NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

The newly installed municipal sewer system in the Florida Keys town of Islamorada was scheduled to go on line in May, but the real test will come shortly after that if the town cannot hook up a threshold number of residents to allow the system full, efficient functioning. The fallback plan, according to the town government, will require it to buy enough out-of-town sewage to boost the weak flow that would be running through the system.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is the 142nd day of 2006.
There are 223 days left in the year.

On May 22, 1868, the "Great Train Robbery" took place near Marshfield, Ind., as seven members of the Reno gang made off with $96,000 in loot.
In 1761, the first life insurance policy in the United States was issued, in Philadelphia.
In 1819, the first steam-propelled vessel to attempt a trans-Atlantic crossing, the Savannah, departed from Savannah, Ga. (It arrived in Liverpool, England, on June 20.)

Support running deep

Property owners will pay to clean Bay

BY CAROLYN SACKARIASON
Daily Press Staff Writer

CITYWIDE It appears there's majority support among residents to more than double stormwater parcel fees in an effort to prevent further pollution from going into the Santa Monica Bay and meet state environmental standards.

A recent polling of residents throughout the city indicates that most property owners would support the local government increasing their annual stormwater fees from $36 to $100. That's for a single-family parcel — multi-family and commercial properties could be more or less, depending upon acreage and usage. The fees would be adjusted for inflation.

For a majority of the respondents,

SIFTING AWAY Trash piles up near the Pico outfall at the Santa Monica Beach. Officials are considering raising stormwater fees to further prevent pollution from entering the ocean.

Journalist has message for her audience

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Daily Press Staff Writer

THIRD STREET As a former Miss Arkansas and a staple on the red carpet, having hosted one of Oscar night's most exclusive after-parties, Tamara Henry is often dismissed as another ditsy blonde entertainment reporter using her looks and connections to make it big in television or film.

That's not far off, well, most of it anyway. Henry's undeniably attractive, and definitely dialed in to the entertainment industry. However,

Alejandro Cesar Cantarero II/Daily Press
OH HENRY CityTV reporter has come a long way from Miss Arkansas pageant.

after a moment's inspection, it's clear that Henry, who also co-hosts several news programs for Santa Monica CityTV 16, has a different plan of action in mind than following in the footsteps of "Entertainment Tonight's" Mary Hart.

In short, Henry wants to change the world. And that's not some tired cliché. This small-town girl from White Hall, Arkansas, believes God has given her a gift and that gift is to entertain, while at the same time, keep the public informed about the issues that truly affect them. Henry believes that people are hungry for

'The skiddiest of all' is getting attention as LA grapples with luxury housing boom

BY JOHN ROGERS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES It's been called "the skiddiest of all Skid Rows," 50 square blocks of abandoned factories, burned-out storefronts, rundown hotels, dingy bars and seedy liquor stores, interspersed among hundreds of makeshift homes, most of them built with abandoned cardboard boxes and stolen shopping carts.

Located an easy walk from City Hall, police headquarters and other downtown seats of power, this last stop for the destitute has been a fixture of the nation's second-largest city for nearly a century.

Folk singer Woody Guthrie called it "the skiddiest of all Skid Rows" in his 1943 autobiography "Bound For Glory." Poet Charles Bukowski said it was populated by "people who are mutilated and almost dead ... creeping, crawling, uncared for creatures."

These days the area has been getting a less poetic though equally hard look.

With a burgeoning real estate market bringing luxury apartments and condos to the edge of Skid Row, city leaders are torn between letting gentrification roll over the area or trying to make it a more hospitable environment to get help with homelessness, drug addiction, mental illness and other troubles.

Among other measures:

PROUDLY BROUGHT TO YOU BY

All the world's a stage ...

Or at least much of Santa Monica soon will be, as the Santa Monica Police Department finishes up installing 123 surveillance cameras in tourist-heavy areas such as the Pier, Third Street Promenade and downtown alleys. The security system, at a price tag of $1.3 million, comes in response to a perceived terrorist threat on the pier last July. Still, a contingent of residents views the cameras as a step towards less privacy.

So this week, Q-Line to know:

Do you have a more favorable image of the city in light of the surveillance cameras, or less favorable. Why, or why not?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your responses in the weekend edition.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Don't let a few apples spoil it for everyone

Editor:
As a member of the Santa Monica Conservancy, I am sensitive to the need to maintain and enhance our cultural and historical history in a city that is one of the most unique and beautiful in the world.
The opportunity that now exists for the public, not just the elite few, to enjoy a beautiful and restored public beach house on one of the most desirable parts of our beach, is one the city needs to proudly and eagerly take advantage of. My understanding is that the current litigation fueled by a few property owners is intended to create enough of a time strain that the Annenberg Foundation would pull back its multi-million dollar grant funding this project. What a shame this would be. "Not in my neighborhood" is an idea whose time needs to come to an end.

Segway rider veers onto an elitist road

Editor:
This is regarding the article of impending restrictions on the Segway personal transportation device (SMDP, May 16, page 1).
A Segway owner, Allen Battino, is quoted as saying that since the cost of a Segway is so high ($4,000 for the least expensive model) "he believes the market will weed out those who are not serious about their Segways and therefore, wouldn't follow proper operating guidelines."
Battino's naïve and elitist statement implies that only those in the upper income brackets are capable of responsible behavior while operating a Segway. In that case, the owner of the recently crashed rare Ferrari in Malibu was "following proper guidelines" simply because he could afford such on ostentatious vehicle. He was apparently driving at 160 mph, so just because he had money to buy a million dollar car didn't make him a responsible driver.
If purchasing a $4,000 piece of transportation is a huge investment for someone, rather than a splurge of pocket change just to be cool with the jet set, it can just as easily be surmised that the low income Segway owner would be even more conscientious about protecting their investment and not misuse or operate the device dangerously.
History and current events have shown that often those with the greatest wealth are capable of the most irresponsible, anti-social, and often downright murderous behavior. Read the LA Times business section on any given day and count the articles concerning crimes committed by millionaires. Consider the current trial of the heads of Enron for looting and destroying a company, and, of course, the behavior of our current president and his administration. Tom Delay and Jack Abramoff come to mind as certainly being able to afford a Segway but I wouldn't trust them to drive a Segway around the block.
The arrogant belief that one has higher moral standards than their fellow man just because their bank account's fat is a more dangerous concept than a Segway driven by someone with little means any day.

