OCEAN PARK The plan for the day was simple, just treat it like any other.

And so that is what Mae LaBorde set out to do when she got out of bed one recent morning, going about her regular daily regime, first brushing her teeth, next drinking a glass of fresh-squeezed orange juice, and then making the bed.

Except this particular morning was unlike any other, the door bell constantly buzzing, more flowers delivered, and the phone constantly ringing, another call of well wishes.

As the coffee table began filling with flowers and the stack of cards sitting on the ottoman grew taller, it soon became apparent that it was indeed LaBorde's 100th birthday.

"I feel old," the Santa Monican joked from her home last Wednesday.

But apparently not too old to go on an

Teach a man to fish: Old proverb holds up at career center

Local religious leaders teach skills to those looking for work during weak economic times

BY WILL WEISS

MID-CITY As local residents continue to feel the crunch of the national economic recession, small community groups are making big differences in the lives of those who have fallen on hard times.

One such ongoing effort, organized by Beth Shir Sholom, holds weekly meetings at its recently established career center, teaching attendees the skills and methods necessary to find a job in an unfavorable employment market.

While no two job-hunters are completely alike, one feature tied together all the attendees of Thursday's workshop at the career center: not one was under age 25.

With, among others, two finance and accounting specialists, an attorney-turned-artist, a handful of former therapists and social workers, and a man with a Ph.D. in cultural anthropology all in attendance, the mix was not one to be expected at a job-seeking tutorial, but the gamut of experience, education and training on hand was a testament to the nature of today's financial troubles.

"I'm finding that I've got lots of job offers, but they're just for commission. For anything people are willing to do for free in this economy, and it's exploitation," said Archana Daniels, a former attorney and pharmacist in Britain and a full-time mother who has recently began searching for a job to help support her family. "My husband started up his own business and so there's no extra income at home for me to retrain and find another job. In this economy you simply can't. But it's me, and everybody's looking at me at home saying, 'you should be able to get a job.' And it's so depressing."

Daniels explained that even if she had the time or money to retrain for a new position, she is unsure about her ability to compete with younger, recently-trained professionals.

Her concerns were echoed during the meeting with many attendees interrupting group discussion with shouts of "I applied for that position but was turned down because I'm overqualified," or "How can I be expected to work for free for several months for just the chance of getting hired?"

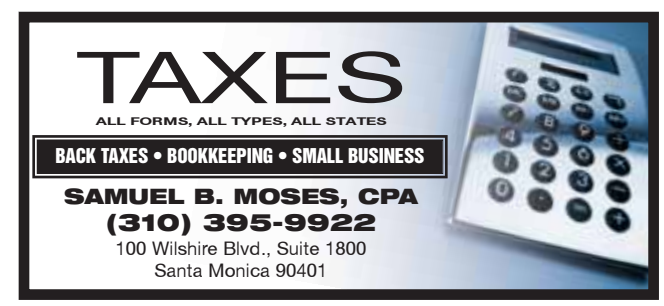

To these concerns, it seems, there are but few answers, since many were not in a position to relocate and could not afford to work at entry-level positions for little or no pay.

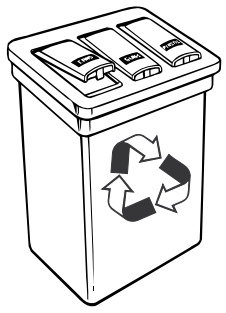

Many of those who turned out for Thursday's meeting were in need of basic

Web-savvy food trucks beckon hungry foodies

SHAYA TAYEFE MOHAJER
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES For some foodies, Tweets lead to great eats.

Twitter recently became the communique of choice for the almost cultishly popular Kogi BBQ trucks, roving Korean-style taco vendors in Los Angeles that use the 140-character, cell phone-friendly missives to alert customers to their whereabouts and menu items.

And the trend is spreading to other wheel meals as more food trucks — a fast-growing food phenomenon in major cities, especially in the West — are using the social networking site to draw customers.

While it's not clear which truck Tweeted first, the Kogi folks have shown themselves to be adept at turning those mini missives into a hugely successful marketing machine, says Jane Goldman, editor-in-chief of CHOW Magazine.

"Kogi special at the trucks and the Alibi! Grilled asparagus with Yellow Nectarines and Sesame Seeds!" read one recent Kogi Tweet.

The decision to Twitter was a practical one, says Kogi brand manager Mike Prasad. He says Kogi — which has become famous for its Korean-Mexican fusion — needed a way to inspire repeat business while solving "the problems of being a moveable venue."

"Then they find Twitter, something that's separate from the venue itself that creates a virtual home," says Prasad. "It was perfect."

Kogi's food is cheap and unique, but there's another payoff to securing this moving meal: the thrill of the chase.

Since Kogi's launch in November, hungry herds of have been following the pair of white trucks that rove the city selling tacos, burritos and other gourmet tidbits steeped in traditional Korean flavors.

In short order, the Kogi name has become recognizable to foodies around the country. No small accomplishment for a pair of taco trucks, says Kate Krader, restaurant editor for Food & Wine magazine. "That's 90 percent thanks to Twitter."

And she thinks the success of food truck Tweets likely will inspire a broader use of Twitter across the food world.

"Chefs will be Tweeting from the farmers market about the mushrooms they just picked up and will be part of their mushroom pasta that evening," she says.

For diners, there are benefits to the Tweets beyond just knowing where to find the eats.

Man convicted in UCLA body parts scheme

GREG RISLING
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES A man was convicted last week of carving up cadavers donated to UCLA's medical school and selling the parts to unsuspecting medical research companies in a $1.5 million scheme.

Jurors found Ernest Nelson, 51, guilty of eight counts, including grand theft and tax evasion. Prosecutors said Nelson could face a maximum of 12 years in prison and they want him to repay $1.5 million to UCLA.

Nelson "was willing to go into a willed body program and cut up body parts for his own personal financial gain," prosecutor Marisa Zarate said after the verdict.

Defense attorney Sean McDonald said he was disappointed by the verdict and left court without further comment.

Prosecutors said Nelson and Henry Reid, the former director of UCLA's Willed Body Program, devised the scam in 1999.

Nelson, who ran a business transporting body parts to hospitals and medical research firms, has said he thought the sales were authorized by the university.

