NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Prosecutors in Chicago are proceeding with the case against Howard Morgan for allegedly shooting at a police officer, although Morgan denies it, but what was clear was that in returning fire, police shots hit Morgan 25 times (from which he is recovering satisfactorily, according to a January WMAQ-TV story). Also awesome was the endurance of a 35-year-old man in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., who, according to a February Poughkeepsie Journal report, had just been a gunshot victim for the fourth time in the same housing complex. (The first and fourth incidents involved multiple wounds.)

Immigration debate back on Capitol Hill

ALEX VEIGA
AP Business Writer

LOS ANGELES — The debate over immigration reform resumes on Capitol Hill this week — so brace for a barrage of conflicting claims over whether the millions of people here illegally drain or fill the government’s wallet.

Illegal immigrants cost $20 billion each year in education, health care and other public services. They contribute more than $7 billion annually in Social Security taxes for benefits they’ll never claim.

Those are just some of the statistics that lawmakers and interest groups from both sides will trot out starting Monday when the Senate begins discussing what would be the most sweeping immigration reform legislation in 20 years.

Do illegal immigrants take more than they contribute? Or is it the other way around?

Despite volumes of studies cited by both sides, no one knows for sure.

And answers often reflect the opinions of who’s talking as much as the reality of illegal immigrants in the United States today, according to academics who study the issue.

“Because of the politically charged nature of this, people

CLOVER PARK — Those who failed to show here this past Saturday missed out on the public party of the year, as hundreds joined together to celebrate the rich history, culture and diversity of Santa Monica — all without having to pay admission.

Just about every square inch of grass at Clover Park was covered with blankets as families from the area and as far away as Ventura and Orange counties stretched out in the sun to soak in the 2006 Santa Monica Festival, an $80,000, solar-powered bash funded by City Hall — with a hand from corporate sponsors — to bring communities together and bask in everything that is Santa Monica.

“The festival is really a wonderful way for people who live in Santa Monica to learn more about the city,

SUNSET PARK — When it comes to cruising up the coast on one of his more than 20 custom, handmade motorcycles, director/master builder Scott Gillen appears the ultimate easy rider.

Like Henry Fonda and Dennis Hopper in the feature film of the same name, Gillen loves nothing more than taking a leisurely ride with a buddy up to Point Mugu, stopping for some lunch, perhaps engaging in a conversation with a drunk lawyer who looks oddly like Jack Nicholson, and then cruising back to his home in Santa Monica, all the while never feeling the need to push the limits.

He’s still got that edge, with his raw vocabulary, dark sunglasses, tattered jeans and intimidating dagger medallion hanging from his neck, but even by his own admission, Gillen isn’t as wild as he used to be.

Culturally diverse entertainment will include music and dance performances, as well as a puppet show.

Children will be able to spend time in the "Flower Fairy Tea House" while grownups peruse the many treasures for the silent auction.

There are over 300 items donated by families and community merchants, ranging from travel options, sporting events to the school's homemade class baskets.

Ocean Charter School is a community of families and educators using teaching methods intended to nurture and educate children in a multi-cultural, urban environment. The Q Line

PROUDLY BROUGHT TO YOU BY

Even if you got 'em ...
City staffers are presently studying the feasibility of banning smoking entirely from the bustling Third Street Promenade. Following measures that nixed cigarettes and the like from the city's beaches, parks and pier, a total ban would preclude all smokers from lighting up anywhere on the thoroughfare. Violators could face up to $750 in fines. So this week, Q-Line wants to know:
Should Santa Monica follow the city of Calabasas' lead and ban smoking from all public places — sidewalks, streets, rooftop decks?
Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your responses in the weekend edition.

Feeling disconnected at new library

Editor:

The new library is a nice combination of utility and modern design and it's big enough for all kinds of people. The designers deserve some credit, but I think the city still has a problem with not paying attention to what people want. The hours seem to be designed to fit employee schedules rather than need. I was there on a Friday afternoon and it was packed right before closing. Many people go downtown on the weekend. They could stay open later simply by shifting some schedules around. I also have doubts about the so-called environmental design. There are about 100 computers running constantly that are available for library searches only. These computers do not have internet access, so nobody uses them. They are basically decorations that use enough electricity to run a good sized corporation. Meanwhile, the computers with internet connections are booked up, and have insulting restrictions. I simply wanted to check something for a minute and it was a big hassle. Why can't they connect all the computers to the internet? You can bring your own laptop, but why bother with all the computers they have?

