Virus cuts bus ridership by 77 percent

MADELEINE PAUKER

Big Blue Bus is planning to shift service and cut nearly 50 positions as county stay-at-home orders reduce daily ridership to a quarter of its typical size.

BBB has already reduced service during the coronavirus shutdown to serve about 10,000 people each day, many of whom are essential workers, said Ed King, director of transit services. In 2019, the agency ferried more than 44,000 customers around the Westside on a typical weekday.

On May 24, BBB will implement a new service plan that cuts typical summer service by 30%. Key commuter routes along Santa Monica, Lincoln and Pico boulevards will run on a regular schedule, others with less ridership will run less frequently and two routes serving Santa Monica College will be eliminated while the college continues to operate online.

As of last week, riders have been required to wear face coverings. After two bus drivers tested positive

Even though COVID-19 has forced the cancellation of many of its longstanding activities, local nonprofit Elemental Music has been given plenty of reasons to celebrate in recent weeks.

Having begun 10 years ago as a program that provided lessons to about two dozen students who played string instruments in the area, Elemental Music has now served nearly 2,000 amateur musicians and established a deep

Stay-at-home orders extended

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Public Health Director Barbara Ferrer said Tuesday that the county plans to extend its stay-at-home orders for at least three months to suppress the coronavirus pandemic as confirmed cases and deaths continue to rise.

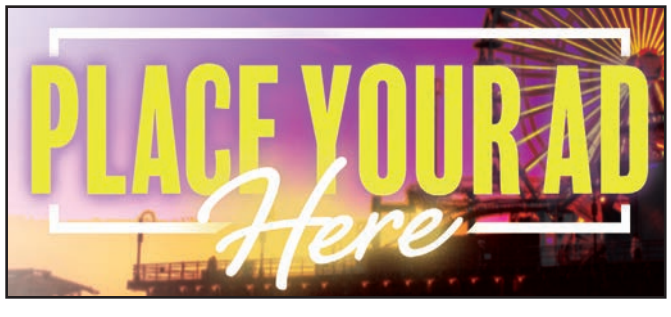

Ferrer said at a Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors meeting that the county would continue to slowly lift restrictions through August without reopening the region entirely. The current health officer order is set to expire Friday.

In the last two weeks, the county moved to phase two of a five-stage recovery plan which allows some retailers to offer curbside pickup, reopens trails, parks and golf courses, and allows people to use beaches for exercise.

Officials said Monday that beachgoers will be allowed to surf and swim in the water and walk and run on the sand if they are wearing masks and practicing physical distancing. They will not

Uber considers buying Grubhub, according to newspaper report

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Uber is considering acquiring Grubhub in a deal that would give the companies control over a majority of the U.S. food delivery business, according to published reports.

Ride-sharing and food delivery giant Uber Technologies Inc. approached Grubhub Inc. earlier this year with an all-stock takeover offer, The Wall Street Journal reported Tuesday, citing sources. The two companies are continuing to discuss the combination, and Uber's board will consider it in the coming days.

Uber and Grubhub declined to comment on the report when contacted by The Associated Press.

Combined, Uber Eats and Grubhub would control 55% of the U.S. food delivery market, according to Dan Ives, an analyst with Wedbush Securities. DoorDash, their chief competitor, controls around 35% of the market.

"Clearly this would be an aggressive move by Uber to take out a major competitor on the Uber Eats front and further consolidate its market share position, especially as the COVID-19 pandemic continues to shift more of a focus to deliveries versus ride-sharing in the near term," Ives wrote in a note to investors.

Food delivery companies have had difficulty turning a profit despite rising demand for their service, partly because fierce competition has forced them to offer deals and keep prices low. The companies have also waived fees for struggling restaurants during the pandemic.

Uber said last week that revenue in its Uber Eats meal delivery business grew 53% to $819 million in the first quarter, but it reported a $313 million adjusted loss for the division. Grubhub's first-quarter revenue rose 12% to $363 million, but it reported a net loss of $33.4 million.

Tom Forte, an analyst with Davidson, said the pandemic will likely expand the size of the food delivery market, perhaps permanently. That makes Grubhub particularly attractive to Uber now, Forte said, but it also makes it more likely that Grubhub will hold out for a better price or remain independent.

Forte said a combination of the two companies would likely receive close scrutiny from regulators, especially since the restaurant industry is struggling during the pandemic. U.S. restaurant sales were down 43% the week of April 12, but have picked up slightly since then, according to NPD Group.

Grubhub shares shot up 37% to $64.22 in midday trading, while Uber's shares were up 6% to $33.56.