Prosecutors said he bought the donated torsos, cut them up and kept them frozen in a rented warehouse until they were sold to companies that didn't know they had been improperly obtained.

Nelson, of Rancho Cucamonga, used cashier's checks to pay Reid a total of $43,000 in 1999, Zarate said. Other payments were made in cash and weren't documented, she said.

The plan unraveled after a state health investigator became concerned about a sale in 2003 and contacted UCLA.

Reid has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit grand theft and was sentenced to more than four years in prison.

The scandal led to the suspension of UCLA's cadaver program for a year in 2004 and forced the University of California system to examine its donation rules.

The school said it instituted procedures to prevent future abuses, including tracking systems for the bodies.

One juror said lax supervision of the UCLA program contributed to the problem.

"If UCLA had better supervision of its

Lay off the coach

Editor:

I was very disappointed to read the quote from Samohi pitcher Tyler Skaggs who said, "Coach Duron hasn't been doing a terribly great job." ("All eyes on him," page 1, May 14, 2009) Exactly when did it become OK for players to publicly criticize their coaches? Dwight Howard is doing it in the NBA and now high school kids are doing it. I don't care how good Skaggs is, that is simply not done.

I played for Coach Rob Duron on the 1988 Samohi Vikings. His coaching helped produce six Division I college baseball players, a league title and a good run into the playoffs. I was a pitcher who started off the season 0-2 and Coach Duron said, "Let me call your pitches so that all you have to do is throw," and I went on to win my last 10 games to finish 10-2 that season and earn All-CIF honors with Coach Duron calling every single pitch for me that season. I fully credit Coach Duron with my success that season. I went on to pitch at UCLA and never in all my years did a player even think about criticizing a coach.

Coach Duron knows what he is doing out there and like he said, he's "damned if he does, and damned if he doesn't." He can't say, "I wish these parents (who are complaining) would have given me more talented players." These players, parents (and fellow Samohi coach) who are publicly complaining about Coach Duron are not doing the team any favors.

Support your team and support your coach.

City Hall gives millions for projects, little for landlords

THE FUTURE EXPO LIGHT RAIL TERMINAL at Fourth Street and Colorado Avenue, Colorado streetscape, decking the Santa Monica Freeway, Civic Center open space and Downtown circulation element were all discussed at a Community Workshop last Monday evening.

I decided that "Animal Cops: Philadelphia" on my DirecTV service would be more interesting than the City Planning and Community Development's workshop. However, it didn't stop Expo activist Damien Goodman from e-mailing me mid-meeting that they were displaying "pictures of one-car, 90-foot long, trolley looking Expo trains and not the actual 270-foot long, 225 ton animals" to workshop attendees.

Goodman is smart enough to know why planning staff and Expo cheerleaders don't want you to know that Expo trains will be nearly as long as a football field. Picture these behemoths rumbling down Colorado and blocking intersecting street traffic before making a left turn into the light rail terminal at Fourth Street. Better to surprise everyone when the trains start rolling six or seven years from now when it's too late to make changes.

The Fourth and Colorado Expo terminal (currently Sears Automotive) is a focus point for much of the new development activity. With trains arriving at five minute intervals during peak hours and taking on and discharging up to 400 passengers per train, the potential for heavy foot and vehicular traffic at this intersection is very high.

Suggestions that the terminal should be a "gathering place" with a big plaza and food facilities may be optimistic. It'll simply be a place to come to and go from. Many folks who hang around train/transit stations in cities I've visited in the States as well as in Europe and Asia are low-lifes and hookers.

Access to and from this critical junction needs extra careful planning. Metro's Environmental Impact Report predicts the vast majority of Expo users will bus or walk to various Expo stations — a totally unrealistic prediction. However, city bureaucrats want to limit parking and make it expensive to boot. That's one way to force Expo riders to not drive to and from stations and reduce ridership, too. One smart workshop idea was an elevated pedestrian walkway over Colorado Avenue to Santa Monica Place.

Last Tuesday, $205.1 million in funding to be financed by tax allocation and lease revenue bond sales was earmarked for "priority" capital projects over the next five years. City Council, acting as the Redevelopment Agency, approved tentative funding levels for a Civic Center joint use project with Santa Monica High School ($56.19 million) Civic Center/HS shared parking ($25 million), Palisades Garden Walk/Town Square ($25 million), Civic Center "green" streets and pathways (20.9 million), Expo Light Rail Station ($10 million) and Civic Auditorium remodel ($25 million) among others. A new Pico branch library, Civic Center early childhood development center, Memorial Park expansion and other projects were also included.

Capping the Santa Monica Freeway from Ocean Avenue to the McClure Tunnel to Fourth Street for park space is pegged at $87 million in today's dollars. So, it'll probably never happen. Maybe all Civic Center non-park uses such as the proposed early childhood development center should be on a super-structure spanning the freeway, instead — as has been done in the United Kingdom with great success.

In other City Council action, the renewal of leases for three parcels of land on the beach seaward of the 1921 mean high tide line and adjacent to 850 Palisades Beach Road to the Jonathan Club was on the closed session agenda. This item generated a blizzard of e-mail from various neighborhood leaders last weekend questioning the continued leasing of public beach property to an elite, for profit, private club.

I e-mailed City Manager Lamont Ewell about the lack of open review. He replied the leases would be on the June 9 council agenda for public comment. This should generate heated discussion because all I'm hearing is that this arrangement can't end soon enough.

Next year's rent control general adjustment (the rent increase authorized for rent controlled units) being recommended by the Rent Control Board for the year beginning Sept. 1, 2009 is 1 percent. The recommended minimum increase is $8 per unit with the maximum increase (ceiling) set at $16.

Why is the RCB capping the increase at $16 for units renting above $1,650 per month — excluding pass along charges such as parcel taxes, school, college and clean water bond expense? It's so the high rent tenants can thank the Santa Monica for Renters' Rights (who control the RCB) by voting for SMRR candidates next election. A $16 (half percent) increase for tenants in $2,000 to $10,000 per month luxury apartments? Ridiculous.

Lastly, if you like city meetings on development issues, the Land Use and Circulation Element (LUCE) draft environmental impact report scoping meeting is tonight in the Civic Auditorium East Wing at 7 p.m. Go and learn why more traffic and development will be good for you.

