on March 29 to build up the stockpile.

"If he (Trump) hadn't amplified the early and inappropriate enthusiasm for the drug, I doubt if the states would have even been aware of it," said Dr. Kenneth B. Klein, a consultant from outside of Seattle who has spent the last three decades working for drug companies to design and evaluate their clinical trials.

Klein said it's understandable that government and health officials looked into hydroxychloroquine — which is approved for treating malaria, rheumatoid arthritis and lupus — as a possible remedy during a frightening pandemic, but the time and energy has been misspent. The potential side effects are worrisome, especially because many coronavirus patients already have underlying health conditions, he said.

"The states and the federal government are reacting in light of that fear but it's not a rational response," Klein said.

Doctors can already prescribe the malaria drug to patients with COVID-19, a practice known as off-label prescribing, and many do. Medical and pharmacy groups have warned against prescribing it for preventative purposes. The FDA has allowed it into the national stockpile, but only for narrowly defined purposes as studies continue.

Utah Gov. Gary Herbert, a Republican, acknowledged that the drug is "not without controversy," but said an $800,000 purchase from a local company was part of the state's effort to make rational decisions based on "good science and good data."

The Utah health department said earlier this week it planned to spend $8 million more to buy 200,000 additional treatments from the company, but said Thursday after media inquiries about the deal that those plans are on hold as the state researches FDA requirements for compounding and distribution of the drugs.

South Dakota, with a population of 885,000 people, received 1.2 million doses from the federal government and is using the drug for a trial as well as doctor-approved prescriptions for COVID-19 positive patients. South Dakota Gov. Kristi Noem, a Republican and Trump ally, said earlier this month she pushed the White House to provide enough hydroxychloroquine to give it to every hospitalized person, others who are vulnerable to the coronavirus and "front line" health care workers. As of Tuesday, 200 people in South Dakota were being treated with the drug, according to Sanford Health.

Many states, however, have opted to steer clear over concerns about side effects and lingering questions about the effectiveness. At least one of those states is led by a Republican governor, Tennessee, where the state's Department of Health sent a letter warning against using the drug, or hoarding it.

"We were seeing a flood of inappropriate prescribing and hoarding, quite frankly," Health Commissioner Lisa Piercey told reporters.

Kansas health director Dr. Lee Norman said the state has no intention of buying the drug because there's not enough evidence it helps treat COVID-19.

Most states aren't paying for the drug, and it's not clear why Utah didn't get it from the federal reserve or a donation from a business like Amneal Pharmaceutical. News releases from state governments show the New Jersey-based company has sent millions of doses

National Library Week

National Library Week (April 19 - 25, 2020) is a time to celebrate the contributions of our nation's libraries and library workers and to promote library use and support. As the impact of the COVID-19 crisis continues to evolve and change the work of libraries and library workers, libraries are proving resourceful and resilient.

Santa Monica Public Library started with a donation. In November 1890, the town trustees accepted a proposal from the Women's Christian Temperance Union to turn over WCTU Reading Room's collection of 800 books. On December 10, Elfie Mosse was appointed City Librarian. The first library location occupied two rooms in a bank building on the corner of Santa Monica Blvd. and Third St.

Since those humble beginnings, SMPL has grown to become a system of five locations with over 400,000 volumes. We've been through two world wars, recessions big and small(er), an asbestos-infested facility, the Northridge earthquake – and, the 1918 Spanish Influenza pandemic.

Santa Monica Public Library responded quickly during the unprecedented COVID-19 crisis to offer the community access to library materials. Library staff created a new Online Library webpage delivering access the library's free digital services; e-books, e-audiobooks, streaming movies and music, digital newspapers, magazines, homework help, language learning, and virtual programming.

Users can apply for a temporary library card, if they don't already have a library card, for access to the Santa Monica Public Library's suite of downloadable and streaming media.

Between March 17 and April 14, 2020 library staff registered 340 new patrons and answered over 600 questions via phone and email. The library's suite of electronic and downloadable media enjoyed a significant increase in usage with over 22,000 checkouts.

