Samohi students stage gun violence walk out

Clara Harter

GUNS: Santa Monica High School students staged a walk out on June 3 to protest for stricter gun control laws and show support for the families affected by the recent school shooting in Uvalde, Texas. Students marched from campus to City Hall where they held a moment of silent to mourn the victims of gun violence in schools across the nation. They asked "how many more of us have to die before something changes?"

Local residents urged to vote in Primary Election on Tuesday

CLARA HARTER
SMDP Staff Writer

Santa Monica had a notably high voter participation rate of 68 percent in the last general election and local democratic leaders are hoping that trend holds true for tomorrow's primary, which features several locally impactful races.

Ballots have already been sent out to all registered voters in Santa Monica. They feature state candidates for U.S. Senate, U.S House of Representatives, governor and attorney general; regional candidates for 3rd District Supervisor, Assembly District 51, LA County Sheriff and Senate District 26; and several other positions.

Voters must postmark their mail-in ballots by June 7 or vote at an in-person center in order for

Preventing Violence with Jasmine and Angelina

Violence makes headlines. Violence prevention doesn't usually reach the front page or the television screen.

Let's take a moment to turn away from the horror of 18-year-olds murdering innocent people in Uvalde and in Buffalo.

Instead, let's remember the 3.7 million brave students who are graduating from high school this year in the USA, including the 700 here at Santa Monica High School.

I was deeply moved when I watched 250 of them receive awards and scholarships at the Class of 2022 Scholarship and Honors Program in Barnum Hall two weeks ago.

These 18-year-olds coped with homework and exams, Covid, online classes, and financial stress in many of their families. Some sought help in facing stress or depression. Teachers and counseling staff listened to their problems.

Now they will walk across the stage of SAMOHI's Greek Amphitheatre on June 8.

I felt so proud of our Santa Monica grads. They had learned to get along with others of many races and nationalities, sitting in classrooms together and playing sports or leading cheers for their classmates.

They participated in clubs made up of Black, Asian, Latinx, White, and Indigenous students. They worked together to do community service and made music together in band, orchestra, and choir.

Like 60% of high school graduates nationally, these outstanding students have earned college admittance and plan to start another 4-5 years of academic work this coming fall.

Consider two of these hard-working grads.

Jasmine Lopez and Angelina Rivas have not only been studying for their classes but also working to prevent violence. They were chosen for this year's Katherine McTaggart Scholarship for Violence Prevention.

Jasmine commuted into Santa Monica from an LA neighborhood that used to be plagued with drugs, gangs, and violence.

"The only thing that made me feel safer were the bars on all our windows," she wrote in her application essay.

But then her family started a local Neighborhood Watch group, got the Nextdoor app, and began hosting a monthly meeting in their house. They targeted a corner shop that appeared to be selling drugs.

"We called the police so much and put that corner shop on their radar," Jasmine recalls. "Sure enough, it was a human trafficking shop that laundered money as well as a warehouse for illegal drugs."

After a SWAT raid, the owner was arrested, the shop was sold, and the neighborhood became calm and safe.

At SAMOHI, Jasmine became active in student government, cheerleading, and the Latinx Leaders Club (president during her senior year).

When she was presented with an award for leadership in student government, another student leader described her as "not afraid to speak her opinion." She plans to attend Mount St. Mary's University in Brentwood, majoring in business.

Angelina Rivas is the other winner of this year's scholarship for violence prevention. She lives in the Pico neighborhood of Santa Monica. Both she and Jasmine held part-time jobs during three of their four years of high school.

Angelina received the McTaggart scholarship because of her work to combat domestic abuse and teen dating violence. She has been a peer leader for Margaret's Place, an intervention program to provide mental health services for students who have been impacted by violence in their home, school, or community.

She helped coordinate campus organizations on teen violence, sexual assault awareness, and mental health awareness. She handled publicity, making flyers, announcements, and wristbands.

Angelina will be attending Stanford University, and she wants to work for the Human Rights Council of the United Nations.

Have you found ways to counteract the violence we are hearing about so much in the news?

Perhaps you are focusing on gun control or better understanding among people of various races, but don't forget the graduates bravely moving on to build the future.

One small way to help locally is to contribute to the Katherine McTaggart Scholarship for Violence Prevention at Santa Monica High School.

Kathy was a licensed therapist who worked with at-risk teens and their families for 16 years as a school-community partnership coordinator in the Santa Monica – Malibu School District. When she died of lung cancer in 2012, her friends and co-workers set up this scholarship.

To continue her work and help students like Jasmine and Angelina, send your check to: Santa Monica Education Foundation, c/o SAMOHI Scholarships,1645 - 16th Street, Santa Monica CA 90404. Make it payable to SAMOHI Scholarship Fund, specifying McTaggart Violence Prevention.