Seeger a legend in his own time

Ealier this month, a contingent of some of pop music's best entertainers assembled in Madison Square Garden to perform a tribute concert in celebration of Pete Seeger's 90th birthday. They included Bruce Springsteen, Dave Matthews, John Mellencamp, Eddie Vedder, Arlo Guthrie, Joan Baez and dozens of others.

Seeger, who has shied away from events such as this, agreed to appear with the celebrities to raise money to benefit the Hudson River Sloop Clearwater, a nonprofit organization Seeger founded years ago to help preserve the Hudson river, which has suffered from pollution.

Seeger is a legend in his own time. As the New York Times notes, this musician, songwriter and song collector-historian "helped spur the politically tinged folk music revival of the '50s and '60s. He spoke out against the Vietnam War and has remained an activist, notably on environmental issues."

Born in New York City on May 3, 1919, Pete, whose father was a pacifist musicologist, was plunged into the world of music and politics from an early age. He studied sociology for awhile at Harvard but dropped out. He then spent the summer bicycling through New England and New York, painting watercolors of farmers' houses in return for food. Looking for but failing to get a job as a newspaper reporter in New York City, he then worked at the Archives of American Folk Music in Washington, D.C. Shortly thereafter, Pete met the legendary Woody Guthrie and formed the Almanac Singers, a group that became known for its political radicalism.

In 1950, Pete formed the Weavers. Although the group became the first commercially successful folk group — selling four million records in two years — the House Un-American Activities Committee blacklisted them in 1952. As a result, they could no longer record or appear on radio and television.

In 1955 during the "Red Scare," HUAC subpoenaed Pete to appear before them. In the hearings, he refused to disclose his political views and the names of his political associates. When asked by the committee to name for whom he had sung, Pete replied, "I am saying voluntarily that I have sung for almost every religious group in the country, from Jewish and Catholic, and Presbyterian and Holy Rollers and Revival Churches.... I have sung for many, many different groups ... over the twenty years or so that I have sung around these forty-eight states." He was sentenced to one year in jail but, after quoting the First Amendment, successfully appealed the decision after spending four days behind bars.

A leader in the peace and civil rights movements, Pete recorded "We Shall Overcome" and sang it on the 50-mile walk from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama, with Martin Luther King, Jr. and 1,000 other marchers. That former gospel song went on to become the anthem for the civil rights movement and was translated into many languages.

Pete was awarded the prestigious Kennedy Center Honors in 1994. In 1996, he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame for his contribution to music and to the development of rock and folk music. In April of that year, he received the Harvard Arts Medal and, after decades of creating songs, won a Grammy Award in 1997 for Best Traditional Folk Album for Pete.

It is Pete Seeger's still vibrant optimism that is amazing. As he told me: "I tell everybody a little parable about the 'teaspoon brigades.' Imagine a big seesaw. One end of the seesaw is on the ground because it has a big basket half full of rocks in it. The other end of the seesaw is up in the air because it's got a basket one-quarter full of sand. Some of us have teaspoons, and we are trying to fill it up. Most people are scoffing at us. They say, 'People like you have been trying for thousands of years, but it is leaking out of that basket as fast as you are putting it in.' Our answer is that we are getting more people with teaspoons every day. And we believe that one of these days or years — who knows — that basket of sand is going to be so full that you are going to see that whole seesaw going zoop! in the other direction. Then people are going to say, 'How did it happen so suddenly?' And we answer, 'Us and our little teaspoons over thousands of years.'"

The Q Line

Holding pattern over jet ban

A U.S. appellate judge upheld an injunction last week restricting City Hall from enforcing its ban on certain jets at Santa Monica Airport. An FAA hearing officer also ruled that the ban violated the city's agreement with the agency.

So this week's Q-Line question asks:

Should City Hall press its case further and perhaps take it all the way to federal court?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. Please limit responses to a minute or less.

Big problems often come in small places

Dear EarthTalk

What is "nanotechnology?" I've heard that nanoparticles are already in consumer products, yet we haven't really studied their potential health impacts.

Dan Zeff
San Francisco, CA

NANOTECHNOLOGY MAKES USE OF minuscule objects — whose width can be 10,000 times narrower than a human hair — known as nanoparticles. Upwards of 600 products on store shelves today contain them, including transparent sunscreen, lipsticks, anti-aging creams and even food products.

Global nanotechnology sales have grown substantially in recent years, to $50 billion in 2007, according to Lux Research, author of the annual Nanotech Report. And the final tally isn't in yet, but analysts had predicted 2008 sales to be $150 billion. The National Science Foundation says the industry could be worth $1 trillion by 2015, when it would employ two million workers directly.

What makes nanoparticles so useful is their tiny size, which allows for manipulation of color, solubility, strength, magnetic behavior and electrical conductivity. Nanoparticles do exist in nature, and they're also created inadvertently through some industrial processes. What's new — and potentially hazardous — is the widespread engineering of these particles for commercial purposes.

While there is no conclusive evidence that nanomaterials are either unsafe or not, health advocates worry that we're already putting them on our bodies and ingesting them as if they'd been thoroughly tested and proven safe. Animal studies, including one with rats at the University of Rochester, have shown that some nanoparticles can cross the blood-brain barrier, which protects the brain from toxins in the bloodstream. And inhaled nanoparticles have also harmed the lungs of animal test subjects.

Despite these and other studies, nanomaterials are virtually unregulated in the U.S. And of $1.3 billion budgeted for research in 2006, only $38 million went to examining risks to health and to the environment.

"While the benefits of nanotechnology are widely publicized, the discussion of the potential effects of their widespread use in consumer and industrial products is just beginning to emerge," reports the Journal of Nanobiotechnology. "Both pioneers of nanotechnology and its opponents are finding it extremely hard to argue their case as there is limited information available to support one side or the other."

A TINY THREAT? Some 600 consumer products on store shelves today — including some lipsticks, as well as sunscreens and even food products — contain nanoparticles, minuscule objects that can be as tiny as 1/10,000 the thickness of human hair. The industry is growing in leaps and bounds, though little is yet known about what health or environmental problems the technology may bring.

Europe's regulators are far more wary about nanotechnology than their American counterparts. Britain's Royal Society recommended in 2004 that nanoparticles be viewed as brand new substances, and the European Commission is examining them on a case-by-case basis. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is loosely charged with regulating nanotechnology here, but has barely dipped its toe in the water.