California Senate proposal tackles rents, economic recovery

ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

The government would cover rent payments for some low-income Californians impacted by the coronavirus under a proposal backed by state Senate leaders.

The Senate wants to forgive rents for low-income tenants, giving landlords tax credits equal to the value of their missed payments, which they can keep or sell for cash. Tenants would then have up to 10 years to pay back their missed rents to the state, with some not having to pay the full amount because of an unspecified "hardship exemption."

"This is not a giveaway to anyone," Democratic Sen. Steven Bradford said. "Our goal is to keep tenants housed and keep landlords out of foreclosure."

The proposal is part of an ambitious economic recovery plan leaders unveiled Tuesday, which includes a separate $25 billion "economic recovery fund" that small businesses, nonprofits and local governments could tap to help weather the virus-induced downturn.

The money would come from people voluntarily prepaying their taxes for 2024 through 2033. The state would get the money upfront, while the taxpayers would get a discount.

It is estimated to take two years to fill up the fund. The state could start spending the money sooner to help stimulate the economy. But beginning in 2024, state revenues would be up to $3 billion less each year until 2033. Legislative leaders believe the economic crisis will have passed and the state's annual operating budget of more than $200 billion could easily absorb the losses.

"The ultimate effect of course would enable taxpayers to invest in California to help California struggling through this very challenging crisis," Democratic Sen. Bob Hertzberg said.

Tom Bannon, chief executive officer for the California Apartment Association, called the proposal a "creative effort." He said the association that represents owners, investors, developers and managers wants to "refine" the proposal, but did not give details.

The proposals come as state lawmakers are scrambling to craft a state budget that will have $54.3 billion less money to spend than lawmakers had planned in January. Gov. Gavin Newsom is scheduled to reveal his spending proposal on Thursday.