6-6-06 a sign of the times

Editor:

Santa Monica attorney Cliff Nichols, in his column (SMDP, May 10, page 4), defines the "6-6-06" billboards as a warning of the anti-Christ.

I believe that they boast a more pedestrian, less dramatic message. They remind voters that June 6, 2006 is the date of the California Primary election. Be sure to vote.

Smoking bans a healthy trend

Editor:

Thank you for your excellent coverage of the public smoking issue ("The Promenade's final drag?," SMDP, May 10, page 1). I feel the need to enlighten Vikki Ridley, a smoker from London now working on the promenade. Ms. Ridley is quoted as saying that "in England, you can still smoke freely," suggesting that Santa Monica is out of touch with the rest of the world in taking steps to protect nonsmokers from toxic secondhand smoke.

It appears as if Ms. Ridley has not been back to England lately. In February of this year, the British Parliament approved a ban of smoking in pubs, bars, restaurants and workplaces. Polls showed over 70 percent of people in Britain, where tobacco accounts for 114,000 deaths a year, supported that ban. England followed Ireland, which approved a similar ban in 2004, as did Scotland in 2005. Additionally, England has a major beach that went smoke-free (Bournemouth) long before any California city even considered such a ban.

The point is that this is a healthy global trend, with countries on every continent following the lead of Santa Monica and other cities across California. Tourism was up 3.2 percent in Ireland the year that their ban was implemented, and tourists will not turn away from visiting Santa Monica because of a smoking ban in crowded outdoor spaces. It will only make our city a more beautiful and healthy place to visit.

SMC Trustee's proposition is lesson in politics for kids

The "bad idea of the year" comes from Nancy Greenstein, chair of the Santa Monica College Board of Trustees.

At last Monday's Board of Trustees meeting, she introduced a recommendation directing staff to enter into discussions with the YWCA of Santa Monica and the city of Santa Monica to consider partnership on a project that "may include a provision of housing for the YWCA's program for individuals over 18 years of age who have been in foster care."

SMC acquired the property at 14th Street and Pico Boulevard six years ago as a site for a proposed literacy center. The center was never built and the college is just holding onto the land at the moment. Greenstein proposed that the vacant lot be developed to "serve the community through Santa Monica College and the YWCA," which is next door.

Greenstein was a longtime co-chair of the politically powerful Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR). SMRR's No. 1 goal is the creation of affordable housing. So it's not surprising to see even former SMRR leaders still push the organization's agenda on any area of governance with the resources and clout necessary to implement their programs.

Housing for young adults who've been in foster care is just one of many scenarios that could result from the college becoming a co-developer of property. Any proposal involving housing would likely name City Hall as a source of funding and a third party, in this case the YWCA, as manager or operator of whatever is created.

Although other possibilities such as housing for foreign students were mentioned during discussion, the specific mention of the YWCA's program in Greenstein's recommendation is a strong indication of where this is really going. And, especially after City Councilman Richard Bloom had already sent a letter to the Trustees supporting her suggestion.

The college Board of Trustees, by unanimously voting for this, apparently doesn't realize that SMC's mission is education, not housing. I think it's wholly inappropriate for the college to be involved in non-educational ventures or take on the responsibility and liability of the housing business unless it's directly related to its academic purpose.

I think the YWCA's desire to help young men and women over 18 who've been in foster care is admirable. However, I just don't think the college should take on the roll of partner in this venture.

Creating more affordable housing has become an obsession with the venerable SMRR organization. They'll look under every rock and stone to find someone to help them create more of it. By using their considerable power and control of the City Council, Santa Monica/Malibu Board of Education and the College Board of Trustees, SMRR's agenda takes precedent over real needs which is exactly why you have SMC looking into housing former foster care clients.

What next? SMRR leaders brokering deals with the school district partnering on apartments for the homeless or foreign nationals? How about nonprofits and foundations partnering with City Hall to house "underpaid" hotel employees, SMRR campaign workers or impoverished young adults who can't make it on their own? You know they would if they could.

It's all just more development in a city where most people would rather see less development. Just take a look at the oversized buildings going up at Main and Pacific streets, the 1500 block of Broadway and 26th and Berkeley streets — both on Santa Monica Boulevard. That's just four low-income housing projects with hundreds of units currently under construction by city-affiliated affordable housing provider Community Corp. of Santa Monica.

