Higher tax revenue complicates Brown's tax pitch

BY LIEN HOANG
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO California's tax revenue is running well ahead of projections, but the governor's office said Friday that has not simplified the challenge of closing the state's $15.4 billion deficit.

Lawmakers and Gov. Jerry Brown also have to consider possible cost increases involving education, health care and prisons, state Director of Finance Ana Matosantos said.

Her statement came a day after the Legislative Analyst's Office calculated the state has received $2.5 billion more than projected in personal income, corporate and sales taxes since the fiscal year started July 1.

The Democratic governor has proposed a mix of spending cuts and tax extensions to close the budget gap and is expected to present a revision on May 16.

The additional revenue could bolster the position of GOP lawmakers, whose opposition to extending tax increases thwarted Brown's budget proposal earlier this year.

The governor wants a special election so voters can decide whether to extend increases to personal income, sales and vehicle taxes for five years. The increases are set to expire by July 1.

"Obviously, this takes pressure off the concept of raising taxes," said Republican Sen. Bob Huff of Diamond Bar, vice chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

He said the additional tax revenue suggests the California economy is beginning to revive. But the state cannot expect a full recovery if it taxes residents further, he said.

Democrats have warned that without tax extensions, the state will have to make devastating cuts to schools, universities and other programs.

Brown already signed bills that cut the budget gap from $26.6 billion by shifting some state responsibilities to local governments, transferring money between government accounts and reducing spending on programs for the state's most vulnerable residents.

Samohi sets stage for big final week

Morgan Genser news@smdp.com

TOO LATE: Culver City's Alberto Lara safely slides into second base ahead of the tag by Samohi's Nick Herrera on Saturday at Santa Monica High School. Samohi won the game, 7-1. The win sets up a big series with Culver City this week to determine the Ocean League champion.

BY DANIEL ARCHULETA
Managing Editor

SAMOHI What a way to end a season.

Santa Monica High School's baseball team will face Ocean League rival Culver City this week to determine the regular season crown. This isn't new for either team, the two shared the league title last season.

Samohi set up the final week tangle with a convincing 7-1 win over Inglewood on Saturday at home to improve its league record to 8-0. Senior pitcher Brandon Hirschberger went the distance, allowing just three hits while striking out 13.

The first of the two-game set will take place on Tuesday at Culver City. The teams return to Santa Monica on Thursday to complete the regular season. Both games are scheduled for 3:15 p.m.

VOLLEYBALL TEAMS MAKE PLAYOFFS

Samohi's boys' volleyball team has clinched the No. 1 seed in the CIF-Southern Section Division 4 playoffs, it was announced on Sunday.

On Tuesday, the Ocean League champion Vikings will host the winner of a wildcard match. The game is scheduled for 7 p.m.

St. Monica, winner of the Camino Real League, has earned the No. 7 seed in the CIF-SS Division 5 playoffs. The Mariners will host the winner of a wildcard game on Tuesday also at 7 p.m.

Report: L.A. pays big bucks in police workplace suits

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Los Angeles paid out more than $18 million over five years to city police officers who filed lawsuits complaining of sexual harassment, racial discrimination, denied promotions and other workplace transgressions, according to a review of court records.

At least 17 officers won jury verdicts or settlements totaling at least a million dollars, and dozens more officers received payments of five or six figures, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday. In September, a former officer who alleged discrimination was awarded $4 million. From 2005 to 2010, officers sued the Los Angeles police department over workplace issues more than 250 times.

'Thor' hammers competition with $66M opening

CHRISTY LEMIRE
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES "Thor" kicked off the summer movie season by smashing the competition at the box office with a $66 million opening weekend.

The 3-D action picture from Paramount, based on the Marvel comic, was by far the No. 1 movie, according to Sunday studio estimates.

Australian actor Chris Hemsworth stars as the arrogant god of thunder who's sent down to Earth as punishment. It was directed by Kenneth Branagh, best known for making films based on Shakespeare plays such an epic "Hamlet," and featured a supporting cast that included Anthony Hopkins, Natalie Portman and Stellan Skarsgard.

In second place was a holdover from last week, the car-racing sequel "Fast Five" from Universal Pictures. It made $32.5 million for a total of nearly $140 million in just 10 days.

Although the opening for "Thor" wasn't as enormous as those of other superhero movies, it still exceeded studio expectations, which were around $55 million. It was the third-highest opening for a Marvel franchise launch, behind "Spider-Man," which made $115 million in 2002, and "Iron Man," which made $98.6 million in 2008.

Don Harris, Paramount's executive vice president for distribution, thought the film held appeal for both men and women; 37 percent of the audience was female.

"Chris Hemsworth looks like he's going to be a movie star," Harris said. "Kenneth Branagh made a very smart movie, and the idea that the man who's most closely identified with Shakespeare is making a Marvel superhero movie, I always thought was pretty interesting. Audiences connected with the Natalie Portman relationship, between her character and Thor. The movie looks spectacular on the screen. It was fun, and it's a big, epic movie."

Hollywood.com box office analyst Paul Dergarabedian thought "Thor" had a pretty respectable opening given that it's a lesser-known comic book title.

"Expectations always get wildly overblown with superhero movies — a superhero movie has the biggest opening weekend of all time: 'The Dark Knight,'" Dergarabedian said.

More safety, more cyclists

Editor:

Bike share programs are a fantastic thing. Similar programs which have taken place for years in European cities, followed by cities in the U.S. are laudable. As a cyclist, I cheer any and all programs put in place to increase cycling and get folks out of their cars. However, I think Mary Luevano misses the mark ("Santa Monica needs a bike share program, Your Column Here, May 4). Her argument sites statistics about the reduction in our carbon footprint and savings of gas and money. This motivation to get people riding falls short.