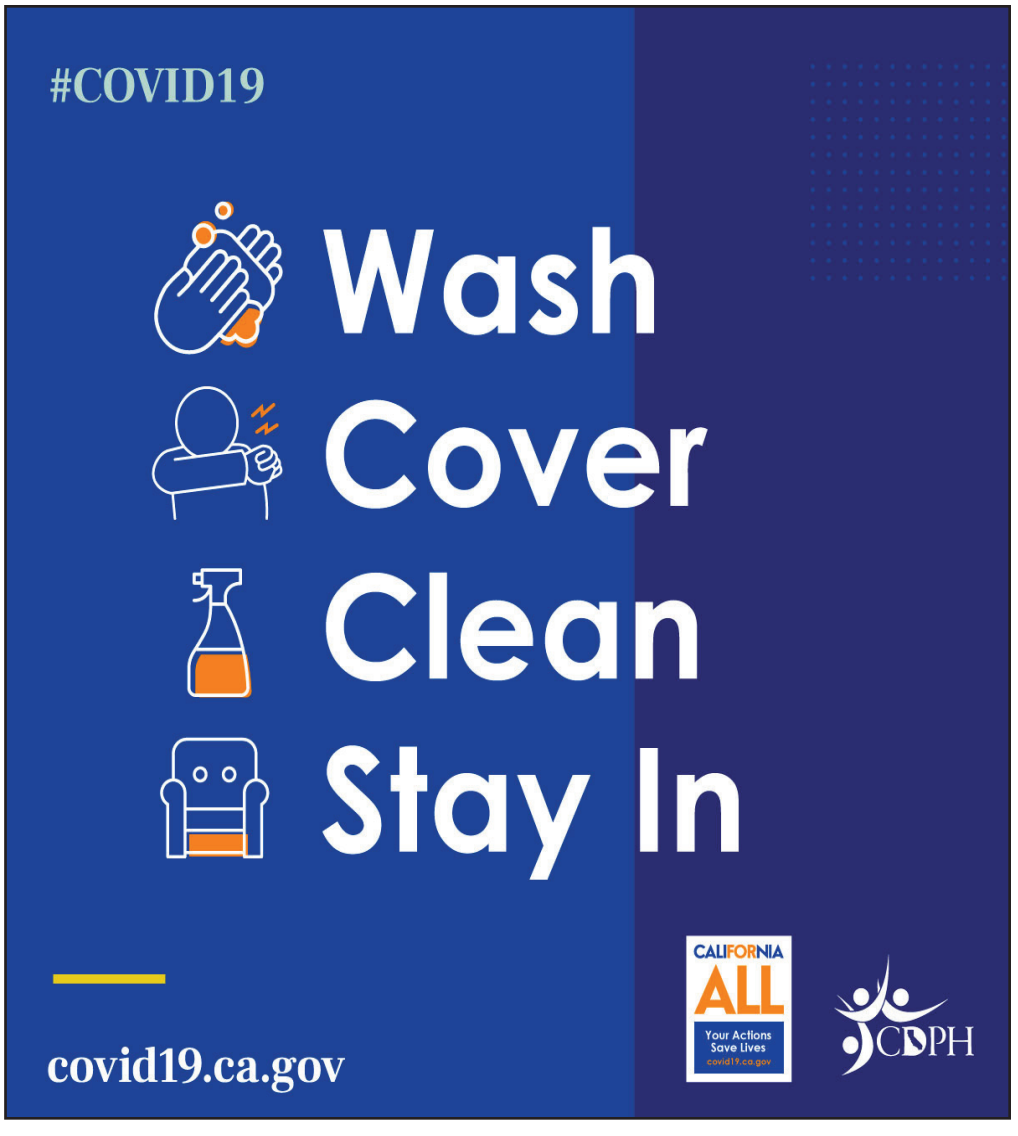

Senate President Pro Tempore Toni Atkins on Tuesday vowed the body would avoid "major ongoing program cuts or broad middle class tax increases," saying those options work in the short-term but "actually cause more economic damage and prolong our budget struggles."

Senate Budget Committee chair Holly Mitchell, a Democrat from Los Angeles, said lawmakers have identified savings approaching $100 billion over the next two years. About $41 billion would come from the state's reserves and other budget maneuvers that include internal borrowing and shifting some costs to future years.

Most of the rest would come from the federal government, with lawmakers estimating they would get $33 billion from what they hope will be an upcoming aid package proposed in Congress. Newsom and leaders from four other western states signed a letter to Congress on Monday asking for $1 trillion in aid for state and local governments.

But some Republican leaders have warned not to count on that money. Senate Republican Leader Shannon Grove, who represents Bakersfield, did not sign the letter asking Congress for the additional help. She said the request "comes at a price."

"I could not support an effort that continues to allow our state government to run (amok) without protecting industries by streamlining burdensome government regulations, reforming unsustainable projects, and supporting private businesses which are California's vital economic engine," she said.

Malibu Mourns Passing of Poet Laureate Ellen Reich

The City of Malibu mourns the passing of Poet Laureate Ellen Reich, who passed away on Friday, May 1, after succumbing to cancer. The City offers condolences to Ellen's family, friends and students and salutes her contributions to the cultural life of Malibu and surrounding communities.

"I am saddened by the news of Ellen's passing, but I am deeply grateful for her passion for keeping poetry and literature alive and well in Malibu, and the enthusiasm and joyful energy that she brought with her wherever she went," said Mayor Karen Farrer. "Our Poet Laureate will be missed but never forgotten, and her spirit lives on in the wonderful work she left behind."

Ellen was appointed as the Malibu Poet Laureate by the Malibu City Council on March 11, 2019. Her term as the Malibu Poet Laureate began on March 28, 2019 and would have concluded March 27, 2021. Ellen's spirit and ideative poetry, along with her relentless devotion to the development of poetry in Malibu since 1974, made her the ideal artist to hold the position of Malibu Poet Laureate.

She was a longtime Malibu residents who taught poetry and writing classes at the Malibu Senior Center, and taught creative writing and autobiography in Malibu for Emeritus College, a division of Santa Monica College. She was widely published, with hundreds of her poems and stories appearing in The Los Angeles Times, Slant, Mudfish, Slipstream, ACM, Coe Review and other publications over the years.

Ellen received numerous awards for work from DA Center for the Arts, Blue Unicorn, Cape Cod Times and other organizations. She was nominated for Pushcart Prizes in 2008 and 2009 and was a finalist in the 2006 Spire Poetry Book Award, the 2005 Flume Press Poetry Contest, and the 2004 Pearl Poetry Prize.

Among her many works, Ellen Reich had a collection of her poetry published along with three other authors in 4 Los Angeles Poets. She published four collections of her works of poetry, including Reverse Kiss from Main Street Rag, The Gynecic Papers from Conflux Press, Sleeping Guardian from Finishing Line Press, and Sacrifices Have To Be Human from Tebot Bach.

Ellen was also an active fine artist and had her work exhibited in the Weisman Museum of Art and the Ojai Valley Gallery. She was the recipient of two first-place awards from the Malibu Art Association. Her art work has been published in Red Dancefloor, Vernal Calibrations, and Isis Rising. She was profiled in the Los Angeles Times as a poet and artist.

According to her obituary in the Malibu Times, Ellen was born April 4, 1934, and grew up in New Jersey before moving to Southern California in the early 1970s. She passed away peacefully at her home in Malibu surrounded by loved ones, and is survived by four children, nine grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

The City Council created the Poet Laureate program in 2016 following a recommendation by the Cultural Arts Commission to create the Poet Laureate program in November 2016. The Cultural Arts Commission's goal is for the Poet Laureate to forever keep poetry as an integral piece of the community's artistic landscape. While the importance of poetry in literature needs no explanation, it is often the art form that receives the least support in community arts programming.

The Poet Laureate acts as the official Consultant in Poetry to the City of Malibu and the Malibu Library, and participates in or creates a Poetry Invitational event each year. The Poet Laureate also represents the City at literary and poetry events, and works with the Laureate Committee to promote poetry and literary arts in local schools and the broader community.

Since the program was started, the Poet Laureate and the Poet Laureate Committee have established a variety of programs to promote poetry, including poetry classes

First 2 California counties get OK to more quickly reopen

The first two California counties received state approval Tuesday to more quickly reopen some services as state officials gradually relax restrictions aimed at slowing the spread of the coronavirus.

The California Department of Public Health posted documents from Butte and El Dorado counties on its website with a note that "These counties can move more quickly through Stage 2 opening sectors once state guidance is posted for that sector."

Both are located in the Sierra Nevada foothills. Health officials in each county attested that they have had little local impact from the pandemic.

Gov. Gavin Newsom on Tuesday was expected to outline new areas that can begin reopening with less restrictions, such as allowing restaurants to begin seating customers instead of only offering take-out food.

The state will allow counties to go beyond the state's plan, but only if they meet strict standards that include no coronavirus-related deaths and no more than one confirmed case per 10,000 residents in the past two weeks.

Newsom also said his administration has discussed plans with 19 counties, with nine others scheduled. Some could have their plans approved by Tuesday. But it's been difficult for some more populated counties to meet those state standards.

The developments come as many local governments continue pushing for a swifter reopening, and as restaurants rushed to prepare for serving fewer customers at tables separated to minimize the chance of spreading the coronavirus.

Many restaurants already are practicing safety procedures they anticipate will be required once they open to sit-down dining for the first time in two months.

Raechel Kadoya, owner of Soichi Sushi in San Diego, says she spent about $3,000 for a new air purification system using ultraviolet light and filters. The restaurant also now has custom shield guards between the sushi bar patrons and the chef. The kitchen staff wear masks.

"We work in the food industry so safety, cleanliness, that's top of the list," she said. "We're thinking on our own, without guidelines, about what we can do to make it safer."

Other restaurants are doubling down on sanitizing seats, surfaces and doorknobs and removing tables to ensure social distancing.

Reopening restaurants is likely to be a disjointed process, with those in rural areas opening first, and eateries in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other urban areas remaining closed longer.

The California Restaurant Association has drafted recommendations that include limiting tables to no more than 10 people. Salad bars, buffets and shared bread baskets would be out.

In the Los Angeles suburb of Duarte, Leon Avakian says he'd like to reopen by June — he only just broke even in April after the closure began to bite. Avakin said he expects new safety guidelines to be in force for a year or more, or until a vaccine is developed.

"I'm a pharmacist by training and I've worked in the health field for about 20 years," he said. "I understand that these changes are necessary."

Depending on their size, restaurateurs are hoping that they can retain 25% or 50% or more of their old seating capacity. However, the association hoped the state would avoid setting an across-the-board percentage limit on occupancy.

"Our revenue is less than 20% of normal. We're barely able to keep our head above water," said Richard Yates, co-owner of Opal Restaurant & Bar in Santa Barbara.

But it's not all about money, he said. Takeout customers can get lemongrass crusted fresh salmon or shredded phyllo-wrapped tiger prawn but they can't get the dining experience "eating them in a little box at home," Yates said. "Being a full-service restaurant, it's in our blood to have full contact with people."

Restaurant reopenings have become symbolic of the thorny problems of trying to jump-start the economy. Under Newsom's reopening plan, it could be weeks or even a month before restaurant dining rooms are allowed to reopen.

But Yuba and Sutter counties in Northern California, which have had few virus cases, already have defied the governor by allowing dine-in restaurants to reopen, along with hair salons and gyms.

More than two dozen counties have asked for permission to loosen their stay-at-home orders beyond what the state allows, Newsom said Monday, promising a speedy review.

San Diego County said in its letter to Newsom Monday that it was requesting "autonomy to reopen additional economic sectors based on clear, consistent, and achievable metrics." It said some criteria, such as no COVID-19 deaths for 14 days, were unrealistic for large counties.

The county cited sustained progress in responding to the outbreak and extensive planning by business and labor leaders in creating plans for safely reopening their sectors.

California has more than 68,000 confirmed coronavirus cases and more than 2,700 deaths, according to data compiled by Johns Hopkins University. The number of infections is thought to be far higher because of a shortage of testing.

For most people, the new coronavirus causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness, including pneumonia and death.

be permitted to lie or sit on the beach, bike or play sports. Beach parking lots, bike paths, piers and boardwalks throughout the county will remain closed.

The county Department of Public Health confirmed on Tuesday 45 new deaths and 961 new cases of COVID-19. About 1,700 people are hospitalized, a number that had remained steady for the last two weeks.

To date, Public Health has identified 33,180 positive cases of COVID-19 across all areas of L.A. County and a total of 1,613 deaths. More than 250,000 people have been tested and 11% have tested positive.

Ferrer said Monday that the county is basing decisions regarding reopening on data such as infection and mortality rates and the ability of local hospitals to accommodate patients. Because coronavirus has continued to spread in L.A. County while other parts of the state have seen a drop in cases and deaths, the county will not reopen businesses and public spaces as soon as Gov. Gavin Newsom eases statewide restrictions.

"Literally half the cases and half the deaths are here in L.A. County right now, so we have to pay a lot of attention to what's going on in our own county," she said. "We're the largest county, we have the highest density areas in the county, we have the most people in the county, we have the most businesses in the county and we have some conditions that create more risk in terms of our vulnerable populations."

Santa Monica had 212 confirmed cases of coronavirus as of Tuesday, an increase of more than 11% over the last week. Confirmed cases in all of L.A. County increased 19% over the same period.

Twelve Santa Monica residents have died from COVID-19, according to a county data dashboard. The city's death rate adjusted for age distribution is 9.7 per 100,000 people.

Malibu's adjusted death rate is 4.5, Culver City's is 5.4, West Hollywood's is 7.3 and Beverly Hills' is 7.8.

As of Monday, there were 140 confirmed cases and 19 deaths among residents and staff at six Santa Monica nursing homes and assisted living facilities. It is unknown how many permanently live in Santa Monica and are therefore included in the city's official tally of cases and deaths.

Beachwood Post-Acute & Rehab, the Rehabilitation Center of Santa Monica and Ocean Pointe Healthcare Center continue to report the largest outbreaks.

connection with many residents throughout the Westside, Executive & Artistic Director Josephine Moerschel said in an interview Monday.

To celebrate all of the successes and thank the community for its role in their growth, Elemental Music will hold a Virtual 10th Anniversary Celebration on Facebook Live this Saturday at 6 p.m. that'll feature a number of "live" performances and special activities. And Moerschel invites all of Santa Monica to join in on the fun.

"We have only been able to grow from serving 25 to that first year to now having serviced over 2,000 students in our programs because of our incredible teachers as well as the incredible support that we receive from our community and donor base, who all make it possible for us to do the work that we do," Moerschel said, detailing how the program was started by a Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District teacher and has continued to receive help from SMMUSD's educators throughout the decade. "Bit by bit, we started to hear from parents of wind players and singers because we found there was a huge interest in the community to find quality, after-school ensemble programs that kept kids excited about making music with one another."

"Over the last 10 years, we've expanded to also have a wind ensemble for elementary school kids, an elemental band, choral program and several levels of guitar ensembles for classical guitar," along with a full orchestra program for middle-schoolers, Moerschel added. "So, it has become a really unique experience for kids."

Two values that Elemental Music always tries to promote through its programs are community and grit, "but everything always centers back to the high-quality instruction because that's always been a very, very key part of what we do," Moerschel said.

And while Saturday's celebration is mainly to honor those instructors, donors and community members who have made the nonprofit's work possible, the Facebook Live party also aims to recognize the hardworking amateur musicians who are moving on without a traditional graduation ceremony.

"We've got a lovely tribute that (we've) put together for our graduating eighth graders from the middle school program, because I know that many — not only our — eighth graders and high school and college seniors around the country are mourning the loss of having those milestones to celebrate," Moerschel said. "So we wanted to put a little something together to commemorate their successes over the last few years, because quite a few of them have been with us since they were in our elementary programs."

More information on the upcoming anniversary party can be found by visiting facebook.com/ElementalMusicSM/live, according to event organizers. A Facebook account is not needed to stream the celebration activities.

It was Claudia Seizer, Santa Monica Malibu PTA Council President, who originally said, "Council feels that it is ultimately the work of the District to ensure that all parents understand the nuances of these reductions to our teaching staff," during the board meeting.

Save the beach Maintenance workers

EDITOR:

I understand the City must eliminate jobs in the face of an economic crisis, but I was disheartened to see the Council give a new city manager cart blanche to terminate hundreds of city workers, including several essential beach maintenance assistants who have cleaned our Ocean Park beach bathrooms and lifeguard stations for 13-20 years respectively and are essential workers, experienced and knowledgeable in protecting our public health when thousands descend —and they will come again soon — on our beaches.

I am perplexed as to why the City is sending lay-off notices to this group of African American workers, who for years were exploited, misclassified "as needed"—denied sick pay and other benefits, though they worked full time—to give them 30 days before the City cuts off their health benefits in a pandemic ravaging hearts and lungs.

Who will replace these beach maintenance assistants, among the city's lowest paid workers? Why are they being replaced at all—surely sanitation is not the place to cut in the best of times, let alone the worst.

To rub salt in the wound, the city manager's budget recommendations, rubber stamped by our council with the exception of member Ana Marie Hara, calls for the elimination of worker classifications, so that once this pandemic is over it will be that much harder for any of the terminated workers, most of them lower paid employees, not those with six-digit salaries and hefty pensions, to be rehired for their job—perhaps renamed under a new classification in a bizarre move that belies harmonious labor relations.

Classification is an academic sounding word, but for those who hose down the harmful algae in the beach showers and scrub the bathroom walls, it is much more than that, for the classification "beach maintenance assistant" was created as redress for the years our city took advantage of these workers, misclassifying them, denying them gloves and masks when using strong chemicals, denying them the customary city-issued jackets in the hard winter rain.

I don't know what to say to these workers who cannot believe our city leaders would cast aside the most experienced public health workers on our beaches. They are dumbfounded and so am I.

Save our beach maintenance assistants. Protect our public health.

Where's Joe Friday When We Need Him?

1 + 1 = 3 ...OR, 1? ...OR, 10,000?

Yes it does seem like this country has lost its mind lately, and Santa Monica too. As I write this some local Neanderthal on Nextdoor social media assured/lectured a person concerned over the lack of precautions being taken at a SM-adjacent supermarket — "You do know that Covid is not as threatening as they thought, right? It's literally milder than a flu. The flu kills more people. Look into it..."

Apparently our lovable Neanderthal Nextdoor did not look into it, or he's a troll and doesn't care, just trying to infect with disinformation, thank you.

Good God. 85,000 dead in two months and it's likely to get worse. COVID-19 quickly zoomed past cancer and heart disease to become the number one killer in the U.S. Influenza barely made the Top 10. But, take heart. His Nextdoor neighbors, including a nurse, jumped all over him. But if you don't see any blowback on stuff like this, don't fret. I think a lot of people, like me, have just given up responding to stuff like this. It's a losing proposition.

I used to think wrong information, especially if it was dangerous, had to be set straight. But now I have more confidence in my fellow humans. Sure, we've all been seeing a lot of the most ridiculously ignorant pronouncements since the Salem witch trials. But we have to remind ourselves that it's still a small band of very vocal know-nothings.

And then there are those who seem to have found a new hobby, a new way to amuse themselves. Well, that's fine until it starts to kill people, right, Gen. Bone Spurs Draft Dodger? Pop those hydroxychloroquine tabs and wash 'em down with a good disinfectant. A week ago some simian was delivering a similar message on FB as the nextdoor nincompoop but trotted out impressive medical credentials, including as a research immunologist currently at USC. I did a quick check and found out he was indeed a doctor — a Beverly Hills ophthalmologist. So please, if it sounds like baloney, just make yourself a sandwich, lots of mayo, and go about your business. I can't for the life of me explain all this, it's pathetic and indeed dangerous, but I'm done stressing or participating.

BYE BYE RESIDOCRACY

And speaking of such: I'm also done with the Residocracy page, as of right now. It has changed, just steaming now with conspiracy, hatred, lies and misinformation, voodoo, vile name calling, bubonic plague, alt right's alright, gun lovers, bozos, bullies, Trumpers and like-minded libertarians, spiders and snakes, disease and desolation, and the lovely please catch a virus and drop dead old sick people, I need my freedom and a haircut crowd.

I'm not proud to admit I've been thinking about this for quite a while but was seduced by the more than 3,300 sets of eyes on that page for my columns, which I posted there each week. But you can be judged by the company you keep, so I'm bailing. I was a member at the very beginning. Gave money. A promise has just been made there to limit discussions to local issues only. If that does really happen, and those discussions have a far more civil tenor than they have had, I might go back. Not holding my breath, though.

SOCIAL MEDIA AMPLIFIES INSANITY

Spreads it and gives it some credence where there is none. So does a 24-hour news cycle. When you say all the "lamestream" media are the same, everybody lies, you're wrong and you have to learn two new concepts: degree, and false equivalency.

Who can you trust? Well, not some dude on youtube, that's for sure. But how many will take that and run with it? These are annoying times.

These folks will vote, though, many of them. Four more years of baby cakes and we could lose our 250-year-old democracy. Seriously. But I'm optimistic because beyond all the noise is that majority that's smarter than that. Thing is, they have to vote, not stay home as usual. They will. And they have to start speaking up now, especially here in Santa Monica.

As I pointed out last week, a lot of decisions are being made today, directions chosen, for the future of this broken little city. You can be part of it, you have the best opportunity in history to make a big difference. Or you can stay silent, but I don't want to hear from you when you hate the future you let others choose for you.

Here's a very good start. Ask to be appointed to the Economic Recovery Task Force, by writing to our Deputy City Manager Anuj Gupta (anuj.gupta@smgov.net). Find out a little more about it and then tell him why you should be on it. Saving the historic Carnegie Ocean Park Library by cutting an extra 10-20 percent off some top City salaries would be good enough for me. But he may want to know a little more.

ONE LAST NOTE: MASKS

I was so proud of Santa Monicans six weeks ago. I observed that 80-90 percent of people out for exercise were wearing masks. Now? Under 20 per cent, I'd say, and dropping every day. You're not being cavalier with your life, you do know that? You're risking my life, and anyone else and their family who are also out for exercise. But I understand, because some dude on youtube said you don't need to.

for coronavirus in March, drivers have been given masks, gloves and hand sanitizer, and buses are being disinfected each day.

The agency aims to circulate enough buses to ensure that riders can occupy every other seat, which would result in a maximum load of 19 customers in 40-foot buses and 29 customers in 60-foot buses.

BBB is also reducing service hours for MODE, its ridehailing program for seniors and people with disabilities. For the time being, the service will be available Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

King said demand for MODE has fallen dramatically as customers self-isolate at home. The number of rides per month the service provides fell from 6,000 last fall to about 800 in April, he said.

Although the overall cost of MODE has decreased, the price per ride has increased since shared rides were suspended to allow for physical distancing. King said BBB is evaluating how to bring down the program's fixed costs.

The agency's decision to suspend bus fares in late March so riders could board buses through the back door without the risk of infecting drivers was a necessary public health measure that has put BBB in a tricky financial position.

BBB collected $11.4 million in fares last year, representing 15% of its revenue, according to the agency's financial statements. Most of its revenue comes from regional and state sales tax.

Continuing to suspend fares through June would result in a $2 to $4 million deficit through the end of this fiscal year, King said. BBB is planning to cut $17.3 million from its $102 million annual budget, including 46.3 full-time equivalent positions.

King said BBB will begin collecting fares again when public health experts indicate it is safe to do so and will ask riders to pay with their TAP cards or phones rather than cash.

"We're looking at what the rest of the (transit) industry is going to do to be able to collect fares, and obviously we won't start collecting fares until we're comfortable with the medical advice we receive," he said.

BBB plans to continue a long-term plan to replace its fleet with carbon-neutral buses by 2030, King said.

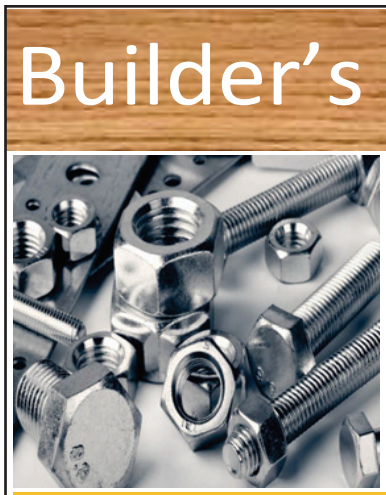

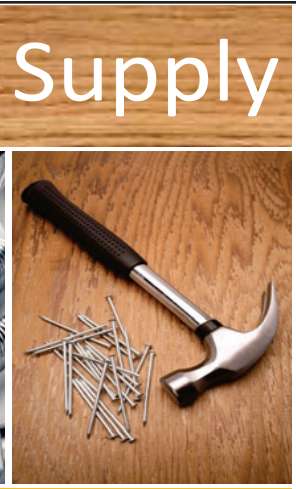

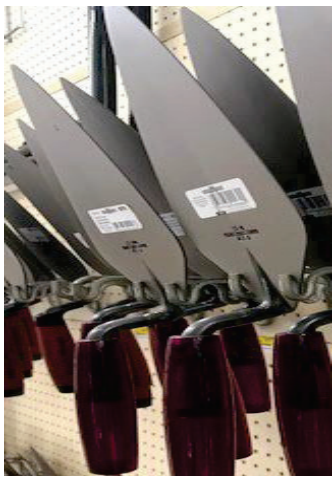

Aging buses will continue to be replaced with battery-powered buses, which cost about $800,000 each and are funded through grants and sales tax. The delivery of 18 buses City Council approved last October will be delayed six months to late 2021 because the plant manufacturing them has temporarily closed, he said.

King said he projects that BBB will restore 80% of its typical weekday service a year from now.

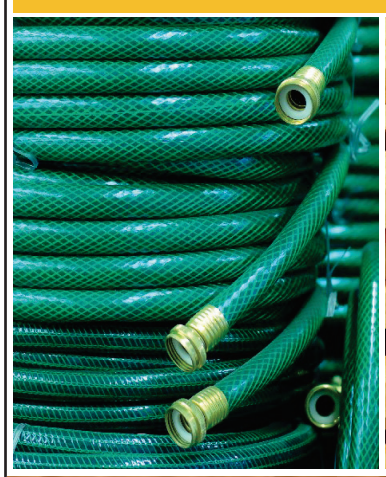

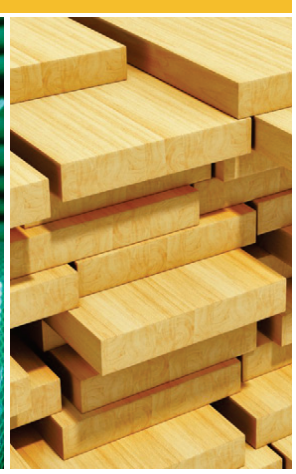

"It all hinges on what happens in the business community and whether we have the appropriate financial resources from the county and the state," he said. "We'll have some challenges financially, just like everyone else, but we're very optimistic about the economic recovery in Santa Monica and Los Angeles."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (MAY 13)

After feeling you were at the whim of unforeseen circumstances, you'll get back into the driver's seat, where you belong. You'll be a leader who brings those around you into a state of harmony and production. Style innovations make a huge difference, as they represent an attitude and approach that wins you love and other gains. Libra and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 25, 3, 38 and 10.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll be fixing something. There are those around you who can't admit that the thing is broken. Ignore them; they'll be of little help. Fix quietly while keeping your eyes peeled for allies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Real love moves freely between people. If the current only goes one direction, it's not real love. It's just positioning, and the person downstream will continue to get all the benefit.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). People will come to you. You won't necessarily have the answers, though you will have the empathy to make them feel understood, and the ability to convincingly articulate that "this, too, shall pass."

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Feeling good is the wellspring from which all other felicity will flow. So anything you do to bring health, excellent vibes, positive thinking and levity to your spirit will sunny up the whole scene.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Rejection is a tough feeling to give or get. Luckily, today it is totally avoidable. Furthermore, you are tolerant of those who believe differently than you, because you know that a person is more than the beliefs they hold.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). No matter your area of focus, the desire to communicate with greater truth and love will allow you to break open the barriers that were keeping you stuck in an unsatisfying dynamic.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You want to master your own mind and habits, which seems like it would be the easiest thing in the world to do but instead ranks among the hardest things.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Sure, you generally know what you want right away. But the methodical weighing of the facts is still necessary. The best answers will come when you refuse to give in entirely to the part of you that makes snap decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Tell yourself what you need to hear to move in the direction you want to go. It's funny that you can manipulate yourself in this way, but you may as well use the quirks of humanity to your advantage!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The paradox of wanting better is its seed of malcontent. Try a different approach. Try the seeds of gratitude by maintaining a deep appreciation of your circumstance. It only grows richer from there.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Author Nassim Nicholas Taleb claimed: "Mild success can be explainable by skills and labor. Wild success is attributable to variance." Which success is the most satisfying, though? For you, it's the one you work for.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You will seize the opportunity to inhabit, ever so briefly, the experience of another person. You have your empathy to thank. Empathy is always worth developing. It is the skill that allows you to be more people than one.