SMRR's fixation and providing as much affordable housing as possible is completely out of control. Maybe it's time to step back and ask, "How much is too much?"

And doesn't this open the door for additional SMC development and expansion which many residents oppose, except of course when it's low-income housing?

Greenstein's suggestion does nothing to enhance the college as an academic institution. Although it would make more sense if it were faculty or student housing or even housing for low-income Santa Monica seniors that could be part of, for example, a student mentoring program.

SMC partnering in nonacademic housing is almost as dumb as suggesting that CCSM should conduct math, history and literature classes.

Congress resumes wrestling with immigration reforms are going to cherry-pick their results," said V. Joseph Hotz, a labor economist at the University of California, Los Angeles, who doesn't believe a definitive study is possible.

One reason is the nature of the population in question.

"Anything that is illegal, the data is going to be suspect," said Vernon Briggs, a labor economist at Cornell University who has been studying immigration issues for 40 years.

That won't stop Congress from wrestling with that bottom line and other issues.

Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., has said he is committed to passing immigration reform legislation by Memorial Day. The bill up for debate would include additional border security, a new guest worker program and provisions opening the way to eventual citizenship for many of illegal immigrants in the country.

The House passed a bill late last year that would criminalize illegal immigrants and those who offer them assistance.

Pressure to act quickly has intensified. A majority of Americans now cite anxiety over immigration as one of the most important problems facing the nation, according to a recent poll by The Associated Press and Ipsos.

Yet compiling hard data has been difficult.

Even the number of illegal immigrants in the country is debated. The generally accepted figure is about 11 million, but some researchers peg the number as high as 20 million.

In diverse areas such as Los Angeles, illegal immigrants can rent an apartment and open a checking account with little more than an ID from their home country. That kind of anonymity hampers researchers trying to tally how many are here — and how much they cost in public services.

That uncertainty hasn't stopped advocates on both sides from citing research that seems to make their case.

To fill in the blanks, researchers often assume the bulk of illegal immigrants have little or no formal education or skills; are likely to live at or below the poverty level; contribute little in the form of taxes; and take advantage of public services.

"You don't know whether a guy who is loading boxes on a truck or onto a ship on the docks pays his taxes or not. But you know what that worker means as a cog on the economic wheel."

BENJAMIN JOHNSON
DIRECTOR, IMMIGRATION POLICY CENTER

One report both sides cite as one of the most definitive is nearly a decade old. In 1997, the National Research Council concluded that all immigrants — not just those here illegally — had a negative fiscal impact on state and local services but at the federal level received less in services than they paid in taxes.

In California, the state with the highest population of foreign-born residents, citizen households were saddled with an annual tax burden of $1,178 from the use of public services by immigrants, according to the study.

Pro-immigrant groups counter that whatever the answer — whether immigrants pay more in taxes than they use in services or the other way around — the economic importance of illegal immigrants is undeniable.

"You don't know whether a guy who is loading boxes on a truck or onto a ship on the docks pays his taxes or not," said Benjamin Johnson, director of the Washington-based Immigration Policy Center, which calls itself nonpartisan but pro-immigrant. "But you know what that worker means as a cog on the economic wheel."

Occasional traffic slowdown at six locations: Ocean Avenue from Colorado Avenue to Pico Boulevard; Ocean Avenue from Adelaide Drive to Montana Avenue; Georgina Avenue from Ocean Avenue to Fourth Street; Palisades Avenue from Ocean Avenue to Fourth Street; Wilshire Boulevard from Yale Street to Centinela Avenue. The PCH onramp will be reduced to one lane.

Sidewalk, driveway, curb and gutter repairs begin on Ozone Street from Lincoln Boulevard to the end; on Marine Street from Lincoln Boulevard to 17th Street; on Paula from Marine streets to the end; on Linda from Marine streets to the end; on Glenn from Marine to Ashland streets; on Prospect from Marine to the end; on Steiner from Glenn to 16th Street; on 26th St. from Pearl to the end; on 21st Street from Pico Boulevard to Pearl; on Pearl from Cloverfield Boulevard to 14th Street; on 14th Street from Pico Boulevard to Ashland; various locations along Cloverfield Boulevard; on Margaret from Marine to the end; on 11th Street from Marine to Ozone; and the closure to the westbound lane on Airport Avenue from Donald Douglas Loop South to 23rd Street. There will lane closures around work posted as necessary.