The single most persuasive factor in getting more cyclists out there will be safety. The perception and reality is Santa Monica is not a safe city to ride in. Cars routinely speed down the streets at freeway speeds, cut in and out of bike lanes, make right turns on red signals at 20 mph and act as if bikes don't have humans atop them. Cyclists, in turn, run red lights and stop signs routinely, ride against traffic and on the sidewalk (yes, it's illegal in Santa Monica) and appear to have complete disregard for the rules of the road, even though they are bound by all the same rules which motorists are. Antagonism and misunderstanding between the two groups continues to grow.

The Santa Monica Police Department is either under tacit or implicit directions to, "leave well enough alone." There seems to be little enforcement, motorist or cyclist, of all the bad and illegal behavior that is common place.

Until that potential cyclist feels he or she can go for a ride that doesn't include a trip to the emergency room or worse yet, the refrigerated section of the hospital, they will be reluctant to hop on a bike.

Dispute over parking ticket may mean refunds for drivers

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU GET A parking ticket you think you didn't deserve? You could pay the fine and chalk it up to a "bad day," or you could contest it.

California Vehicle Code (CVC), Section 40215 entitled "Contesting Parking Violation Procedure," describes your rights and a course to follow if you want to challenge a parking citation, have it dismissed and avoid financial loss.

A friend's wife received a parking citation issued by the Santa Monica Police Department in January. Without debating the merits of her case, I will deal with the apparent failure of the system to render a legally proper process to people who feel they may have been cited unfairly.

The wife — let's call her Harriet — feels her parking citation was issued in error. She wrote a letter following printed instructions on the citation contesting the ticket to the Parking Violations Bureau (PVB). She explained why she thought the citation wasn't valid and asked for dismissal. A SMPD traffic services officer reviewed the case and decided whether to dismiss or uphold the citation. He then informed PVB of his decision.

PVB is a sub-contractor to ACS State and Local Solutions which is a Xerox company. They handle parking ticket paperwork and related administrative services for City Hall as well as major municipalities nationally and internationally.

Within a few days, Harriet received an unsigned form letter from PVB's offices that didn't address any of the issues she raised. The letter simply stated "the citation is valid." However, CVC statute 40215(a) states clearly that the initial review notification upholding the citation must "include a reason for that denial."

Harriet and her attorney husband called the SMPD to inquire about the alleged failure of PVB's response to meet CVC requirements. They were informed by a lieutenant that the "denial (notification) was appropriate." Santa Monica Police Chief Tim Jackman decided not to intervene pending possible legal proceedings.

Harriet paid the $64 bail and requested a hearing.

Parking citation hearing examiner services are provided by a City Hall contractor and managed by a division of the Finance Department. Hearing examiner Sheri Ross has a two-year contract with City Hall to adjudicate parking violation appeals. As many as 1,664 cases are heard annually, according to City Hall documents.

Harriet and her attorney husband presented their case to Ross at a hearing. They addressed the citation's validity and mentioned that they didn't believe the original notification from PVB contained a reason for denying Harriet's claim as required by CVC 40215(a). They asked for dismissal. Ross told Harriet she'd review the statute, analyze the arguments and make her decision. Two days later, another unsigned notification form arrives from PVB. It too simply stated, "the citation is valid."

The CVC also requires the examiner to provide a reason for his/her decision to the appellant. CVC statute 40215(c)(6): "The examiner's decision following the administrative hearing may be personally delivered to the person by the examiner or sent by first-class mail, and, if the notice (citation) is not canceled, include a written reason for that denial."

Harriet's husband is taking the matter up with the Finance Department as well as the City Attorney's Office. The city attorney has the responsibility for reviewing all documents such as notification letters sent to parking citation appellants.

However, last Tuesday, Harriet's husband talked with the area director of operations for ACS/PVB. He was told City Hall was noticed of changes in the CVC effective Jan. 1, 2009 and City Hall did not authorize ACS/PVB to change the notification letters.

There appears to be problems with the parking citation appeals procedure. Therefore, a full and impartial review should be conducted to see if state statutes are being ignored by City Hall and/or its contractors. If so, corrections to notices and proper procedures must be implemented because appellants deserve more than "the citation is valid" for a reason. But, the bottom line is the courts may have to sort this all out.

I would also suggest any investigation include the hearing examiner (a licensed California attorney) to see whether proper procedures were followed as prescribed by the vehicle code. If proper procedures were not followed, those whose parking citations were upheld and if improperly noticed, should receive refunds of fines or bail money (which could total hundreds of thousands of dollars) and have their tickets dismissed.

There may be some light on the horizon. Don Patterson in the Finance Department who oversees ACS/PVB e-mailed, "These concerns were reviewed with the City Attorney's Office, and our current administrative hearing processes and notices meet the minimum requirements of applicable state law… . We have been in the process of reviewing and updating various parking-related notices over the past several months … ."

Still, Harriet says, "No matter how hungry the city is for revenue, it can't break the law and violate statutory rights of its citizens."

Amen.

La Niña brings flood risks and drought to the West

LYNN DEBRUIN
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY The winter and early spring have been extreme across the West, with record snowpacks bringing joy to skiers and urban water managers but severe flood risks to northern Utah, Wyoming and Montana.

And despite all the wet weather in the Rockies and Sierra Nevada, parts of eastern Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona are in severe drought and gearing up for what is forecast as a bad fire season. In New Mexico, some 400 fires, driven by relentless winds, have already raced across 315,000 acres.

Credit — or blame — for the extreme weather goes mostly to a strong La Nina, which is associated with cooler than normal water temperatures in the Equatorial Pacific Ocean and an atmospheric flow that's causing drier than normal conditions in the Southwest and wetter than normal in the Northwest..

"This winter has been fairly unusual," said Laura Edwards, a research climatologist at the Desert Research Institute in Reno, Nev., in what can only be considered an understatement.

Randy Julander, supervisor for the Utah Snow Survey, described more colorfully the disparity between the snow buried, flood endangered parts of the West and those that are parched and burning: "They're wishing they could get a little of what we have. (The wet weather) just continues to get worse. At this point, all you can do is open the chute, let her buck and hope your butt stays glued to the saddle."