Thank you for joining with us to support nonviolent solutions to today's problems.

Downtown Safety

The Downtown Santa Monica, Inc. (DTSM) Board of Directors and staff are fully aware of concerns regarding public safety along our beloved Third Street Promenade and the downtown district as a whole. We share those concerns and are continuing to adjust and develop new strategies to address them.

As the guardians of our downtown, it is our mission to provide a welcoming, clean, economically vibrant and engaging downtown for all to enjoy, and we take this responsibility seriously.

We believe that a layered approach to addressing public safety and homelessness is the right one, and that includes maintaining our multifaceted Downtown Ambassador Program, which includes hospitality, maintenance, outreach to the unhoused and public safety.

Recently, there have been calls to eliminate our dedicated, effective, compassionate and loyal ambassadors. We are here to say that this is not on the table.

In fact, the DTSM Board of Directors, which is composed of an equal number of City Council-appointed and Property Owner-elected members, is extending our ambassador contract with Block by Block, a nationally recognized leader in the industry with ambassador programs in nearly every major city in the country. They have a tremendous wealth of experience and have provided valuable insights as it pertains to addressing quality of life issues and homeless outreach. We have used those insights to make adjustments to deployment schedules and staffing levels so we can be more effective.

For those who are unfamiliar with the Downtown Santa Monica Ambassador Program, it has been in existence since the Property-Based Assessment District was established by a vote of the City Council and downtown property owners to supplement services provided by the City. The Ambassador Program has consistently been one of the most popular programs provided by DTSM, according to surveys, online reviews, and in one-on-one conversations with folks in the community.

Hospitality Ambassadors help visitors to the Promenade and elsewhere find shops, restaurants and public transit. They snap photos of tourists in front of our iconic Dinosaur fountains, escort employees to their vehicles late at night, find lost phones, lost keys, and yes, even lost cars and kids.

Our Maintenance Ambassadors are hard at work every day removing graffiti, stickers, picking up trash, cleaning stairwells, and our public restrooms. They pressure wash our sidewalks and doorways, and respond to calls from businesses who need a little extra cleaning along their storefronts. In the month of April alone our Maintenance Ambassadors removed over 60,000 pounds of trash and pressure washed nearly 318,000 square feet of public space.

Ambassadors were critical during the pandemic, sanitizing high-touch surfaces and providing face coverings while many of us were sheltered safely at home.

Our specially trained Quality of Life Ambassadors work with the City to identify and engage with those who are most in need; collaborate with property owners, businesses, and the police department's HLP team (dedicated group of SMPD sworn officers focused on homelessness) to devise strategies to reduce anti-social and criminal behavior; and deter camping with No Trespassing/No Sleeping signs in doorways.

Our Safety Ambassadors are specially trained to patrol Third Street Promenade, sidewalks, and alleys addressing quality of life issues, acting as a deterrent to unwanted behavior and activity, and responding to incidents called in by businesses and patrons.

DTSM operates a dispatch center to help triage calls and relay valuable information to our friends at the SMPD.

All ambassadors observe and report unwanted or criminal activity. But they cannot enforce the law. Only police officers can do that.

What they can do is provide an extra layer of support. Police Chief Ramon Batista recently sent a letter in support of our Safety Ambassador Program.

So when we hear people saying we should eliminate this program, we say they are clearly not aware of all the facts.

We share your frustrations, but the solution is not eliminating ambassadors. Instead, we need to all collaborate on finding other ways to make an impact. We call on the City Council, elected officials at the County and State level to properly fund the creation of affordable housing, dedicated resources to homeless outreach, mental health services, and drug and alcohol treatment, and to reconsider some of the policies that have emboldened people to commit crimes.

DTSM was never intended, nor should it be expected to, solve the many social problems we face today, some of which have been exacerbated by the pandemic. What we are committed to, however, is playing a role in supporting those who have far more authority, and, frankly, more funding to make an impact.

We applaud the City's recent efforts to dedicate more police officers to the Promenade, and enhance patrols of the downtown parking structures. We support the City's dedication to exploring all options to solve homelessness, and the City Council's allocation of resources to enhance outreach efforts. Santa Monica has always been a leader on this issue, and because we are outfront, we are often targets of criticism. It is easy to criticize. It is much harder to do the real work necessary.

We're here to say that we continue to remain allies in the fight. We reaffirm our commitment to ensuring your downtown remains Santa Monica's living room, a space that you can feel safe in, relax, laugh, love and thrive.

How Can Commercial Buildings Become Needed Housing?

BY JASON WARD

The state recently ordered cities across Southern California to plan for the construction of 1.3 million more housing units in the next eight years, including 8,874 in Santa Monica and more than 450,000 in the City of Los Angeles. Converting commercial buildings into housing is one approach that has been seized upon by local policymakers, current L.A. mayoral candidates, the county, and civic groups.