Taken together, the evidence suggests considerable uncertainty about the use of nano-ingredients in consumer products. It's just not known if they're safe, which begs the question: Why have we gone ahead and approved them for commercial use? Indeed, we may look back at our current decade and see it, for better or worse, as a time when tiny things caused big and momentous changes in our lives.

Universities generate sweat electricity in the gymnasium

JEFF BARNARD
AP Environmental Writer

EUGENE, Ore. As she pedaled an elliptical exercise machine at the University of Oregon, Wen Lee's face lit up like the light bulbs she was powering.

"I could run my television with this," the environmental studies graduate student said between breaths, making the three bulbs on the stand in front of her glow brighter as part of a demonstration of renewable people power.

The University of Oregon — one of its school colors is, after all, green — is the latest in a growing number of college campuses and exercise clubs across the country where workouts produce watts.

Splitting the $14,000 cost with the local utility, Eugene Water and Electric Board, the school has retrofitted 20 Precor elliptical machines to generate electricity using technology from ReRev.com of St. Petersburg, Fla. The power from each machine in the Student Recreation Center goes through a converter that turns DC into AC, and a meter to keep track before it flows into the grid.

The amount of electricity produced is small. The university estimates that 3,000 people a day on 20 machines would generate 6,000 kilowatt hours a year, enough to power one small energy-efficient house in the Northwest. But it fits in with other sustainability projects, such as solar panels on the rec center roof, and a high sense of being green among the student body.

"Oh, wow! It's awesome! That's cool!" said sophomore Eileen Donnerberg when told the machine she chose for her workout was producing electricity. "I never thought of that. It's a good thing."

The machines are even making their way into the run-up to one of the school's biggest events: the annual Civil War football game with Oregon State University. OSU connected 22 exercise machines to the grid last February and will compete with Oregon to see who can generate the most electricity.

The power is a drop in the bucket compared to the University of Oregon's overall electricity consumption, which is equivalent to 2,280 houses, said sustainability director Steve Mital.

And Northwest electricity rates are so low it would take 28 years to recoup the investment, but Mital said that isn't really the point.

"We're not going to get off Middle Eastern oil by connecting up all the ellipticals all over the country," said Mital. "We bought it and installed it mostly because it's an educational opportunity. People will be on those things sweating away and it gets them thinking."

Oregon decided to take the plunge at the suggestion of students, who were inspired by a demonstration of exercise bikes charging batteries at last year's Olympic track and field trials held here.

"So much of this talk about renewables is fairly abstract," said Mital. "You jump on one of these machines and 30 minutes later you have a deep visceral understanding of what that means. That's what I'm after, primarily."

ReRev.com stands for Renewable Revolution, and was started by Hudson Harr, 23, soon after he graduated from the University of Florida, which was an early adopter.

After pulling the guts out of a variety of exercise machines, from bikes to stair steppers, Harr found that the Precor elliptical already had a small generator that powered the control panel and produced resistance. Most other brands and devices use alternators, which are better suited to charging batteries, as they do in cars.

Harr's outfit figured out a way to replace the resistors that eat up the excess power generated, and instead send it to the power grid. He has a patent pending.

ReRev.com estimates a typical 30-minute workout on one machine generates enough electricity to run a laptop computer for an hour, or a compact fluorescent light bulb for 2Ω hours.

Ten facilities are using the technology, and Harr said he hopes it spreads as other manufacturers switch to generators instead of alternators.

"There are over 30,000 health clubs in the U.S.," said Harr. "If you could figure each one producing electricity will take one house off the grid, that is 30,000 houses off the grid."

Precor is cooperating with ReRev.com, but the terms of their agreement remain confidential, said Jim Birrell, chief innovation officer for the company based in Woodinville, Wash.

"At this point, we are evaluating it, watching it, and staying in touch with Hudson, but that's about the extent of it at this point," he said.

So is Adam Boesel, owner of The Green Microgym in the hip Alberta Arts District of Portland, which has a variety of exercise machines charging batteries with other systems. He figures affordability will determine how widespread it becomes.

"I really liken it to electric cars," he said. "Seven or eight years ago, people were skeptical about whether it would become commonplace, and now it has."

NYC's first responders practice for terror attack

KAREN MATTHEWS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK It was an emergency drill, yet the scene of hundreds of firefighters, police officers and other first responders hustling around the World Trade Center site Sunday evoked the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Firefighters carried oxygen tanks, hoses and heavy axes into an underground train station, while police and other emergency personnel helped those playing injured — all part of a large disaster response exercise at ground zero.

More than 800 first responders participated in Sunday's mock terrorist attack, which simulated an explosion on a New Jersey-bound PATH commuter train in a tunnel. The police, firefighters and other emergency personnel joined about 150 volunteers, who posed as injured passengers smudged with grime and fake blood.

The hundreds of first responders represented the largest police and firefighter presence at the trade center site since the aftermath of Sept. 11, 2001. The purpose of the drill was to improve interagency cooperation in the event of a real disaster.

"The motto for today is: You can never be too prepared," said Chris Ward, executive director of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which runs area transit hubs and owns the trade center site. "We will evaluate how well we did prepare, how well we performed, find wherever we did make mistakes and how we can improve."

The two-hour drill recalled the July 7, 2005, bombings on the London subway system more than the 2001 attack on the twin towers.

In the drill, two bombs went off at 8:01 a.m. on a train in the tunnel between Manhattan and New Jersey.

"Smoke filled the tunnel, and we had some 700 to 800 passengers on this train," said Joseph Bruno, New York City's commissioner of emergency management.

PATH service was suspended during the exercise, and streets around the trade center site were blocked off.

Participating agencies included New York City's police and fire departments and its Office of Emergency Management and Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, as well as the police department of the Port Authority, which operates the PATH trains.

"The main thing we're trying to evaluate is the ability of all these agencies to work together," Bruno said.

Poor communication and jurisdictional infighting between the police and fire departments impeded rescue efforts when the twin towers were struck in 2001, and Bruno said he was confident that the departments are better at working together now.

"I think we are at a totally different place than we were at the time of that incident, and that's good," he said.

Firefighters went into the PATH tunnel to extinguish fires caused by the drill's explosions and to rescue passengers. There were 10 fake fatalities. Most of the injured passengers were able to walk out of the station, but about 20 were carried out on red stretchers.

