NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

After Ms. Sohela Ansari told friends in their village in West Bengal state in India that her husband had mumbled “talaq, talaq, talaq” in his sleep, word got to local Muslim authorities, who declared the couple divorced. (A Muslim husband may obtain a divorce merely by the utterance, and the West Bengal clerics ruled that he need not be awake at the time.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is the 121st day of 2006. There are 244 days left in the year.

- On May 1, 1898, Commodore George Dewey gave the command “You may fire when you are ready, Gridley,” as an American naval force destroyed a Spanish fleet in Manila Bay during the Spanish-American War. In 1786, Mozart’s opera “The Marriage of Figaro” premiered in Vienna.
- In 1893, the World’s Columbian Exposition was officially opened in Chicago by President Cleveland.

Schools look to future

Board mulls a November bond measure for upgrades

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Daily Press Staff Writer

SMMUSD HDQTRS. — Looking to capitalize on the momentum created by a series of community meetings regarding the future of school facility upgrades, officials are seriously considering placing a multi-million bond on the November ballot.

The Santa Monica-Malibu Unified school board seems to be leaning in favor of authoring a ballot question, having instructed staff last month to come back with a timeline of when such a measure could be drafted. The board will discuss whether or not to form a bond committee, the first step in the process, at its next meeting, set for May 4 in Malibu.

“I think it’s time for the school district and for us to put our students first and make (the repair

THIRD STREET — Oprah Winfrey is known for her deep generosity, often treating her guests and devoted fans to lavish gifts like luxury cars or shopping sprees to exclusive boutiques.

Towards Alice Ollstein, she was no different. When the 18-year-old senior at Santa Monica High School was flown to Chicago last week for a taping of the television show, and to meet with the queen of daytime talk, a limo picked her and her mother up from the airport and whisked away to a luxury hotel, where the two were treated to gourmet meals and professional makeup artists.

It was all top notch, though none of it could compare to what came next.

Upon arriving at Oprah’s studio, Ollstein and 49 other students from across the country learned they each would receive a $10,000 college scholarship — a reward for winning an essay contest sponsored by the “Oprah Winfrey Show,” in which students discussed Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel’s memoir “Night,” and how his vivid

Trying to fix what ails the school’s campuses

BY CAROLYN SACKARIASON

SAMOHI — Issues of overcrowding, campus inefficiencies, as well as inadequate and outdated facilities throughout the local school district have propelled hundreds of people from the Santa Monica and Malibu communities into action.

About 100 people gathered at Santa Monica High School on Saturday morning for the third of four community workshops designed to assess the needs of all 19 campuses that accommodate the district’s 12,500 students and early childhood programs.

The idea is to gather enough community input to determine what’s broken at all of the schools so district officials can go about fixing them, possibly asking voters in November to approve a multi-million dollar bond to reconstruct the campuses.

The fourth and final workshop will be held in October, after a new superintendent of schools is hired, which is expected to occur this summer. The school board voted to extend the planning process so former superintendent John Deasy’s replacement could be involved.

The first two workshops — which included school faculty and administrators, parents and students — focused on the needs and assets of each school. Saturday’s workshop revolved

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS The stars show the kind of day you'll Have:

★★★★★-Dynamic ★★★★★-Positive ★★★★★-Average ★★-So-so ★-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★ A morning indulgence -- which could be as simple as buying a doughnut -- sets the tone for the day. You feel cozy, easy and relaxed. If at work, you might even feel as relaxed as if you were at home. Worry less. Live more. Tonight: Your treat.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★ Read Aries for a hint. Buy a treat or get a new plant this morning. Remember, you work to live, not live to work. The quality of your life might need some investment and/or care. Schedule a late lunch or early dinner. Tonight: Hang with favorite people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★ You do and say the right things this morning. Use this period to the max. Take a hard look at your finances in the next few days. You can change the direction in which you are heading and not be buffeted by the fates. Tonight: Does your budget suit you?

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★ Make it OK to not share everything that happens. You will see that someone you care about might be unusually verbal about his or her feelings. You actually might be uncomfortable. Tonight: Live it up.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★ You act as if there is no tomorrow this morning. "Oops," you say later in the day, when you pull in and muster up your energy. You have much more on your plate than you originally anticipated. Tonight: Take some personal time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★ You might feel as if you have a benefactor, as someone does something so special it stops you dead in your tracks. What begins as a caring gesture could lead to other stupendous events. You know what you need. Tonight: A friendship calls.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★ News from a distance puts a smile on your face and a tune on your lips. In this mood, you take charge and make sure events tumble according to your plans. Carefully understand your limits. What might have been a problem no longer is. Tonight: A must show.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★ Be grateful for another's gesture. He or she is trying to make your life work and flow. You are able to really help someone feel better. Explore options through calls, an expert or perhaps the Internet. Tonight: Easy does it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★ Finally, your life runs in a more copacetic or positive vein. Though you might overindulge or get a bit carried away, you still are able to relate on a much deeper level. Think positively about a key associate. Tonight: Say yes to a special friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★ A positive attitude flourishes through your work. You have no way of handling a personal matter but to let others have their head. Forcing your ideas and opinions will not work at all. Think positively. Tonight: Surf through different possibilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★ Delightful happenings could surround this morning. A business-as-usual attitude develops later in the day. You might not understand exactly what someone wants. Do your best, and you will stay on top. Tonight: Easy does it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★ Make it OK to approach the morning with a lazy, relaxed attitude. This approach will allow you to be more positive and forthcoming later in the day. Your creativity surges in this relaxed mood. Tonight: Just let yourself be happy.

