DIGGING IN: Boy Scout Troop 2 creates an urban forest out of a small strip of land Saturday as part of a national carbon trading initiative.

Boy Scouts plant trees for achievement, environment

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

MICHIGAN AVE Drive along Michigan Avenue today near Crossroads School where it overlooks the buzzing I-10 Freeway, and you'll notice something different — trees.

A stand of young California sycamores, supported by poles nearly as tall as the trees themselves, line what used to be a dilapidated asphalt pad, sentinels against the waves of invisible chemicals and particulates emanating from the cars below.

The trees represent the intersection of national policy and local achievement as part of both a federal pilot project to study the carbon sequestering potential of the urban forest and the culmination of one Santa Monican's journey to attain the highest title available to him — Eagle Scout.

Josh Lappen, 17, stumbled upon the planting project through hard work and luck.

Lappen has been a member of Santa Monica's Boy Scout Troop 2 since he was in seventh grade. That's several years of knot tying, fire starting and learning to canoe, a specialty of Troop 2.

At the end of the parade of merit badges comes not a new turn, but a mountain — choose to take on the six-month process of elevating to Eagle Scout or simply content oneself with a job well done.

Amongst a host of other requirements, prospective Eagle Scouts have to commit themselves to accomplishing a project for the community. Although there are no hard and fast rules on what the project must entail, they usually contribute something meant to last and consume over 100 hours of effort on the part of the applicant.

Lappen was struggling. He knew he wanted to contribute something to the outdoors that had an emphasis on the environment and sustainability, but hit only dead ends.

"I looked originally at trail building," Lappen said. "One of the things I especially love about Boy Scouts are the outdoor activities."

But when he picked up the phone to call a state park and offer free manual labor, no one answered. Budget cuts had taken their toll on the park system to the point that Lappen couldn't find anyone to even hear his proposal.

"Now that's a story," Lappen said.

A multitude of contacts later, Lappen hit upon the city of Santa Monica and contacted City Forester Walt Warriner.

Warriner, it so happened, had an idea.

City Hall signed up with the United States Forest Service to take part in a pilot

Appealing to the old funny bone

BY SAMANTHA MASUNAGA
Special to the Daily Press

WILSHIRE BLVD He explained the seeds of his project with such nonchalance that it seemed almost ordinary.

"My lawyer and I have been collecting thousands of jokes over the years," said Bill Schwartz, longtime Santa Monica resident. "We decided one joke book was not unique."

So they chose to write 12.

Schwartz' series, ACME's House of Humor, is now available in e-book format through the Amazon Kindle. The books are organized by themes ranging from "Trust Me, Lawyer Jokes" to "Totally Twisted Holiday Jokes."

The brand of his collection draws inspiration from the fictitious company of Looney Tunes fame. He said he hopes readers will get the joke and understand the type of business he's after.

"There's a shortage of good quality jokes," he said. "Rather than people combing through ... jokes, we've done it."

Study: Heavy teens have trouble managing diabetes

ALICIA CHANG
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES New research sends a stark warning to overweight teens: If you develop diabetes, you'll have a very tough time keeping it under control.

A major study, released Sunday, tested several ways to manage blood sugar in teens newly diagnosed with diabetes and found that nearly half of them failed within a few years and 1 in 5 suffered serious complications. The results spell trouble for a nation facing rising rates of "diabesity" — Type 2 diabetes brought on by obesity.

The federally funded study is the largest look yet at how to treat diabetes in teens. Earlier studies mostly have been in adults, and most diabetes drugs aren't even approved for youths. The message is clear: Prevention is everything.

"Don't get diabetes in the first place," said Dr. Phil Zeitler of the University of Colorado Denver, one of the study leaders.

A third of American children and teens are overweight or obese. They are at higher risk of developing Type 2 diabetes, in which the body can't make enough insulin or use what it does make to process sugar from food. Until the obesity epidemic, doctors rarely saw children with Type 2 diabetes. The more common kind of diabetes in children is Type 1, which used to be called juvenile diabetes.

Doctors usually start Type 2 treatment with metformin, a pill to lower blood sugar. If it still can't be controlled, other drugs and daily insulin shots may be needed. The longer blood sugar runs rampant, the greater the risk of suffering vision loss, nerve damage, kidney failure, limb amputation — even heart attacks and strokes.

The goal of the study was simple: What's the best way for teens to keep diabetes in check?

The study involved 699 overweight and obese teens recently diagnosed with diabetes. All had their blood sugar normalized with metformin, then were given one of three treatments to try to maintain that control: metformin alone, metformin plus diet and exercise counseling, or metformin plus a second drug, Avandia.

After nearly four years, half in the metformin group failed to maintain blood sugar control. The odds were a little better for the group that took two drugs but not much different for those in the lifestyle group.

Even so, Zeitler said doctors would not recommend this combination drug therapy because Avandia has been linked to higher risk of heart attacks in adults. Those risks became known after this study had started.

'Avengers' hurtles to $178.4 million overseas debut

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES The superhero saga "The Avengers" lived up to its blockbuster buzz with $178.4 million in overseas ticket sales days before it opens in U.S. theaters.

Domestic audiences generally passed on a bunch of new flicks as fans seem to be in anticipation mode for Disney's "The Avengers," which debuts Friday in the United States after launching in 39 other countries a week earlier.

The huge overseas launch will help fan the frenzy already in place for "The Avengers," the superhero mash-up of Marvel Comics idols whose cast includes Robert Downey Jr., Scarlett Johansson, Chris Evans, Chris Hemsworth, Mark Ruffalo, Jeremy Renner and Samuel L. Jackson.

"You hope that the magnitude of this kind of opening sends a signal that this is a for-everyone film," said Dave Hollis, head of distribution for Disney. "You can't put up these kinds of numbers if it's just for guys or just for the fans. These numbers say that it is for everyone, 8 to 80."

The Sony Screen Gems ensemble comedy "Think Like a Man" was No. 1 domestically for the second-straight weekend with $18 million.

Four movies were bunched up for the No. 2 spot in the $11 million range: Sony's animated comedy "The Pirates! Band of Misfits" with $11.4 million; the Warner Bros. romantic drama "The Lucky One" with $11.3 million; Lionsgate's blockbuster "The Hunger Games" with $11.25 million; and Universal's romantic comedy "The Five-Year Engagement" with $11.2 million.