Chief Joseph Pfeifer, head of counterterrorism for the Fire Department of New York, said firefighters used lightweight aluminum carts that fit onto train tracks to transport the most severely injured.

He said the carts were developed after the 2005 London bombings because "it's very labor intensive to carry someone out."

Other drills staged since the 2001 terror attacks in New York City have included a simulated response to a hazardous chemical spill and an explosion on an Amtrak train at Penn Station.

"If we're going to make mistakes we want to make them here, we want to learn from them, we want to build them into our plans, so when there is a real situation we respond appropriately and all the kinks in the system have been worked out," said Deputy Mayor Ed Skyler.

Richard Falkenrath, the police department's deputy commissioner for counterterrorism, added, "It's an important thing to be doing, and we will learn a lot of lessons from it I have no doubt."

Officials bought television ads and plastered train stations with posters to warn downtown Manhattan residents of the drill. The warnings for those in the area came after a Department of Defense-arranged flyover by a jet above downtown Manhattan last month panicked thousands of Wall Street workers and residents.

Bruno said the flyover "pointed out the need for people to know as much as possible."

"We would not want folks to wake up here and see all this equipment and wonder," he said.

Obama stresses understanding during speech

JULIE PACE
Associated Press Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. President Barack Obama strode head-on Sunday into the stormy abortion debate and told graduates at America's leading Roman Catholic university that both sides must stop demonizing one another.

Obama acknowledged that "no matter how much we want to fudge it ... the fact is that at some level, the views of the two camps are irreconcilable." But he still implored the University of Notre Dame's graduating class and all in the U.S. to stop "reducing those with differing views to caricature. Open hearts. Open minds. Fair-minded words. It's a way of life that always has been the Notre Dame tradition."

One of the noisiest controversies of his young presidency flared after Obama, who supports abortion rights but says the procedure should be rare, was invited to speak at the school and receive an honorary degree. "I do not suggest that the debate surrounding abortion can or should go away," the president said.

The Rev. John Jenkins, Notre Dame's president, introduced Obama and praised the president for not being "someone who stops talking to those who disagree with him." Jenkins said too little attention has been paid to Obama's decision to speak at an institution that opposes his abortion policy.

Ahead of Obama's address, at least 27 people were arrested on trespassing charges. They included Norma McCorvey, the plaintiff identified as "Roe" in the Roe v. Wade Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion. She now opposes abortion and joined more than 300 anti-abortion demonstrators at the school's front gate.

More than half held signs, some declaring "Shame on Notre Dame" and "Stop Abortion Now" to express their anger over Notre Dame's invitation to Obama.

Obama entered the arena to thunderous applause and a standing ovation from many in the crowd of 12,000. But as the president began his commencement address, at least three protesters interrupted it. One yelled, "Stop killing our children."

The graduates responded by chanting "Yes we can," the slogan that became synonymous with Obama's presidential campaign. Obama seem unfazed, saying Americans must be able to deal with things that make them "uncomfortable."

The president ceded no ground. But he said those on each side of the debate "can still agree that this is a heart-wrenching decision for any woman to make, with both moral and spiritual dimensions.

"So let's work together to reduce the number of women seeking abortions by reducing unintended pregnancies, and making adoption more available, and providing care and support for women who do carry their child to term."

He said he favored "a sensible conscience clause" that would give anti-abortion health care providers the right to refuse to perform the procedure.

Before taking on the abortion issue, Obama told graduates they were part of a "generation that must find a path back to prosperity and decide how we respond to a global economy that left millions behind even before this crisis hit an economy where greed and short-term thinking were too often rewarded at the expense of fairness, and diligence, and an honest day's work."

Centenarian started career a few years ago

Hitting the century mark on May 13 put LaBorde in a relatively small and unique subset of the American population. Even more unique is the smaller class of citizens to which she belongs — centenarians who are still professional actors.

It was about five years ago that LaBorde received a call from a friend, who with a note of urgency in her voice, said there was an opening for a part in a Sears commercial and asked if she could come in that day for an audition.

The thought of acting hadn't entered LaBorde's mind for nearly 80 years, her last role coming in a high school play.

But curious, LaBorde went in and read the lines for the part, informed by the casting agent that a call would come the next day.

"Maybe they were short of people but the next morning they called and said you got the part," LaBorde said. "It was fun and exciting to think that I was in a commercial."

Today a picture of a television set showing the commercial sits on a buffet in the living room, surrounded by photos of her late husband and daughter, grandchildren and now great-grandchildren.

While the Sears spot got LaBorde's foot in the door, it wasn't until a story by L.A. Times Columnist Steve Lopez that put the silver-haired actress' name out in the industry and got veteran agent Sherri Spillane knocking on her door.

"I went to meet her and was just amazed," Spillane, who is the head agent at Webb Talent Agency, said. "I couldn't believe that she was that bright and that positive at that age and just ready for a whole new career."

After LaBorde gave a tea leaf reading at that initial meeting, Spillane took on her oldest client and started sending her out on auditions, booking parts on Lexus and Chase Bank commercials.

Then came roles on television shows and films, from "MADtv" to "Blue Collar TV" to "It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia." Her film credits include "Pineapple Express" and "The Heartbreak Kid."

But her favorite job to date is the 13 appearances on "Talk Show with Spike Feresten" on which she has acted in numerous skits, including most famously, a comical piece about the DTV transition, which became a viral hit and earned her the "Hulu Award" for having the most viewed video on the site after which it is named.

Out of the pile of birthday cards sitting in the living room, the one that perhaps stands out the most came with a dozen roses sent by Spike Feresten, who wrote "You are the funniest centenarian I know."

"That is coming from a stand-up comedian," LaBorde said, smiling fondly at the card. "I was kind of proud of that."

The oldest of three children, born to a father who was a strawberry farmer and a mother who was a homemaker, LaBorde moved from Fresno to Los Angeles in the midst of the Great Depression shortly after graduating from high school, living with her cousin while she worked at S.H. Kress & Co., a department store.

It was on the red electric trains during her commute from home in Venice to work in Downtown Los Angeles where LaBorde met her future husband, Nicholas, a conductor 17 years her senior.

He would always tip his hat, and hand her a copy of the day's newspaper for LaBorde to read during the rides, attempting to make conversation with his passenger.