CORRECTION — In the April 19 edition, the article regarding Michael Soneff incorrectly stated that he had achieved Eagle Scout status. His service project — painting the St. Joseph Center Thrift Store — was one more major step towards that goal. He hopes to make Eagle Scout by the end of this year.

Read between the lines: Library is useless

Editor:

I agree with Joyce Martino (SMDP, April 20, page 4) about the new library being completely useless.

Silly me, I thought $80 million might buy some new books and/or an expanded collection. Apparently, staff salaries and cement are the only thing that's increased. Santa Monica's public library has one of the worst large print collections I've ever seen. There's virtually none of the classics in large print. Whenever I need large print classics, I always go to Beverly Hills public library, which has a far more complete collection.

The cheaply made building is already falling apart. The elevators are malfunctioning, and lights are already burning out. When told of these things, all the clueless staff can do is shrug their shoulders and collect their lifetime pensions. That is, when they aren't harassing the homeless. I doubt this new building was ever intended to be much more than a glorified homeless living room, and cash cow for overpaid city staffers.

Attendant better be packing more than towelettes

Editor:

Regarding the use of public restrooms near the Promenade (SMDP, April 20, page 1). The good news, a clean bathroom is needed near the Promenade since Barnes & Noble closed their public bathrooms to the public due to problems with transients.

The bad news is contained in a quote in the article. Barbara Brian states, "By having one large, centrally located restroom with an attendant, we can make it easier for folks to find it, and easier to monitor and keep clean."

In a perfect world this would be swell, but I see a bad moon rising. An attendant — I wouldn't have that job for six figures a year. Hopefully, this attendant won't be mugged or worse within the first 10 minutes on the clock.

From past experience, what's needed is an armed guard instead of, or in addition to, this attendant.

Deasy's departure leaves plenty of children behind

MY WRITE
BY BILL BAUER

It's too bad that there was only one day's notice of the school district's public forum held Tuesday, April 25, that was in regards to what parents and the public want from the new public school superintendent.

The Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District is searching for a replacement for schools superintendent John Deasy, who resigned a couple months ago to accept a position at a school district in Maryland. Deasy had been here for five years.

In hopes that the school board doesn't make the same mistakes again that they made by hiring Deasy, here's my two cents worth.

In April, 2002, a Cesar Chavez Day celebration at Santa Monica High School, organized in part by Oscar de la Torre — who was not on the school board at the time — and approved by Deasy, turned into a labor march from Samohi's campus to the nearby Doubletree Hotel — the target of a bitter Hotel Employee and Restaurant Employee (HERE) organizing drive.

Joining the demonstration were a number of HERE outsiders, high school and district administrators and Deasy. School board members Julia Brownley and Maria Leon-Vasquez also participated in the rally designed to force Doubletree management into signing a union contract.

Using public school facilities for a labor action against a private business offended many school supporters and business interests. I guess it never occurred to Deasy, Brownley or Leon-Vasquez how much their actions threatened good will and financial support from key benefactors. It's a classic case of personal ideology eclipsing their fiduciary responsibility to education.

In Deasy's case, taking sides in a non-school, labor dispute was an example of how lacking he was in public relations skills.

Just two weeks after this faux pas and after purchasing a $900,000-plus condo near Montana Avenue, Deasy asked the school board for a loan. School members agreed until they found out that the loan was illegal. So instead, they gave him an $85,785 advance on earnings.

When that story broke in the now defunct Ocean Park Gazette, an angry Deasy called OPG publisher Carolanne Sudderth and told her his finances were "nobody's business but his own." Sudderth replied that "borrowing" money from the school board made them everyone's business.

Then, there's the "Deasy Tax." Approved by the school board in 2004, it dictates that 15 percent of personal donations to all schools must be set aside and used to support schools underserved by donations.

I know of one clothing company whose semi-annual factory yard sales helped raise $2,000 and $4,000 a year for John Adam's Middle School's music program. When the company learned that money from its sales was going into a "slush fund," they moved their sale to a Culver City school.

Then, there was the controversy about Olympic High School when a former principal spoke out about secret plans to close the school — which Deasy heatedly denied. About the same time, a Samohi staff member told me that Deasy was livid when he found out that a small outside grant had been applied for to support an unbudgeted student activity.

What is Deasy's legacy after five short years here? 1) A lot of unfinished business; (2) The division of Samohi into six "houses" with more overhead and little improvement in student learning; (3) Increased racial tension at Samohi; (4) Serious learning inequities that are still unaddressed and (5) Further increases in an already top-heavy administrative overhead with a number of new positions — all in the $120,000-plus annual salary range.

Numerous parents I've talked to are concerned about a lack of discipline in the classrooms and the unwillingness of teachers or staff to control it.

"It makes for an impossible learning situation," said one middle school parent, who asked to remain anonymous in fear of reprisals being directed at his daughter.

If I were on the school board, I wouldn't hire someone strictly for their left-leaning political philosophy as seemed to be the case with Deasy. Rather, I'd hire an educator and an efficient administrator.

We need a superintendent who is a common sense disciplinarian who can work towards building order and racial harmony. Someone who'll reign in a profligate budget and improve the learning process.

Lastly, hire a superintendent with a long-term commitment to our children, not a boomer who sees our schools as a stepping stone to more lucrative positions, elsewhere.

(Bill Bauer is a longtime Santa Monica resident.)

COMMENTARY

GUEST COMMENTARY BY DAVID GRUNWALD

Less foam, more facts

Foaming at the mouth, a recent Q-Line contributor suggested that Santa Monica Councilmember Bobby Shriver hold weekly keg parties for homeless people on City Hall lawn (SMDP, April 22-23, page 4).

It's a funny image, and I'm sure no one laughed louder than Bobby, but on another level, it's really irritating.