Julander was referring to the coming melt with snowpacks at 200 percent of normal or higher throughout northern Utah. One lower-elevation area in the mountains 50 miles east of Salt Lake City is at 750 percent of normal — with another big storm headed to the region early this week.

"The sandbagging is in place. They've cleared the channels. Everybody is just sitting around chewing on their nails," Julander said.

In Colorado, the city of Denver and Loveland Ski Area are separated by a mere 75 miles. Yet, the city, east of the Rockies on the high plains, has had only 21.8 inches of snow this season, the second-lowest in history with records dating back to 1882. Loveland, at the top of the Continental Divide, entered the weekend within four inches of breaking its season snowfall record of 572 inches (some 49 feet, set in 1995-1996).

"It's almost a record low for one and a record high for another. You get the idea how extreme that is," said Kevin Houck, an engineer with the Colorado Water Conservation Board. "If I were a water manager, I'd be very happy about this."

Pat Mulroy definitely is.

She oversees operations at the Southern Nevada Water Authority and the Las Vegas Valley Water District, responsible for water to local agencies that collectively serve 2 million residents and nearly 40 million annual visitors

As recently as last fall, the plunging levels of Lake Mead outside Las Vegas were dangerously close to triggering a mandated "shortage" declaration on the Colorado River system, which would have required both Nevada and Arizona to reduce water use.

But because so much snowmelt will be flowing into the Colorado River this year, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation announced recently it is releasing an extra 3.3 million acre-feet from upstream Lake Powell to Lake Mead. The additional flow into Mead is roughly 14 times the amount of Colorado River water Las Vegas and surrounding areas used last year.

"I'm delighted, absolutely delighted," said Mulroy.

In Utah, Snowbird Ski Resort set its all-time snowfall record two weeks ago with 711 inches — more than 59 feet. It could stay open as late as July 4.

The flip-side is that major flooding has become a worry at lower elevations in northern Utah, where snowpack is well above what it was during the massive floods of 1983 that caused $250 million in damage.

Crops were wiped out, homes and businesses damaged and State Street in downtown Salt Lake City became a river for two weeks when an underground pipe couldn't contain the flow of City Creek. Interstate 80 was flooded and levels in the Great Salt Lake rose within eight feet of the runways at Salt Lake International Airport.

"When it does finally turn warm and the snow starts melting, it will be like filling a thimble with a fire hose," said Julander. "It's going to come down pretty much uncontrolled."

A big melt-off in a short time frame would make situation dire.

In Wyoming, communities are already placing sandbags in anticipation of potential flooding. Last year, the state got a wakeup call when flooding damaged bridges, roads and homes and required the Wyoming National Guard to deploy 400 soldiers to help.

The Q Line

More protection for renters

A bill that extends renters' rights cleared a crucial hurdle at a State Judiciary Committee last week. The bill would allow tenants who have been served a three-day notice to "pay or quit" to keep their homes if they pay back rent, new rent costs and reasonable attorney fees.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Do you think the bill is fair, or does it give too much leeway to renters?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call (310) 458-7737 ext. 102.

Dear Earth Talk

How healthy is soy? I heard that, despite its healthy image, most soy is grown using chemicals like other crops and is even being genetically modified.

D. Frinka
Syracuse, NY

FOOD PRODUCTS MADE WITH SOY HAVE enjoyed great popularity in the U.S. and elsewhere in recent years. Two decades ago, Americans spent $300 million a year on soy food products; today we spend over $4 billion. More and more adults are substituting soy — a great source of protein — for meat, while a quarter of all baby formula contains soy instead of milk. Many school lunch programs nationwide have added soy-based veggie burgers to their menus, as have countless restaurants, including diners and fast food chains.

And there are hundreds of other edible uses of the legume, which now vies with corn for the title of America's most popular agricultural crop. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration promotes the inclusion of soy into other foods to cut down on heart attack risk. Clinical studies have shown that soy can also lower the risk for certain types of breast and prostate cancer.

But there may be a dark side to soy's popularity and abundance. "Many of soy's health benefits have been linked to isoflavones — plant compounds that mimic estrogen," reports Lindsey Konkel in Environmental Health News. "But animal studies suggest that eating large amounts of those estrogenic compounds might reduce fertility in women, trigger premature puberty and disrupt development of fetuses and children." But before you dump out all your soy foods, note that the operative phrase here is "large amounts" which, in laboratory science, can mean amounts substantially above what one would consume in real life.

Also at issue is that upwards of 90 percent of the U.S. soybean crop is grown using genetically modified (GM) seeds sold by Monsanto. These have been engineered to withstand repeated dousing with the herbicide, glyphosate (also sold by Monsanto and marketed as RoundUp). According to the nonprofit Non GMO Project, this allows soybean farmers to repeatedly spray their fields with RoundUp to kill all weeds (and other nearby plant life) except for the soybean plants they are growing.

The U.S. government permits the sale and consumption of GM foods, but many consumers aren't so sure it's OK to eat them — given not only the genetic tinkering but also the exposure to so much glyphosate. Due to these concerns, the European Union has had a moratorium on GM crops of all kinds since 1998.

The fact that genetically modified soy may be present in as much as 70 percent of all food products found in U.S. supermarkets means that a vast majority of Americans may be putting a lot of GM soy into their systems every day. And not just directly via cereals, breads and pasta: Some 98 percent of the U.S. soybean crop is fed to livestock, so consumers of meat, eggs and dairy are indirectly ingesting the products of scientific tinkering with unknown implications for human health.

Since GM soy has only been around and abundant for less than a decade, no one yet knows for sure what the long term health effects, if any, will be on the populations of countries such as the U.S. that swear by it. Natural foods stores like WholeFoods are your best bet for finding non-GM foods of all sorts.

Japan won't abandon nuclear power despite ongoing crisis

MARI YAMAGUCHI
Associated Press

TOKYO Atomic power will remain a major part of Japan's energy policy despite the ongoing crisis at one tsunami-crippled plant and a looming shutdown of another while its quake protections are improved, a government official said Sunday.