Candidates making bids for 41st seat fail to inspire

June 6 is election day. A number of prominent Democrats are running for Fran Pavley's 41st California State Assembly District seat, which represents Santa Monica. Two local women are running. Both are, shall we say, to the left? Here are my random observations thus far on the candidates and their campaigns.
Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District Board of Education president Julia Brownley has been on the school board since November of 1994. She's received the endorsement of the powerful Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights political organization co-chaired by Denny Zane.
Zane's firm, Urban Dimensions, is consulting for Brownley's campaign. According to recent campaign filings, Zane has been paid $23,000 for his expertise so far. I can't help but notice that Brownley is just the latest candidate, parcel tax or bond campaign that's put Zane on their payroll and received SMRR's endorsement.
As a school board member, her undying commitment should be to the district. But in April 2002, pro-labor Brownley participated in a labor demonstration and union organizing drive against the DoubleTree hotel. Hotels and other businesses interests contribute financially to the district. Yet Brownley eagerly endangered a major source of support and good will for the schools she's entrusted to govern to further her own cause.
To me, it's bad judgment. It tells me that Brownley will vote her own extremist agenda before the will of the voters. Her campaign Web site says she led the campaigns for both recent school parcel tax increases even though these regressive taxes place an unfair burden on the poor, seniors and those on fixed incomes.
With 10 years of Brownley, racial tensions are still high throughout the district, there are discipline problems within classrooms and the school system's finances are in question. On her campaign materials, Brownley takes credit for many successes within the school district but I would argue that many issues remain and are not addressed.
Bottom line, if you like higher taxes and "agenda," I can't think of a better candidate than Brownley.
Kelly Hayes-Raitt also is running. Without Zane and SMRR's support, she's doomed.
Her ballot occupation listing as a "city women's commissioner" is a major faux-pas. She owns a public relations firm that specializes in political consulting. The intent of the ballot designation is to give an accurate description of what the candidate's primary occupation is.

Hayes-Raitt resigned from the Santa Monica Commission on the Status of Women in January to run for Assembly and the ballot designation was approved in March. And, "women's commissioner" is neither a paid job or her real occupation. When a candidate is this dishonest about the way she earns a living, she'll probably be dishonest about other things, too. No integrity. No vote.
Calabasas Mayor Barry Groveman knows how to get votes in Santa Monica. Showering us with lots of glossy brochures with big color pictures. It works every time.
His campaign literature strongly emphasizes that he's a protector of the environment. He also endorses universal affordable healthcare and good transportation management. He's a strong supporter of public safety. Groveman seems like a "common sense" kind of a guy, which is refreshing considering the social engineering that goes on here. However, there's one thing bothering me.
A couple months ago, Groveman made headlines for passing a ban in Calabasas on smoking in public places which sounds too much like Santa Monica's "fresh air" enforcers. I don't want politicians to mother me. So, Mr. Groveman: Stop acting like mom. There are bigger fish to fry and polluters to smoke out.
Nevertheless, front-runner Groveman seems to be the most balanced of the candidates and will get my vote.
Also running is attorney and teacher Jonathan Levey. His platform is similar to Groveman's on major issues such as transit, environment and schools. However, Levey was a former vice president to Catellus Development Corporation, one the largest, most powerful and politically connected developers in the country.
In his campaign materials, Levey brags altruistically about being a part of a project that transferred more than 400,000 acres of nearly worthless California desert land and created a natural preserve. Levey doesn't disclose that this "land swap" provided $56.5 million in cash and valuable land for his former employer, according to published reports.
It's even more interesting is to see who and what special interests are supporting candidates for various state offices including Brownley, Groveman, Hayes-Raitt and Levey. Their contributors and campaign finances are all online at: <http://cal-access.ss.ca.gov/Campaign/Candidates/>. Fascinating reading.
Required public disclosure will probably tell you more about who's running than all the glossy brochures clogging your mailbox. Be informed and vote intelligently.

COMMENTARY

GUEST COMMENTARY BY JOHN RUTHERFORD

The only problem? It's not da Vinci's code

The enigmatic genius Leonardo da Vinci was a Renaissance painter and an engineer. He constructed his paintings and drawings to engineering standards, as one might build a bridge. Besides being a great painter and sculptor, he was also an architect, inventor, musician and botanist, among other things. And virtually everything Da Vinci did was done with mathematical precision — including his works of art. Most assuredly, this was true of one of his most famous paintings, The Last Supper. The painting, which depicts Jesus' last supper with his disciples, is at the heart of Dan Brown's novel The Da Vinci Code, which has now been made into a movie.

Badly deteriorated, The Last Supper underwent a 20-year restoration before being unveiled in 1999. Having been stripped of layers of paint that were applied in earlier restoration attempts, only about 20 percent of the original painting now remains.

However, in 1994, five years before the restored The Last Supper was displayed, speculation arose about the identity of the apostle depicted on Jesus' right. Traditionally accepted as the Apostle John, the appearance is somewhat feminine. Thus, it was suggested that the figure, which appeared to be wearing a necklace of some sort, had the semblance of a slight bosom, was of slighter build and had longer hair than the other apostles, might be Mary Magdalene. Although unlikely, it was an intriguing concept at the time.

"In opposition to this speculation, a valid scenario posed from the outset was that if it is possible in a substantially deteriorated, 500-year-old painting to discover that one of the characters is not a man, but a woman," writes scholar and art historian Laurence Gardner in The Magdalene Legacy (2005), "then this would clearly have been most apparent when the painting was in its prime, and would have become part of the painting's history."

However, we now know that the 1994 Mary Magdalene hypothesis was based on an image that had been substantially painted over by other artists in earlier restoration attempts. And following this last restoration, we can now view the figure as originally painted by Da Vinci.

When planning The Last Supper, Da Vinci made numerous notes and some preparatory drawings. He split his apostles into four groups of three at the table, with Jesus in the center and six apostles on either side. Da Vinci described the individual apostles of The Last Supper in detail when preparing for the work. And in determining how to portray the younger characters — such as the brothers James and John — as distinct from the older, more swarthy men with beards, Da Vinci wrote: "Therefore make the hair on the head play in the wind around youthful faces, and gracefully adorn them with many cascades of curls."

As Gardner points out: "Although not described as being especially young in the New Testament, it became an artistic tradition to portray James, John and Philip as younger men than the others. John in particular is a mere youth in a good many Last Supper portrayals, and is even a young boy in a number of them."

In the world of fine art, there are various depictions of the Last Supper. Da Vinci elected to portray the moment in John 13:21, where Jesus announces that one of the apostles would betray him. The apostles then look at one another, wondering about whom Jesus spoke. Peter consulted another disciple, generally thought to be John, and "motioned to him to ask who it was of whom He spoke" (John 13:24).

Da Vinci's painting shows Peter asking this question. There is no sign of any menace between him and his neighbor, and the apostle John leans toward him, listening. In The Da Vinci Code, one of the book's characters explains that the figure of John is really Mary Magdalene. He then draws attention to the fact that Peter (sitting adjacent) is slicing his blade-like hand across Mary's neck. However, in Da Vinci's portrayal, there is no blade-like cutting by Peter's hand, which is simply resting gently on the apostle's shoulder.