Rather than ridicule a leader who for once is willing to spend his political capital on resolving an unpopular issue, Santa Monicans should encourage Bobby's unprecedented commitment and effort to reduce homelessness in the city and the region.

I have worked as a homeless advocate and housing provider in Los Angeles County for almost two decades. Even though homelessness has plagued our region for that whole time, not one local politician has ever risen to the challenge. The predictable result: No progress. LA County is the homeless capital of the nation; 90,000 men, women, and children live on our streets.

For the past year and a half, I have collaborated with Councilmember Shriver to develop and begin to implement an action plan to reduce homelessness. I have never seen anyone attack a problem with more tenacity and focus than Bobby. Both Santa Monica and LA County have made some amazing progress in the past year, and Bobby's hand can be detected, to one degree or another, in each of these developments:

■ Bobby convinced the council to hire Santa Monica's "homeless czar," Ed Edelman — not so much to serve as co-host of the City Hall keg parties, as your reader proposes — but to foster regional cooperation to end homelessness. Shriver's reasoning was simple: Strong regional leadership, which doesn't exist now, is vital to Santa Monica. No amount of money spent on homeless services in this city will ever solve the problem, as long as 90,000 homeless people are a short bus ride away. By hiring Edelman, who served as a Los Angeles city councilmember and county supervisor for decades, Santa Monica has jump-started the establishment of a regional governing body. The city of Los Angeles followed our lead and hired a "homeless czarina," and LA County will soon hire an executive to head its homeless effort.

■ Last summer Bobby convened a large group of Veterans Administration officials and homeless veterans' service providers, and Santa Monica city staff. The group developed and submitted a proposal to use currently empty buildings on the West LA VA campus to provide housing and support services for 500 homeless veterans. We are awaiting the VA Secretary's decision.

■ Santa Monica's Chronic Homeless Program works with the people who have lived on our streets the longest. Over the past year and a half, 42 individuals have moved into housing with supportive services; 20 more are working with case managers to find housing. The council recently voted to expand this successful program.

■ Santa Monica now operates a sobering center, where police can transport public inebriates. Counseling and referral to substance abuse programs are available there. This was one of Bobby's campaign promises.

■ State Senator Gil Cedillo has proposed a bill supporting a mental health court, and Santa Monica city staff is working to establish a homeless court, where people who need treatment rather than jail time are given that choice, thus breaking their otherwise endless cycling between the streets and jail.

■ This month the LA County Board of Supervisors allocated $100 million to begin a regional program of homeless housing and services. I have no doubt that the light and heat — and noise — generated in Santa Monica played a role in the unprecedented size and scope of the county plan.

■ Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa has allocated $50 million to create affordable housing in Los Angeles, and he has proposed a $1 billion affordable housing bond.

■ Governor Schwarzenegger also has a "homeless czar" working on developing supportive housing.

These accomplishments do not strike me as a "let them drink beer" approach.

With strong public support, these and other homelessness initiatives will succeed, and tens of thousands of people will make new lives for themselves off the streets. Then we can all celebrate at an enormous regional keg party. Bobby and Ed are buying.

(David Grunwald has been the CEO of Los Angeles Family Housing for the past seven years and will be leaving to become president of American Sunrise Communities, a new national effort to create homeownership opportunities for hardworking families on fixed incomes.)

District is involving community in drafting facilities master plan and construction of new facilities) a priority, and I think the community supports that view," said school board member Oscar de la Torre, who is in support of a November bond measure.

The district is currently involved in a massive effort to involve the community in drafting the district's facilities master plan, which will guide school use and construction over the next 20 years. It is unknown what the amount of the bond would be but as district officials determine whether it's feasible, they also will decide how much the plan would cost.

There is concern that if the school board fails to place a bond on the November ballot, the next opportunity may not come until 2008, which could make the master planning process a wasted effort and the data collected obsolete.

"The only impact the facilities master plan process has on the bond is to help us identify what we might need and, therefore, the pricing," said Winston Braham, assistant superintendent and chief financial officer for the school district.

However, "whenever you go to voters, it's always best to have the most recent information available," Braham said.

Placing a bond in 2008 also may conflict with the possible renewal of two parcel taxes — Measures S and Y — which expire at the end of June 2009 and 2011, respectively. The district can ask voters to renew them in June 2008, consultants hired by the school district said.

Some wonder how voters would respond were the bond to appear on the same ballot as the parcel taxes. Will they vote for the taxes or the bond, or all three? Worse, perhaps, there could be voter fatigue and nothing will pass, leaving the district without funds to ease overcrowding, which is a steady complaint of students, particularly at Santa Monica High School.

"It really depends on what the voters want," said Richard Bernard, Ph.D., an analyst with Fairbank, Maslin, Maullin & Associates, a Santa Monica-based firm that conducts voter sentiment surveys. "By finding out what voters want, you can better draft a bond to meet those needs. Perhaps a bond wouldn't be their first choice since bonds are somewhat limited in what the money generated can be used for. In that case, voters may want to go with a parcel tax, which gives the district more flexibility."

To place a bond measure on the ballot this fall district officials would have to act fast. According to consultants, a ballot statement and a list of specific projects must be handed over to the Los Angeles County Registrar-Recorder no later than Aug. 11 — just 88 days before voters go to the polls.

That gives the board just three months from its next meeting to conduct a voter survey, identify the most feasible projects identified in the master plan workshops and draft a bond proposal. A citizen's task force would be responsible for campaigning in the months leading up to the Nov. 7 election.

Bernard said there is still plenty of time to conduct a survey.

"In some communities, they wait until the last minute, literally days before a bond has to be placed on the ballot," Bernard said. "If we did a survey now or in the next few weeks, it would be fine. This would not put us at a disadvantage."