Then one day, Nicholas finally asked LaBorde about her plans for the following Sunday.

When that day rolled around, LaBorde was en route when she spotted Nicholas on Rose Avenue, dressed in a suit and wearing a Stetson hat.

"Our team is going to play baseball on the way to Pomona," he explained. "I thought I would pick you up and take you there."

"Anything to take two trains to go out to Pomona," LaBorde thought at the time.

On the way there, Nicholas proposed.

They opted to date for six months thereafter and eventually married, staying together until Nicholas died at the age of 88. They had a daughter, Shirley, who died of breast cancer at 45.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! The cake for Mae LaBorde at her 100th birthday party at the Santa Monica YMCA on Sunday afternoon.

Today, LaBorde shows the obvious signs of old age, relying on a cane to walk and admittedly being bad at remembering names.

"I notice each morning as I get up, I feel a little bit older," she said.

But there's plenty of youth left, thanks to a healthy diet and active lifestyle, which includes participation in Borderline Neighborhood gatherings, the Santa Monica Historical Society's speakers bureau, and the Santa Monica College General Advisory Board.

She was honored by the community on Sunday at the Santa Monica YMCA where the Santa Monica Historical Society Museum threw a birthday party. A smaller family celebration was held a week before.

"I just live daily and people will ask me what is your secret to longevity," she said. "I'll tell them that ... it's good nourishing food, and a sense of humor.

"If I make a mistake or drop something, I laugh at myself."

instruction on topics such as resume design and networking, and for these problems, assisting resources were available.

The meeting's speaker, Steven Keleman, Ed.D of the consulting outfit Keleman & Associates, provided information about where to look for jobs, how to match skills and interests to fields of vocational interest, and gave some fundamental tips on how to prepare a resume and develop a relationship with potential employers.

Organizers for the event said that approximately 80 percent of those in attendance were members of the Beth Shir Sholom congregation, but stressed that the center and its resources are open to non-members as well.

Rabbi Neil Comess-Daniels and Cantor Ken Cohen, both of whom were instrumental in developing the new program, were enthused about the potential of the group sessions, expressing their pride in the turnout — 12 on May 7, 17 on May 14 — and involvement of individuals from the community.

"This is a very unique community. We're not the type of community that's here to simply educate your child in religious education or perform a wonderful wedding or confirmation service. It's really about people reaching out to other people, getting to know other people; it's about relationships," said Cohen, who moved his family to Santa Monica from Connecticut in order to be a part of the Beth Shir Sholom community. "The community gives, not only to its own, but it gives to those around it. I am thrilled, not only with the people who have been showing up, but in the spirit of it all."

Jury finds pattern of embezzlement

program something like this wouldn't have happened," said the 48-year-old man who asked that his name be withheld to protect his job as a paralegal.

The jury also found there was a pattern of fraud and embezzlement totaling more than $500,000 — a special enhancement allegation that will be considered during sentencing on June 12.

Founded in 1950, the UCLA cadaver program received about 175 donated bodies a year before it was suspended. It was the second time in less than a decade that scandal swept the cadaver program. In 1996, relatives of body donors alleged the program had illegally disposed bodies.

Popular taco truck inspires upstart outfits

Kogi is using the service to maintain the Californian tradition of restaurants having secret menus one must be in-the-know to order from (such as the hamburger joint In-N-Out). On the side of the truck, Kogi's menu lists a few items, including tacos and burritos stuffed with Korean short ribs, spicy pork, chicken and tofu. But keep up with Kogi's Twitter feed and the options multiply.

"We do that because it's fun to have something different and experimental available every day," says Prasad, adding that the truck wouldn't have as many followers if it didn't provide new options.

Some recent specials that weren't on the menu featured kimchee (a spicy pickled cabbage traditionally eaten as a condiment in Korean dining) stuffed into quesadillas and as a topping for Spam sliders.

"There's some really high end food coming out of food trucks," says Goldman, making them a natural place for Twitter to gain ground. "This type of immediate information and constant update is going to increase."

Last month, for example, a truck called Calbi BBQ announced its grand opening on the Web, and began Tweeting its way to roadside stops to hawk tacos and burritos with Korean flavors.

And a Web site featuring a Twitter feed of locations for the Yuri Truck, which peddles sushi rolls and rice bowls, posted its first entry.

And this month, DonChowTacos.com was launched (complete with Twitter feeds) for a truck that sells Chinese-Mexican fusion — such as "chimales," Chinese-Mexican tamales stuffed with kung pao chicken or Chinese barbecue pork.

Elsewhere, it's the diners who are Twittering about one truck food. In Portland, Ore. — home to food carts offering dishes from Bosnia, Iraq, Peru, Thailand and many points between — fans use the high tech tool to track the low-tech vendors.

Portland Twitter users, such as PDXfoodcarts, track the arrival of new trucks, which have exploded from just a few in 2006 to more than 170 this year, representing 24 national cuisines.

"OK, Poompui, a new Thai cart on 8th and Couch is PHENOMENAL," read a recent Tweet by PDXfoodcarts. "Like Thai food in Thailand. GO, JUST GO."

WHO studies swine flu transmission rates, new vaccine

ELIANE ENGELER
Associated Press Writers

GENEVA Health experts are looking very closely at the spread of swine flu among people in Spain, Britain and Japan, a WHO official said Sunday as Japan reported a one-day explosion of over 70 new cases, mostly among teenagers.

The swine flu epidemic is already expected to dominate the World Health Organization's annual meeting, a five-day event that begins Monday in Geneva and involves health officials from the agency's 193 member states.

WHO Director-General Dr. Margaret Chan will reveal experts' recommendations on the production of a swine flu vaccine sometime at the meeting. Pharmaceutical companies are ready to begin production, but many decisions have to be made first — such as how much vaccine to make, how it should be distributed and who should get it.

Some experts say there's no question that a swine flu vaccine must be produced but WHO needs to discuss the issue with its members.

As of Sunday, the swine flu virus — which WHO calls the A (H1N1) virus — has sickened at least 8,480 people in 40 countries, killing 75 of them, mostly in Mexico.

Japan's health ministry confirmed dozens of new cases of swine flu in waves of announcements Sunday, prompting the government to shut down schools and cancel public events like Kobe's annual festival. By late Sunday, Japan's tally rose from five confirmed cases to 78 — many of them high school students who had not traveled overseas.