Measuring the library's value in dollars using numbers from fiscal year 2018-19 (July 1, 2018 - June 30, 2019) and the American Library Association's Library Value Calculator. Santa Monica Public Library's dollar value is over $22 million.

Public libraries have a long tradition of serving the community. The same remains true today. The library staff anticipate an onslaught of people needing library services once "safer at home" restrictions are lifted, and we reopen. From free access to books and online resources for families to library resources that help support entrepreneurship and retraining, libraries offer opportunity to all.

Through thick and thin, Santa Monica Public Library has always endeavored to serve with the love and support of our community. Much has changed in 130 years, but the tradition of service will always be our cornerstone.

Annual Water Main Replacement Project

For the week of April 27, the contractor will be working on Airport Avenue between 23rd Street and Bundy Drive connecting the newly installed water main to the existing water system. This will require shutting off the water on Tuesday April 28 between the time of 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.. The contractor will also be working on Pico Blvd. between Lincoln Blvd. and 12th Court digging to identify existing utilities to verify new water main alignment. One lane of traffic in each direction will be maintained at all times on Pico Blvd. and on Airport Avenue flaggers will be used to direct traffic. Please use alternate routes whenever possible. If you have any questions or concerns, please contact Carlos Rosales at (310) 458-8721, x2620.

Advanced Traffic Management System, Phase 5 Project

For the week of April 27, this project will upgrade the traffic signal equipment at four locations and install fiber optic cables along Montana Ave and 26th St.; The project will provide transit priority along the corridor, allow for real-time remote monitoring and management of the traffic signals, provide public Wi-Fi along the corridor, and connect the San Vicente Reservoir and the Montana Avenue Branch Library to the City's network. We appreciate your patience during the project, to provide this safety improvement and public enhancements. If you have any questions or concerns, please contact Jay Dinkins at (310) 458-8291.

Fire Station #1 Construction Project

For the week of April 27, construction will continue throughout the project area located at 1377 7th Street which will affect the sidewalk and parking lane on the east side of 7th Street just north of Santa Monica Boulevard. Sidewalk and parking lane will continue to be closed all day/night through the month. If you have any questions or concerns, please contact Senior Construction Manager Sebastian Felbeck at (310) 434-2675.

Heroes Saluting Heroes at Kaiser Permanente West Los Angeles

On Wednesday, April 22, the Kaiser Permanente West Los Angeles Medical Center witnessed an emotional display of gratitude as heroes saluted heroes. More than 200 Kaiser Permanente health care workers thanked the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD) and Fire Department (LAFD) as the emergency responders returned the appreciation.

With lights flashing and sirens blaring, dozens of police cars and fire trucks made their way through the West Los Angeles campus thanking health care providers and staff who are still working diligently to treat patients during the COVID-19 pandemic. An LAPD helicopter also participated in the salute, circling overhead as the crowd cheered.

During the procession, LAPD and LAFD shared encouraging messages as they expressed their gratitude for the hospital employees.

"These are unusual and trying times," said Shannon Paulson, captain and commanding officer, LAPD. "There are generations that have come before us that have faced trials, and there are generations that will come after us that will look back on what you have done and what we have done together, and they will draw strength from this."

"Thank you to our medical professionals, our brothers and sister, you are amazing," Paulson added.

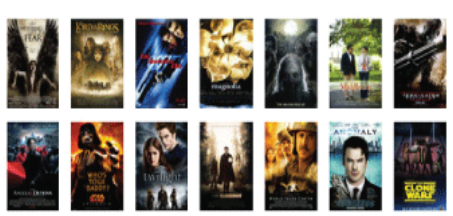

Monica Hall, battalion chief for the LAFD, then addressed the crowd, "The fire department wants to thank you for all that you are doing. We see you, we know what you are doing, and we are so proud to be in partnership with you."

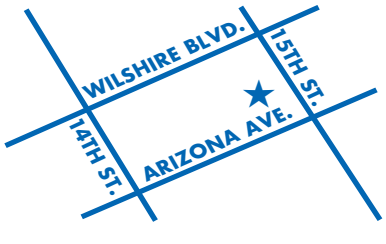

The Kaiser Permanente health care workers reacted with emotion to the display, many of them pulling out their phones to film the event while others held signs of appreciation and applauded the emergency personnel. The West Los Angeles Medical Center Administrative Team was also present to salute all who have sacrificed their lives, time, and resources during the pandemic.

"When we were children, we all had fictional heroes that we looked up to," said Dr. Kirk Tamaddon, area medical director and chief of staff, Kaiser Permanente West Los Angeles Medical Center. "Today, all of you here are our real heroes. On behalf of the leadership team, we thank you."

Getting Medical Care in Your Home During the Pandemic

BY SEEMA VERMA, ADMINISTRATOR, U.S. CENTERS FOR MEDICARE & MEDICAID SERVICES

At Medicare, we understand you may have concerns about going to your doctor's office during the 2019 Novel Coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic.

Like so many Americans, our Medicare beneficiaries are rightly observing social distancing guidelines to protect themselves and others from possible infection. We also recognize that our beneficiaries still need checkups, prescription refills, or other care from their doctors.

The good news is that President Trump dramatically expanded access to telehealth services for Medicare beneficiaries during the pandemic. Telehealth lets you communicate with your physician and other healthcare professionals using your phone, video chat, secure text messaging, email, or through a patient portal.

That means you don't have to leave your home and risk exposure to the virus.

Medicare is paying for our 62 million beneficiaries to have at-home access to a broad range of telehealth services.

If you're in a Medicare Advantage health plan, check with your plan. We recently authorized Medicare Advantage plans to offer expanded telehealth coverage to meet the needs of their enrollees.

Telehealth can be used for routine office visits, preventive health screenings, mental health counseling, and care that ordinarily would require a trip to an outpatient clinic or hospital emergency room.

In fact, Medicare recently added 80 more telehealth services, including radiation treatment management, therapeutic exercises, prosthetic training, assistive technology assessments, group psychotherapy, inpatient neonatal and pediatric critical care, and end-stage renal disease care.

So I encourage Medicare beneficiaries to take advantage of these great new services. Contact your doctor or health plan about available telehealth options.

For people with Original Medicare, telehealth is covered under Part B. President Trump is allowing healthcare providers to reduce or waive the usual Part B coinsurance and deductible for these services, if they choose.

Doctors, nurse practitioners, clinical psychologists, licensed clinical social workers, and other clinicians are all eligible to provide telehealth services.

Medicare also pays for phone calls with your doctor. You can even get telehealth from a doctor with whom you don't have an established relationship.

So please, if you're a senior, follow the federal recommendations – "30 days to slow the spread." As President Trump has recommended, stay at home and away from other people for the next few weeks. This is especially important for older people with a serious health condition – such as heart or lung problems or a weakened immune system – that puts them at higher risk for the virus.

Medicare is offering these new telehealth options during the pandemic so you can get the care you need, and the peace of mind that comes with it, from the comfort of your own home.

California don't force 10-cent grocery bag charge amid virus

KATHLEEN RONAYNE
Associated Press

California grocery and retail stores won't be required to charge 10 cents per bag, and they can again hand out thinner, single-use plastic bags under an executive order signed Thursday by Gov. Gavin Newsom.

It's a change that retailers have wanted for weeks, as many major grocery chains have stopped letting customers bring in reusable bags over fears of spreading the coronavirus. California, which has some of the nation's strictest laws aimed at reducing plastic waste, banned stores from handing out single-use plastic bags and required them to charge 10 cents for all paper and plastic bags several years ago. Newsom's order suspends those rules for 60 days. Stores can still charge for the bags if they want.

"For the time being, in the state of emergency, this is just a great relief" to store employees and customers, said Rachel Michelin, president of the California Retailer's Association, which represents grocery chains like Safeway and Walmart as well as other major retailers. Some other states and governments have taken similar steps.