Deputy Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshito Sengoku also said no reactors other than the three units at the Hamaoka power plant in central Japan would be shuttered over quake and tsunami concerns.

There is "no need to worry" about other reactors, Sengoku said. "Scientifically, that's our conclusion at the moment."

The government evaluated Japan's 54 reactors for quake and tsunami vulnerability after the March 11 disasters that heavily damaged the Fukushima Dai-ichi plant in northeast Japan.

Chubu Electric Power Co., which runs the Hamaoka plant, is still considering the government's request to shut the reactors while the utility builds a seawall and improves backup systems to protect the reactors from a major earthquake and tsunami.

Nuclear energy provides more than one-third of Japan's electricity, and shutting the three reactors would likely worsen power shortages expected this summer. Already, buildings have reduced lighting, stores have trimmed service hours and subway operators have shut air conditioning in a conservation effort in the capital region since the March 11 disasters.

After an executives' meeting Saturday failed to finalize a decision, Chubu chairman Toshio Mita left for Qatar to negotiate for liquefied natural gas supplies to cover the shortfall, company official Tatsuo Sawaki said Sunday.

The three reactors account for more than 10 percent of the company's power supply, company officials said.

Chubu Electric has estimated maximum output of about 30 million kilowatts this summer with the three Hamaoka reactors running, with estimated demand of about 26 million kilowatts.

"It would be tight," said another Chubu official Mikio Inomata, adding that officials are discussing possibilities of boosting output from gas, oil and coal-fueled power plants and buying power from other utility companies.

The Hamaoka plant is a key power provider in central Japan, including nearby Aichi, home of Toyota Motor Corp.

The plant about 125 miles (200 kilometers) west of Tokyo has been known as Japan's "most dangerous" nuclear plant as it sits in an area where a major quake is expected within decades. About 79,800 people live within a 6-mile (10-kilometer) radius.

Prime Minister Naoto Kan noted Friday that experts estimate a 90 percent chance of a quake with a magnitude of 8.0 or higher striking that region within 30 years.

"That makes Hamaoka an exceptional case," Kan told reporters Sunday. He urged Chubu executives "to understand."

Since the March 11 disasters, Chubu Electric has drawn up safety measures that include building a 40-foot-high (12-meter) seawall nearly a mile (1.5 kilometers) long over the next two to three years, company officials said. Chubu also promised to install additional emergency backup generators and other equipment and improve the water tightness of the reactor buildings.

The Hamaoka plant lacks a concrete sea barrier now. Sand hills between the ocean and the plant are up to 50 feet (15 meters) high, deemed enough to defend against a tsunami around 26 feet (8 meters) high, officials said.

The operator of the Fukushima nuclear plant, Tokyo Electric Power Co., has said the tsunami that wrecked critical power and cooling systems there was at least 46 feet (14 meters) high.

The March 11 quake and tsunami left more than 25,000 people dead or missing on the northeast coast and triggered the worst nuclear crisis since Chernobyl in 1986.

On Sunday, the government approved TEPCO's plan to allow workers return to Fukushima Dai-ichi's No. 1 reactor building to install a new cooling system after its main door was left open overnight for ventilation, said Hidehiko Nishiyama, spokesman for the Nuclear Industry and Safety Agency.

Radioactivity inside the building has fallen to levels deemed safe for people wearing protective suits to enter, Nishiyama said. Workers rapidly installed air filtering equipment in there Thursday — their first entry since shortly after the tsunami.

"We judge the environment has improved to one that allows people to enter and work," Nishiyama said.

Workers later Sunday removed air-filtering ducts and machines, leaving holes on the wall unplugged and the door open until Monday morning, when air monitoring staff are to enter for a final check, TEPCO said.

TEPCO spokesman Junichi Matsumoto said air coming into the building through the entrance may rise and push out radioactivity through the damaged roof, but the amount would be too low to cause health risks. The building largely lost its roof in a hydrogen explosion on March 12.

Proposed shark fin ban makes waves in Frisco

ROBIN HINDERY
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO A California proposal to outlaw the title ingredient in shark fin soup, a traditional Chinese delicacy, has turned into a recipe for controversy in San Francisco, a city that is nearly one-third Asian and home to the nation's oldest Chinatown.

A bill moving through the state Legislature would ban the sale, distribution and possession of shark fins. State and federal laws prohibit shark finning in U.S. waters but do not address the importation of fins from other countries.

Supporters say shark finning is inhumane and a threat to the ocean ecosystem. They say an estimated 73 million sharks a year are slaughtered, mainly for shark fin soup, which can sell for more than $80 a bowl and is often served at weddings and banquets.

"The collapse of shark populations because of overfishing is a conservation issue of global concern, and the demand for fins drives overfishing of sharks," said Mike Sutton, director of the Center for the Future of the Oceans at the Monterey Bay Aquarium, located about 115 miles south of San Francisco.

Alex Ong, chef at the Pan-Asian restaurant Betelnut in San Francisco's Marina district, said the broth in shark fin soup is what provides most of the flavor, and the fins themselves can be easily substituted by other seafood or even creatively disguised starch.

Ong said when he saw video footage of fisherman slicing off sharks' fins and tossing the animals back into the ocean to die, the images hit him "right in the gut" and he vowed to work to stop the practice.

But critics of the proposed ban say the consumption of shark fins is a cherished cultural tradition.

"This is traditional for us. When you say no to shark fin, that's profiling," said Henry Cheung, president of Charlie Seafood Inc., a San Francisco-based wholesaler and importer. "The law doesn't ban shark meat or a handbag made with shark skin — just fins. I myself believe it's unfair."

Cheung also questioned the need for a ban on a product he says is already losing popularity, particularly among young people. He said his business stopped importing shark fins years ago, due to declining demand.

In a statement issued Feb. 14, the day the legislation was introduced, state Sen. Leland Yee, D-San Francisco, called the measure "an unfair attack on Asian culture and cuisine."