Recent research conducted by the RAND Center on Housing and Homelessness in Los Angeles suggests that such adaptive reuse of buildings can play a meaningful role: Conversion of a mix of hotel/motel, office, and retail properties could provide 9% to 14% of the needed additional housing countywide. But this outcome would likely only occur under optimal conditions. Numerous financial and regulatory barriers stand in the way of this potential yield.

At current market prices for commercial real estate and apartment buildings, the financial feasibility of adaptive reuse projects varies widely. For example, the average price per room of economy hotel/motel properties in the Los Angeles region is substantially lower that of studio apartments. This positive gap ranges from $125,000 to $250,000. So hotel/motel conversions could consistently "pencil," or be a financially attractive proposition, to developers.

Office properties, on the other hand, generally command higher prices. The average market price of a two-bedroom apartment is significantly lower than that of a similar-sized office space. This size of this negative financial gap ranges from $100,000 to $400,000 per unit, suggesting that converting office properties to family housing may rarely pencil out for developers.

Unfortunately, the less expensive hotel/motel properties are often in lower-income areas that are remote from many jobs. Areas such as West LA, where proximity to jobs and other factors would make additional housing a socially beneficial proposition, have a concentration of higher-priced office space. Subsidies or incentives might be needed to make adaptive reuse work financially in these higher-resource areas.

It is also possible for existing owners of commercial properties to convert their own buildings to residential use. The attractiveness of this proposition may increase if, for example, persistently high vacancy rates and the growth of permanent remote work policies continue to reduce demand for office space.

Adaptive reuse can be incredibly effective. In the early 2000s, for instance, L.A.'s Downtown Adaptive Reuse Ordinance reduced regulatory barriers and created a host of incentives. It was credited with spurring the production of thousands of units of housing in old office buildings and disused hotels.

Cities might be able to speed some projects along by streamlining approvals for adaptive reuse of commercial buildings that have dual zoning for residential use. Such conversions currently endure a cumbersome discretionary approval process triggered by the change of use.

Additionally, creating a dedicated funding stream for adaptive reuse projects that include affordable units and are sited in areas where new housing could yield large social benefits may incentivize new projects where they are needed most.

Project Homekey, a state-funded program, led to the conversion of scores of hotel/motel properties into housing for people experiencing homelessness during the pandemic. That success showed how quickly adaptive reuse can provide desperately needed housing — and how affordably. Early evidence suggests that Homekey developments are 30% to 40% cheaper than constructing new permanent supportive housing projects.

Adaptive reuse has tremendous promise for making a dent in Southern California's housing shortage, but realizing its full potential will require thoughtful and timely policymaking.

Jason Ward is an associate economist at the nonprofit, nonpartisan RAND Corporation and associate director of the RAND Center on Housing and Homelessness in Los Angeles.

PS3

this demolition has been ongoing, a Hail Mary court case was proceeding through LA County Superior Court, launched by an organization of local business owners and spearheaded by business owner John Alle.

The case — Santa Monica Bayside Owners v. City of Santa Monica et al. — argued the demolition of PS3, located on 4th Street between Santa Monica Boulevard and Arizona Avenue, needed further study.

On Thursday, June 2, Appellate Court Justices Dennis Perluss, John Segal and Gail Ruderman Feuer granted the City of Santa Monica and California Coastal Commission's motion to dismiss that case.

Santa Monica Bayside Owners (SMBOA)'s original case argued the project's environmental impact report, or EIR, was not comprehensive and did not meet California Environmental Quality Act standards, since it did not address the housing project specifically, but had been done before there were plans to build housing at that location.

That filing, which also requested a stay in the demolition, was thrown out after an attorney from SMBOA's legal counsel, the law office Ervin Cohen & Jessup LLP, missed a filing deadline.

It was then appealed, but Superior Court Judge Mitchell Beckloff did not permit demolition to be stalled pending the appeal. Shortly thereafter, city contractors began demolition work.

As of Wednesday, June 1, major demolition had been underway for more than a week. Visually, it appeared about half of the 337-space structure had been turned to rubble.

According to court documents, in earlier filings arguing that demolition should be paused, SMBOA "unequivocally asserted" that, were demolition to be allowed, the case would be rendered moot. But, as demolition began, SMBOA's argument shifted, the three judges wrote: "SMBOA asserts its appeal and underlying action are not moot because, if its appeal is successful, on remand the superior court may order measures that result in changes or modifications of the project. SMBOA's current position is 'totally inconsistent' with its earlier position that 'start[ing], if not complet[ing], demolition of Parking Garage #3[ ] [would] render[ ] any judgment in favor [of] Petitioner moot.'"

Perluss, Segal and Feuer, in their final decision, stated SMBOA's new argument in its appeal, was "disingenuous," offering "no persuasive argument."