The executive order also allows grocery stores to temporarily stop accepting recyclable bottles and cans, which they then transfer to recycling centers. Consumers will still be charged the deposit when they purchase the bottles.

In the order, Newsom wrote it is necessary to minimize the risk of exposure for workers performing essential activities, and that contact exposure at retail stores or recycling centers could spread COVID-19.

But not everyone supported the order. Mark Murray, of Californians Against Waste, said reusable bags are safe and "pose zero threat" if consumers bag their own groceries. He pointed to guidelines for grocery workers released last week by the state's Division of Occupational Safety and Health that offer employees three ways to deal with reusable bags: Not touch or use them, ask customers to leave them in their cart, or ask customers to bag their own groceries.

"Retailers, while maybe well intended, inflicted this costly and unnecessary wound on themselves by discouraging consumers from bringing their own bags," he said in a statement. "The simple and safe solution for consumers and stores is for everyone to bring their reusable bags and bag their own groceries in line with Cal-OSHA guidelines."

Michelin, of the California Retailers Association, said some stores in recent weeks had picked up the 10-cent bag fee while others were still charging consumers.

The Thursday executive order also granted an extension for some customers facing deadlines to renew expired licenses or ID cards, suspended late fees for expired vehicle registrations, and allowed electronic filings of certain notices related to the California Environmental Quality Act.

Venice Family Clinic Art Auction Moves Exclusively Online

For much of the 20th Century, Santa Monica and Venice were centers for cultural experimentation that attracted young artists and architects in search of a creative place to live and work.

After Venice Family Clinic opened in 1970, these undiscovered talents and others in need relied on it for free and discounted medical care and the other services they needed to stay healthy. As they achieved fame, many of these artists and architects gave back to the Clinic by creating and supporting the Venice Family Clinic Art Walk & Auction.

The dedication of the arts community and the broader community continues today, even as the COVID-19 pandemic has caused the cancellation of most events, including the annual Venice Family Clinic Art Walk & Auction. Because we cannot gather in large groups, this year's event will be an online auction of art works from May 3 to May 19 at artsy.net/veniceartwalk.

The event will honor world-renowned architect Frank Gehry, one of the founders of Venice Art Walk, 41 years ago.

As it has in years past, this year's auction will feature nearly 200 artworks by nationally recognized contemporary artists, including Kelly Akashi, Billy Al Bengston, Enrique Martinez Celaya, Greg Colson, Zoe Crosher, Laddie John Dill, Channing Hansen, Claudy Jongstra, Robert Levine, T. Kelly Mason, Vanessa Prager, Astrid Preston, Ed Ruscha, Kim Schoenstadt, The Haas Brothers and many more.

Even though some artists are facing financial uncertainty – with galleries and studios shuttered by the pandemic – they have asked what more they can do to help the Clinic at this time. They have donated significant pieces of art to the online auction, and they are reaching out to their networks on social media to help increase awareness of the event. One artist, a nurse who contracted COVID-19, even reached out while in the ICU to say he is motivated to get well so he can submit his artwork.

Other supporters have also stepped forward to help us reach our goals. It is a significant shift to hold our auction exclusively online, instead of at an event that draws nearly 6,000 people and raised over $1 million last year. But the Clinic's supporters have already made donations, pledged to purchase art and suggested ways to reimagine the beloved community experience of Venice Family Clinic Art Walk & Auction via virtual events.

This outpouring of support is critical as we grapple with the most extensive health crisis of our lifetimes. The people the Clinic serves are especially vulnerable to COVID-19. Nearly 4,500 of our patients are experiencing homelessness, and they often have underlying health issues that put them at higher risk of severe illness if they become infected. Many of our other patients are uninsured or have lost their jobs and cannot afford health care. Or they may still be working in hourly jobs in essential businesses or other people's homes – which puts them at greater risk of being exposed to the virus than people who can do their work from their homes.