Most new cases involved students in the western prefectures of Hyogo and Osaka, and health officials said they were recovering in local hospitals or at home.

Customer service workers at stores, restaurants and train stations in those two regions immediately began wearing masks as a precaution.

"We have not determined how the virus spread in the region, and we are doing our best to track down the route of the infections and contain them," Chief Cabinet Secretary Takeo Kawamura said.

Japan had established strict quarantines at airports, but decided Saturday to focus on containing the domestic outbreak.

WHO spokesman Gregory Hartl said in-country transmission rates were a key factor in whether the global body decides to increase its pandemic alert level. Right now, the world is at phase 5 — out of a possible 6 — meaning that a global outbreak is "imminent."

"We already know about the UK and Spain, that they have a relatively high number of cases compared to other European countries, so by simple virtue of the fact that they have more cases they need to be kept an eye on," Hartl said in an interview with AP Television News.

"There seems to have been activity in the last few days in Japan so we need to watch that too," he said.

Spain and Britain have had the highest numbers of cases in Europe, reporting 103 and 101 cases respectively. Britain announced 14 new cases on Sunday — with 11 of those being transmitted in-country — people who had not traveled to Mexico or the United States but became infected from others who had the virus.

A pandemic could be triggered if the virus starts to be transmitted from person to person on a large scale outside the Americas, WHO experts have said. But it would have to jump among people outside schools, hospitals and other institutions that typically pass on such viruses quickly.

"We don't want to prejudge anything, but certainly this is something we are watching with interest," Hartl said of the weekend developments in Japan.

Chile, meanwhile, reported its first case of swine flu, a 32-year-old woman who had just arrived from the Dominican Republic. All passengers on the same Copa Airlines flight with her were being told to voluntarily stay at home for a few days.

WHO estimates up to 2 billion doses of swine flu vaccine could be produced yearly, although the first batches wouldn't be available for four to six months.

U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon will visit WHO on Tuesday to meet with senior representatives from the vaccine industry, but the U.N. declined to name the companies.

Most flu vaccine companies can only make one vaccine at a time: seasonal flu vaccine or pandemic vaccine. Production takes months and it is impossible to switch halfway through if health officials make a mistake.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is working on a "seed stock" to make the vaccine, which should be ready in a few weeks. Until vaccine manufacturers get the seed stock, they won't know how many doses of vaccine they can make or how long that would take.

WHO is also negotiating with vaccine producers like GlaxoSmithKline PLC and Sanofi Pasteur to save some of their swine flu vaccine for poorer nations. Many rich nations — such as Britain, Canada, Denmark, France, Switzerland and the United States — have already signed deals with vaccine makers to guarantee them pandemic vaccines.

A sense of urgency about preventing a swine flu pandemic helped Taiwan get an observer seat on the World Health Assembly, taking part in the meeting for the first time in 38 years.

"Taiwan and China are both part of the world community. We should fight this disease together," Taiwanese Health Minister Dr. Yeh Ching-chuan told reporters in Geneva.

Synthetic turf fields kicking up a number of concerns

PHUONG LE
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE Soccer dad Mike Miller prefers the smooth, cushioned surface of synthetic turf because his 13-year-old daughter can play year-round, even in the long rainy season that closes Seattle's grass fields.

But as Caty Miller and her teammates dribble, pass and shoot, their cleats kick up tiny bits of the ground-up rubber tires that are used as filler between the blades of artificial grass.

That has some health experts, activists and parents from Seattle to Chicago to Stamford, Mass. worried that children may be exposed to chemicals if they inhale or swallow the rubber granules, known as crumb rubber. Some are calling for a moratorium until the issue is more fully studied.

"Rubber tires are made with chemicals that are known carcinogens. The question remains, does that raise the risk for cancer for children? We don't know that," said Dr. Susan Buchanan, associate director of Great Lakes Center for Children's Environmental Health and an assistant professor of public health at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Artificial turf is often made of fake blades of grass with sand or ground tires used as fill to provide a springy cushion. About 25 million used auto tires are recycled into turf each year, according to Synthetic Turf Council, the Atlanta-based trade group. About 4,500 synthetic turf fields are in use throughout the country.

Supporters say the artificial turf encourages increased outdoor play, reduces water and herbicide use and provides an even, predictable surface that's more cushioned than old-style AstroTurf.

Playing fields with artificial turf "drain well. They don't get as muddy. The ball bounces a little higher, goes a little faster," Miller said.

But potential health concerns have led Connecticut and California to conduct their own studies on the health effects of turf. New York City health officials recently commissioned a study to evaluate air quality above synthetic turf and found it didn't show appreciable effects from contaminants in the rubber.

"The crumb rubber that's used in many fills are safe," said Shira Miller, a spokeswoman for the Synthetic Turf Council.

But Dr. Philip Landrigan, professor and chairman of community and preventive medicine at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York, still wants a moratorium until more thorough studies are done.

Some studies in the U.S. and Europe have assessed potential exposure and health risks for people using turf and concluded that health effects are unlikely.

But Landrigan said he's aware of no studies that have evaluated how the chemicals affect actual children who play on turf field containing crumb rubber.

"All those toxins are very available to kids, if kids are playing and running," he said. "All this chemical soup is going to get on their skins and their fingers."

Recycled tires contain metals such as zinc, plus toxic chemicals such as benzene and butadiene and polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, which also are contained in exhaust, smoke and soot.

Crumb rubber also is used for solid playground and track surfaces, but because it's in the form of a mat, there's less concern the rubber can get into kids, Landrigan said.

Heat also is a concern, raising the possibility of heat stress or heat stroke; temperatures on artificial turf fields have been recorded at 130 to 140 degrees, Landrigan said.

Last year, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission investigated lead in artificial turf after New Jersey health officials found high lead content in some fields. The CPSC said none of the fields tested at levels that would be harmful to children, but it called for voluntary standards to eliminate lead in future products.

Seattle is adding six new synthetic turf fields in the next year after reviewing current research on health or environmental risks.

The fields cost more to install than grass — about $800,000 each — but save in maintenance costs and reduced herbicide and fertilizer use, said Dewey Potter, a Seattle parks spokeswoman.

Sports boosters say artificial turf allows more games to be played in the months when Seattle's trademark rain closes grass fields and pushes sports onto hated dirt and sand fields.