Yee, who will officially kick off his campaign for mayor of San Francisco on Saturday, said efforts should be focused on strengthening conservation efforts and increasing penalties for illegally killing sharks.

In addition to local chefs and politicians, a few celebrities have jumped into the debate.

Chinese basketball star Yao Ming is loaning his celebrity to the anti-finning movement, appearing on city buses and billboards urging residents in Chinese and English to "Join me, say no to shark fin soup." The Houston Rockets center came to town Thursday to film a public service announcement for the international conservation group WildAid.

Shark fins also may prove an unexpected ingredient in this year's mayoral race, which includes three prominent Asian-American candidates: Yee, Board of Supervisors President David Chiu and Assessor-Recorder Phil Ting.

San Francisco is home to the largest percentage of Asian Americans of any county in the continental U.S. Political observers expect voter turnout from that community to be high in November, following the momentum generated earlier this year by the appointment of Edwin Lee as interim mayor — the city's first Asian-American leader.

Chiu and Ting appeared at a news conference Friday organized by WildAid and expressed their support for a shark fin ban.

Afterward, Ting said the legislation presented an "important opportunity to talk about the importance of sustainability," but that he didn't think it was among Asian-American voters' top concerns.

"The economy, jobs, the city budget — Chinese-American voters are focused on those issues," he said.

A poll released Friday by the Monterey Bay Aquarium indicated strong support of a fin ban among Californians. More than three-quarters of the 600 registered voters surveyed said they support the bill. Of the 218 respondents who were Chinese-American, 70 percent said they support it.

"There's an attempt to portray this debate as an east-versus-west cultural thing," said Peter Knights, executive director of WildAid. "The reality is this is east and west versus a small minority of people."

The measure is awaiting a hearing by the state Assembly. Hawaii has already adopted a ban, and similar legislation is advancing in Oregon and Washington state.

In the Delta, new flood brings back old fears

CAIN BURDEAU
Associated Press

GREENVILLE, Miss. As the crest in the Mississippi River rolls toward the heart of the Delta, the great flood of 1927 is on a lot of minds.

On April 21 of that year, an engorged Mississippi River broke through a levee a few miles north of Greenville, sending a wall of water down Main Street, forever changing this area's landscape. Homes were crushed, sharecroppers' farms were carried away, thousands were trapped on rooftops for days and hundreds died.

Residents in Greenville believe they are safe this time, but 75 miles south in Vicksburg, people wonder whether history will repeat itself. Near the site where the Yazoo River empties into the Mississippi, forming a wishbone-like shape, predictions are the water will overtop the tributary levees by more than a foot. Even worse, the levees could fail.

"All they done is put Visqueen (polyethylene sheet) there to stop the levee from being cut in two," said Larry Fuller, a wiry 65-year-old farm manager swapping news with neighbors at Chuck's Dairy Bar in Rolling Fork, which sits in between Greenville and Vicksburg and is expected to be hard-hit. "We could lose the whole Delta if that levee breaks."

The situation is grave, but Gerald Galloway, a University of Maryland civil engineer and former Army Corps officer, said residents should have confidence in the main levees that hold the bulk of the river. However, he issued a stern warning.

"There is no such thing as never: it's not a word when you're dealing with the river. An old Army Corps of Engineers general said that the best preparation for a war is fighting the river, because it's always looking for a place to defeat you and it's 24-7 in its activity," he said.

John Barry, the author of "Rising Tide," a definitive book on the 1927 flood and a board member of the levee authority in New Orleans, agreed that the levees would likely hold, but said any breach would be bad news.

"Once a breach begins to occur, if you're not totally on top of it immediately with enormous resources, you are in trouble," Barry said. "There's a lot of water in that river, and it's going to keep coming for days, if not weeks. It's not a hurricane where you have a few hours of storm surge."

The 1927 catastrophe occurred after relentless rain the previous year, followed by more precipitation in the spring. Levees were busted much farther upstream than Mississippi, but the breach at Mounds Landing was the most destructive.

The nation vowed to never again see Americans suffer in a flood of that kind. During an era driven by racism, blacks built levees at gunpoint, starved in refugee camps and many were left to fend for themselves during the flood, while whites favored for rescue.

Following the disaster, Congress got the Army Corps of Engineers to build a 2,203-mile long levee system on the river, but even that work has been called into question after Hurricane Katrina, when corps-built levees busted and water filled most of New Orleans, killing more than 1,600 people.

"When you have a series of failures as you see with Katrina, and the interstate bridge in St. Paul, people are going to ask, 'What's happening?'" said Galloway, the civil engineer. "The thing to do is to modernize and upgrade our infrastructure."

At Greenville, the site of the 1927 levee break, families arrive night and day at the old riverfront to take pictures of the current flooding. The yacht club is underwater. So, too, is Archer Island, and the honky tonks and towns out in the basin. The third-floor of a casino boat, lifted by the swollen Mississippi, can be spotted from the stools at the Southern Nights Bar & Grill on Main Street.

"I don't think that levee will break," said James Shoffner, the bar owner. "If it floods, I'll try to get all the whiskey out."

On the other side of the downtown levee, water has reached higher than rooftops and is still rising.

"The people living in the Delta are facing the biggest threat from flooding that they've ever faced in their lifetime," said Cass Pennington, the president of the Delta Council, an economic development agency. "You're talking about schools underwater, highways underwater."

The pending flood is grinding the Delta to a halt.

"Right now, I'm short-staffed," said Larry Jue, a 63-year-old storekeeper working the cash register at his family's 70-year-old grocery store, the Sam Sing & Co. Store. The family cooperative has been on the town square in Rolling Fork for as long as anyone can remember.

With no flood insurance and his relatives getting older, a flood could be the end.

"I don't want to leave," he said. "I've been thinking about that. Would I come back or not? I may not. Usually a flood like this, people leave and don't come back."

Rolling Fork, home of the bluesman better known as Muddy Waters, is also in the area where Theodore Roosevelt came across a black bear on a hunt in 1902 and refused to shoot, earning him the nickname "Teddy Bear."