"Even if the appeal were successful and the matter remanded for further proceedings, in SMBOA's own words, having been unable to prevent the demolition of Parking Garage #3, 'judgment in Petitioner's favor will be ineffectual,'" judges wrote. "The City's motion to dismiss is granted." The City and Coastal Commission were also able to recover their costs, judges wrote.

ELECTION

their votes to be counted. On Election Day, vote centers will open at 7 a.m. and close by 8 p.m. and vote-by-mail drop boxes will also close at 8 p.m.

For state and federal positions, the top two vote getters in the primary will move on to the November general election. For County positions, election candidates may win office in the primary if they get more than 50 percent of the vote. If a single candidate fails to receive a majority, the top two vote getters will advance to the general election.

"We have several open seats in our region—County Supervisor, State Assembly, County Sheriff—where Santa Monica's voice really needs to be a big part of those conversations and so that's why it's really important that whatever candidate you prefer, you get out there and show your support for them so that our voice is represented in our choices in November," said Jon Katz, president of the Santa Monica Democratic Club.

When it comes to key regional races, 3rd District Supervisor and LA County Sheriff are gearing up to be the most competitive.

There is no incumbent on the ballot for the 3rd District Supervisor as three term Supervisor and Santa Monica resident Sheila Kuehl is not running for re-election. Los Angeles County is divided into five supervisorial districts with each Supervisor representing approximately 2 million people in their respective district.

"Just imagine being in a room with four of your friends and whatever you decide affects ten million people, so it's just so powerful, so important," said Katz. "We need to make sure we have somebody that represents us at the table because we're going from having a Santa Monican in Sheila Kuehl to somebody who's not from Santa Monica."

Currently, the three highest fundraising candidates for 3rd District Supervisor are 27th District State Senator Henry Stern, 18th District State Senator Bob Hertzberg and West Hollywood Mayor Lindsey Horvath.

In the Sheriff's race, incumbent Alex Villanueva is running against eight different challengers. While Villanueva easily swept into power in 2018, he has generated controversy during his first term due to his handling of deputy gangs and use of force as well as his political feuds with elected officials.

"People are trying to see who do we want as our Sheriff and do we have anybody in here who is truly reflective of our values? Or maybe not? I mean, it's a very tough job. He's [Villanueva] certainly had his hands full over the last four years, so people are definitely looking at that one and we'll see who ends up, if anybody, as Villanueva's challenger," said Katz.

Santa Monica resident and current State Senator Ben Allen is running for reelection unopposed, while Rick Chavez Zbur is the favored candidate for Assembly District 51, having outraised his single competitor Louis Ambramson approximately six to one.

Election results will be updated on a rolling basis at https://results.lavote.gov/ starting when voting closes at 8 p.m.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (June 6)

Risking with your heart feels dangerous, but fortune favors your spontaneous expressions of love as well as the daily routines that hold your relationships in good stead. Other highlights: the happy conclusion of months of struggle, assets changing into a more useful and liquid form and a team effort that nets a trophy. Aries and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 10, 3, 33, 19 and 45.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You started at your goal and planned backward. Now it seems some of the steps aren't adding up to your desired result. The plan needs adjustment but it will still work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Avoid severe approaches to problem solving. Even the larger problems will be solved with small moves today. Also, note that many things are better regulated than prohibited.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Drawing a hard line with yourself isn't always the way. If your rules for yourself are causing you stress, consider changing them. The same goes for beliefs. A slight bend could make all the difference.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Attraction will depend not on what you do but how you do it. People who need care will be drawn in by your tenderness, but so will people who just prefer to be treated well.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). As a person of taste and style, you're interested in the story of a thing and the deeper aspects of what it does and means. If anyone with money can have it, you're not that interested.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The day gives you options that come with a ticking timer. In a way, the constraint only helps matters, as it ensures a decision is made, possibly by default.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You want to bring joy to someone. Make no assumptions on the matter. What qualifies as enjoyable to them is not what you would have chosen for yourself. Regardless, if you can make them smile, you'll be happy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Good manners, common courtesy and conforming to expectations will convey respect. Any breach in this regard will pack more punch than usual, but follow the rules and all goes smoothly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You're skilled at turning negativity around on itself. Instead of thinking you're not good at a task, you think, "This one isn't coming easily, but I'm good at many other things. If it's worth it, I'll work on it and improve."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Routines are comfortable; ruts aren't. Sprinkle in surprises, detours and new experiences. Even when things are going quite well, you'll benefit from changing it up.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). There's nothing wrong with negative feelings. In fact, they can lead to your best discoveries. A pang of dissatisfaction will lead to trying something new.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Even though you're a social creature at heart, your solitude is precious to you. Today's solo experience might just be so sweet that no other company can compete.