In The Da Vinci Code, a "disembodied" hand "wielding a dagger" is mentioned. It appears in the painting between Andrew and Judas. Before the 1999 restoration, it was difficult to determine to whom it belonged. Now it is clear that it is Peter's hand holding a knife, not a dagger — presumably used during the meal.

"Fortunately, there were a number of individual copies of the painting made by students of Leonardo within the first 30 years of its life, before the decay set in," writes Gardner. "They each make it plain that Peter has his right arm twisted awkwardly as he leans behind Judas to speak to John. It was Peter who subsequently drew his sword and cut off Malchus' ear when Jesus was arrested at Gethsemane (John 18:10), and Leonardo's painting paves the way for this event." The scenario is that Peter conceals the knife behind him while asking John the name of Jesus' betrayer. The irony is that Judas is the man who sits between them and turns to listen to their conversation.

These same early copies — made around 1520 — serve to identify Peter's left hand resting gently on John's shoulder. They also depict Jesus' drinking vessel. The Da Vinci Code makes the point that Jesus should have had a Grail chalice for his wine, as suggested in the Bible. But the Bible makes no such claim.

In fact, when related to this painting, The Da Vinci Code relies on an out-of-date premise that was posited before the 1999 restoration, when the previous overpaintings had been removed and Da Vinci's original work could be seen. But The Da Vinci Code takes no account of this, while perpetuating an old Magdalene theory. Yet perhaps that is precisely the point of The Da Vinci Code. It is a novel. So why all the hub-bub over a piece of fiction?

Property owners prefer increased fees to bond

increasing their fees was a better option than a $95 million bond, which also was offered as an alternative. The polling, conducted in January by Fairbank, Maslin, Maullin & Associates, a Santa Monica-based opinion research firm, asked more than 400 residents if they would support a bond, an increase to the stormwater fee, or both.

“The capital bond and parcel fee together ... they thought it was two times the cost,” said Craig Perkins, director of City Hall’s environmental and public works department. “It sort of makes people nervous because it’s so much.

“Voters don’t like to pay fees because it sounds like a tax, and no one likes taxes, but it’s revenue that would be used to address our needs.”

City Hall hired the polling firm for $25,000 after officials began weighing their options in determining how to pay for the city’s first-ever watershed protection plan — a 15- to 20-year road map on how to prevent bacterial, chemical and solid waste from entering Santa Monica Bay through its stormwater system. The plan is scheduled to be unveiled before the City Council on June 13.

Before increasing the fee — which would cover maintenance and ongoing costs — or asking voters to approve a bond — which would pay for capital improvements — city officials wanted to take residents’ temperature on what they’re willing to pay for.

“From the polling, we think it’s very possible to get two-thirds the support to ensure clean water and clean beaches,” Perkins said, adding respondents were more supportive of the tax increase after the goals of the initiative were fully explained to them.

The watershed plan, which was drafted by Brown and Caldwell, an environmental engineering consulting firm, as well as city staff, has been in works for years. It’s a result of the Regional Water Quality Board’s recently-passed regulations that require cities to reduce pollution in Southern California’s surface waters, including Santa Monica Bay.

The standards require that each community develop a plan that creates measures to eliminate or mitigate stormwater pollutants. The local plan addresses how those measures could be funded.

And while Santa Monica is a leader in sustainable practices and stormwater pollution prevention, the new standards, which began this year, require tens of millions of dollars in capital improvements, as well as ongoing maintenance costs.

What officials found through the polling was that the public was more receptive to a fee increase rather than a bond, which officials late last year predicted could amount to as much as $95 million. They were preparing to put the bond proposal before voters on the November ballot.

But now, it appears that officials believe they can carry out the plan by doubling the stormwater fee, which currently generates $1.25 million a year. Following the increase, officials estimate the fees would generate more than $3 million a year — $40 million over the next 10 years.

A bond could be taken out later against that ongoing revenue stream to pay for capital improvement projects over the next 20 years, Perkins said.

He estimates that between $60 and $80 million worth of improvements need to be made in order to comply with state standards. While the regulations vary for each watershed, all of the standards — which mostly address how much trash and other pollutants can reach the region’s streams, rivers and ocean — must be met by 2015, officials said.

In 2006, Santa Monica and other cities are required to reduce the amount of litter going into the bay by 20 percent. By 2015, 100 percent of litter is supposed to be diverted.

Most of the capital work would be completed in 10 years. That will include many projects, including the installation of screens on thousands of catch basins throughout the city. Santa Monica already has hundreds of screens in place at catch basins, located curbside on many sidewalks, but there are thousands more throughout the city that don’t contain the screens.

More systems like the “continuous deflection separator,” one of which is located in a beach parking lot just south of the pier, would be constructed under the plan. The separator is a larger catch basin that can collect big items, like auto mufflers, Perkins said.

And within a couple of years, all runoff during dry weather months would be diverted to sewer systems — not storm drain outfalls that lead directly to the ocean. Santa Monica has outfalls at the end of Pico Boulevard, Montana Avenue and another one is to be built at Wilshire Boulevard. There also is one just south of Will Rogers State Beach, which is in the city of Los Angeles.

Perkins said he believes that an increase to the stormwater fee will be enough to fully carry out the plan — as long as City Hall can secure money from other sources like grants, and funding from the county, state and federal governments.

“We need $50 million in order to stay in compliance,” Perkins said. “If we slice that out over 10 years, we can revisit it again for the next 10 years.”

positive, uplifting stories about regular folks, and she's just the person to provide them.

"Right now, people don't take me seriously, like, 'Oh she's a pretty blonde.' There's this stereotype," Henry said during a recent interview at a coffee shop on the promenade, just before she was to tape an episode of the city news program "Santa Monica Update." "But when I'm old and gray, they'll be taking me very seriously, and hopefully, by that time I'll have some good messages to share."

With a master's degree in Spiritual Psychology from the University of Santa Monica, Henry hopes to use what she has learned about raising one's consciousness to influence the next generation of television programming, providing news coverage to enlightened viewers weary of all the mayhem and ready to ponder the purpose of life.

Henry, 35, spoke with the Daily Press about her ambitions, her thoughts on celebrity, troubles facing Santa Monica and what it's like to be a smalltown girl living in the big city.

Your résumé includes many different skills. Have you always had an interest in different fields of entertainment?

"Well, the funny thing about me is that it's almost like I can do a bunch of things pretty well, but not one thing that I totally excel at. So, I wear plenty of medium-sized hats instead of one big hat ... I've been told I need to pick one area and just go with it, but making that decision, just picking one thing ... I'd rather have a lot of irons to the fire. For me, I just love opportunity and possibility. I never want to close the door, make that decision. The root of decision is to cut off from, and I would hate to cut off six opportunities for just one thing."

What was it like growing up in Arkansas?

"Well, I grew up an hour south of Little Rock in a small town of 4,000 people, so I was a little bored. It's a place called White Hall. There wasn't much to do there, so I found myself getting involved in dancing and singing. Any opportunity I could find, I would jump at it. I wanted to do everything, cheerleading, choir. I was just into performance for some reason. I think I have this thing, 'Mommy, mommy look at me!' I guess I had this thing for attention, whether it was doing a backflip off the high dive or singing in the living room. I guess I've always wanted to be in the performing arts, entertainment, and then I got into broadcast journalism, which in a way is performing arts. But the hard-core journalists are like, 'No, this is serious journalism.' So I've had to tap into that serious side as well, which is hard for me because I feel like I have a little flare for entertainment. I'm a little bit more flashy, so it's hard because people are telling me I have to either go all the way to one side and really get my hair blonde, get the fake boobs and go the entertainment route, or die my hair brown, cut it real short and be a serious journalist. I just don't feel like I'm either one of those. I'd hate to go to one side or the other. My thing is I want to have my cake and eat it to."

How did you start singing?

"School choirs, church, in pageants. My dad always encouraged me to sing, 'If God gave you a gift use it.'

What did your parents do?

"My dad was in the Army. I was actually born in the Pentagon. My dad was stationed there. We're all from Arkansas. He just happened to be there when I popped out."

How did you get involved in pageants?

"I actually found out that I could pay my way through college by competing in pageants. So, I did and won enough money to pay all of my college tuition and get my degree in broadcast journalism."

What was the Miss America competition like? Was there much cat-fighting?

"That's what everybody thinks, but it's really like the Olympics. You're not really competing against the other women, you are really competing against yourself. Your main competitor is yourself, just getting out of your own way and building up the confidence to shine, allowing yourself to be your best and not becoming hung up on doubts you may have of yourself."

What was your first broadcast like?

"Oh boy. Well, I do remember my first broadcast, and fortunately, they didn't tape it (laughs). The prompter went down. It was a new television station, basically built from the ground up, so in the beginning we would have a few technical difficulties. It was a really great place to cut my teeth in the news business. Here I was, brand new, not really adjusted to maneuvering through a newscast and the prompter goes down, or we have the wrong footage. I didn't really know the finesse of explaining to the viewers, 'Excuse me, folks, but we are having technical difficulties,' and then continue with the story. So, it required me to think on my feet."

You started out as an anchor before you became a reporter. What was that like?

"Well, that's usually not how anyone starts out. It's typically the other way around. I was Miss Arkansas at the time when they started this station, so I was there from the ground up, hammering boards together, building sets. My co-news anchor was a seasoned news director so he could always pull me out of trouble. But it was fun because the viewers got to see me improve. People say you want to start out at a small town where nobody can see you make mistakes, but I made those mistakes right in front of my hometown, where everybody knew me and everybody was watching. But after about a year people were saying, 'Wow, Tamara. We have really enjoyed watching your progress, and now you're really good now.' From there, I got hired at one of the top Fox affiliates in California."

Where was it?

"In Fresno. I was there for two years."

What was that like, having to move away from your family to an unfamiliar town?

"Well, I didn't have to move. I wanted to move, because the station I was at was folding. I was still under contract, so I had the luxury of sitting back and dreaming of what my next move was going to be. I had always wanted to go to Los Angeles and be in the middle of everything, so I looked on this map and Fresno looked like it was close. It wasn't as close as I thought it was going to be, but that's OK. I applied for whatever jobs were available online in Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and Fresno. Fresno just happened to be the one to call. So I was so excited that they were going to move me across the country. I was going to be really close to L.A., and sure enough, after a couple of years there it was a short move to Los Angeles. I've been here ever since."

How are you enjoying life on the west coast?

"I love it. I go home every couple of years, most recently during Christmas when I filled in for a news anchor there. I always had this reoccurring dream of doing news there and I guess it came true ... I came in and in three days I learned how to produce the whole news cast. So, I produced, had total creative control over the newscast for three weeks."

You've made a lot of connections here?

"Oh yeah. I have great friends. I belong to the spiritual community here, people who are involved in spiritual entertainment. I have a lot of friends. It's funny that in a big city such as Los Angeles, I can still go out for a stroll somewhere and run into people I know. It's such a small world, even in the big city. It feels good."

What do you love about Santa Monica/Venice?

"I spend a lot of time working on my career. For me, that's my hobby. My work is my hobby. I love it. I wake up every day and hit the computer and submit myself for different film roles or other projects. I'm involved in different organizations and causes. I'm just so blessed that what I get to do every day is what I love to do. I get on my knees every day and thank God for the opportunities I've been given. If I get a phone call about a job, I immediately get on my knees and pray. The more you have that gratitude, the more good things start coming. You start living on that higher level."

You received a master's degree from the University of Santa Monica in spiritual psychology, with an emphasis in spiritual entertainment. What is that?

"I've always wanted to do a lot of positive news stories, buy my news reps would constantly say, 'Nobody wants to hear about positive news stories. They want to hear about the blood and the guts, the violence.' But, coming out here to the west coast, I found a groundswell of this need that is so neglected, to do things that make a difference, to do things that are uplifting, to do things that show people that you can actually have more power if you come from a place of love rather than a place of war and bombs. People aren't really sure about that yet, they're like, 'No, no, no, the real way to solve the issue is to bomb them or nuke them.' They don't understand the power of love. When man discovered the power of fire, it was this great triumph, but once you discover the power of love, it will spark the same kind of revolution all over the planet. If you talk to a lot of spiritual people, there is something major going to happen in the year 2012. People are supposed to be reaching this higher state of consciousness, and as we evolve to that higher place, there will have to be television programming to satisfy these people. People are already turning their televisions off because they are dissatisfied by all of the negativity. We are going to have to produce some wholesome, soul nurturing entertainment."

Do you really believe society is moving towards that higher level of consciousness. Some would argue that society is regressing?

"Well, a lot of times things have to hit rock bottom before they wake up. That's the sad part of it. Sometimes people need pain to grow. Sometimes we have to almost destroy ourselves before we realize we need to make a change."

It just seems that society is more and more focused on excess, celebrity.

"I saw a program on celebrity obsessions where camera crew followed around Angelina Jolie, and I felt the special really didn't go deep enough into what is obsession, and what is the psychological need of people all cross the nation, who have this hunger for celebrity so they can constantly project the inner parts of ourselves out on these figures who are supposed to be perfect."

Speaking of celebrity, who's the most famous person you've interviewed, or a person you've interviewed that you thought you'd never have the chance to?

"Ooh, that's a tough one. I guess I don't have an answer for that and the reason is, is because the direction I need to go in, one that would light my fire, is to say that I've interviewed the deep thinkers in my life. If I could interview anyone dead or alive, it would be (psychiatrist) Carl Jung. That's the type of person that rings my bell."

Most people would be happy with the glamour and glitz? Why not you?

"I think it has something to do with being born at this particular place and time. I was an accident. I wasn't supposed to be here. My mother was done raising kids. It's funny, she knows that exact moment I was conceived. It was the Fourth of July, when they were having real fireworks (laughs). I was born nine months later in April, making me a fire sign, and Aries. I just feel like I would not be hungry for all this information, if I didn't have this little empty hole inside of me. I think everyone has it, and they fill it up with drugs or alcohol or sugar, or whatever it is that's your vice or whatever it is you have to have ... I think the reason why I'm here is to be a light that shines. If I was just about celebrity, about my own fame, than I would be a black hole just sucking things in. I want to be a star, which reflects light out. I want to shine."

So, who are you wearing?

"You know, I'm not really into that. I'm on a shoe-string budget anyway. But I've been blessed with a lot of things that money can't buy. You're not going to believe this, but I don't have a car. I mean, I'm on a low budget. I'm doing things for CityTV, I'm working for the city. I feel like I'm doing things on a very small level, but they're meaningful to me. There's more to life than money."

How do you remain positive when you get turned down for a job?

"Well, you don't want to get to the top of the mountain too fast. When you're at the top, working yourself to death, you look back on this and realize these were the best days. That helps me so much to stop and realize this is the best time. Even when I'm eating beans out of a can or something."

What's next for you?

"I really just want to use the gifts I've been given to create a show called Santa Monica CEO. I think it would be so cool. There's so much money in one square block here, that we could cure world hunger overnight. I thought it would be cool to get all these Santa Monica CEOs on the show and have them talk about their businesses and what they're doing to give back. I give a scholarship every year to a student back home to help them follow their dreams like I did."

Do you get recognized on the street?

"You know, I don't really go out that often. I'm a big homebody. I have been recognized a couple of times, and it really does make me feel good."

Being a woman and a newscaster, you hear about it being difficult as you grow older?

"I do have that fear and worry that I better hurry up and find out what I want to be before I grow up, before I'm too old. But I realize all that is a silly fear. I think while I'm young I will do more flashy, entertainment stuff, but as I learn more about spirituality, I'll be the expert that comes on the scene to talk about these issues."

On the streets, safety, drugs are top worries

BY JOHN ROGERS

Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Franklin Davis may be homeless, but he has a spot of his own along the city's notorious Skid Row.

"I live at Sixth and Maple," the 44-year-old former dispatcher says as he takes a brief break from panhandling.

Sixth and Maple is a particularly grimy section of the 50 square blocks of flophouses and seedy stores. It reeks with the smell of cheap wine and human waste.

But it's not far from a police station, which Davis says make it a far safer place than most for the makeshift dwelling he has fashioned from his blanket and a shopping cart.

Safety is a paramount concern for Smith and the estimated 3,000 Skid Row residents who are too poor, drug addicted or mentally unstable to find their way into a cheap hotel or homeless shelter.

Earlier this month one of them, a 49-year-old woman, was stomped to death in an attack that Police Chief William Bratton said highlights the dangers faced everyday by the homeless.

Still, Smith and many others either shun the shelters or are kept out of them because they use drugs.

"When you live on Skid Row, it's very tough to stay off drugs," said Vincent Fuller, 48, a former truck driver. "The minute you step outside your door you see it, you smell it. ... You can buy a hit for as little as a dollar."

It was a crack cocaine addiction, Fuller says, that got him thrown out of a Skid Row hotel and onto the street. He has family in his native Texas but won't consider asking for help.

"I wouldn't even contact my kids for a long time," he said. "I didn't want them to know I was a drug addict on Skid Row."

He said he's been clean now for three months and hopes to improve his living conditions.

"I slept out front on the curb for two years before I came inside," Deborah Martin laughs as she gives a tour of the Yankee Hotel, a once notorious bar that has been converted into a bright, airy apartment complex that she helps manage. She is less forthcoming when asked what led her to the street.

"Drugs and prostitution," she replies curtly.

Curtis Price, who helps manage another complex for the nonprofit SRO Housing Corp., said it took him 16 years to get off the street. He says he worked hard most of that time and made as much as $300 a day recycling cans and loading trucks but spent most of it on drugs.

"The thing that finally turned it for me was the last time I was sent to jail," he said.

He then agreed to take a long-standing offer from one of the hotels: Leave the drugs outside and come inside.

Now the 52-year-old is a familiar figure in the neighborhood with his long dreadlocks and baseball cap, helping residents and settling tenant disputes.

"I finally straightened my life out but it took a lot of tough love," he said.

After century of decay, Skid Row endangered

- Police have conducted drug stings, making more than 5,000 arrests during the first three months of the year, including one in which actor Brad Renfro was caught trying to buy heroin.

- Authorities tried to keep thousands of people from sleeping on the streets, but a federal appeals court stopped the effort until the city provides adequate beds to house all its homeless.

- The City Council placed a yearlong moratorium on demolition of about 240 Skid Row flophouses while officials try to balance affordable housing needs against the conversion of older buildings to apartments that can rent for more than $1,000 a month.

If all the projects now under development are completed, the number of housing units in downtown could more than double to nearly 40,000 in five years.

Some of the estimated 14,000 homeless people on Skid Row fear they could be shuffled off to the suburbs to make room for those projects. An ambitious plan by a group called Bring L.A. Home proposes the use of temporary shelters throughout Los Angeles County.

"They don't want to get rid of homeless people, they just want to move them around to where people won't see them," said Franklin Smith, a homeless man who can often be found perched on a shopping cart outside a small toy store along Skid Row.

Steve Van Zile, an executive with SRO Housing Corp., which refurbishes old buildings and rents apartments for as little as $66 a month, said the housing boom is a concern for his nonprofit organization.

"Finding properties is always the issue for us," he said. "It is getting harder and harder," as the price of real estate rises.

Estela Lopez, who lives in the area, says the boom shouldn't be blamed for Skid Row's dilemma, although it may have focused more attention on a place she says has been in need of fixing for years.

"In my lifetime, the area has gone from being the Skid Row for people who were down and out, down on their luck and needing help, to an area that is violent, an area that is taking people's lives through illness and disease and drug addiction or through stabbings and fights," she said.

As executive director of the Central City East Business Association, a pro-business and property owners group, Lopez helps lead nighttime walks through Skid Row as part of her group's efforts to take back the streets.

"You'd be surprised how few people take us up on that offer," she said, noting only four did on a recent walk.

One of those who didn't was Smith, a former dispatcher for a trucking company.

Dirty and disheveled but surprisingly articulate after seven years on the street, he spends much of his time outside the toy store, where owners don't run him off when he asks passers-by for spare change and let him stow the wooden box he uses as his portable toilet behind the building.

Teachers cross border to meet demands

BY HEATHER CLARK

Associated Press Writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. Omar Zamudio thinks he is the ideal person to persuade Mexican immigrant high school students here not to squander their chance at a U.S. education.

Zamudio, a 31-year-old who recently came north from his home near Mexico City to teach math in Albuquerque, says he doesn't need to do anything other than present himself as an example — and the language and culture he shares with his students gives him instant credibility.

"If I can stay here as a professional, they can too," he said.

In a state where a quarter of the residents speak Spanish, New Mexico's supply of bilingual teachers has not met demand. That's why, in October 2004, the state signed an agreement with Mexican officials to bring teachers from that country here.

Zamudio is now one of 13 Mexican educators teaching Spanish-language courses for the first time this year in New Mexico. More than 140 teachers applied.

Once chosen, the teachers can remain in New Mexico for three years. This year, some are going back to Mexico for the summer, while others are remaining to teach in summer school, said Gladys Herrera-Gurule, the state's bilingual education director.

New Mexico is among the few states to have such a program, but it is not alone: California schools have been hiring Mexican teachers since the 1980s, said Edda Caraballo, a bilingual education consultant for the California Department of Education. California has 45 Mexican teachers this school year, and would hire more if it could find teachers meeting bilingual standards, she said.

Eduardo Holguin, president for the National Education Association in New Mexico, said that all over the country, individual school districts are hiring teachers from Spanish-speaking countries.

"The demand for dual-language teachers ... is something that certainly has gone beyond our borders," he said.

In New Mexico, the Mexican teachers, who have to meet the same licensing requirements as local teachers, will help until New Mexicans can be trained to fill the need.

"We cannot tell kids to wait until someone receives a degree," Herrera-Gurule said. "That would be a crime."

Mexican teachers say they can do a lot to help immigrant families and others who want classes in Spanish. For example, Zamudio said only a dozen parents attended parent-teacher conferences last January. But after he began telephoning parents, nearly all of them showed up for the March conferences.

"The demand for dual-language teachers ... is something that certainly has gone beyond our borders,"

EDUARDO HOLGUIN
PRESIDENT FOR THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION IN NEW MEXICO

"The culture is important because Hispanic people who live here identify with the teacher, the same language, the same culture, the same ideas," he said.

David Briseno, who directs the bilingual program for Clovis Municipal Schools and is the executive director of the New Mexico Association for Bilingual Education, said his district is sending a recruiter to Spain in search of bilingual educators.

Clovis, a farming and military base community in eastern New Mexico, hopes to hire teachers from Mexico in upcoming years, he said.

"Those teachers are going to be a better match for our kids than teachers coming all the way from Spain," Briseno said.

The Mexican teachers also hope to take home with them ideas from the U.S. education system.

Yolanda Estrada, 40, a math teacher at Van Buren Middle School in Albuquerque who comes from Guadalajara, said she hopes to urge Mexican officials to better enforce truancy laws after seeing how well they work here.

Zamudio said he keeps in contact via e-mail with his school's principal. He has suggested they publish a school handbook and he has matched up pen pals — Mexican students who write in English and U.S. students who correspond in Spanish — to improve students' foreign language skills.

The Mexican teachers also say the lack of parental involvement in American schools was a major change from the culture in Mexican schools, where parents pay for school secretaries and utilities and drive their children to school because there are no buses.

"They want to know what happened with their money, so they are involved with the schools," Zamudio said.

Slowed by pain, '70s icon Knievel still rides in public consciousness

BY MITCH STACY
Associated Press Writer

CLEARWATER, Fla. Evel Kniewel has trouble now just walking from his condo to the pool.

The '70s cultural icon and poster boy for fast living and derring-do is 67, his body broken by years of spectacular crashes and ravaged by a multitude of serious ailments. The king of the daredevils can hardly get out of bed most days, let alone straddle a Harley.

On bad days, Kniewel wishes he had gone into another line of work. On better days, he doesn't regret a minute. Lung disease sometimes makes it hard for him to talk, but his stories still drip with swagger. He can be kind and gracious one minute, irascible and profane the next.

Idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, an incurable condition, is scarring and hardening his lungs. He's recovering from a stroke and has diabetes. He's broken about 40 bones, is full of plates and titanium parts and is constantly in pain. Repeated concussions have affected his short-term memory.

The man who survived 300 perilous motorcycle jumps and once climbed into a rocket-powered cycle to fly over a canyon, now stays close to an oxygen tank, ingests 50 pills a day and sucks on lollipops that deliver fentanyl, a heavy-duty painkiller.

"People think I've been through something in my life from what they've seen on national television, my accident at Caesars Palace for instance," Kniewel says. "Look at what the hell I'm going through now. How much can the human body endure?"

Kniewel is preparing for his annual summer trip to his hometown of Butte, Mont., which celebrates his legend every July with the Evel Kniewel Days festival. The event gets larger every year, but for him the journey gets more difficult.

"It's awful hard for me to see him like this," says Billy Rundle, an old friend and executive director of the festival, which attracted 50,000 people last year to see the daredevil.

His personal appearance days might be numbered, but one thing's for sure — some 25 years after his last motorcycle jump, people still want a piece of Robert Craig Kniewel, American folk hero.

The man who made millions risking his life earns a decent living now at the kitchen table signing thousands of autographs for dealers to resell. He endorses a few products and until recently made regular paid appearances with a 40-foot trailer full of his motorcycles and other curiosities, including the wrecked Skycycle he used in the unsuccessful jump at Snake River Canyon in Idaho in 1974.

The Evel Kniewel Stunt Cycle, one of the best-selling toys of the '70s, is being sold again by Ideal Toys. The auction Web site eBay lists hundreds of Evel items for sale, from jigsaw puzzles to pinball machines. An Evel Kniewel rock opera is in the works, and the Country Music Television channel will examine his life in a program May 28.

He's done a couple TV cameos recently and still gets stacks of fan letters.

"No king or prince has lived a better life," he says. "You're looking at a guy who's really done it all. And there are things I wish I had done better, not only for me but for the ones I loved."

Death doesn't scare him. He's stared it down before, flying his motorcycle off countless ramps in countless packed arenas.

"I can't wait to meet God," he says, "and ask why he didn't make me go faster on some of those jumps, why he put me through all this pain. He knows I'm not evil."

Pact with New Mexico will ultimately clear way for utilities in Navajo homes

BY MELANIE DABOVICH
Associated Press Writer

PREWITT, N.M. For six generations, Tonya Rafael-Olea's family has lived on a homestead in west-central New Mexico, retaining a centuries-old rural Navajo lifestyle amid dirt roads, expansive skies and acres of open land.

But when Rafael-Olea tried to get water utilities connected to her home, she learned the house was illegal — an unauthorized homesite on state trust land — and that utility companies therefore could not install services.

An agreement to be signed Tuesday between the state Land Office and the Navajo Nation will legalize more than 100 unauthorized homesites, clearing the way for those families to receive utilities for the first time.

Rafael-Olea, 36, a silversmith and member of the Navajo tribe's Baca Chapter, was raised at the family home by her grandparents. She moved back to the area from Albuquerque three years ago with her two children and husband, Gabriel Olea.

She didn't have modern utilities such as water, electricity or sewer growing up, but she wanted to be able to provide her children a somewhat modern life in the cultural place of her ancestors.

Rafael-Olea said her grandfather had tried to contact state offices in Santa Fe regarding the homesite, which he knew was on state trust land, but eventually gave up. So the family hauls water 14 miles round trip to their home, where it is stored in a 650-gallon tank outside along with an outdoor makeshift shower.

Rafael-Olea restarted the process her grandfather abandoned — contacting state offices, figuring out the homesite's legal status and asking for outside help.

She contacted Gary Vandever, Baca Chapter president, and the family finally started getting some attention.

"This is my roots, my home. This is where we were all brought up," Rafael-Olea said, scanning the open land with a smile. "I know it's always been state land, but people back then didn't worry about utilities."

The Navajo Nation has held a grazing lease on 118,000 acres of state trust land since 1932. But before the lease was issued, Navajo families lived in unauthorized homes in the area.

State Land Commissioner Patrick Lyons said the issue came to his attention two years ago when a rural electric company wanted to run power lines to homes, but found the sites were illegal.

"That's what kind of got us kicked off and going. These people need basic electricity, water, (Public Service Co. of New Mexico) can put a gas line out there," he said. "To have a private company do that, they have to have a paper that says it's authorized to be there."

The Land Office, in partnership with the Navajo Nation, did a field survey in 2005 and determined the problem affected 127 unauthorized homes in 17 tribal chapters across 16,000 acres in New Mexico's McKinley, Cibola, San Juan and Sandoval counties, Lyons said.

With the help of state Sen. Leonard Tsosie and state Rep. Ken Martinez, the Navajo Nation received $250,000 from the Legislature, with $238,000 of it allocated to the Land Office for legal homesite status for the families.

Lyons said his office tied each revised homesite lease to its current agricultural lease, meaning the sites will be listed as improvements on the existing agricultural lease.

Vandever said it's about time the families got services.

"I don't think they knew how to get certain services, and then they let things linger on and on, even for a century. These people were there even before New Mexico became a state, some before the (Navajo-U.S.) Treaty of 1868. Most older Navajo people don't know they were living on state land," Vandever said.

The deal will include a 90-day grace period so any homes not included in the initial assessment can be added, said Jeremy Kruger, district resource manager with the Land Office.

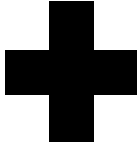

"Without people like (Rafael-Olea), we wouldn't have known what was going on out here. She put it on the radar screen," Kruger said. "Her family is simply saying 'We want to live out here near our culture, but why can't we also have the amenities of modern life?'"

In the meantime, the Rafael-Olea family is building an indoor bathroom and a more modern kitchen in their home in anticipation of the day running water arrives.

Rafael-Olea said she can't wait to hear a toilet flush.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK The Dixie Chicks’ Natalie Maines apologized for disrespecting President Bush during a London concert in 2003. But now, she’s taking it back.

“I don’t feel that way anymore,” she told Time magazine for its issue hitting newsstands Monday. “I don’t feel he is owed any respect whatsoever.”

As war in Iraq loomed, Maines told the London audience: “Just so you know, we’re ashamed that the President of the United States is from Texas.”

The remarks led to death threats and a backlash from other country stars, including a high-profile spat with Toby Keith. It also stalled what until then had been the group’s smashingly successful career.

Bandmate Emily Robinson said she knew right away the remark wouldn’t be taken lightly and got “hot from my head to my toes.”

“It wasn’t that I didn’t agree with her 100 percent; it was just, ‘Oh, this is going to stir something up,’” she told Time.

For band member Martie Maguire, the controversy was a blessing in disguise.

“I’d rather have a small following of really cool people who get it, who will grow with us as we grow and are fans for life, than people that have us in their five-disc changer with Reba McEntire and Toby Keith,” Maguire said. “We don’t want those kinds of fans. They limit what you can do.”

The Chicks’ hits include “Landslide,” “Goodbye Earl” and “Wide Open Spaces.” Their new album, “Taking the Long Way,” is due out May 23. The first single is “Not Ready to Make Nice.”

SEATTLE Pearl Jam’s new headquarters could face demolition because of the city’s plans to build a dump.

“We hadn’t even finished unpacking and moving into our new space when we heard about the city’s waste management site,” spokeswoman Nicole Vandenberg said Saturday in an e-mail to The Associated Press from Cleveland, where the band was on tour. “We were surprised and saddened by the news on many levels.”

Now, area residents — many of whom have worked for years to spruce up the area — are hoping their high-profile neighbors will help fight the plan.

“Eddie Vedder’s for the little guy, and Pearl Jam would have a lot of clout,” neighbor John Bennett told the Seattle Post-Intelligencer for a front-page story Saturday.

Vandenberg did not comment on whether the band would take a side in the fight. She said the band moved into the warehouse in December and learned of the plans in late January. Pearl Jam expects to spend most of this year touring in support of their new self-titled album.

Seattle Public Utilities would like to build a $70 million transfer station on the site, which is near the King County Regional Airport. It was the preferred site out of 1,000 considered.

The plan has not yet been approved by the city council.

HONOLULU Duane “Dog” Chapman, star of A&E’s reality show “Dog the Bounty Hunter,” has married his longtime sidekick, Beth Smith.

The sunset ceremony on the Big Island took place Saturday, a day after the death of Chapman’s daughter. Barbara Katy Chapman, 23, was killed in a car accident near her home of Fairbanks, Alaska.

Chapman gathered with his 10 surviving children — two of whom he had with Smith — and discussed whether to proceed with the wedding.

“They all decided unanimously they should celebrate the wedding and her life,” said Michael Feeney, senior vice president of A&E television network.

The wedding will be featured in an Aug. 8 episode of the show, about Chapman and his tattooed crew of fugitive-finders, which is now in its third season.

The self-proclaimed world’s best bounty hunter and Smith have been together for 16 years.

“I’ve already been cuffed and shackled by Beth anyway,” Chapman, 53, said before the ceremony. “She’s Italian and tough.”

Besides his trademark mullet, Chapman wore white jeans to match his white leather vest, boots and American Indian jewelry, representing his heritage. Boris Krutonog, the show’s co-executive producer, was his best man.

Smith wore an off-white lace gown with nude backing designed by Eduardo Lucero.

Favors include dog tags with the inscription, “Dog & Beth. Captured. May 20, 2006.”

The wedding and reception were held at the sprawling Hilton Waikoloa Village. The couple had planned to honeymoon in Fiji, but may postpone their plans because of the death of Chapman’s daughter, Feeney said.

ARUSHA, Tanzania Bono said Saturday that Africa must keep working to stop malaria, which kills more than 1 million people a year — many of them young children on the continent.

“In the 21st century, we have Africans using modern technology to find its own solutions to deadly malaria,” the U2 frontman said during a visit to A to Z Textile Mills, which makes insecticide-treated bed nets to keep mosquitoes away.

He also urged more wealthy corporations to help “save lives of the poor people.”

The 46-year-old Irish rocker, who has long complained that Africa’s problems get little attention in the news, is on a 10-day tour of Africa that’s already taken him to South Africa, Rwanda and Lesotho. He also planned stops in Nigeria, Mali and Ghana.

Malaria is spread by mosquitoes and causes wracking pain, fever and, if left untreated, death. It is one of the leading communicable diseases in this East African country.

NEW YORK It was a one-two encounter between Axl Rose and Tommy Hilfiger.

The rocker and designer capped a Thursday evening out at a new club called The Plumm in Manhattan’s Chelsea neighborhood with mid-night fisticuffs.

“There was an issue between the two of them,” Plumm owner Noel Ashman told The Associated Press.

The scuffle reportedly started after the Guns N’ Roses front man moved the drink of Hilfiger’s girlfriend, Dee Ocleppo.

“I moved his girlfriend’s drink so it wouldn’t spill,” Rose told the Los Angeles radio station KROQ on Friday. “It was the most surreal thing, I think, that’s ever happened to me in my life.”

According to the 44-year-old singer, Hilfiger, 55, smacked him in the arm and told him to put the drink back.

“He just kept smacking me,” Rose said.

Attempts to reach Hilfiger or a representative were not immediately successful.

Rose was there to play a surprise set for “Rent” actress Rosario Dawson for her 27th birthday party.

At the time of the dustup, The Plumm was packed with a celebrity crowd including Lenny Kravitz, Mickey Rourke, Kid Rock, Peter Beard, Molly Simms, Wentworth Miller, Ann Dexter Jones, Lydia Hearst and Damon Dash.

Rose did perform, and dedicated the song “You’re Crazy” to “my good friend Tommy Hilfiger.”

GRUENE, Texas Vandals toppled a wooden statue of the King of Western Swing. Now he has to wear a sling.

“We came in (Wednesday) morning, and he was laying on his back with his arm broken off,” said Clair Devers of the Lone Star Music store in Gruene, home of the 8-foot-tall carving of Bob Wills by local musician Doug Moreland.

Gruene is about 30 miles north of San Antonio.

The music store and a radio station offered a $500 reward for information leading to an arrest. The vandalism apparently happened early Wednesday and could not have been accomplished easily.

“This was quite a feat considering it took several men and a truck to get him up,” Devers said in Friday’s editions of the (New Braunfels) Herald-Zeitung.

The statue attracted fans who liked to get their photo taken with it. By Thursday, Wills had been fitted with a sling, but there were doubts about whether the carving could be repaired.

“Everybody who has come in is taking it really personally. I’ve had people say, ‘If I find out who did it, I’m going to get him,’” Devers said.

Wills, a member of the Country Music Hall of Fame who died in 1975, formed the Light Crust Doughboys in 1931. A few years later, he put together the Texas Playboys.

His hits included “Faded Love” and “Spanish Two Step.” In the 1940s, Hollywood discovered Wills, and he and the Playboys appeared in numerous movies.

LAS VEGAS One of the founding members of the legendary Motown group the Supremes will undergo heart bypass surgery Monday after being hospitalized with chest pains this week, her publicist said.

Mary Wilson, 62, remained hospitalized after being rushed to the hospital by a family member Tuesday, complaining of chest pains, according to her publicist, Jay Schwartz, in Los Angeles.

Wilson suffers from hereditary high cholesterol, Schwartz said.

Wilson, who sang with Diana Ross in the 1960s trio, still performs about 150 concert dates a year and has been leading a fight in several states to stop copycat groups from profiting from established musical acts.

NEGATIVE DECLARATION

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES MARINA
DEL REY WATER SYSTEM
MARINA DEL REY 18-INCH-DIAMETER
PIPELINE PHASES II AND III

The Los Angeles County Department of Public Works, on behalf of the Marina del Rey Water System, has prepared a draft Negative Declaration and Initial Study for the Marina del Rey 18-inch-Diameter Pipeline Phases II and III Project. The documents were prepared in accordance with the requirements of the California Environmental Quality Act of 1970 and the Los Angeles County Environmental Document Reporting Procedures and Guidelines. Based on these documents, we have determined that the proposed project will not have a significant impact.

The proposed project, located in the unincorporated Los Angeles County Community of Marina del Rey, consists of installing approximately 20,000 feet of new 18-inch diameter steel pipeline to replace the existing old and undersized 10- to 14-inch-diameter water main that currently forms a loop around Marina Del Rey. The project represents Phases II and III of a Water System Improvement Master Plan for the Marina del Rey Water System. Phase II will consist of installing approximately 9,500 linear feet of water main along Via Marina, Admiralty Way and portions of Fiji Way. Phase III will consist of installing approximately 9,800 linear feet of water main along Via Marina, Bora Bora Way and Fiji Way.

The draft Negative Declaration document and Initial Study are being circulated for a 30-day review period beginning May 22, 2006.

Copies of these documents are available for review at the County of Los Angeles Department of Public Works, Waterworks and Sewer Maintenance Division, located at 900 South Fremont Avenue, Alhambra, California 91803, and at the Lloyd Taber-Marina Del Rey Library, 4533 Admiralty Way, Marina del Rey, CA 90292. Interested parties may submit written comments to the County of Los Angeles Department of Public Works, Waterworks and Sewer Maintenance Division, Attention: Sami Kabar, P.O. Box 1460, Alhambra, California 91802, no later than 30 days after the published date of this notice. The final Negative Declaration will incorporate comments received during the review period.

Questions regarding this notice should be directed to Mr. Sami Kabar at (626) 300-3339, Monday through Thursday, from 7:00 a.m. to 5:45 p.m.

Upon 72 hours notice, the County of Los Angeles Department of Public Works can provide program information and publications in alternate formats or make other accommodations for people with disabilities.