At the south end of the Delta, flooding is a regular event — it happened in 1973 and as recently as 2008 — but it's always been contained to the swampland outside the levees.

This is not your typical flood, though.

The Army Corps of Engineers has already taken extraordinary measures by blowing up a levee in Missouri, and it plans to unlock spillways in Louisiana that have rarely had to be opened.

Last week, about 1,200 people at a meeting in Rolling Fork were advised to evacuate. That followed warnings by Gov. Haley Barbour that catastrophic flooding, a levee break, was possible. For the past week, workers have been fighting trouble spots on levees.

"Our levees are going to hold. Greenville won't see water. But our neighbors to the south are poised to get a lot of floodwater," said Greenville Mayor Heather McTeer Hudson.

Near Mount Landing, now one of the most fortified spots on the river, 68-year-old Ruby Taylor Miller talks about feeling safe, waving her hand at the levee built after the disaster.

Her grandfather was a sharecropper on the Delta Pine & Land cotton plantation when the levee broke. He told her stories of saving his six grandchildren from the raging waters and surviving on rooftops for days. He watched cows frantically swim through the waters and rescuers arrive in boats.

Transit Priority Systems Project

Installation of the Transit Priority System (TPS) at 80 traffic signals along major corridors within the City of Santa Monica. Work requires installation of wireless detectors to sense the approach of buses on routes. Work is currently taking place on Santa Monica Boulevard between 22nd and 26th streets and at the intersection of Santa Monica Boulevard and Fifth Street. Partial roadway closures are expected and impact to traffic should be minimal.

Utility Undergrounding

Various alleys will be temporarily closed for underground work on utilities in the following locations: 18th Court between Pearl Street and Pico Boulevard; 20th Street between Pearl Street and Ocean Park Boulevard; 18th Street between Ocean Park Boulevard and Ashland Place North; on Ashland Place North between 18th Street and 16th Street. Work is taking place until approximately July, 2011.

Street & Park Lighting Project

The work consists of modifying existing high-voltage series streetlight circuits to low-voltage multiple circuits. Work will take place citywide through September of 2011. Work will be taking place on 26th Street between Broadway and Wilshire Boulevard. Partial roadway closures are expected and impact to traffic should be minimal.

Borderline Neighborhood Improvement Project

New water main installation, new various street pavement finishes, new landscaped areas, trees, and pedestrian lighting. The intersection of Marine Street and Longfellow Street will be closed until May 13. Please observe posted detour signs. Project is anticipated to be complete June of 2011.

The scene was reminiscent of a community torn apart by way. But this wasn't footage from Dresden or Beirut. This was present-day Detroit.

In the documentary "Urban Roots" by Santa Monica-based Tree Media Group, the Motor City, once a bustling, diverse, and culturally-relevant metropolis, is captured as it is today, struggling to reinvent itself in the wake of the auto industry's collapse and the Great Recession. Unemployment is high and fresh food is scare as grocery chains have fled to the suburbs, creating "food desserts," forcing those in the city to buy sub-par produce from liquor stores, or travel dozens of miles to the nearest market.

At first it seems as if all life has been stripped away, but there are those who have hope and are creating opportunities for themselves and their community by turning vacant lots into small farms, producing fresh food for themselves and their neighbors while also planting the seed for a new economy with more local control.

The documentary, directed by Detroit-native Marc MacInnis and now being shown in theaters across the county as part of the Whole Foods "Do Something Reel" Film Festival, not only entertains, it educates the viewer and inspires them to want to make a positive change in their community, all of which is the mission of Tree Media and its founder, Santa Monica resident Leila Conners.

"We founded the company 15 years ago with the aim to create media that supports civil society, essentially media that matters, media that helps people understand their world better and envision a more sustainable and just future for everybody," Conners told the Daily Press.

The company, which has an office on Main Street, strives for a "triple bottom line" — projects that produce a social and environmental benefit, and of course provide a profit to help finance future work.

With the help of stars like Woody Harrelson ("Thoughts From Within," short film) and Leonardo DiCaprio (2007's "The 11th Hour," directed and written by Conners and her sister, Nadia Conners), as well as work with NASA's Jet Propulsion Lab, the small company is making some headway, however, with any film project comes concerns about financing.

"I think we have a lot of support emotionally, but I think financially it is very difficult for someone to cut a check for these kinds of films. It's hard," said Conners, who lives north of Montana Avenue with her two sons and her partner, Mathew Schmid, the executive director of Tree Media.

"The people who fund us are very enlightened, forward-thinking people who want to see a shift in the world and want to use their money in that regard," she added. "And they will get their money back."

Conners, who did not study to be a filmmaker at first, traces her inspiration for writing and directing back to her childhood. She grew up on the Westside of Los Angeles and spent a lot of her youth outdoors, enjoying California's diverse landscape. Her mother was both Egyptian and German, and she remembers traveling overseas often to visit family. These two things fostered a love for the natural world as well as a desire to understand how politics divided continents instead of uniting them.

"I was always interested in how the world was put together politically," she said. "Why is the Middle East all Muslim with pockets of Christianity? Questions like that fascinated me as early as junior high."

In college (she attended UC Berkeley before transferring to The American University of Paris), Conners studied international politics and economics and minored in art history. From there she became associate editor of New Perspectives Quarterly, an international journal of social and political thought, and associated editor of Global Viewpoint of the Los Angeles Times Syndicate, an internationally distributed op-ed column that reached 200 outlets. This provided her with the opportunity to interview policymakers and thinkers like former U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan and feminist Betty Friedan.

During that time, Conners began to experiment with writing and directing, always believing that film was an art form that could make an impact, and now with the Internet, reach millions of people across the globe.

"The web is finally getting to where we wished it was 10 years ago," she said of online technology that allows users to view feature-length films, slideshows and interact with filmmakers.