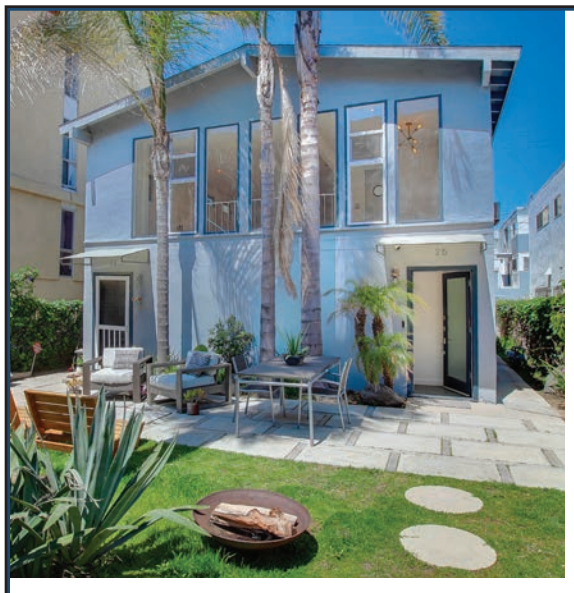

During these challenging times, Venice Family Clinic is on the front lines to help protect our community and our most vulnerable neighbors. Our health care professionals are providing medical care and other services in compliance with the COVID-19 restrictions.

They are consulting with patients over the phone and, when needed, in person and with appropriate precautions to prevent the virus' spread. They are making sure our patients have the care they need, regardless of their income or immigration status.

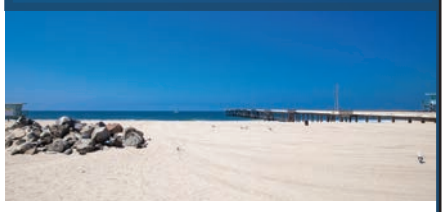

Amid these difficult times, Venice Family Clinic is marking its 50th anniversary with a renewed commitment to our mission to provide quality primary health care to those in need.

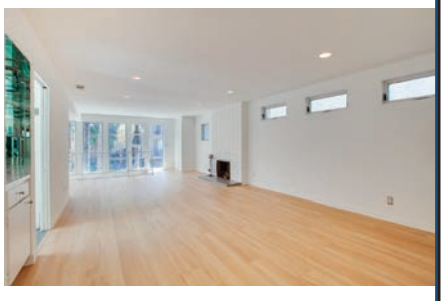

We know we can continue to fulfill that mission for generations to come because of the support of our health care providers and staff, our dedicated volunteers and our generous donors. Together, we can achieve our vision of improving the health of people and communities through accessible, quality care.

Erin Harnisch is director of special events at Venice Family Clinic, a nonprofit community health center providing comprehensive, high-quality care to people in need in Santa Monica, Venice, Mar Vista, Inglewood and Culver City. For more information, please visit venicefamilyclinic.org.

Rancho Cucamonga, a city of about 178,000 people east of Los Angeles, laid off its 289 part time workers. In San Jose, the 10th largest city in the country, leaders expect revenues to drop 8.6% — far larger than the 2.9% revenue loss during the Great Recession.

And in Grass Valley, a city of fewer than 13,000 people in the Sierra Nevada foothills, leaders have laid off four employees — and police and fire departments could be next.

"We are bare bones as it is," Grass Valley Councilwoman Jan Arbuckle said. "If things continue down this path, we have no other choice other than to start looking at reducing our public safety, which is not what we want to do especially going into our fire season."

Congress sent $5.8 billion to California local governments as part of a $2.2 trillion aid package, but most of that money went to counties. Only six California cities qualified because they had populations greater than 500,000 people: Fresno, Los Angeles, Sacramento, San Diego, San Francisco and San Jose.

But the federal government says cities can't use that money to cover revenue shortfalls and can only use it for coronavirus-related expenses.

"It was nice to get a $92 million check," Fresno Mayor Lee Brand said. "We have to go forward with our budget with the presumption it is not going to be there."

The League of California Cities asked Newsom and the Legislature on Thursday to help cities cover those shortfalls. Newsom plans to unveil a budget proposal next month after scrapping the $222.2 billion spending plan he proposed in January.

For most people, the virus causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness and death.

California has more than 39,000 coronavirus cases and more than 1,500 deaths, according to data compiled by Johns Hopkins University. The number of infections is thought to be far higher because many people have not been tested, and studies suggest people can be infected with the virus without feeling sick.

But the virus' spread has been far less devastating in California than public health officials had feared. Wednesday, the state saw declines in the both the number of confirmed and suspected coronavirus hospitalizations for the first time.

With hospitals far from capacity, Newsom announced Wednesday they could resume elective surgeries. And Thursday, Newsom said 16 California-based doctors had volunteered to help in New York City, the center of the outbreak in the U.S.

Still, Newsom reiterated on Thursday it could be some time before he loosens the state's stay-at-home order. He said if people were to pack beaches, parks, playgrounds and hiking trails this weekend, then "I'll be announcing in a week or so these numbers going back up."

"I don't think anybody wants to hear that," he said.

In a conference call with reporters on Thursday, Dunbar — who is also the president of the League of California Cities — said cities are anxious for businesses to reopen.

"But we are not going to rush that effort," he said. "We all agree that public health and our public health officers are rightfully driving the timing as we move forward."

opportunity to explore their creative passions.

"Our programs typically run 10 weeks," Kara Anton, president and founder of Give Kids Art, said this week. And like the first Zoom session held Tuesday with the kids of the Boys & Girls Club at Mar Vista Gardens, Give Kids Art usually holds programs after-school at partner locations.

"It's been difficult as I'm sure it has been for everyone," Anton said this week, when she shared how Give Kids Art is ensuring children in the community are still able to express themselves during the quarantine.

"We were saddened early on because we were supposed to start our spring programming on March 16, which is the day that everything pretty much shut down here," Anton said. "We started to notice a lot of organizations streaming events live online or having virtual Zoom-type programming, but we were concerned that the kids in the communities we usually work with even have access to art supplies at home… let alone the technology."

Undeterred, Anton said, "we made it a mission to create kits that are full of essential art supplies to help keep these kids entertained at home during a time of great uncertainty."

Packed with paint brushes, canvases, pencils, crayons, drawing prompts, "and a fun surprise," the kits provide a number of creative outlets, according to Anton. And if that's not enough, Give Kids Art has also provided a list of activities that families can do together using nothing more than the kits and household items like old cardboard boxes, paper towel rolls and egg cartons.

"We're hoping to help as many kids locally as we can, and we invite other organizations to help us with that mission so we can distribute and reach even more," Anton said, encouraging any organization who facilitates, operates, or works at a place where there are underserved children who need art supplies to visit www.givekidsart.org/art-kits.

ART: The organization works with groups like the Boys and Girls Club.

"And, of course, we're also looking for donors who want to make a difference right now by donating $10 so we can get more art supplies out and make a difference in the life of a child here," Anton said, adding: families that are looking to donate funds visit GiveKidsArt.org or text "GiveKidsArt" to 44-321.

"Now more than ever, children need the arts to help self-express, cope, imagine and exercise their creativity while at home," Anton said. "The artist Gerhard Richter said it best. His quote echoes, 'Art is the highest form of hope.' And during this time, I think we all need a little bit of hope."

LACO at Home

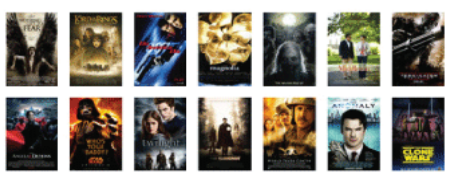

Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra (LACO), ranked among the world's top musical ensembles, presents a new LACO AT HOME digital program featuring six of LACO's virtuosic musicians and a special guest appearance by the Miró Quartet.

Hosted by Concertmaster Margaret Batjer, the program will be livestreamed on Thursday, April 30, and Friday, May 1, at 7:30 p.m., and will subsequently available on demand. The Miró Quartet, which performs Schubert's sublime Quartetsat, was slated to appear on LACO's live In Focus program those same dates, but the performance was cancelled due to the coronavirus pandemic. LACO AT HOME was introduced in late March to offer special and expanded web content. The livestreamed event is offered free of charge through the generous financial support of LACO donors.

The program also features several LACO artists performing solo works, including LACO Principal Cello Andrew Shulman with Albinoni's Adagio; Principal Flute Joachim Becerra Thomsen with Debussy's Syrinx, considered one of the most important solo works in the flute literature; Principal Percussion Wade Culbreath with Sonata No. 1 in G minor from Bach's "Sonatas and Partitas" for violin solo, arranged for solo Marimba; and Principal Clarinet Joshua Ranz with Bach's Allemande from Suite No. 4 for solo violoncello arranged for clarinet, and Hommage to De Falla by Hungarian composer/clarinetist Béla Kovács. In addition, LACO violin stand-mates Joel Pargman and Carrie Kennedy, husband and wife, perform the third movement from Miklos Rozsa's Sonata for two violins and Piazzolla's evocative Tango Etude No. 3 arranged for two violins.

To make a donation, visit LACO.org/donate or call (213) 622-7001, EXT. 4. To enjoy LACO AT HOME's programs and features, visit www.LACO.org/laco-at-home.

noticing outbreaks, that it was symptomatic people who needed to be tested," Ferrer said. "But with all of the recent literature and our experience in here in L.A. County, it's become really clear that asymptomatic people are in fact both infected with the virus and ... capable of infecting others. It's really important to acknowledge this new reality."

On Thursday, the county confirmed nine deaths at two nursing homes in Santa Monica.

Six patients of the Rehabilitation Center of Santa Monica and three patients of Beachwood Post-Acute & Rehab Center died of COVID-19.

As of Friday, twenty-one patients and 10 staff have tested positive for coronavirus at the Rehabilitation Center. Beachwood has 20 confirmed cases among patients and 11 among employees.

Additionally, four residents of The Manor, a residential care facility for adults with mental illnesses, three patients at Ocean Pointe Healthcare Center, and four staff and two patients at Brentwood Healthcare Center have tested positive.

Ferrer announced 1,035 new coronavirus cases Friday, three of which were in Santa Monica. The county has 18,517 cases and the city has 147. Across the county, 108,000 people have been tested and 15% have tested positive.

An additional 52 deaths were reported Friday, bringing the death toll in L.A. County to 848. Nine in 10 people who have died had underlying health conditions.

On Friday, Sup. Kathryn Barger outlined the four benchmarks the county must achieve before it can start relaxing the stay-at-home order.

The county must have enough capacity in the health care system to accommodate a potential surge in cases, have protections in place for at-risk individuals and communities, increased capability to test, isolate and trace confirmed cases, and maintain physical distancing.

Because COVID-19 has become the leading cause of death in L.A. County and more than 1,000 cases are being confirmed each day, Ferrer said residents should continue to stay home as much as possible. Although the weather is warming up, beaches and trails remain closed, she said.

"If we actually start seeing declines ... in the number of cases and (deaths), we'll feel a lot more secure that we can go ahead and start implementing our recovery plans," Ferrer said. "We're as hopeful as all of you that that day is coming relatively soon."

Also on Friday, Gov. Gavin Newsom announced that the state will launch a program in which the federal government will pay restaurants to provide three meals a day to seniors who are at risk for COVID-19 or have limited income. Local officials will help organize which restaurants and employees participate.

Ferrer said the county will soon release a list of restaurants where five or more staff have tested positive for coronavirus.

"If people are known to be positive, we've been clear since the beginning that you should not be preparing or serving food," she said. "I think people can continue to safely get pickup and takeout from their favorite restaurants, and we'll work with all of them to make sure they implement all of the infection control processes."

of the drug free of cost to states, including 2 million to New York and 1 million to Texas. A company spokesperson declined to provide a list of donations or answer other questions from The Associated Press

Pharmaceutical companies can often manufacture pills they already make fairly cheaply and the donations may have been done to earn good publicity while setting it up to make future sales if hydroxychloroquine ends up being a reliable treatment for the virus, Klein said.