David Casnocha, an advisor to the district on finance and bond measures, said "there is still ample time for (the board) to meet (the Aug. 11) deadline, and I believe they will have sufficient information about their projects to satisfy the requirements of Proposition 39."

Proposition 39 allows for bond measures with specific projects to be approved by only a 55-percent vote of the public instead of the two-thirds majority needed for parcel taxes and other bonds, Casnocha said.

If the bond were to pass, the district could apply for matching funds from the state. However, those funds are only available for a limited time, so missing the November ballot could mean the district losing out on millions of dollars, Braham said.

School board vice president Kathy Wisnicki said what's important is to get the community involved now to see if they are interested in a ballot measure.

"We need to send this to an ad hoc committee to investigate whether this will be the appropriate time or whether we should wait," she said. "If we don't do that, then we lose our opportunity to even consider a bond for November."

Wisnicki said as long as the district does consider a bond measure "in the next few years, we're in good shape," in retaining the momentum created by the facilities master plan workshops.

"If we wait five years, that's too long," she said.

testimony to the consequences of evil impacted their lives.

That's not all. The students, who beat out 50,000 others, will also be featured in an upcoming episode of the show, to air May 25, and had the chance to meet Wiesel, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

"It was just so amazing having the opportunity to fly to Chicago, meet Oprah, Elie Wiesel and all of these other wonderful people from such different backgrounds, each with the most inspiring stories," said Ollstein, who wants to follow in Wiesel's footsteps by becoming a journalist reporting on the struggles of South America.

"I'm always trying to enter into as many essay contests as I can," Ollstein added. "One, for the money for college, and two, so I can get as much as my writing out there as possible. It's been a lot of work. Finally, one came through, and what's better than Oprah?"

The scholarship will come in handy for Ollstein, who is off to Oberlin College in Ohio this fall. But what was worth more to her, she says, was the experience of it all. Not only did she have the chance to meet Oprah and some "amazing" students whose stories of survival touched her deeply, but Ollstein also shook hands with Weisel, a man she deeply admires.

In an interview with the Daily Press a day after her trip to Chicago, Ollstein spoke about her experiences on the show, the focus of her essay, tension at Samohi, and what it's like to go to the same school where her mother teaches English.

What was the focus of your essay?

"I have a lot of feelings about the Holocaust and mistreatment of humanity in general ... I found my essay talking about my experiences teaching Sunday school and how Jewish kids today have a hard time relating to our own history of the Holocaust, because we mostly get the information about it from history books, you know, 'this many people died on this date.' Kids, especially, can't relate. I can't relate to those numbers. It's really important to have this incredibly personal memoir ('Night') telling this one boy's true story, this one boy who is now an 80-year old God of humanitarianism. We are also the last generation that could actually speak to a survivor. They will all eventually be gone, but the memoir will live on forever, and that's very important.

"I also talked about some recent anti-Semitic events at my own high school. And then I talked about injustice in the world, genocide in Africa.

After the Holocaust we all said 'Never again' — that was the phrase. But it is happening again ... So I was talking about that as a reason why this memoir is relevant right now."

What anti-Semitic events?

"This year, somebody spray-painted a Swastika on a Jewish teacher's door. And it was reported as a hate crime by the school, which is good, but the school wouldn't discuss it. A lot of people didn't even know it happened. It was just a shock. It happened on Yom Kippur, which is awful. Actually, a lot of people were angry how it wasn't discussed and then, recently, just before spring break, there was another anti-Semitic graffiti, and this one teacher — his student told him about it — so immediately he took the whole class to where it was and talked about it and why it was a hate crime. They all went down to the main office to report it. I'm really happy about the progress and that people were upset the first time about how there wasn't a discussion. I'm happy about my school and the direction it's now taking."

Do you feel is it just teen stupidity, or is there real hatred going on?

"Well, I think all misunderstanding comes from ignorance. Again, that's why this book should be read. If Oprah says to read it, millions of people are going to read it, so that's good. But, also it's already being assigned at school."

What about conditions on campus? Is there tension? Are parents concerned for no reason?

"I think it's exaggerated. I've never felt unsafe on campus — never. Even as I've witnessed fights going on, I've always felt safe, because it's the thing where you're only putting yourself in danger if you are in it. If you say 'I don't want to be a part of this,' then nothing will happen to you."

Weren't you frightened by the Swastikas?

"I never saw them, but the fact that they were there freaked me out. But I didn't feel unsafe. The school is doing a lot."

Well, let's get to the important stuff — the "Oprah" show. How did you find out you won the contest?

"They called my house. I was alone. I just kept going 'Really? Really?' and they were like 'Yeah, really.' I tried to call a lot of people, but somehow all of their lines were busy, so I just sat at home, trying to contain my excitement until everyone got home, and when they did, I jumped on them (laughing)."

Are you a big fan of Oprah?

"Actually, I had never watched a show before. We don't have a TV in our house. We pretty much are huge bookworms. We have bookshelves all over the place. My poor grandpa. He's always having to build me more book shelves because I read constantly."

With no TV, how are you going to watch the show?

"A bunch of my friends are going to get together and watch it at one of their houses."

How does it feel to win something like this?

"Well, it makes me feel honored ... well, at first it just made me feel cocky. But after meeting the other winners, I feel so honored to be among them. I felt almost unworthy, because I was with just such an amazing group of people ... Gosh, they were these people who had fled from other countries during war, others who had previously been homeless. They had so much struggle in their lives and that's what they wrote their essays on, about how the book helped them go on and about how the book inspired them to better their life. There were these two girls who actually fled the Rwandan genocide as children. I just felt unworthy to be there, because the content of their essays was just so powerful. Whereas mine was personal, but more like my ideas about the book, not my personal relationships. I was just so happy that I got to meet them and be there."

How was Oprah? Notice anything interesting about her?

"What was strange was we couldn't wear anything that was white or beige because it didn't show up on camera. Guess what Oprah was wearing, white and beige. It was funny because she was kind of dressed the same color as her coach. I was like 'OK, who's bright idea was that?' She was a lot funnier than I thought she would be. I thought she was going to be all about business, but at the commercial breaks she would break out a joke every once in a while. She was funny, kind of sarcastic and witty."

Was it first class or coach?

"I'll have to say it was coach (laughing). But that's OK, whatever. We flew there, a limo picked us up to take us to our hotel, which was the fanciest hotel I'll probably ever stay in my life. Dinner in the hotel was snazzy, fancy restaurant. She gave us vouchers to eat while at the hotel and it's supposed to be enough for you and your guardian, but we have cousins in Chicago and it was enough to pay for the four of us to have dinner. I was real happy to see them. Backstage, they had our hair and makeup done professionally. My hair's not really like this. It was really, really incredible ... I wish I had more time to spend with the other winners those. I really enjoyed getting to meet them. I plan to keep in touch with them."

Talk about the taping. Were you nervous of the crowd?

"I didn't do anything really. The students I was telling you about had their own stories to tell. I'm lucky not to have these incredible, harrowing stories to tell. I'm grateful for that, not jealous of them for getting airtime. So they played pre-recorded tapes of them. Oprah was on the couch with Elie Wiesel, showing clips of him taking a trip to Auschwitz. That's a whole show that is going to air before this show ..."

Did you cry?

"My mother cried the entire time. At the start of the show, all the winners stand on stage for the cameras to pan and I saw her in the audience and she was crying then, and didn't stop for the entire show (laughing). I only cried, well I'm not really allowed to tell you about it, but this very touching thing happened, and I cried. I didn't realize how much makeup I was wearing until I grabbed a tissue — and there's tissues planted everywhere on set — and dabbed my tears and it was like pure beige on the tissue. But it's TV, I guess. Even the boys got makeup."

What do you make of the fact that there weren't that many guys who were there?

"Well, I'm in a creative writing class and we have only one boy out of all of us, and I don't think creative writing is socially acceptable for boys right now, which is weird because men have dominated literature for, like, ever, but in the here and now, I think it's cool for a girl to do creative writing and it's not for a boy, who is supposed to be focused on science and math. Obviously, there are probably a million exceptions, but just in terms of what's promoted, I think there is more of a push for girls to express themselves in writing. The guys that were on the show were really awesome, I'll have to say."

How do you enjoy living in Santa Monica?

"I love it. Actually, we used to live on Mar Vista because we couldn't afford to live here. But when I started high school, we moved here and it's so much better for us. My friends all live here. My mom teaches at Samohi."

What's it like to go to a school where your mom's a teacher?

"Actually, I'm totally fine with it. For one, I've never been in one of her classes. We made sure that didn't happen. Samohi is it's own city. It's so big that, basically, I get to use her fridge and refrigerator at lunch time and tell her news when it happens. I only say good things. No conflicts. It helps that she's one of the best English teachers. All of my friends are like, 'Oh, she's so nice.'"

What does an 18-year-old like to do in Santa Monica?

"Well, I wish it was warm enough to go to the beach. But it's cold and cloudy. I didn't get to go over spring break because of the weather and I was traveling around. I love Gilbert's. It's a few blocks from my house. They make fun of me when I speak bad Spanish, but I never make the same mistake again. I'm really into Spanish. I'm hoping to use it in my career. I'm hoping to do some reporting in the States and then I can do some in Latin America as a correspondent. It's really important for me to learn Spanish to travel later in life."

Where do you plan to go to college next year?
“I was accepted to Oberlin. It’s in Ohio. I love it because it attracts so many different people from different places. It’s big on creative writing, it’s big on science, it’s big on music, all kinds of people want to go there. It’s not like one of those places where only the (political science) people go there. They don’t have a journalism school though. I did get into the Northwestern school of journalism, but they gave me no financial aid and I don’t have $50,000 a year. I don’t know who does.”

How many schools did you apply to?
“I applied to nine schools. That’s not even a lot nowadays. People apply to 15. That’s suicidal. The common application is a farce. For everyone you have to do a fair amount of essays. It’s not what it advertises itself to be.”

You used to work for the Santa Monica Mirror. When did that start?
“I started writing book reviews when I was 8. I wrote on different stuff, not the typical 8th grade novel. I’ve always been the biggest bookworm ever. I’ll read anything, so I jumped at the idea. It was fiction, except I did a few memoirs.”

What has attracted you to journalism?
“Originally, I wanted to be a famous author. I’d still like to do that, but I feel that is so helping yourself only. It’s fun, but you do it alone mostly, whereas in journalism you’re interacting with the world and influencing the world. I know with novels you can influence the world also, but here you are contributing to the change. That really excites me. And the thing about journalism, studying any subject can help you be a better journalist because you never know what your next beat is going to be ... I love travel, learning new languages and interacting with people. I’m OK with being a starving journalist as long as I get to travel.”

What can the city of Santa Monica do to address the needs of the youth?
“I think that if you are motivated, the city already provides enough to meet your needs. You just can’t sit back and wait for it to come to you. There are job opportunities, athletics, the arts — it’s all there if you just go out and grab it. I know a lot who complain about not finding a good job, but you know, it’s sort of up to you. I think the city provides a lot of great programs.”

Nailing down ideas for bond

around site-specific needs in conceptual design charettes. About 100 people broke into small groups and began reworking the make-up of the facilities on each school campus. Given cardboard models of individual campuses, members of the Community Planning Committee spent more than an hour redesigning the facilities — moving and demolishing buildings, adding stories to existing classrooms and creating new complexes like libraries, parking structures, Internet cafes and auditoriums. Buildings made of cut-out Styrofoam were used, as well as construction paper, to alter the models. At the end of the small group discussions, those representing each school presented their priorities. “We will make sure we have nailed down those ideas to prepare for the bond,” said Bonnie Hill, a principal at Concordia LLC., the consulting firm hired by the school district to oversee the process. “When it’s time to put this out to the voters, it’s up to you to get this out to the public,” she told the committee members who gathered in Samohi’s library on Saturday. Assumptions going into the process were that there would be child development centers at each school; shelters would be constructed over cafeteria areas; classrooms would be expanded; a community library would be added; modular buildings would be torn down and replaced with permanent buildings; outdoor classrooms would be created; parking would be expanded; school entrances would be reconfigured and bathrooms redone.

ELEMENTARY PRIORITIES

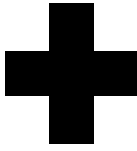

Representatives for each elementary school presented their priorities, which for John Muir Elementary and SMASH included making the facilities more dense on the campuses. Among the additions would be an art and science plaza, a media and technologies complex, an athletic complex, tennis courts, and a new auditorium at the current site of the cafeteria. The administration office also would be relocated. At Edison Elementary, committee members redesigned the campus based on the fact that there is currently not enough space, particularly for outdoor play areas. They proposed putting another story on every classroom, anticipating that the school will one day become kindergarten through eighth grade. Currently, Edison has kindergarten through fifth grade. They also proposed that the auditorium area would become an indoor play area. Finally, committee members want bullet-proof material on the buildings along Virginia Avenue where many gang-related shootings have taken place in the past. Grant Elementary needs a new asphalt track, and two-story complexes to handle the more than 700 kids who attend the school, even though it was built for between 500 and 600 students, committee members said. Drop-off zones also would be created off of the alleys surrounding the campus. Will Rogers Elementary needs dedicated space for kindergarten and preschool programs. It also needs more buildings and a security fence to keep the public away from the campus. Another story would be built onto the parking lot at 16th Street; classrooms would be enlarged and the administrative area would be expanded. Roosevelt Elementary would have a second story on all of its classrooms, an outdoor amphitheater, science and technology labs, an arts studio, a Zen garden with wi-fi access, underground parking, as well as the administrative office and drop-off zone being relocated along Montana Avenue. McKinley Elementary needs better campus security and preschool facilities. Committee members proposed replacing the portable buildings with permanent buildings, and expanding preschool and childcare centers.

Ideas for school campuses being welcomed

Two-story structures would be added, as well as an outdoor eating area. The library and computer lab would be connected to create a media area.

There are more than 800 students at Franklin Elementary, plus a preschool, so committee members proposed that the property next to the school could be purchased to accommodate the masses. Under their proposal, a new cafeteria would be added as well as second floors on all classrooms, and the library and auditorium would be expanded. The art, science and technology center would be renovated.

In Malibu, Juan Cabrillo Elementary's classrooms would have second stories built onto them; a preschool would be added and the parking lot would be expanded. All temporary buildings would be replaced with permanent ones.

Webster Elementary would have an improved entrance, more storage in the physical education area and temporary buildings would become permanent.

At Point Dume Elementary, who didn't have any representatives at Saturday's meeting, a space for preschool would be built and modules for music programs would be created.

MIDDLE PRIORITIES

John Adams Middle School needs more parking, preschool facilities, and concentrated labs and classrooms. Second stories would be added to classrooms and the administration building would be expanded and moved to 16th Street. A dedicated drop-off zone also would be created.

At Lincoln Middle School, an Internet cafe would be created as well as an expansion of the auditorium. A drop-off zone along 14th Street also would be created.

HIGH PRIORITIES

Because the Olympic High School campus serves so many programs — early education, adult education, special education and high school classes — committee members propose moving the early childhood programs off site. They also propose a new complex for adult education with parking underneath. There is currently no gym, library, athletic fields or an auditorium, all of which need to be added.

At Malibu High School, the library needs to be redone into three levels and a community area should be added.

An extensive overhaul needs to be done at Samohi, where 3,500 students attend school. Committee members propose that the athletic track should be elevated over Fourth Street, which would connect to the city's planned athletic fields across the street. The art, business and administration buildings would be demolished, and then reconfigured and replaced.

The administration building would be two levels and would include a new library. Parking and classrooms would be located where the business building currently sits. Where the seventh tennis court is would be a dedicated drop-off zone, as well as a U-shape drop-off zone along Pico Boulevard. An Internet cafe also would be created on campus.

PARTICIPATION KEY TO THE FUTURE

Committee members and consultants will be mulling over the ideas, concepts and designs in the coming weeks. Anyone who wants to be involved is asked to participate in an online survey at ourschoolpan.com. Survey submissions will be accepted until May 7.

Homeowners — the top employer of day laborers — say system works

BY PETER PRENGAMAN

Associated Press Writer

BURBANK, Calif. — Chris James needed help moving a piano and three dozen boxes of records from his music studio — so instead of corraling some buddies, he rented a truck and hired some labor from outside the local Home Depot.

Within minutes, two Guatemalan men promised $12.50 an hour were in his truck.

If James, 31, worked solo "it would take all day."

The two men finished the job in an hour and a half while James looked on. For hauling a piano and wedging a sofa into his condo, then stacking the boxes in a back room, James owed the men less than $40.

It's the kind of scene replayed daily across the nation.

It was first time James hired day laborers, but it won't be his last.

"Absolutely satisfied," said James. "Relaxing."

The No. 1 employers of day laborers are private homeowners — not construction contractors, not professional landscapers.

"Day labor is not a niche market," said Abel Valenzuela, a UCLA professor and one of three authors of the first national day labor study, which was released in January. "It's now entering different aspects of the national mainstream economy."

Forty-nine percent of day labor employers are homeowners, according to 2,660 laborers interviewed for the study. Contractors were second, at 43 percent. The study also found that three quarters of day laborers were illegal immigrants and most were from Latin America.

There are myriad reasons homeowners hire the men who call themselves "journaleros." They are a flexible labor pool with no red tape and no overhead. And they'll do backbreaking jobs much cheaper than traditional contractors.

Day laborers like homeowners, too. Shady contractors routinely stiff them. Not homeowners — the workers know where they live.

"And in houses, they give us food, water and soda," said Herminio Velazquez, 48, taking a break from unloading record boxes at James's condo.

While some homeowners say they're conflicted over hiring people who likely have no work documents, they don't believe they are doing wrong. Many say only day laborers will do the tough jobs.

It's an argument rejected by anti-illegal immigration activists.

"They know they are hiring illegal aliens and breaking the law," said Joseph Turner, who is trying to force San Bernardino to outlaw taxpayer-funded day labor centers. "They are contributing to the illegal immigration problem."

But while Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents occasionally arrest day laborers, they almost never go after homeowner employers.

Their priorities are national security work sites such as seaports and the smuggling networks that steal illegal immigrants into the country.

"We need to stop unlawful employment," said agency spokeswoman Virginia Kice. "But working day laborers sites is not an efficient way to use finite resources."

After 78-year-old Maxine Colby's husband died six years ago, she needed help around her Malibu house. Somebody to clear brush, pull weeds, trim trees, wash windows.

So, a few times a month, Colby started hiring day laborers.

"They have been fantastic," she said. "I speak a little Spanish, and they speak a little English, and we have a good time."

Businesses shut down, plan for day of no profit

Immigrants out to show what it's like without them

BY AMANDA LEE MYERS

Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX — As immigrants across the country prepare to show the nation what a day without them would be like, businesses run by or catering to the Hispanic community are preparing for a day without profits.

Businesses from taxi companies to grocery stores say they're closing their doors on Monday.

Many of their employees will be joining demonstrators, who are scheduled to rally in various cities across the nation Monday. In Arizona, demonstrations are planned at four locations in Phoenix, at Armory Park in Tucson and in downtown Yuma. Some supporters simply plan to stay home and refrain from purchasing consumer products.

"A Day Without an Immigrant" is planned as a national shopping and work boycott designed to demonstrate how vital immigrants are to the American economy.

Taxi Mayas, one of several Phoenix-area taxi companies serving mainly Latinos, will close at midnight Monday and will not open until 4 a.m. Tuesday.

"We have to close," said supervisor Patricia Jimenez in Spanish. "The majority of our workers are Hispanic, so if we stay open, who would work?"

Jimenez said the boycott is an important issue and that she supports her fellow Latinos, but said Taxi Mayas is going to lose money while it's closed.

R-Ranch Market Inc., an Irwindale, Calif., company, will close its 14 locations in Southern California Monday, said Art Rodriguez, one of the firm's four executive directors.

"This is a pretty ambitious effort, and it would be a shame to not support the employees involved in this," Rodriguez said. "We decided to close as a gesture of respect, as a gesture of support. We hope our employees express themselves Monday and get back to work on Tuesday."

The company estimates it will lose out on $200,000 in business on Monday, but Rodriguez said they're not worried about the loss.

"On Saturday and Sunday and Tuesday and Wednesday, people are going to make sure they buy those products they would have bought Monday," he said. "This is significant and this is important to a lot of people. Work is important, too, but OK, let's take that one day and put it in the history books as a peaceful expression."

Immigrant rights activists say the work stoppage, as well as a boycott of consumer products, will effectively catch the attention of the nation, already a captive audience in the wake of recent demonstrations calling for immigration reform.

"If we wanted to create a bigger impact than we did on April 10, it will be the empty parking lots in Wal-Mart and all the businesses dependent on our economy," said Elias Bermudez, a talk show host for a Phoenix Spanish-language radio station and president of activist group Inmigrantes Sin Fronteras, or Immigrants Without Borders.

"The lack of our participation in the economic system is our greatest demonstration," he said.

Teen, 12 at time, guilty of murder

By The Associated Press

EPHRATA, Wash. — A teenager was convicted Friday of premeditated murder for the brutal slaying of a developmentally disabled 13-year-old playmate.

Evan Savoie, 12 years old at the time of the Feb. 15, 2003, killing, was among the youngest murder defendants in Washington state to be tried as an adult.

Now 15, Savoie faces between 20 and 26 years in prison for the slaying of Craig Sorger, whose body was found in a recreational vehicle park in this central Washington community.

The attack left the beaten victim, bleeding from 34 stab wounds, crying out that he was dying, Grant County Superior Court jurors were told.

Savoie showed no emotion when the verdict was read. His lawyers patted him on the back and hugged him before he was led away.

Sentencing was set for June 5. Defense attorney Randy Smith vowed to appeal, saying he was "a little shocked" at the verdict.

"I really thought we had created some reasonable doubt," Smith said. "I thought at the very least that the state had not come close to even proving premeditation."

Savoie had repeatedly proclaimed his innocence, saying Sorger fell from a tree and that he left him injured — without a pulse — on a wooded trail but did not kill him.

The key to the prosecution's case was the testimony of Jake Eakin, another playmate who pleaded guilty to second-degree murder by complicity last year, two years after the murder. He is currently serving 14 years in prison.

Prosecutors alleged Savoie had planned to go on a killing spree. They told jurors he had blood on his clothes, access to knives and lied to investigatBors, at one point deliberately leading searchers away from Sorger's body and admitting that in a taped interview.