The Internet is also responsible for "Urban Roots." Conners said MacInnis contacted her via e-mail about the project following the success of "The 11th Hour."

"A lot of people were coming to us with projects after that, but I had recently become pregnant with my second son and I was not up for taking on another film so I kind of avoided that e-mail."

She finally decided to check it out and she was moved by what she saw.

"What struck me was not just the farming, but the sate of Detroit," she said. "It shocked me because, that's America right? All this destruction should have been caused by a hurricane or a tornado or something like Katrina, or war, but it wasn't. It was because of neglect and abandonment. One of the things I like so much about this film is that it assumes the post-industrial collapse has already happened. We're not going to argue about it. We are moving on now … ."

In connection with the documentary, Tree Media is working to create five small farms at Los Angeles high schools.

Conners next project is a film entitled "Into Eden," which focuses on the individual's power to create change. She is also looking at ways to raise capital so future films can be made in a shorter period of time.

When she's not working, Conners enjoys being a mom and taking her boys outdoors to the beach, parks and Farmers' Markets. She's also a yoga enthusiast and credits that to living in Santa Monica, which she calls the "yoga Mecca of the world."

"Santa Monica for me resembles New York or Paris in the sense that you can walk around, you can hail a cab, you can take a bus or you can bike to get around without a car. I like that. I also like being around the ocean," she said. "The air is much cleaner."

Like any artist trying to tackle complex issues, Conners understands that change will not happen overnight and can get frustrated with the pace. But every time she hears from someone who has seen a Tree Media film and been moved, Conners is bolstered.

"It's truly humbling and rewarding to know that you helped someone see things differently," Conners said. "It feels pretty good.

"I think people like the idea of a company like Tree Media, but if you like it, you need to support it."

WHALE

Sunday near a rocky outcropping not far from the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach.

Diane Alps of the Cabrillo Marine Aquarium says the whale was likely hit by a large ship and pulled into its propellers. She said the whale appears to have been dead three to five days.

Humpback whales are often seen off the coast of Southern California this time of year before they head north to feeding grounds off Santa Barbara and Monterey Bay.

LEGEND

DRY -- each location is graded on an A – F scale based on bacterial pollution levels present in the surf zone
WET -- grades for days of recorded rainfall and the following 3 days
ns -- no sample taken

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

NBA

Mavs sweep Jackson to retirement

JAIME ARON
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS Phil Jackson walked off the court with a tight smile, shaking hands and accepting congratulations like he has after so many series-ending playoff games.

Never like this, though.

His team didn't win; they were crushed. Swept, too.

And he wasn't just heading to the offseason — he's calling it a career, ending the most successful run by any coach in NBA history.

Jason Terry and the Dallas Mavericks ended Jackson's tenure, and the Lakers' reign as two-time champions, with a 122-86 victory Sunday. After two tight finishes and another game that was relatively close, the Mavs turned this one into a rout in the second quarter.

With Terry leading the way, Dallas hit a barrage of 3-pointers to go ahead by 24 points at halftime. When he made 3s on consecutive possessions early in the third quarter, Los Angeles knew it wasn't going to come back in this game or the series.

Things got ugly early in the fourth quarter, with vicious, frustration-fueled cheap shots by Lamar Odom and Andrew Bynum getting them ejected 45 seconds apart. But at game's end, Dallas coaches, players and team owner Mark Cuban lined up to bid farewell to the Zen Master.

"It's been a wonderful run," Jackson said.

The 65-year-old Jackson has retired before, but he insists it's for good this time. While he goes out with the sour taste of his first sweep in 21 postseasons, and his second-widest margin of defeat, it can't overide all the sweet days.

A Hall of Famer since 2007, he leaves with a record 11 titles, and only 10 series losses. Take away Red Auerbach, who won nine championships, and Jackson won more titles than any two coaches combined. He won six championships with Michael Jordan, three with Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal, and the last two with Bryant leading the way.

He had to be talked into coming back this year. The lure of chasing a 12th title, bundled neatly as four three-peats, did it, but he knew it would be tough with a team worn down by three straight years of reaching the finals.

"(That) puts a lot of strain on the basketball club from all angles: personalities, spiritually, physically, emotionally, and getting charged up for game after game and assault after assault when you go in and play a team," Jackson said. "It was a challenge bigger than we could beat this year."

Four of Jackson's five kids flew to Dallas for this game, in case it was the end. On Saturday, Jackson called that "a drag that I don't need," but by Sunday afternoon he was probably happy to have them around. They sat near the Lakers bench, wearing yellow hats with Roman numerals marking his 10th and 11th championships.

Then there was his extended family — his coaches and players, especially Bryant.

"I grew up under him," Bryant said. "The way I approach things, the way I think about things — not only basketball, life in general — comes from him. It's a little weird for me to think of what next year is going to be like."

Assistant Brian Shaw, a former Lakers player, is considered a front-runner to take over. The bigger decisions for general manager Mitch Kupchak will be how to surround Bryant. He may want a younger point guard than Derek Fisher, who turns 37 before next season, and he may consider breaking up his tandem of 7-footers, Bynum and Pau Gasol.

"We all know they always come back and get themselves back in the race," Jackson said. "The Lakers are going to survive."

For Dirk Nowitzki and the Mavs, clearing this hurdle sets them up for a chance to redeem themselves for flopping during the 2006 NBA finals and for flaming out in every postseason since. That's why when this game ended, confetti didn't fall; the organization's bigger goal is reaching the finals and winning its first championship.

They're halfway there, having won a franchise-record six straight playoff games, a streak that began right after they blew a 23-point lead in Game 4 of their first-round series against Portland.

"The job is not finished," Terry said.

Dallas will host either Oklahoma City or Memphis in the conference finals. The Grizzlies lead the Thunder 2-1 going into Game 4 on Monday night. The next round likely won't start before next Sunday, a layoff that could pay huge dividends for a roster filled with players in their 30s.

Then again, they might want to keep playing the way they're going.