Those four flicks were so close that their rankings from Sunday studio estimates could change once final numbers are released Monday.

Along with "Pirates," whose voice cast was led by Hugh Grant, and "Five-Year Engagement," which stars Jason Segel and Emily Blunt, the other newcomers were Jason Statham's action tale "Safe" from Lionsgate at No. 6 with $7.7 million and John Cusack's Edgar Allan Poe mystery "The Raven" from Relativity Media at No. 7 with $7.3 million.

"I think going to the movies will be the No. 1 priority next weekend but clearly was not the No. 1 priority this weekend," said

Supporting the move

Editor:

To whom it may concern:

As chair of the Commission for the Senior Community, I would like to say that the commission is very supportive of the plan for WISE & Healthy Aging to begin operating the Senior Recreation Center at its current location, and to transition the center's activities to the Ken Edwards Center next winter.

Wise & Healthy Aging has partnered with the city to operate the Senior Nutrition Program, provide information sessions on various issues, and co-sponsor special events at the center for several years, so they already know many of the Senior Center patrons. But WISE & Healthy Aging provides many other important services for seniors at the Ken Edwards Center and the move will make a "one-stop" location for seniors needing those services. The Ken Edwards Center will be updated, and will provide an attractive, flexible space for dining, exercise and arts classes, a computer lab and café, in addition to a lovely outdoor patio on the second floor. Therefore this transition provides opportunities for linking the Senior Recreation Center patrons to a full array of services.

Santa Monica Commission for the Senior Community

Finding common ground

Editor:

While I appreciate the level of detail in today's (April 25, 2012) column by the Friends of Sunset Park board, I need to take issue with a few important points. ("No common ground found," Your Column Here)

Indeed, Step Up on Second was not technically forced to abandon plans for a house in Sunset Park. The facts as stated are on the surface correct in that the Housing Division rejected Step Up's application for a grant. However, I was at the meeting where the executive director of Step Up spoke to a gathering of locals, and the hostility toward both him and his organization stopped just short of people throwing rotten vegetables at the poor fellow. The board might not have "taken a position," but that night the Friends made it clear that Step Up would receive no welcome. What followed was entirely predictable; it was just a question of which local laws would be used to keep Step Up away.

As for the behavior of Common Ground's participants at the 2012 Lincoln Blvd. location, what do we have? A video showing staff recruiting homeless youth to come to the shelter. Nowhere does the column mention a public record of the behavior of the kids attested to by "residents and business owners." I am a walker who walks a minimum of three miles a day, and my walks frequently take me to Lincoln Boulevard, from as far north as Wilshire to as far south as California. While the street definitely has its share of eyesores, I have never seen anything that looks even remotely like what these folks describe.

I wish the FOSP board nothing but good luck in its efforts to find common ground with Common Ground, but patience as well. February wasn't that long ago, and everyone on both sides should keep in mind that nothing good happens fast.

Who are those people?

THE CITY COUNCIL LAST TUESDAY gave the go-ahead for the Fairmont Miramar Hotel renovation process to commence.

The next step is environmental review and negotiations that will culminate in a development agreement to substantially rebuild and enlarge the property. The controversy over the project stems from just how large the "new" Fairmont Miramar should be.

The current hotel and bungalows occupy one city block bounded by Ocean Avenue, Wilshire Boulevard, California Avenue and Second Street. The current facility is 262,284 square feet with 296 guest rooms and other hotel amenities.

Fairmont Miramar owner Ocean Avenue, LLC. wants to totally rebuild the 4.5-acre site with 550,000 square feet of new space featuring 265 guest rooms, retail shops along Wilshire, 484 underground parking spaces, an open park on the corner of Wilshire and Ocean Avenue (to be used part time for private hotel functions such as weddings and bar mitzvahs, Planning Commissioner Ted Winterer e-mailed) and 120 market rate condominiums.

Almost everything, including the current 10-floor Ocean Tower would be demolished. The landmark Moreton Bay Fig and the historic six-floor Palisades building on Second Street and California Avenue would be preserved. New construction would include 11 and 12 story towers on the main property, plus a 40-unit low-income housing project across Second Street on what is now a surface parking lot.

As with all political issues, one of the most interesting aspects of this project is seeing who is on which side. Knowing who the folks who are for or against a candidate, or in this case an issue, can tell you more than all the advertising and propaganda.

For example, are the project's supporters in the business community, the Chamber of Commerce, hotel owners and operators, developers and real estate interests? Are supporters mostly residents? Are supporters social justice advocates? In the education community? Tax and spend types? Pro-development? Slow or no growth? More importantly, who benefits by backing or opposing the issue, why and how?

Supporting the renovation is a group calling itself "Friends of the Miramar." It looks as if "Friends" has an organization and a sizable membership comprised of a wide range of residents, local interests and community leaders, as evidenced by their full page newspaper ads running in this newspaper that prominently feature a lengthy and varied list of supporters.

The major opposition is being driven by the owners of the 17-story Huntley House hotel, located directly across Second Street. The hotel hired a Los Angeles public relations firm to stir up public opposition to the renovation and lobby for downsizing it.

Heather Herndon of Sugarman Communications Group (whose clients include Union Bank, Playa Vista and Canyon-Johnson Urban Funds, according to Sugarman's website) helped organize and acts as spokesperson for the "1,000-plus members of the Santa Monicans Against the Miramar Expansion Coalition" (SMAMEC) who oppose the project. One thousand-plus members — please.

I strongly suspect that SMAMEC has nowhere near the 1,000 members Herndon claims in her (now unsigned) letter posted on the santamonicadispatch.com website early last week. She reveals nothing about SMAMEC's membership, thought to be mostly neighbors worried about blocked views and property values and/or slow-growthers that fear increased traffic and other impacts from expanded hotel operation.

Herndon uses the term "Miramargeddon" to describe the renovation's effect on the surrounding neighborhood and claims it pits billionaires against (poor) residents. She posted, "The Miramar is owned by Michael and Susan Dell of Texas. Their fortune is estimated at $15 billion, making them 'among the richest people in the world.'"

While the Fairmont Miramar is indeed a subsidiary of the Dell business empire, so what? It's a stupid distraction and meaningless. It has nothing to do with the validity of the project. I guess you could make the same complaint about "hired gun" out-of-town publicists who come here and try to influence the local rubes purely for a paycheck.

While some people are saying "let 'em build," others want the project substantially reduced, but when the dust finally clears around 2018, I predict there will be an impressive, revitalized hotel on the site.

Does that mean that massing and size of major hotel buildings can be adjusted or reduced? Does that mean that structures can be shorter to make them more neighborhood compatible? Does that mean the project can bring more traffic and still be environmentally friendly? The answer to all these questions is, "Yes!" But neighbors, the business community, City Hall and the developers will all have to work together intelligently to make good things happen.

In the meantime, there are other fish to fry. The development agreement for a massive, now mostly residential development at the site of the Village Trailer Park, 2930 Colorado Ave., will be before the Planning Commission for public review on Wednesday, May 23.

The granddaddy of them all — the 750,000-square-foot Hines Bergamot Transit Village Center proposed for the old Paper Mate property at Olympic Boulevard, 26th Street and Stewart Street is scheduled for a public development agreement hearing before the Planning Commission on Wednesday, June 20.

Navy nears power deal to help avoid SoCal blackouts

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES The U.S. Navy is nearing a first-time agreement to curb electricity use at its sprawling San Diego-area bases if power runs short in Southern California this summer, a deal intended to diminish the threat of blackouts while the troubled San Onofre nuclear plant remains offline.

The Navy is San Diego Gas & Electric's largest customer, and the utility has been working on an agreement under which the Navy would temporarily reduce its energy consumption if regional supplies get scarce. In exchange, the Navy would receive a break on electricity rates.

The company has similar agreements with large industrial customers, which can slash the demand for power at critical times and keep the lights burning.

State energy officials say Southern California could be hit by rotating blackouts this summer if a heat wave hits while San Onofre's twin reactors remain dark, though some activists insist adequate reserves are on hand.

The plant, which can crank out enough electricity for 1.4 million homes, has been shut down for nearly three months while investigators try to determine the cause of excessive wear on hundreds of alloy tubes that carries radioactive water in its massive steam generators.

The loss of the nuclear plant also makes it harder to import power into the San Diego area, where reliable energy transmission has long been a thorny issue.

"If the (San Onofre) units remain down, you obviously have less power supply down there. If you have a transmission line go down, or another generator go down, you are in a very tight situation," said Bruce Kaneshiro, a supervisor at the state Public Utilities Commission.

Capt. Dora Lockwood, a Navy spokeswoman, said the company is working on a target for power reductions, if needed, at the numerous Navy installations in San Diego County, which include Naval Base San Diego, the Naval Air Station North Island in Coronado and Miramar Marine Corps Air Station.

"We will do our best, while preserving our capability to carry out our mission responsibilities, to support their request," Lockwood said.

SDG&E spokeswoman Jennifer Ramp said a deal could be finalized shortly.

"The military is aware of the challenges this summer," Ramp said.

State energy planners have been working on a strategy to find replacement power in the region and reduce demand if hot weather hits while the nuclear plant is sidelined. Those plans include restarting two retired power plants in Huntington Beach, urging conservation, such as using air conditioners sparingly, and seeking temporary power cutbacks, if needed, from the military and public agencies.

On Friday, Southern California Edison, which operates San Onofre, asked state regulators to approve a plan to promote conservation among its commercial customers in Orange County — they can earn a 10 percent rebate by cutting consumption by 10 percent during the summer, when demand is high.

No date has been set to restart either reactor, which are located between San Diego and Los Angeles.

It takes power to move power, and the restart of the Huntington Beach plants will allow increased transmission into the region, said Stephanie McCorkle, a spokeswoman for the agency that operates the state's wholesale power system, the California Independent System Operator.

The loss of the nuclear plant can restrict power imports into San Diego area by up to 30 percent. The San Diego utility hopes a new, $1.8 billion transmission line will be completed by summer, which would help fill any shortages.

The twin, natural gas-fired plants in Huntington Beach were retired earlier this year. The gas line feeding the plants was severed and 3-foot holes were cut in the boilers, a requirement after taking them out of service.

Eric Pendergraft, president of AES Southland, which operates the Huntington Beach plants, said Thursday that repairs to the boilers and other equipment would begin shortly. He predicted the plants would be ready to restart in mid-May.

The company has to strike agreements with the state wholesale power system before returning to service.

Some officials in nearby communities have been calling for San Onofre to shut down permanently, and last week the Irvine City Council urged the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to thoroughly review safety conditions at the plant before it is considered for relicensing in 2022. The city requested in a letter that the evacuation zone be expanded to 50 miles, from 10 miles.

The trouble at San Onofre began to unfold in late January, when the Unit 3 reactor was shut down as a precaution after a tube break. Traces of radiation escaped, but officials said there was no danger to workers or neighbors. Unit 2 had been taken offline earlier in January for routine maintenance and refueling, but investigators later found unusual wear on tubing in both units.

The Q Line

Making the grade pay

The Pico Youth & Family Center plans to launch a new program that will offer 20 students who enroll $100 if they finish the school year with an A in their math and English classes. The goal is to motivate kids to access free tutors and be more engaged in their classes.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
What are your thoughts on paying students who get good grades? Is this a practice you endorse or do you think it is a bad move?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call 310-573-8354.

Meeting of the international minds

Dear EarthTalk:

I understand there is to be another Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in June 2012, 20 years since the last one was held in the same city. What's on the agenda this time?

Janet Grayson,
Albuquerque, NM

According to the United Nations, the so-called "Rio+20 Conference"-officially the UN Conference on Sustainable Development-is a new attempt in a new millennium to "lay the foundations of a world of prosperity, peace and sustainability." The event will take place June 20-22, the 20th anniversary of 1992's United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (UNCSD) — the "Rio Earth Summit" — and the 10th anniversary of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg.

The main agenda items will be reviewing the progress and difficulties associated with moving towards sustainability, assessing responses to the newly emerging challenges faced by our societies, and strengthening political commitments to sustainable development. Underlying themes include finding ways to leverage the green economy to foster sustainable development and poverty eradication, and setting up an effective institutional framework for future global sustainable development initiatives. Delegates from the 200+ nations and thousands of private and nonprofit sector attendees will focus on sustainable cities, decent jobs, food security and sustainable agriculture, energy, oceans, and disaster readiness.

To the World Resources Institute (WRI), a Washington, DC-based think tank devoted to sustainability issues, Rio+20 is important as it forces the world's nations to "review progress on and reaffirm a global commitment to the policies designed to foster economic growth that is both inclusive and respects the planet's limited carrying capacity." WRI adds that amid a global recession, a widening gap between rich and poor and heightened competition for energy, food and other natural resources, the conference couldn't be timelier but "unfortunately, no clear vision for Rio+20 has emerged, and expectations ... remain low."

But conference participants are busy preparing. The Stakeholder Forum for a Sustainable Future (SFSF), a network of non-governmental participants, is busy developing the Global Transition 2012 Initiative, which will lay out specific recommendations culled from organizations and thought leaders around the world.

"A goal of the initiative is to achieve an outcome from Rio+20 that catalyses a 'Global Transition' to an economy that maximizes well-being, operates within environmental limits and is capable of coping and adapting to global environmental change," reports the SFSF. "The Global Transition 2012 initiative will propose focused and accessible goals, targets and policy interventions that will chart a clear route towards the greening of the global economy, and the achievement of social and economic justice."

Rio+20 participants hope this event will be remembered as an historic occasion when nations of the world aligned behind the cause of staving off global environmental catastrophe. But the more likely outcome is a few non-binding agreements that will soon be forgotten by constituents, the media and even many of the participating countries. Not since 1987's Montreal Protocol to phase out ozone-depleting chemicals have nations of the world been able to come together in a significant way to address specific environmental ills. And without any binding agreements already on the table, Rio+20 doesn't look to dazzle either.

WHAT'S TO COME? Rio+20 participants hope this event, due to take place June 20-22, 2012, will be remembered as an historic occasion when nations of the world aligned behind the cause of staving off global environmental catastrophe, but several earlier events have produced very little and, as such, expectations remain low.

Flooding disperses invasive plant and fish species

LISA RATHKE
Associated Press

BETHEL, Vt. Last year's hurricanes and flooding not only engulfed homes and carried away roads and bridges in hard-hit areas of the country, it dispersed aggressive invasive species as well.

In Vermont, the floodwaters from Tropical Storm Irene and work afterward to dredge rivers and remove debris spread fragments of Japanese knotweed, a plant that threatens to take over flood plains wiped clean by the August storm.

The overflowing Missouri and Mississippi rivers last year launched Asian carp into lakes and oxbows where the fish had not been seen before, from Louisiana to the Iowa Great Lakes. Flooding also increased the population along the Missouri River of purple loosestrife, a plant that suppresses native plants and alters wetlands.

"It's quite an extensive problem around the country and it's spreading," said Dr. Linda Nelson, aquatic invasive species expert with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The agency's budget for controlling invasive aquatic plants has grown from $124 million in 2008 to $135 million for fiscal year 2012.

Dr. Al Cofrancesco, director of the Corps' Invasive Species Center in Vicksburg, Miss., said invasive species are not a problem when they're in their native range.

"There are things that keep them in natural balance. The problem occurs is when we move into areas where they don't have those natural controls or regulators and they expand very rapidly," he said.

In Vermont, floodwaters and repair work broke off portions of stems and woody rhizomes of the aggressive Japanese knotweed. The perennial, imported from Asia as an ornamental, was already a problem in Vermont and a dozen other states in the Northeast, the Pacific Northwest and the Midwest. It spreads quickly on riverbanks, floodplains and roadsides, choking out native plants, degrading habitats of fish, birds and insects and weakening stream banks

"The whole Irene event was ideal" for knotweed, said Brian Colleran, a coordinator for Vermont's knotweed program.

The plant, which resembles bamboo when mature, spreads quickly in disturbed soils. Just this week, new young plants were inching out of the silt on the banks of the Camp Brook, a tributary of the White River, where the land looks like a moonscape since floodwaters washed away trees, rocks and other native plants. Once these invasive plants take over, their root structure and a lack of groundcover and native plants and trees with deeper roots, weakens the stream banks, causing erosion, and flood damage.

"We'd like to get out the message that if there's ever a time to hand pull or mechanically control so we can avoid the use of herbicides, this is the one year where that's possible," said Sharon Plumb, invasive species coordinator, for the Vermont Chapter of The Nature Conservancy.

Once the knotweed becomes established, it's laborious to remove. The plant, which can grow 12 feet high, needs to be cut down four to five times a year for a number of years or chemicals or machinery will need to be used.

Efforts are under way to restore those bare banks with native trees and shrubs that will shade out knotweed.

This spring, the state of Vermont hired Colleran to scout out new infestations, educate river groups about the invader and to coordinate community efforts to remove the plants.

Another invasive species problem, Asian carp, was aggravated by the past year's flooding, which moved the fish from the Missouri and Mississippi rivers into isolated lakes and oxbows, said Duane Chapman, research fish biologist with the U.S. Geological Survey based in Columbia, Mo. Some carp were able to pass over dams during the floods, he said.

"Give these guys an opportunity and they'll take it," he said.

Invasives are also spread by repair and cleanup work after storms.

After Hurricane Katrina, Louisiana imposed a quarantine in a dozen parishes to restrict movement of wood and cellulose material that could be infested with Formosan subterranean termites. Millions of tons of wood debris left behind by Katrina and Rita was shredded into mulch and there were fears the material could spread the pests.

"Any time you move a potentially infested material, there's the potential to move an invasive species," said Alan Lax, the former research leader for the Formosan subterranean research unit for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Dolphin spends third day in SoCal wetlands

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. A wayward dolphin spent a third straight day in a narrow wetlands channel along the Southern California coast, under the watchful eyes of wildlife experts.

Peter Wallerstein of Marine Animal Rescue said Sunday that the 6-foot-long, black-and-white common dolphin looks healthy, but appears slightly disoriented.

The dolphin was spotted in a channel of the Bolsa Chica wetlands Friday, circling in shallow waters as crowds grew along the banks and TV helicopters flew overhead.

Wildlife experts on paddleboards managed to coax the animal toward the open sea Saturday, but it was spooked by a pair of fellow dolphins and swam back to the wetlands.

Wallerstein says rescuers might try to herd the dolphin back to the ocean on Monday, but they hope it will find its own way out.

TEENS

Another study leader from Children's Hospital Los Angeles, Dr. Mitchell Geffner, agreed that Avandia can't be recommended for teens, but said the study makes clear they will need more than metformin to control their disease.

"A single pill or single approach is not going to get the job done," he said.

Among all the teens in the study, 1 in 5 had a serious complication such as very high blood sugar, usually landing them in the hospital.

The results were published online Sunday by the New England Journal of Medicine and presented at a pediatric meeting in Boston. The National Institutes of Health funded the study and drug companies donated the medications.

The "discouraging" results point to the need to create "a healthier 'eat less, move more'" culture to help avoid obesity that contributes to diabetes, Dr. David Allen of the University of Wisconsin School of Medicine and Public Health wrote in an accompanying editorial.

Judith Garcia still struggles to manage her diabetes with metformin and insulin years after taking part in the study at Children's Hospital Los Angeles. She has to remember to watch her diet and set aside time to exercise.

"Trust me, I'm working on it," said the 19-year-old who lives in Commerce, Calif.

Kelsi Amer, a 14-year-old high school freshman from Patriot, Ind., knows how tough it is to keep her blood sugar from skyrocketing. Diagnosed at age 12, she takes metformin and gives herself insulin shots before school and at bedtime.

There are times when she has to miss class because she has to prick her finger to check her blood sugar or go with her mother to Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center for check-ups.

"I try real hard and all of a sudden, I'm back to high blood sugar" levels, said Kelsi, who was not part of the research.

Paul Dergarabedian, analyst for box-office tracker Hollywood.com. "There's so much anticipation for 'The Avengers' that the newcomers kind of got lost in the shuffle."

"The Hunger Games" climbed to $372.5 million domestically, putting it less than $10 million behind last year's "Harry Potter" finale, the top-grossing entry of that fantasy franchise.

"Think Like a Man" raised its domestic total to $60.9 million, while "The Lucky One" lifted its haul to $39.9 million.

Along with the United States, "The Avengers" has yet to open in other big markets that include Japan, China and Russia.

Among the overseas totals for "The Avengers": $24.7 million in Great Britain; $19.7 million in Australia; $15.9 million in Mexico; $12.9 million in South Korea; and $12.9 million in France.

Directed by Joss Whedon ("Buffy the Vampire Slayer"), "The Avengers" has strong word-of-mouth domestically from fans who were able to see advanced screenings.

Critics also have given the film high marks, and the publicity blast from the overseas revenues could push the movie into record-debut territory. The "Harry Potter" finale now has the top opening weekend domestically with $169.2 million, followed by "The Dark Knight" with $158.4 million and "The Hunger Games" with $152.5 million.

"Who knows?" Disney's Hollis said. "It's a film that comes with very high expectations but leaves audiences exceptionally satisfied. I'd say there's opportunity for some repeat viewing just in the first weekend that will help make it big."

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Where available, latest international numbers are also included. Final domestic figures will be released Monday.

SCHWARTZ

Despite his background in writing and the entertainment industry, Schwartz credits many friends, business associates and people from the community for branding, illustration and production advice.

"It takes Santa Monica to release 12 versions of joke books," he said, with a laugh, referencing the old saying that it takes a village to raise a child. "I've lived here so long that I have lots of great friendships and history with these people."

Employees at Printland on Wilshire Boulevard became his friends, after he would constantly come into the store and bounce ideas off them. After asking for feedback about the cover illustrations, he made changes. He even has their number saved in his phone book.

But he is as much about asking as he is about giving, said Alistair Nevell, an assistant sales associate at Staples on Wilshire Boulevard.

Schwartz initially came into the store to ask for help with the design of his website, and he and Nevell quickly became friends. As Nevell helped Schwartz with the graphic design of his website, Schwartz publicized Nevell's work with graphic design and computer repair to his friends.

"He came in with a different attitude," Nevell said. "It's something that's hard to find."

Since the community was involved in the creation of the humorous enterprise, Schwartz said he wants to incorporate them into the rewards.

He's planning to give 5 percent of his earnings to veterans recently returned from overseas combat. Though he doesn't have an exact organization in mind, he knows he wants to make a local impact.

"I want to be more responsible to Santa Monica and the Palisades area," Schwartz said. "If we can do our little part, I think it sends the right message."

Those close to Schwartz are unsurprised by his latest undertaking.

"One thing that Bill really loves is humor," said Mark Galanty, a longtime friend and business associate. "He's been wanting to do stuff with humor for a really long time, and he loves to make people laugh."

His decision to make the ACME series exclusively available as e-books was strictly business. With a difficult market for print products, Schwartz said he counted on the ease of different media platforms, as well as the lower cost to attract readers.

Schwartz plans to work with Google to increase downloads of the digital books, and is in talks with Barnes and Noble about expanding to the Nook.

Last weekend, he took his digital enterprise to the University of Southern California, where he publicized his House of Humor series at the Los Angeles Times Festival of Books.

Though he's now exclusively e-book, Schwartz isn't counting out the possibility of releasing miniature hardcover editions that can be sold as a set.

"We live in uneasy, weird times — everything's getting too tense," he said. "I think the American way is to laugh in the face of confusion and stress."

CHARGERS

Public Utilities Commission was finalized and made public Friday, and now awaits the approval of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The advancement of the settlement angered some industry competitors including California-based ECOtality, which had filed a court motion after it was first announced asking for more public review because of what it called "monopoly-like" benefits granted to NRG.

"We are extremely disappointed that our call for transparency and industry input has been disregarded," Martin Felli, general counsel for ECOtality, said in the statement. "We are convinced that the NRG settlement is a bad deal for California ratepayers."

Felli said the company was considering all legal and legislative options.

"We need to know the truth about this deal and what's in it for the ratepayers of California, and what message does this send to other potential violators?" Fong said in a statement. "These questions deserve answers. And so do the people of California."