Eakin eventually led investigators to the murder weapon and pointed at Savoie as the killer. On the witness stand, he described the brief attack in wrenching detail, saying Sorger repeatedly cried out, "Why are you doing this to me?" and said he was dying.

Lisa Sorger, the victim's mother, was not in court when the verdict was read, but hugged prosecutors outside immediately afterward. Some other family members clutched photos of Craig and cried.

"I'm happy with the verdict. It's just taken a long time — too long," Sorger said, sighing and fighting tears. "Nothing's going to bring Craig back, but at least we've finally gotten justice."

Sorger also said her family has forgiven Eakin, whose family has pledged to regularly clean up the wooded area where Craig was killed to help maintain a memorial there.

"They have been extremely supportive and remorseful," she said. Of Eakin, she said, "It took him awhile, but he did the right thing."

Prosecutors charged Savoie with first-degree murder within days of the slaying.

Jurors, who deliberated nearly 10 hours over two days, decided Thursday that Savoie committed the murder, but spent Friday deliberating whether the slaying was premeditated, juror Shane Gibbons said afterward.

"It was emotional. There were a couple who were crying. It was a big burden to make that decision for someone so young," he said.

Gibbons also said he was surprised at Savoie's reaction to the verdict. "He didn't even flinch when they read guilty. He didn't even bat an eye," he said.

Grant County Prosecutor John Knodell commended jurors for a thorough job.

New national park fees stun wildlife documentary filmmakers

BY JENNIFER BYRD

Associated Press Writer

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — Wildlife photographers and documentary filmmakers say a new fee schedule for commercial filming in Yellowstone and other national parks could put them out of business.

"It won't just be the filmmakers and photographers affected by this, it'll be the whole country," said Jeff Hogan, a documentary filmmaker in Jackson, Wyo., who has shot wildlife programs for National Geographic and the BBC.

"People will have less exposure to these beautiful places and exciting animal behaviors," he said. "There will be less opportunity for people to learn about wildlife."

The interim fees, scheduled to go into effect May 15, would charge filmmakers at least $150 per day for filming in the park. They now pay just $200 per year, plus fees for any park services or assistance they require.

Bob Landis, an Emmy-winning filmmaker for his 2004 documentary "Wolf Pack," said the National Park Service probably needs to charge filmmakers more for filming than it currently does, but not as much as the new fee structure.

Under the new schedule, Landis — who said he shoots at least 300 days a year in Yellowstone — would have to pay at least $45,000 a year.

"It'll put me out of the stock footage business," Landis said, who often sells wildlife footage to broadcasters who don't want to spend time waiting for an animal to behave in a certain way.

The problem, Landis said, is that the Park Service is treating large production companies that come into parks to film commercials or movies the same way it treats small, independent wildlife documentary filmmakers.

"The philosophy seems to be one size fits all," Landis said. "If they can come up with a category that fits us — documentary and education filmmakers — then I think they'll benefit all the way around."

That's one possibility the Park Service is looking into, said Lee Dickinson, the agency's special parks uses program manager.

A law passed by Congress in 2000 requires the Department of the Interior to charge location fees for filming on any of the department's federal lands. It has spent six years developing a fee structure, Dickinson said, which should be released to the public in a couple months. Dickinson declined to reveal any specifics about that fee structure.

But the process of putting those regulations into effect could take another year and a half. In the meantime, Dickinson said, the Park Service has temporarily adopted an interim fee structure developed by the Bureau of Land Management.

Dickinson said she expects the final department-wide fee structure to be different from the BLM's. The department-wide structure will replace any previously developed structures and will be used across the board on all Interior Department lands.

The law requiring the location fees was sponsored by Sen. Craig Thomas, R-Wyo., who said Friday that the provision was meant for larger-scale Hollywood movie production, not small-scale nature films.

"A not-for-profit company filming birds was never intended to be charged under my legislation," Thomas said in an e-mail from his office to The Associated Press. "While it may not be explicitly laid out under the law, it was certainly considered during the course of the debate of the filming fee legislation."

Thomas said the Park Service had no way to assess Hollywood movie productions before the law passed.

"The intention was for fees collected to stay at the individual park unit where the movie was being made, as a kind of impact-fee," Thomas said. "Telling a wildlife story of the birds of the park shouldn't have a large impact on resources."

For now, filmmakers can obtain the regular $200 permit before May 15 that will be good through the summer, park spokesman Al Nash said.

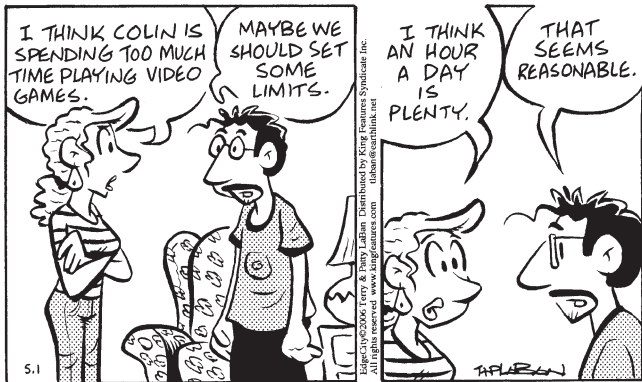

But nature photographer Dan Hartman is worried about what could happen in the future if the government starts charging more for commercial filming and photography at national parks. Hartman lives in Silver Gate, Mont., a mile outside of Yellowstone, and has had photos published in National Geographic.

"Look at our country today. Nature is the last thing on anyone's minds," Hartman said. "To take away this type of wildlife programming would be devastating. I'm hoping this is all just a mistake."