Terry tied a playoff record with nine 3-pointers, and the club matched NBA postseason marks with 11 3s in the first half and 20 for the game. Dallas made 63 percent of its shots from behind the arc (20 of 32) and 60 percent of its field goals (44 of 73).

Forget that it is Monday, Libra

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ You are fiery and dynamic. The unexpected occurs out of the blue. Express your deeper feelings. You do a great job of expressing yourself, and others hear you loud and clear. Tonight: In the thick of things.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Know when it is best to say less and just be yourself. Your ability to clear out a problem emerges. You have a seriousness that empowers you. As a result, others trust your suggestions. Tonight: Stay close to home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ As a sign, you tend to speak your mind as few can. You mean what you say, and others hear you loud and clear. Express yourself to friends or in a meeting. Some of the reactions you get could stun you. Tonight: Ever playful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Curb a need to get your way. Your need for control easily could swing into relationships. Unexpected developments force you to deal with responsibilities and perhaps update your community image. Tonight: Treat yourself well; you put in quite a day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ How you handle an unanticipated piece of information can and will define your day. Many of you will focus on re-arranging your plans, whereas others will be pushed to the max to incorporate everything and get it done. Tonight: The only answer is yes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★ Take much-needed time to do research or to push a project ahead. You could be overly exhausted or looking for a way around a situation. Just observe, and a lot more will become clear. Tonight: Say "yes" to living.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Focus on others, whether you are off playing or heading in a new direction. Though you might want or need to concentrate on certain aspects of an issue, you could have difficulty doing so. Others seek you out en masse. Tonight: Enjoy the moment. Forget that it is Monday.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You have a way of commanding attention. You won't be a backseat driver today, in any segment of your life. Others count on you taking your place and acting responsibly. Could you be enabling someone? Tonight: Burning the candle at both ends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Tame the desire to take off. Use this impulse in a more positive and gratifying manner -- perhaps doing some research or becoming an armchair traveler. Recognize your restraints and move forward. Tonight: Try to move forward.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You can only see and accomplish so much. Cut the idea that you can do it all -- at least for now. You sometimes make demands that are very hard on you. Let others carry the ball right now. Tonight: Listen to what a partner shares.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ You might want to move forward and handle a certain issue. Truth be told, you might want to allow others to do their fair share. You carry too much of a burden on your shoulders; allow others to pitch in. Tonight: Go off and join a friend or visit with a roommate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Focus, focus, focus and enhance your ability to get past an immediate problem. You want to get down to basics, though you can be gentle while doing so. Others are more likely to accept their role in this matter when approached with softness. Tonight: Work as a team.

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, you'll have an opportunity to demonstrate your priorities. Family will always be close to your heart. You will open new doors, as you will be unusually fortunate later this year. Is there something you have wanted to do? This year might be the right time to manifest just that. You gain unusual insight into your background and a parent. If you are single, you will long for someone to nestle in with you. Just don't jump into this arrangement because of your need for closeness.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

• Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.

• Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.

• You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.

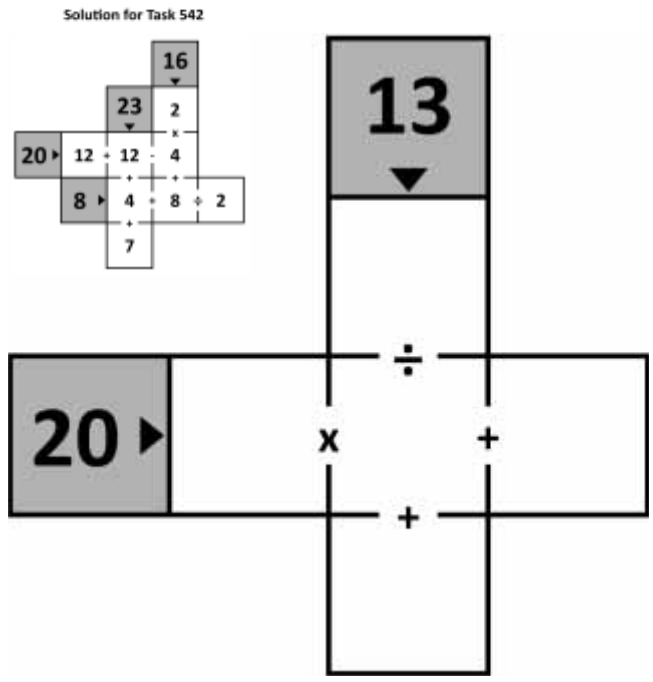

• The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

2, 4, 8, 8, 12

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Equal justice under the law might just depend simply on whether a judge's stomach is growling when he pronounces sentence, according to a study of 1,000 parole decisions during 50 courtroom days observed by students from Columbia University and Israel's Ben Gurion University for an April journal article. The students found that, day after day, judges were increasingly stingy with parole as a morning or afternoon session wore on, but that dramatic spikes in generosity took effect immediately following lunch or a snack break. The lead researcher, Columbia professor Jonathan Levav, expressed satisfaction with the scholarship but disappointment "as a citizen" with the findings.

■ "Man's best friend" sometimes isn't, as when a playful dog hops onto a gun on the ground, causing it to fire a round. John Daniels, 28, took a bullet in the knee from his dog, for example, in Raleigh, N.C., in January. Dogs betray in other ways, too. Motorist Joel Dobrin, 32, was pulled over in a traffic stop in February in Moro, Ore., and rushed to hide his alleged drug stash, which was in a sock. However, his dog intercepted the sock for an impromptu game of dog-tug-of-war in the car. Dobrin won but lost his grip, and the sock flew out the driver's window, right in front of the officer. Dobrin was cited, and later indicted, for drug possession.

TODAY IN HISTORY

2001 In Ghana 129 football fans die in what became known as the Accra Sports Stadium Disaster. The deaths are caused by a stampede (caused by the firing of teargas by police personnel at the stadium) that followed a controversial decision by the referee.

2002 In Kaspiysk, Russia, a remote-controlled bomb explodes during a holiday parade killing 43 and injuring at least 130.