The deal was widely celebrated by government, business and environmental leaders when Gov. Jerry Brown announced it and issued several executive orders alongside it setting ambitious goals for electrifying the state's roads.

The dispute that led to it began with the state's energy crisis that led to soaring rates and rolling blackouts in 2000 and 2001. One of many companies the state accused of artificially raising prices by withholding energy supplies was Dynegy, Inc.

NRG, which co-owned California plants with Dynegy at the time, bought them out and took on their legal responsibilities in 2006.

According to details of the agreement released Friday, which also calls for NRG to pay $20 million in cash, most of the money will go toward installing 200 commercial charging stations to be owned and operated by NRG — 110 of them in the Los Angeles area, 55 in the San Francisco Bay Area, 20 in San Diego County and 15 in the San Joaquin Valley.

Some $40 million will be spent wiring stations in homes, apartment complexes and public buildings, where the property owner can eventually decide who will provide the actual charging service.

Officials on both sides of the agreement said that NRG, while having an opportunity for profit, is also taking on risks, and the foundation it's creating will move the whole industry forward.

"The infrastructure we're planning to build will benefit the entire EV market," said Terry O'Day, director of California business development for eVgo, NRG's electric vehicle subsidiary. "It is an investment that will enable other companies to make subsequent investments in a more mature market."

PUC General Counsel Frank Lind points out that Dynegy had already paid California $281 million in 2004 to settle one element of its legal dispute with the state.

With the remaining issues still in limbo eight years later and showing every sign they would remain there for years more, NRG came forward with the offer of building charging stations, and the state jumped at the opportunity to bring the costly battle to a close and get far more value than they could in cash, Lind said.

"We did very well by going along in this way. I think we got something very, very good for California," Lind said. "There is no way that NRG or any other company would put in this kind of infrastructure without a settlement like this."

Procrastination is a problem when it comes to doing my disaster plan. As a business owner I have a lot to do. It's not like a disaster is going to happen tomorrow. Besides, we have that new business pitch. I've been waiting for this to happen for a while now. I'll get the disaster plan finished eventually. Nothing to worry about, it'll happen.
Whether natural or man-made, at least one in four businesses affected by a disaster never reopen. Though emergencies are unpredictable, when you have a plan in place you can adapt, recover and stay in control.
It's never too late to protect your business until it is.
Make a plan.

project that could eventually earn carbon credits by planting 1,000 trees that remove carbon from the air.

Carbon credits are an interesting invention of the capitalist system that puts a value on the amount of carbon dioxide and other green house gases that a company or entity emits. Exchanges, similar to the New York Stock Exchange, allow polluting companies or industries to buy credits so they can effectively produce more pollution.

At the other end of the transaction is another group that promises to either reduce its own emissions or actively remove carbon from the air.

The 1,000 trees being planted in Santa Monica will remove green house gases from the air and eventually make City Hall a player in that market.

Through a grant from the South Coast Air Quality Management District, Warriner had the trees and the space, a vegetation-free asphalt strip backed up against a safety fence. Lappen offered him the labor.

"This project was completely up my alley," Lappen said. "It was everything I could have thought of, wanted or dreamed of in a planting project."

At the end of February, municipal teams cleaned up the site, removing the cap of concrete and prepping for the eventual planting.

On April 28, the day after National Arbor Day, Lappen and a host of volunteers were ready to get the trees in the ground.

Popular culture holds that it's difficult to get teenagers to do anything at 8 a.m. except hit a snooze button, but as the clock wound up Saturday morning, the team of teens gathered where 22nd Street meets Michigan Avenue, shovels in hand.

The process is technically simple — dig a hole as deep as the root ball on the end of the young tree and approximately twice as wide. Place the tree inside the hole, and fill it in with soil, but not too high to invite crown rot to the new plant.

Tie the sycamore to stakes placed immediately to the sides, and a tree is planted. Repeat between 19 and 24 more times.

That's hard work, particularly getting the stakes in the ground, which requires a heavy piece of metal placed on top of the stake that a person lifts and then lets fall, driving the pole downward.

"A day of planting trees is a workout," Warriner said, watching the young men and women attack the ground with shovels.

In 10 years, with thoughtful care and pruning, the trees will grow to 20 or 30 feet in height, just below the power lines that stretch over the site. Over the course of the next century, Santa Monica officials have committed to monitoring the trees' growth and reporting back to the Forest Service for use in their studies.

But it's in two decades that the newly-planted sycamores will have their greatest impact.

"Twenty years from now, these kids will be driving their kids to school," Warriner said. "They'll be able to tell their kids, 'I planted those trees.' There's an immense amount of pride in that."

Head of U.N. mission in Syria urges halt to violence

BEN HUBBARD
Associated Press

BEIRUT The head of the U.N. observer mission in Syria on Sunday called on President Bashar Assad and the country's opposition to stop fighting and allow a tenuous cease-fire to take hold.

Maj. Gen. Robert Mood spoke after arriving in the Syrian capital, Damascus, to take charge of an advance team of 16 U.N. monitors trying to salvage an international peace plan to end the country's 13-month-old crisis.

Under the plan, a cease-fire is supposed to lead to talks between Assad and the opposition on a political solution to a conflict that has killed more than 9,000 people.

On Sunday, at least 25 people were killed, including 14 civilians shot dead by troops in a village in central Syria, and three soldiers killed in a clash with army defectors, activists said.

Mood told reporters that the 300 observers the U.N. has authorized for the mission "cannot solve all the problems" in Syria, asking for cooperation from forces loyal to Assad as well as rebels seeking to end his rule.

"We want to have combined efforts focusing on the welfare of the Syrian people," he said, "true cessation of violence in all its forms."

The cease-fire began unraveling almost as soon as it went into effect April 12. The regime has kept up its attacks on opposition strongholds, while rebel fighters have continued to ambush government security forces. Defying a major truce provision, the Syrian military has failed to withdraw tanks and soldiers from city streets.

Despite the violence, the truce still enjoys the support of the international community, largely because it views the plan as the last chance to prevent the country from falling into civil war — and because it does not want to intervene militarily.

Jakob Kellenberger, president of the International Committee of the Red Cross, said that while he is still hopeful, "unfortunately, I am also aware how much this plan is at risk."