"We love natural grass, but it doesn't work for year-round and really intensive use," said Bill Farmer, a board member of Seattle's Friends of Athletic Fields.

The health concerns also have become part of a larger debate over whether the fields are a good idea in general. Some object to spending taxpayer money, and others simply prefer natural open space.

"Why have parks if you're going to pave them? They should be grass fields," said Chris Van Dyk, who led an unsuccessful attempt to block artificial turf fields on Washington's Bainbridge Island, just west of Seattle. He said he doesn't want his sons playing on it.

In San Francisco last summer, health officials reviewed the available literature and found there wasn't enough evidence of risks from lead, bacteria or crumb rubber to warrant tearing up and replacing existing fields. But they said that where possible the city should consider alternatives such as turf that uses cork or coconut husks as fill.

On the sidelines of a Seattle scrimmage, soccer mom Beatriz Salgado said her daughter prefers grass because the artificial turf can get too hot during the summer.

"In the summer, you can really smell it. It smells like tar," she said. "I would like to know more about what's in it."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

★★★ Your words are heard loud and clear. Others will respond well to your suggestions. A creative venture or a get-together might need to be put on hold for a brief period. Be willing to understand what is happening with a key friend. Tonight: A close encounter.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ If something doesn't make sense, try detaching, and imagine what it's like to be the person expressing this thought. Through this exercise, you will make sense of what you are hearing. Drop negativity. It only holds you back. Tonight: Listen to suggestions!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Dive into work. Don't get distracted. Know that you can and will get the job done. Understand what is happening and how much your judgments are coloring your impressions. Steer away from this type of thinking. Gain a better perspective. Tonight: Squeeze in some exercise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Allow your creativity to emerge. You will be able to see others from a different and more dynamic perspective if you don't listen to a close associate who is too negative. Try to clear this cloud and see someone differently. Tonight: Forget that tonight is Monday!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ If you can't exorcize certain thoughts when working, pressure will build, as your mind is somewhere else and yet you have your hands full. Focus on one item at a time. Tonight: Beam in.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Tap into your imagination and use your resourcefulness to get past a Catch-22. You discover it is simply a question of how you think. Brainstorm with others and greet new ideas with a smile. Look to possibilities. Tonight: Hang out with a friend and catch up on news.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Be more aware of your limits. If you would like to break past your limits, look at how you might be able to, and make it feasible. Tonight: Gather your bills.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Just be yourself. Holding back simply doesn't work, under any circumstances. Listen to news with a grain of salt. Others might not be as resilient or as dynamic as you. Their attitude could filter their thinking. Tonight: As you like.

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

You break patterns this year, no matter which direction you turn. Others show a lot more interest in what you do. In a sense, they see you as a role model. Friendships grow and become more dynamic. Verbalize more of what you want, and you'll discover how easy it is to manifest your long-term desires. Others will pitch in and help pave your way. If you are single, you could meet someone, quite possibly through friends or a get-together. If you are attached, include your sweetie more often, not only in your thoughts but also in your outside life. Share your feelings, and ask for feedback too! PISCES is a good friend.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ In a study of the last six years' admissions at hospital emergency rooms in the Austin, Texas, area (reported in April), 900 people were identified as using ERs six or more times in the previous three months, and nine specific patients had made a total of 2,678 visits in the six-year period.

■ Mixed Signs From the Middle East: (1) In March, at a soccer match in Hilla, Iraq, between two local teams, as a player with the ball approached the goal to attempt a tying kick late in the game, an overenthusiastic spectator drew his gun and shot him dead. (2) In more hopeful news, authorities in Ramallah said that the March 24 bank robbery by armed gunmen who snatched the equivalent of $30,000 was pulled off by five Palestinians and an Israeli Jew, working together.

TODAY IN HISTORY

1896 The U.S. Supreme Court, in Plessy v. Ferguson, endorsed "separate but equal" racial segregation, a concept the court renounced 58 years later with Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka.

1642 Montreal was founded by French colonists.

1804 The French Senate proclaimed Napoleon Bonaparte emperor.

1920 Pope John Paul II was born Karol Wojtyla in Wadowice, Poland.

1926 Evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson vanished while visiting a beach in Venice, Calif.; she reappeared more than a month later, claiming to have been kidnapped.

1927 A schoolhouse in Bath, Mich., was blown up with explosives planted by local farmer Andrew Kehoe, who then set off a dynamite-laden automobile; the attacks killed 38 children and six adults, including Kehoe, who'd earlier killed his wife.

NOTICE OF DIVIDED PUBLICATION
Made pursuant to Section 3381, Revenue and Taxation Code

Pursuant to Sections 3381 through 3385, Revenue and Taxation Code, the Notice of Power to Sell Tax-Defaulted Property in and for Los Angeles County, State of California, has been divided and distributed to various newspapers of general circulation published in the County. A portion of the list appears in each of such newspapers.

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY
Made pursuant to Section 3361, Revenue and Taxation Code

Notice is hereby given that real property taxes and assessments on the parcels described below will have been defaulted five or more years, or, in the case of nonresidential commercial property, property on which a nuisance abatement lien has been recorded or that can serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons when three or more years have elapsed and a request has been made by a city, county, city and county, or nonprofit organization that property will become subject to the tax collector's power to sell.

The parcels listed will become subject to the tax collector's power to sell on July 1, 2009, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The tax collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to 5:00 p.m., on June 30, 2009. The right to an installment plan terminates on June 30, 2009, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.

The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at 5:00 p.m. on the last business day before actual sale of the property by the tax collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by Mark J. Saladino, Los Angeles County Treasurer and Tax Collector, 225 North Hill Street, First Floor, Los Angeles, California 90012.

The amount to redeem, in dollars and cents, is set forth opposite its parcel number. This amount includes all defaulted taxes, penalties, and fees that have accrued from the date of tax-default to the date of June 30, 2009.

I certify, under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct. Dated this 22nd day of April, 2009.

MARK J. SALADINO
TREASURER AND TAX COLLECTOR
COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES
STATE OF CALIFORNIA

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Identification Number (AIN), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the Assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map, if applicable, and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The Assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's Office, 500 West Temple Street, Room 225, Los Angeles, California 90012.

The real property that is the subject of this notice is situated in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and is described as follows:
