Malibu High, Lincoln lose 'distinguished' designation

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

SMMUSD HDQTRS A number of students with disabilities were not correctly counted during last year's round of standardized testing, forcing state education officials to withdraw Malibu High and Lincoln Middle schools' designations as California Distinguished Schools.

The highly-coveted designation is awarded to those schools that meet aggressive academic growth targets for all students, demonstrating progress in closing the achievement gap. Of the nearly 2,400 middle and high schools in California, only 259 were named California Distinguished Schools, according to the California Department of Education.

Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District officials said they submitted the correct student information to the state to be embedded in testing materials so scores could be calculated and filed in the appropriate student subgroup. However, for some unknown reason, the district's data was not uploaded properly so when tests were scored, the final results showed only a handful of students in the district with disabilities, raising a red flag. The majority of students with disabilities were included in another subgroup.

District officials alerted Department of Education about the error around October, the time when adjustments are allowed to be made. Updated scores were released in February of this year, but the error had not been corrected. During this time, representatives from the state were visiting Malibu and Lincoln as part of the selection process. This year, the selection process required schools to provide an in-depth description of two signature practices used at the schools that are replicable, and directly related to the success of their students.

Carrying out the dream

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

SM AIRPORT Linda Sullivan still remembers the day when good friend Griff Hoerner came into her office and announced a plan to create a butterfly garden in Santa Monica.

"The city needs a butterfly park and you're the one who can help me do this," Hoerner said at the time.

So it was only appropriate to Sullivan to find a way to carry out his dream after the local businessman and aviation enthusiast died in a plane crash off the Malibu coast last fall, prompting friends to collect money for the project and hand out milkweed plants — which attract butterflies — to mourners during the memorial service at the Barker Hangar.

With funding and a general idea in place, the only thing the project was missing was a person to see it through.

In came Michael Moritz, a 17-year-old Santa Monica resident and Boy Scout who was in need of a project to achieve Eagle Scout status.

"It was appropriate because Griff had

Auto shoppers consider GM's future

DAN SEWELL
AP Business Writer

HAMILTON, Ohio In vehicle showrooms across the country, questions about the future of auto giant General Motors Corp. add to the usual haggling and give-and-take.

Car shoppers have been kicking the tires a little more cautiously as salespeople try to ease their worries about service warranties, resale values, and even whether GM dealerships will still be around in another year.

The general manager of Rose Chevrolet in this southwest Ohio city gathered his sales force this weekend ahead of announcements expected Monday that will shape the outlook for a company long intertwined with much of America's daily life.

"Here's what we need to stress, guys," Ed Larkin said at the dealership along a busy highway. "Rose Chevrolet is going to be here; we're going to be here selling vehicles and here to service their vehicles. That isn't going to change."

But GM's troubles — the company is expected to file Monday for bankruptcy court protection — are a concern for those who own or are considering buying one of the company's vehicles in a recession that's eroded the financial security of many households. Customers concerned about being able to service those vehicles must consider GM's plan to force 1,000 to 1,200 underperforming locations to close their doors as the automaker tries to thin dealer ranks to mmake remaining outlets more profitable.

GM plans to cut more than 2,600 dealers by the end of 2010. The company expects to lose 500 Hummer and Saturn dealers when those brands close or are sold, and it expects 400 dealers to close voluntarily. Another 500 would be consolidated into other dealerships.

"This is a major purchase by consumers; they don't make it very often and they want more stability," said Michael Robinet, vice president of global forecast services for CSM Worldwide, an auto industry consulting company based in Northville, Mich. "Consumer loyalty has been shaken by a lot of factors."

Leo Chavez, a Chicago-area realtor, said he's feeling GM's pain himself. He's been trying to get out of his Pontiac Grand Prix, a discontinued GM line, but said its trade-in value has fallen and dealers use that against him in bargaining.

"I'm very disappointed with GM, I really am," Chavez, 30, said Saturday at Chicago's Grossinger City Autoplex, where he wanted to trade for a used Toyota Camry. "I have more faith (in) Toyota."

Gay marriage issue haunts Newsom's campaign

JULIET WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom has been linked to gay marriage ever since he directed city clerks to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples in 2004. Now he's running for governor and trying to broaden his appeal, but fate appears to be working against him.

The state Supreme Court's decision to uphold California's constitutional ban on gay marriage — and the prospect that an impassioned initiative to overturn it could share the ballot with next year's governor's race — holds consequences for candidates from both parties, but especially for the one most deeply associated with the issue.

The intensity of a statewide vote on same-sex marriage could make it difficult for Newsom to connect with centrist voters, millions of whom voted no on the issue last year.

"It certainly underlines Gavin Newsom's previous advocacy for same-sex marriage. I think that might be a two-edged sword for him," said Mark DiCamillo, director of the San Francisco-based Field Poll.

Other possible Democratic contenders including Attorney General Jerry Brown, Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and Lt. Gov. John Garamendi also support same-sex marriage. So does one of the three leading Republican hopefuls, former U.S. Rep. Tom Campbell, but former eBay chief executive Meg Whitman and state Insurance Commissioner Steve Poizner oppose it.

GOP Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger cannot run for re-election next year because of term limits.

Despite their liberal image, California voters have told pollsters repeatedly that they are divided over gay marriage. Even as they handed Democrat Barack Obama a 24-point win last November over Republican John McCain, they voted 52 percent in favor of Proposition 8, which overturned a state Supreme Court ruling earlier in the year that made same-sex weddings legal.

"If (Newsom) were to be the nominee, it would dominate the mainstream, the thinking

What about the kids?

Editor:

While the children of Hollywood celebrities enjoy themselves at birthday parties that can top $25,000, and little Suri Cruise's second birthday party reportedly cost $100,000, hundreds of thousands of poor children will lose health benefits because of state budget cuts.

This is yet another obscene fact of social/class injustice in our nation. This chasm will not be threatened by President Obama and the Democrats, who celebrated in Los Angeles at a $3 million bash that included a VIP dinner for two with the president costing $30,400.

Change we can believe in? Spare us.

Too many movies

Editor:

There was a terrible accident [recently] on Colorado Avenue and about Tenth Street. I also saw that there was a film being produced at that location at that time. I have seen how the large film production events are so out of control. This film event had large trucks and bright lights. The traffic cones put out in the road were done differently than when the city does street work. I went to the police station months ago about this and the officer there told me I should appreciate how much money comes into this city by the film permits. I was shocked by that police man's lack of thinking. My point is that the large film production events are disruptive to people who work and live here (such as loss of parking) and now I wonder if this accident proves it is unsafe.

Special ed issues still unresolved

IT SEEMS THAT THE OBFUSCATION of budget figures, costs and policy on special education issues is still "par for the course" at the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District.

The real problems started a few years ago during a fiscal crisis that involved a gag order placed on the district's outgoing chief financial officer. It was revealed at that time that the same confidentiality clauses were being required of parents of children in district special education programs.

Because the school board seemed incapable of responding to the special ed crisis, it took pressure from the City Council (which provides millions of dollars annually in special city funding to the district) to eliminate the gag orders and other abuses and begin a process to "clean up" complaints about district interaction with special education parents and the handling of special ed issues.

The Special Education District Advisory Committee (SEDAC), consisting of education supporters and parents, advises the Board of Education on the needs of the special education community. Hoping to assist the district through the current budget challenges, SEDAC formed its own ad hoc finance committee and began to work with a similar ad hoc group within the district's own Financial Oversight Committee to analyze district financial documents and determine the actual costs of the district's special education programs.

In the meantime, ongoing meetings to discuss the district's budget were being held by the school board itself. At these meetings, SMMUSD's administrative staff presented much fiscal detail and analysis of different scenarios in various areas targeted for cuts, but dropped the ball when it came to special education.

Staff claimed that a "total of $700,000 in savings" would result from "aligning budget with historical expenditures," but failed to furnish the same level of detail for special ed as they did in the information for other categories. As a result, many special education parents questioned the basis for the SMMUSD's claims of savings.

Written requests were made by the new ad hoc SEDAC finance committee and ad hoc district Financial Oversight Committee for current data on special education finances. Requests were submitted to the school board with the full support of SEDAC following its May 12 meeting.

The first request was that the school board direct staff to provide data to support their conclusion that a "total of $700,000 budget savings" will result — figures which run counter to the longstanding SEDAC position — and the recommendation of the superintendent's newly formed Working Group — that investment would be needed to achieve long term savings.

SEDAC's second request was that the school board direct staff to provide data supporting the district claim, "aligning budget with historical expenditures" may yield "expected budget savings" in "legal costs," "NPS/NPA (outside services) costs", and "instructional assistants." It appears that data regarding actual expenditures provided in the March 2008 Barber audit of district special education finances together with the update provided by the joint ad hoc committees contradict district claims of savings in these specified categories.

I reported in my Jan. 19 column "School problems continue" that the school board had already approved a record of over $700,000 in payments to law firms "to fight parents" involved in litigation over special education issues — representing $500,000 more than the amount originally budgeted.

On April 23 the school board approved an additional $75,000 to bring the total budgeted for legal fees up to $842,000, — an overage now of $642,000! By comparison, in 2006-2007, only $110,000 was spent on special education-related legal services according to board minutes. Of course, settlements and other expenses are always additional.

The May 7 school board agenda shows the district is $227,000 over the $1.5 million budgeted for non-public schools (NPS) services — another category where the district claims "they may see expected savings." In yet another category of "expected savings" — instructional assistants — longitudinal data from district documents show a steep increase in spending as tracked through a steady rise in expenditures for special education classified personnel.

"We just want to know what the real numbers are," says SEDAC member Claudia Landis. "We need to compare actual spending for this fiscal year to previous years real expenditures rather than comparing expenditures to projected budgets which is like comparing apples to oranges. It doesn't yield reliable numbers with which to take us through this difficult budgeting process. It's in the interest of the district to apply sound accounting principles, which our staff is capable of doing, if the will for it exists within our elected officials."

The school board must do the right thing and quickly approve SEDAC's requests. All this has gone on way too long and is a black eye for school board members as well as administrative staff. It's time to stop playing numbers games. The SMMUSD needs to resolve these issues once and for all and move on.

Area schools failed to meet growth targets for disabled

The district submitted information a third and final time. The data was received and processed correctly, showing that both SMMUSD schools failed to meet growth targets. But that was after State Superintendent of Public Instruction Jack O'Connell made the announcement, congratulating the schools who earned the distinction, which incorrectly included Malibu High and Lincoln.

The schools notified the state and eventually the error was corrected.

"It was just such an unfortunate series of events with the timeline … ," said Maureen Bradford, director of educational services for SMMUSD. "We've never had such a major data correction. It should have been corrected in February and we wouldn't have proceeded to the next step, which was the visitation. It's very unfortunate because these schools made it through the process.

"These are two incredible, high-performing and very distinguished schools by any definition and so it is really unfortunate. I'm confident both schools will apply again and be rewarded."

Malibu High missed receiving the designation by 11 points (having achieved a one point gain), while Lincoln dropped significantly in terms of scores for disabled students, dipping by 24 points instead of hitting a 10 point growth target, Bradford said.

Critics of the school district point to the lack of a cohesive special education program. The district has come under fire for its dealings with special education parents and their children, especially when it comes to developing individual education plans, which detail the goals set for a child during a school year and the services needed to help that child reach those goals, such as extra tutoring or a language specialist.

Principals from both schools defended their faculty and their students, saying the loss of the distinction, while disappointing, is not a true reflection of the work done at each site.

"We're all about doing the right thing," Lincoln Principal Suzanne Webb said, referring to her decision to notify the state about the data error. "I honestly feel we are just as distinguished today as we were a month ago … so we are just going to move forward and keep doing the programs we are doing. We are going to work even harder for next time."

Mark O. Kelly, principal at Malibu, said in an e-mail to parents that it was important to emphasize the positives and remember that Malibu is committed to ensuring all students achieve.

"We set high expectations for all students and strive to prepare them to meet these expectations," Kelly wrote. "We have support structures in place to help students and individualize our programs for students with special needs. We give thanks to our community who advocate for our work and ensure that we have the resources necessary to support great teaching and learning. Most importantly, we embrace our amazing students and thank them for trusting that we will guide and prepare them for opportunities beyond their days at Malibu High."

Dealerships face uncertainties played in the showroom of an Alexandria, Va., dealership Saturday as veteran car salesman Earl Jones, 50, talked about a year that has been "like being on a roller-coaster."

Foot traffic and sales have slowed at the dealership, he said, and customers have become bolder in demanding bargains on GM cars.

"People come in and they ask us for the most ridiculous deals," Jones said, but added he's going to stay positive as he keeps selling cars.

"They control what they've gotta control," he said of GM's leaders. "In here, I've got to control my destiny."

Linda Bentley, 61, scanned the car lot with a salesman for the 2009 Malibu she planned to buy. The retired federal employee typically buys American-made cars, but GM's situation nearly scared her off.

A mechanic convinced her she should stick with GM.

"He made it sound like it's an institution, it's not going anywhere," Bentley said.

Debbie Praeger is a stay-at-home mom in Mequon, Wisc., whose loyalty to a foreign brand illustrates another problem for GM. She just bought another Toyota Camry to replace a '98 version that was so reliable she never considered buying from one of the U.S. automakers.

"It's certainly not because I don't want to keep jobs at home. I do," said Praeger, 53. "But there are things people need to do to take care of themselves, especially if you don't have a lot of money."

Some GM dealers still fly giant U.S. flags and urge people to "buy American," but the foreign automakers have also become part of the landscape with U.S. plants and community involvement.

"I think that's mostly in the past now," Dennis Sullivan, a Miami University economics professor, said of buy-American appeals. "I tell my students that they can buy American cars made by Honda in Marysville, Ohio, and by Toyota in Georgetown, Ky."

Sullivan, who owns a Pontiac Vibe from an Oxford dealership that's gone out of business, noted that even in the Reds' Great American Ball Park in Cincinnati, birthplace of the first professional franchise in the sport known as "the national pastime," the vehicle on display beyond the centerfield fence is a Toyota Tundra.

Meanwhile, Ford Motor Co. continues to sell cars without the spectre of a bankruptcy proceeding hanging over it. The second-largest U.S. automaker is the only one of the Detroit Three not to take government aid.

At a dealership in Santa Monica, an outdoor banner hung from two palm trees assuring that its business is "30 years long, still going strong."

Steve Fischer, 56, a gold coin dealer from Los Angeles, was in the market for a new Corvette convertible. He was aware of GM's looming bankruptcy filing, but is confident the company will bounce back.

"They're not going to disappear," he said. "GM is too big."

To mine or not to mine?

Dear EarthTalk

Are plans to mine uranium near the Grand Canyon, as proposed by the Bush administration in 2008, still underway?

Denton Chase
Half Moon Bay, Calif.

THE OBAMA ADMINISTRATION HAS been quick to overturn several anti-environmental moves ushered in during the 11th hour of George W. Bush's presidency, but halting uranium exploration and mining near the Grand Canyon has not been one of them.

Last fall, Bush's Secretary of the Interior, Dirk Kempthorne, circumvented a prohibition on mining activities by authorizing uranium exploration within a million acre buffer zone around Grand Canyon National Park. Recent spikes in the price of uranium — perhaps due to renewed interest in nuclear power as an alternative to fossil fuels as global warming makes its presence felt — have led to a surge in applications for new uranium mining permits on otherwise protected federal lands.

Green groups fear that once mining starts near the Grand Canyon, similar destructive plans will also get the green light in and around other protected areas, including Arches National Park, Capitol Reef National Park, Canyonlands National Park and the proposed Dolores River Canyon wilderness area.

When Kempthorne first proposed opening up the land to uranium mining, several concerned parties — including dozens of elected officials, public utilities and Native American tribes — complained about potential threats to surface and ground water from such activities. They fear that uranium mining in the area could lead to the release of radioactivity and heavy metals like selenium into the Colorado River and its watershed, including within Grand Canyon National Park.

In lieu of federal action on the issue, green groups have taken up the cause. Some, like the Pew Environment Group, are lobbying President Obama to overturn the mining allowances; others are working the judicial angle. Three organizations — the Center for Biological Diversity, Grand Canyon Trust and Sierra Club — filed suit in federal court in October 2008 to block the Bureau of Land Management, which manages the area, from allowing uranium mining in what they consider risky and nationally significant areas. "This is an agency in dire need of leadership from the new administration," says Taylor McKinnon, public lands program director at the Center for Biological Diversity. "The Grand Canyon deserves it."

The battle over uranium mining near the Grand Canyon sheds light on an even larger issue: the 1872 Mining Law, enacted under President Ulysses S. Grant and still in effect today. Long a bone of contention along partisan lines, the law has so far opened up of some 350 million acres of public land across the western U.S. to virtually unchecked mining. Green groups maintain that the law, put in place to encourage westward expansion, no longer makes sense in the modern era of dwindling natural resources.

"Current federal policy that allows the mining industry to operate next to America's national icons and against the will of local communities must be changed," said Jane Danowitz, Pew's U.S. public lands program director. "It's time to modernize the nation's 1872 mining law."

Local Boy Scout creates butterfly garden

COMING UP MILKWEEDS: Michael Moritz waters the butterfly garden he helped create at Crescent Bay Park.

two sons of his own and was always very nurturing to young men, especially like Michael who have so much potential," Sullivan said in a recent interview.

A junior at Loyola High School, Moritz has been with the Boy Scouts Troop 2 in Santa Monica since the sixth grade. He began working on the Eagle Scout project in February when a group of Hoerner's friends proposed the idea of building a butterfly garden.

"I always had this fascination with butterflies and so the idea just clicked with me," Moritz said, adding that he grew up seeing his uncle's butterfly collections from all over the world, including South America and Madagascar. The collection has been featured in the Smithsonian Institution National Museum of Natural History.

The goal was to attract butterflies in their migration back north from their breeding ground in Central Mexico using the milkweed, a plant that Hoerner grew near his home in the Santa Monica Canyon, in the office of his construction company next to the Santa Monica Airport, and in areas off the runway.

The plant is considered vital to the survival of the Monarch Butterfly because it is the only plant on which the species will lay their eggs, Moritz said.

"The milkweed is getting diminished due to construction projects and people are getting rid of them because they look like weeds and they don't know any better," he said. "This is a way to help attract the butterflies and educate the public and create a whole new attraction in Santa Monica."

After receiving support from the Recreation and Parks Commission in April, a team of about 15 current and graduated scouts spent a day in mid-May clearing out a 30-by-30 foot section of Crescent Bay Park, pulling invasive weeds and preparing the soil to plant some milkweed purchased from a nursery. Moritz has since returned several times a week since to check on the project and water the plants. The park sits just next to the Shutters on the Beach hotel.

From conception to completion, the project took about 150 hours.

Candidates for Eagle Scouts must spend at least 100 hours on the project, though most spend considerably more time, some clocking in at 300 hours. The students are usually around 16 and 17 years old when they begin the process, said Steve Marcy, the scoutmaster of Troop 2.

"Nothing like this (project) has ever been done," Marcy said.

The project must somehow benefit the community and not the troop. Most involve refurbishing classrooms, churches or a public space. A presentation to the troop board, which consists of parents, is also required. Moritz has already made the presentation and is awaiting word on the approval from the troop's district.

Less than 5 percent of Boy Scouts go on to become an Eagle Scout.

"Eagle Scout to me is the ultimate completion of scouting," Moritz said. "I feel it represents my ability to lead, to communicate, to understand, and to basically act with morals."

Moritz, who wants to attend college on the East Coast to study medicine, said he hopes the butterfly garden, which is considered a demonstration project, will lead to the creation of a larger habitat in the city.

While Moritz never met Hoerner, he learned a lot about the late aviator through the project.

"He loved (butterflies) just for the way they flew," he said.

Hoerner was the owner of Overview Construction, working on projects such as the ice rink on the corner of Fifth Street and Arizona Avenue. He was perhaps known most for his love of the skies, serving in several aviation groups and teaching flying lessons.

Newsom touring central valley of most voters, especially those outside the party who may not hold as sympathetic a perception of gay marriage," DiCamillo said.

Two groups, Equality California and the Courage Campaign, are beginning to coalesce behind a 2010 initiative rather than waiting until 2012. They are targeting the same demographics Newsom will have to win, starting with voters in the Central Valley, one of California's most conservative regions.

The area was largely ignored during the failed 2008 campaign against Proposition 8 and is among the regions where Newsom has the least support. Nearly 69 percent of Fresno County voters favored Proposition 8.

Newsom already has been touring the valley and stopping in other moderate to conservative areas, such as San Diego, in a bid to expand his appeal outside the San Francisco Bay area.

During an April town-hall-style event in Fresno, Newsom joked about newspaper editorials that questioned his bid for governor.

"They all said, 'Good luck when you go to Fresno.' The issue of marriage equality ... you can't win. The state rejects it," Newsom said. "I didn't do it because I waited for a public opinion poll to decide what my values were. I said I'm open to argument, always, but I believe in equality."

Some supporters argue that Newsom can turn a 2010 ballot initiative seeking to repeal Proposition 8 to his advantage.

Geoffrey Kors, executive director of Equality California, said if the 41-year-old Newsom is the Democratic nominee, he would draw younger, progressive voters who support same-sex marriage.

"Every one of the Democrats running for governor is a supporter of full equality, but clearly Gavin has done a great deal for the cause, at great political risk," Kors said.

The group has not endorsed a candidate.

Democratic strategist Chris Lehane said every politician wants to be known as a courageous leader, but few ever get the opportunity to lead on an issue of major importance and then follow through.

involved with the butterfly project, recalls that during meetings with clients at the Spitfire Grill, Hoerner would often take back small containers of milk and cream from the restaurant, planting seeds and growing plants in his office. The office, which was located above the restaurant, would often be filled with butterflies.

"This (project) is a wonderful tribute to him because flight was so fascinating to him," Snouffer said. "Butterflies to him were a connection to flight."

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ In April, accounting clerk James Kauchis made a formal complaint to the personnel office of the county Department of Social Services in Binghamton, N.Y., demanding that he be compensated for a recent interrupted lunch hour. Kauchis had missed lunch when DSS offices were locked down as police secured the neighborhood surrounding the site of the April 3 massacre in which a gunman killed 13 people and then himself. Although DSS had pizza and beverages brought in during the siege, Kauchis felt that wasn't as good as a regular lunch hour.

■ Perverts Giving 110 Percent Effort: (1) Allan Mailloux, 45, was arrested for flashing motorists as he walked among rush-hour traffic in Madison, Wis., in January, on a day when the high temperature was minus-2 (F). (2) Police in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, investigated reports in February from "several" people that a man was driving up alongside motorists on Highway 78, and if the motorist was a lone female, he would speed on ahead, pull over to the shoulder, get out, and flash the motorist as she drove by.

TODAY IN HISTORY

1813 The mortally wounded commander of the U.S. frigate Chesapeake, Capt. James Lawrence, said, "Don't give up the ship" during a losing battle with a British frigate, the HMS Shannon, during the War of 1812.

1533 Anne Boleyn, the second wife of King Henry VIII, was crowned as Queen Consort of England.

1792 Kentucky became the 15th state of the union.

1868 James Buchanan, the 15th president of the United States, died near Lancaster, Pa., at age 77.

1943 A civilian flight from Portugal to England was shot down by the Germans during World War II, killing all 17 people aboard, including actor Leslie Howard.

1958 Charles de Gaulle became premier of France, marking the beginning of the end of the Fourth Republic.