"That's why it's especially important for this mission to expand quickly," Kellenberger told the Swiss newspaper Der Sonntag. He met with Syrian leaders earlier this month.

Most analysts say the plan has little chance of succeeding, though it could temporarily bring down the level of daily violence.

That has largely been the case in Homs, Syria's third largest city, which has emerged as the heart of the uprising. Regime forces pounded parts of Homs for months, leaving large swaths of the city in ruins, before two U.N. monitors moved into an upscale hotel there last week.

Since then, the level of violence has dropped, although gunbattles still frequently break out. "The shooting has not stopped in Homs," local activist Tarek Badrakhan said Sunday.

An amateur video posted online Saturday showed the observers walking through a heavily damaged neighborhood, where residents collected a body lying in the street and put it in the back of a pickup truck.

Mood, a Norwegian, was appointed head of the observer mission by U.N. chief Ban Ki-moon. One hundred monitors should be in the country by mid-May, said mission spokesman Neeraj Singh. It is unclear when or if the full contingent of 300 monitors will deploy to Syria.

Mood brings a wealth of Middle East experience to the job, including stints with U.N. peacekeepers in Lebanon in 1989-1990 and as the head of a U.N. peacekeeping mission known as UNTSO from 2009 to 2011. That mission was the U.N's first-ever peacekeeping operation, starting after the 1948 Arab-Israeli war to monitor a cease-fire. It now watches cease-fires around the Middle East.

The Syrian state news agency said observers visited the embattled Homs neighborhood of Khaldiyeh on Sunday but provided no further information.

The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, an activist group, said government snipers shot and killed two people in the neighborhood of Joret al-Shayah, which borders Khaldiyeh.

The group said an additional 20 people were killed by troops, including 14 in the village of Hamadi Omar in the central Hama province and a child in the southern province of Deir el-Zour. Also Sunday, three Syrian soldiers were killed in clashes with army defectors, it said.

Ban has blamed the regime for widespread violations of the truce — prompting Syria to fire back that his comments were "outrageous" and accuse him of bias.

The spat has further stoked concerns among the Syrian opposition and its Western supporters that Assad is merely playing for time to avoid compliance with a plan that — if fully implemented — would likely sweep him out of office.

DAVID ESPO
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON In the political campaigns still taking shape, President Barack Obama, Republican challenger Mitt Romney and lawmakers of both parties say they want to protect college students from a sharp increase in interest rates on federally subsidized loans.

Agree, they might, and act they surely will. But first, they settled effortlessly into a rollicking good political brawl.

In less than 72 hours, what might have looked like a relatively simple matter mushroomed into a politically charged veto showdown that touched on the economy and health care, tax cuts and policies affecting women. Accusatory campaign commercials to follow, no doubt.

"This is beneath us. This is beneath the dignity of this House and the dignity of the public trust that we enjoy," protested House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio as he and Democrats both maneuvered for position.

Evidently not.

"It shouldn't be a Republican or a Democratic issue. This is an American issue," Obama said in North Carolina last week as he broached the topic of legislation in a move to gain support students in the fall election. He urged his listeners to tweet their lawmakers and urge them to block an increase in interest rates on federally subsidized loans issued beginning July 1.

There was partisan pop behind Obama's message, though.

Over two days of campaign-style appearances on college campuses, he quoted one unnamed Republican lawmaker as saying she had "very little tolerance for people who tell me they graduate with debt because there's no reason for that." Another GOP lawmaker likened student loans to "stage three cancer of socialism," he said. Both Republicans quickly said they had been quoted out of context.

Within a day, Romney told reporters he agreed on the need to prevent the rate increase, while conceding nothing to Obama in the search for political advantage. "I support extending the temporary relief on interest rates for students," he said, and cited "extraordinarily poor conditions in the job market" in a jab at the president's handling of the economy.

Congressional Democrats announced they would write legislation to prevent a doubling of the current 3.4 percent interest rate, and cover the $6 billion cost by requiring more wealthy individuals to pay Social Security and Medicare payroll tax.

It was a not-so-subtle reprise of a campaign perennial, the allegation that Republicans want to cut programs benefiting those who aren't rich to protect tax cuts for those who are.

"Let's be honest," said Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky. "The only reason Democrats have proposed this particular solution to the problem is to get Republicans to oppose it, to make us cast a vote they think will make us look bad to the voters they need to win the next election."

He then accused Democrats of wanting to pay for the legislation "by raiding Social Security and Medicare, and by making it even harder for small businesses to hire."

Democrats noted that the Republican-written budget included no provisions to block the increase in the interest rate. It was evidence, they added, that if the GOP had its way, the cost of borrowing would double soon. Two conservative groups, the Heritage Foundation and the Club for Growth, both opposed the change, but only about 30 GOP House members voted against it.

The Democratic charge brought a rebuttal from Boehner, who said at midweek that the Republican-controlled House would vote quickly to prevent the interest rate from rising. "The issue is not a partisan issue," he said, echoing Obama on one point. "No one here expected interest rates would go up in the fall."

Then he, too, put his thumb on the political scales.

The Republican bill would cover the $6 billion cost by slicing into a fund to cover preventive health care costs. That expanded the struggle to include one of the Republicans' own campaign planks — the promise to repeal what they deride as "Obamacare," and failing that, to dismantle it piece by piece.

Charge gave way to counter-charge having little or nothing to do with student loans.

Democrats said the health care fund Republicans had targeted was evidence of a "war on women."

"Give me a break," protested Boehner on the House floor. Addressing Democrats, he said, "you may have already forgotten that several months ago you voted to cut $4 billion out of this fund to pay for the payroll tax cut."

By then, the White House weighed in with a veto threat, which House Republicans promptly ignored in passing its version of the measure on a near party-line vote of 215-195.

Apartment blocks may host missiles for Summer Games

DAVID STRINGER
Associated Press

LONDON Surface-to-air missiles could be stationed on the rooftops of an apartment block in east London as part of Britain's air defenses for the Olympics, the country's military confirmed Sunday.

Around 700 people living at the building in Bow — about 2 miles (3.2km) from London's Olympic Stadium — have been contacted and warned that the weapons and about 10 troops are likely to be based at the site for around two months.