Billy the Kid stirring up trouble in Arizona again

BY AMANDA LEE MYERS
 Associated Press Writer

PRESCOTT, Ariz. — More than 100 years after his death, Billy the Kid can still stir up a heap of trouble.

Two men on a quest to find where the outlaw turned American legend is buried could face time in the pokey for unearthing remains last May in this central Arizona community.

Tom Sullivan, former sheriff of Lincoln County, N.M., and Steve Sederwall, former mayor of Capitan, N.M., exhumed a man who was buried in Prescott nearly 70 years ago. John Miller had claimed to be William Bonney, aka Billy the Kid.

Authorities currently are considering whether to charge Sullivan and Sederwall with a felony for removing some remains of Miller and of another man buried in an unmarked grave next to him.

“This is a simple, straightforward, open-and-shut grave-robbing case,” said David Snell, a Billy the Kid junkie from Tucson.

In March, Snell wrote a letter to Yavapai County Attorney Sheila Polk that sparked a police investigation into the exhumation. In the letter, he called unearthing the graves a “sordid and reprehensible affair.”

He argued that Sullivan and Sederwall acted inappropriately because they didn’t have a permit or court order to dig up the remains or permission to take samples from the second grave.

Sullivan and Sederwall disagree.

“I’m confident we didn’t do anything wrong in Arizona,” Sullivan said. “When you commit a crime, you have to have put some wheels on the frame, step back and look at it and it just starts to develop. It really has a lot to do with who you’re working with. If you don’t have a good relationship, then differences lead to fighting and you never get anything done. It’s really not fun doing it by yourself. There’s no one around to tell you how bitchin’ that looks. It’s just real fun to have that back-and-forth.”

Why open a garage in Santa Monica?

“Because I live close and it’s convenient. I’m building a home in Malibu right now, but during the construction my family and I are living here in Santa Monica. It’s a convenient middle ground for our crew.”

Do you sell bikes?

“No. My wife wishes I would, but I don’t.”

What advice can you give to drivers about motorcycle riders?

“There’s some disrespectful drivers out there. When they see a bike they think ‘get out of my way. I’m in a car, you’re on a bike.’ If you’re riding the white line, some will try to cut you off because you don’t belong there in the first place. After they hit you they freak out. I’ve never been down on a bike, thank God, knock on wood. But there are a lot of disrespectful drivers out there, which is why I try not to drive in the city or in heavy traffic. Sometimes, if there’s bad traffic, I’ll just park to the side and get off the bike. I don’t really know about advice to drivers, but for riders, I would say, if you get intent. There’s certainly no intent to be grave-robbers.”

Sullivan and Sederwall have been hunting for the Kid’s bones since 2003.

They began their very public quest in Fort Sumner, N.M., where history says the Kid was buried after then-Lincoln County Sheriff Pat Garrett gunned him down in 1881.

But at least two men — Miller and Ollie “Brushy Bill” Roberts of Texas — claimed prior to their deaths that they were Billy the Kid. Their stories presuppose that Garrett killed the wrong man in Fort Sumner and lied about it.

After more than a year of fighting to get permission to unearth the Fort Sumner grave, Sullivan and Sederwall dropped their request and decided to begin the process of elimination in Arizona. They now have a Dallas lab comparing DNA from the bones they dug up to blood found on a bench on which Sullivan believes the Kid’s body laid.

Sullivan expects the results in the next couple of months. Sullivan said there are also plans to unearth the grave of “Brushy Bill.”

Historians have called the quest to unearth Billy’s remains ludicrous and say it’s an impossibility that Miller will turn out to be the Kid.

near and asshole, just get away. You’re not going to win that battle. They’re a big hunk of metal and you’re exposed. One wrong move and you’re f---ed.”

So you do the show to help finance this hobby?

“Well, it’s more of a drug than a hobby. You know, we do bikes for the show for back-ground. The shop has to have some integrity for people to buy into the show. If we don’t build bikes then what we say doesn’t stand for anything. The show has to have integrity. This year, I’m driving these guys on the show. Before, we had other builders. We’ve produced some incredible bikes so people know I have an eye for design and they’ll listen to me. I’m not going to bulls---t someone if there’s something I don’t know.”

You’ve done stunts, directed, produced your own show, opened your own garage. What’s your next business venture?

“I don’t do anything for business. We lose our ass on everything. I make s--t. That’s what I do. I won’t do a commercial job that I don’t enjoy and I won’t do anything that doesn’t involve some kind of creativity of some sort. I get bored easily. Sometimes I’ll get offered projects with a lot of money in it, but there’s no interest in it for me. I just can’t do something I’m not interested in. Personally, I don’t want to do anything vanilla. It’s got to be edgy, it’s got to be somewhat extreme. I’m a very aggressive shooter so I shoot very, very aggressive film, like to be on the edge. I’ve found in the last couple of years, that I’m sticking strictly to those things that interest me, which is why I’ve specialized in the automotive arena. I understand cars and what cars can do.”

Bush's constitutional power grab draws criticism

BY TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush has made broad use of his executive powers: authorizing warrantless wiretaps, collecting telephone records on millions of Americans, holding suspected terrorists overseas without legal protections. His administration even is considering using the military to patrol the U.S. border.

Congress is on notice from the president that he will not enforce parts of legislation he believes interfere with his constitutional authority.

These are extraordinary times, for sure, and the president says he is acting to safeguard the country. But Democrats and some Republicans, along with human rights activists and legal scholars, suggest Bush has gone too far in stretching presidential powers.

"I do think the president has pushed the envelope," said Georgetown University political scientist Stephen J. Wayne. "He seems so determined for another act of terrorism not to occur on his watch that he has forgotten the constitutional protections that most Americans value as highly as they value their security."

Bush is using a variety of techniques and strategies to maximize his power — at the expense of Congress, some say. It's a course, critics suggest, that both he and Vice President Dick Cheney have pursued since they took office in January 2001.

Administration officials insist they have acted within constitutional limits, citing added flexibility that comes during a time of war.

The disclosure last week that the National Security Agency is building a data base of domestic telephone numbers has touched off an intense debate about whether the administration and phone companies are undermining people's privacy rights.

Expressions of concern came from some prominent Republicans, including House Majority Leader John Boehner, R-Ohio, and added to earlier questions about the NSA's domestic eavesdropping program.

These once-covert programs pose potential trouble for the president's nomination of Air Force Gen. Michael Hayden to be CIA director. Hayden oversaw both programs as NSA director from 1999-2005.

"Everything that the agency has done has been lawful," Hayden asserted last week as he visited the offices of the senators who will vote on his nomination.

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, the Republican chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, says his committee will scrutinize Hayden's role in both the NSA's phone data bank and the eavesdropping program.

Former CIA Director Stansfield Turner is among those critical of the administration's eavesdropping program and Hayden's oversight.

"I'm concerned that he had a role in wiretapping American telephones without warrants. I interpret that, if it happened, as against the law. Apparently, the president and others interpret it otherwise," said Turner, who was CIA chief in the Carter administration.

In projecting his powers widely, Bush has made extensive use of statements that accompany the signing of a bill into law. These statements claim a presidential prerogative not to enforce parts of the legislation that he deems to encroach on executive authority. He has issued hundreds of such statements.

Among provisions he has challenged is a requirement to give detailed reports to Congress about his use of the Patriot Act and about a ban on torture.

"The president apparently believes, based on a number of recent statements and policy directives, that anything he approves is automatically legal," said Stephen Cimbala, a Pennsylvania State University professor who studies national security issues.

Because Bush has not vetoed any bill sent to him, Congress has not had the chance to challenge such pre-emptive assertions of presidential authority.

"It undercuts the whole legislative process of veto and override," said James Steinberg, deputy national security adviser in the Clinton White House. He said Clinton issued such signing statements, but only rarely.

"Concentrating that kind of authority in one person is dangerous," said Steinberg, now dean of the LBJ School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas.

Presidents Abraham Lincoln and Franklin D. Roosevelt both suspended various constitutional protections, claiming all-consuming wars as the reason.

President Kennedy drew criticism for ordering the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba. He blamed the disaster on poor planning and lack of reliable intelligence from the CIA, just as the Bush White House would do when U.S. forces failed to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

President Nixon was accused of widespread abuse of the Constitution in the Watergate scandal that forced him to resign rather than face certain impeachment.

Human rights leaders continue to decry the treatment of detainees in U.S. prison camps in Afghanistan, Iraq and Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and allegations of secret CIA-run prisons in Eastern Europe.

Criticism that the administration is undermining privacy rights of Americans has failed to generate wide opposition from the general public. In an ABC-Washington Post poll taken late last week, almost two-thirds of Americans said it was acceptable for the NSA to collect phone records.

Carroll Doherty, associate director of the Pew Research Center, said in repeated polls taken since Sept. 11, 2001, "a solid plurality, around 50 percent" continues to say they would rather the government went too far in restricting civil liberties than not going far enough in protecting the country.

"There's a concern about terrorism that continues to this day. And, on balance, people are saying, 'protect us,'" said Doherty.

and it helps build a sense of community pride, as in 'This is our festival. This is what makes Santa Monica so special,'" said Hamp Simmons, City Hall's cultural affairs coordinator, who started organizing the free festival last September. "Hopefully, people leave feeling really good about their city and their community."

Those who didn't feel like sitting or eating freshly grilled tacos and ears of corn, got their kicks dancing to the wild clarinet of Bucovina Klezmer and the Afro-Brazilian rhythms of Viver Brazil Dance Company.

Others passed the time climbing a rock wall provided by sponsor REI, or found themselves browsing the scores of booths hosted by local merchants, non-profits and City Hall.

Under each white tent, representatives with bright smiles offered information on affordable housing, the arts, socially and environmentally responsible investing, protections against consumer fraud, alternative transportation, and much more.

"The festival really gives us a chance to get out into the community, let the people know what we do, and really just meet and greet the people we work for," said Elaine Polacheck, City Hall's open space manager, who helped run the Community and Cultural Affairs booth. At Polacheck's station, festival-goers were able to get information on, and view models of, two new parks under development — the Airport Park and Euclid Park.

"I love seeing the great mix of people," she remarked. "This event just shows the wonderful cross-section of people who live here. It's always a great event."

At the Santa Monica Museum of Art tent, 3-year-old Amelia Addes was with her mother, Ira Kaveladze, coloring in pictures for a book based on a character she created. After having attended last year's festival, Kaveladze, a native of Georgia in the former Soviet Union, said she had to bring her daughter back again because she had "so much fun."

"This is a really positive event, lots of nice people," Kaveladze said, adding the $80,000 price tag was worth every cent. "In this day and age, it's nice to have something like this where people can come together to feel like a part of the community. It's great for families, for children."

Over at the Santa Monica High School booth, 16-year-old sophomore Ran Zhang was with her father Yanjun, a chemist at UCLA who moved the family to Santa Monica about a year ago from Michigan. His daughter was at the festival representing Samohi artists and had several of her paintings up for display.

Zhang said he was enjoying the festivities because there was so much information readily available on so many topics, including driving, which is big on his list considering his daughter is seeking her driver's license.

"I'm finding the festival very useful," he said with a smile, as he looked towards his daughter. "The music has been fantastic, the different booths are very informative. I think this is a wonderful way to see our tax dollars at work."

Ran Zhang said she was happy that Samohi artists were offered the chance to show how they can contribute to the rest of society.

"Oftentimes the youth is left out of events like this," she said. "Many times it's just mainstream artists or professional artists, but here we really feel as if we are a part of the community. We are part of the life, the culture of Santa Monica."

Marking its 14th year, the festival was created with those goals in mind — to make everyone feel united as Santa Monicans. At first, the festival focused mainly on gang violence and the tension between African-Americans and Latinos, focusing on the two groups and their contributions to the city as well as their struggles for equality, said Simmons, who has been in charge of the festivals for more than six years. The festival was soon moved from the pier to Clover Park, where it evolved into a larger celebration of life in Santa Monica, including more cultures, different styles of art, food and dance.

The environment and conservation also began to play a greater role, Simmons said, eventually leading to the creation of the EcoZone, where people are challenged to transform unwanted waste from the city's Recycling Center into a "Next Generation" art installation, demonstrating the need to recycle while challenge a child's creativity.

"Our theme for this year, and really for the last several years, is 'Where art, culture and environment come alive,'" Simmons said. "We chose that because all three play very important roles in Santa Monica and help determine who we are."

The festival isn't just for Santa Monicans. Vicky Shapiro drove to the festival with her daughter Talia from Sherman Oaks. A friend from North Hollywood and her daughter also joined them for the afternoon, which they spent doing arts and crafts.

"I heard about this last year in 'L.A. Parent Magazine.' We came out, had an amazing time so we came back," Shapiro said. "It's a perfect day to be outside in the sun having some good fun."

While many visitors to Santa Monica complain about traffic and parking, Shapiro said she had no problems finding parking, praising the staff for a well-organized event.

"We got right off the freeway, drove straight over, no traffic, and found plenty of good parking," Shapiro said. "It was easy."

Plenty of free parking — for many Santa Monicans, that's reason enough to celebrate.