Controversy has swirled around the drug since Trump started promoting it from the podium in the White House briefing room on March 19.

He mentioned the drug in briefings through April 14, and the White House distributed press releases praising Trump's efforts to stockpile it for use in areas of the country hard-hit by the virus. But for the past week, as studies have shown mixed or even harmful results, Trump has gone silent on the drug.

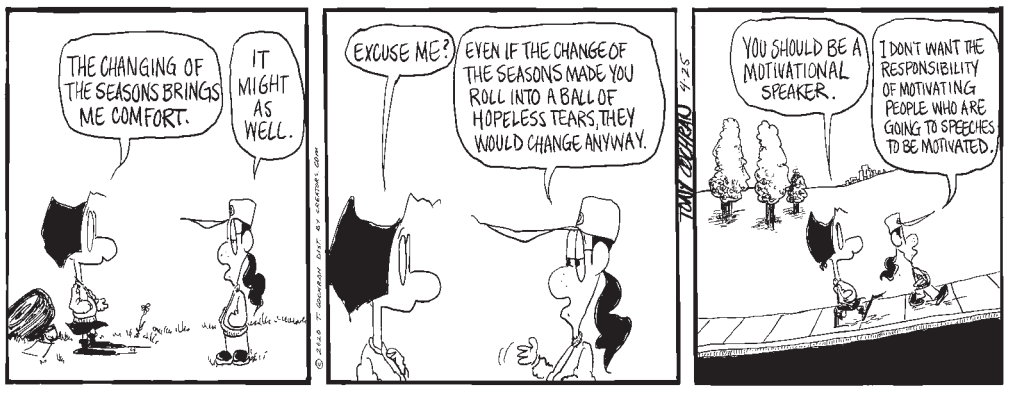

Asked about it Thursday, Trump said he hadn't heard of the a study done at U.S. veterans hospitals with preliminary results that showed no benefit, and rejected the notion he had stopped promoting hydroxychloroquine as a cure.

"I haven't at all. I haven't at all," Trump said. "We'll see what happens."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (MARCH 25)

Just when you thought you felt all the feelings there were to feel, your cosmic birthday present arrives including deeper love and greater excitement. But first, doing well in matters of business and finance will be your priority. The acquisition of skills and your subsequent surge of confidence will open doors. Scorpio and Aries adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 45, 12, 39, 2 and 47.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Emotions are more attention-getting than facts. So while the true bits are the most relevant and necessary parts of your story, mix in some emotion or no one will hear them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're still learning another person. Doing this well means forgetting about who you need or want them to be and asking the pertinent questions that will reveal who they are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). The reason for some of your behaviors can be summed up in four little words: It's in your blood. Even so, you'll masterfully take this innate trait in the best direction possible.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). It's better to say something than nothing at all. It's also better to say nothing than to say everything there is to say. You'll find beautiful conversational balance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You want solutions that work, and you don't have a lot of ego wrapped up in this. Whom to follow becomes a question of reason, not emotion. Which guidance makes the most sense for the situation?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Let people know upfront what they are in for and they will relax and enjoy what's happening, tolerate it better or behave in a manner that's generally appropriate for the experience.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Don't be afraid of a little conflict in the day, as it will lift the energy like spice lifts the taste of food. The action will ramp up and so will you, the action star of this flick.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Cleaning a closet can be more interesting than going to a museum. All the artifacts are specifically related to something you did in the past, even if that something is simply putting an item in a closet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). The more complicated a game is, the better off you'll be when you understand every nuance of the rules. While it's possible for a beginner to win a poker hand, the expert has the best chance at taking the night.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It makes sense to you when early relationships inform subsequent relationships. The surprise comes when what you learn from someone you know now actually helps you understand what happened back then, too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). In cards and in life, much depend on the hand you're dealt. If it's crummy, you have to figure out other ways to play it. A bluff, a clever play, folding early and waiting for the next round... you'll figure out the best move.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You've a rebellious streak and it makes you more attractive today. There are people around you who also don't want to do as they're told, and they'll admire your nerve.