In a leaflet sent to residents, the ministry said the venue offered an uncluttered "view of the surrounding areas and the entire sky above the Olympic park."

Troops plan to conduct tests next week at the building, an upmarket gated apartment complex, to determine if the high velocity surface-to-air missiles will be stationed on a water tower attached to the site's roof.

Britain has previously confirmed that up to 13,500 troops are being deployed on land, at sea and in the air to help protect the Olympics alongside police and security guards. Defense Secretary Philip Hammond has said Typhoon fighter jets, helicopters, two warships and bomb disposal experts will also be on duty as part of the security operation.

"As announced before Christmas, ground-based air defense systems could be deployed as part of a multilayered air security plan for the Olympics, including fast jets and helicopters, which will protect the skies over London during the games," the defense ministry said in a statement.

"Based on military advice we have identified a number of sites and, alongside colleagues from the Metropolitan Police, are talking to local authorities and relevant landowners to help minimize the impact of any temporary deployments."

However, the ministry insisted that "no final decision on whether or not to deploy ground-based air defense systems for the games has been taken."

Resident Brian Whelan said those who live at the site were wary over the plan.

"From the few people I've spoken to, and the security we have here, they're not happy about it," he said. "I don't think it needs to be here at all."

The leaflet sent to residents insisted there would be no hazard to those living in the building.

It said the missile system would be "only authorized for active use following specific orders from the highest levels of government in response to a confirmed and extreme security threat."

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Listen to everyone's feedback. Each person wants to put in his or her two cents. The problem is that you need a reality-based approach. A child or loved one could be overwhelming you with his or her needs. You might want to avoid this person for now. Tonight: Head home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ You easily could go overboard and not be able rein yourself in. Stop trying to please everyone else. In the afternoon, you'll initiate a long-overdue conversation. News that comes to you could be distorted. Be a fact-finder. Tonight: Out and about.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ You can get nearly anything rolling. The issue might be figuring out what to do with your powerful energy. If you have no answer, just enjoy the day. Others seem to be in harmony with you. Why not? Tonight: Go for the moment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ You might want to rethink a decision in the morning. You could feel restricted or cramped in some manner. Your best bet is not to act until midafternoon or later, when your energy is likely to change. You will feel better. Tonight: Exercise your free will.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ You have an exactitude that not only impresses others but also encourages you to take action. If you can do just that before midafternoon, do so. Tonight: Do your own thing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Know that others are watching you; whether they approve will make little difference. You still are likely to do what you want. Your creativity surges by late afternoon in a brainstorming session or from surfing the Web. Don't hold yourself back. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You wish you could take off, and you just might if an opportunity opens up. Your mind focuses on yonder places and people, or maybe you just want to book a flight to an exotic spot. By late afternoon, you'll remember everything you should have done. Tonight: Working late.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You might want to iron out an agreement or situation with a partner. There is no reason to think you can't. You might want to initiate the first step, as you are more serious and/or determined. The tone lightens up as the day passes to night. Tonight: Whatever makes you happy.

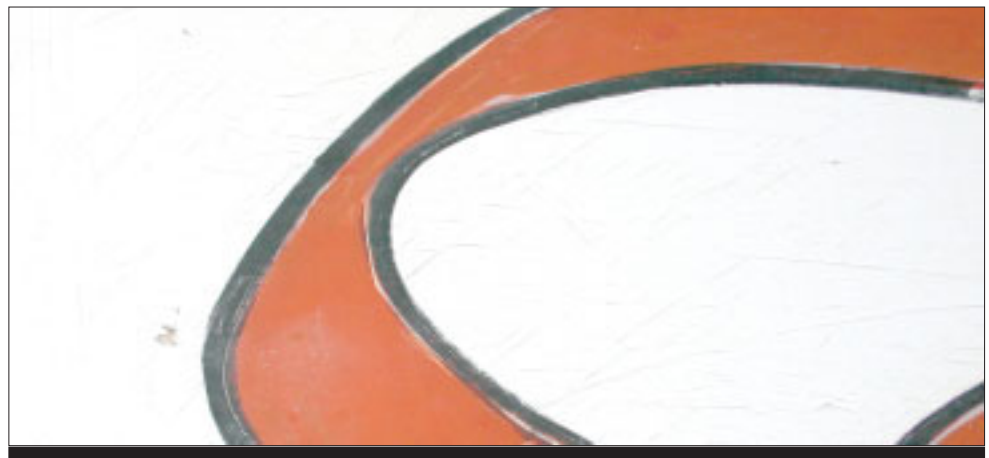

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Deal directly with a friend or loved one. The problem might be finding a quiet, secluded space where the two of you can talk. Others simply want to be around you; they cannot get enough of you. Be flattered instead of frustrated. Tonight: Spend time with a special person.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Defer to others, and understand that you need to handle a matter differently. Focus on what you can accomplish. By late afternoon, a sense of creativity will come over you and reveal many more options than you even thought possible. Tonight: Sort through invitations, then decide.

Happy birthday

This year, do not take offers or good will for granted. People will need feedback more than they have in the past. You could discover that you missed an opportunity or a friendship has soured. If you are single, a potential long-term relationship could appear. Be grateful rather than critical. If you are attached, work on your appreciation for each other. Your bond will grow stronger as a result. VIRGO makes it clear how he or she feels about you.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Brazil's Safety Net for the Poor: Dr. Ivo Pitanguy, the most celebrated plastic surgeon in the country, apparently earned enough money from well-off clients that he can now "give back," by funding and inspiring more than 200 clinics to provide low-income women with enhancement procedures (face lifts, tummy tucks, butt lifts) at a reduced, and sometimes no, charge. A local anthropology professor told ABC News, for a March dispatch, that "(i)n Brazil, plastic surgery is now seen as something of the norm" (or, as the reporter put it, "(B)eauty is (considered) a right, and the poor deserve to be ravishing, too").

■ In a March interview on Bolivian television, Judge Gualberto Cusi, who was recently elected to Bolivia's Constitutional Tribunal from the indigenous Aymara community, acknowledged that occasionally, when deciding tough cases, he relied on the Aymaran tradition of "reading" coca leaves. "In moments when decisions must be taken, we turn to coca to guide us and show us the way."
