UNDIGNIFIED DEATHS

A 61-year-old retired biochemist who had been teaching high school chemistry in recent years was killed while stirring homemade marmalade on his kitchen stove, after inadvertently inhaling carbon monoxide from the stove's faulty gas line (Walk, England, April). And a 16-year-old honor-roll student, and member of her school's anti-drinking organization, passed out and died at her cousin's birthday party, with an empty vodka bottle nearby and a blood-alcohol reading of 0.439 (legal limit, 0.08) (Bartonville, Ill., April).

Funeral home seals Reagan legacy

Presidential circus comes to town

BY CAROLYN SACKARIASON

Daily Press Staff Writer

MID CITY — Thousands of people converged on this quiet residential neighborhood over the past two days to pay their respects to one of the most popular presidents in U.S. history.

The blocks surrounding Gates Kingsley & Gates Moeller-Murphy Funeral Home at the corner of 20th Street and Arizona Avenue have been closed to traffic since early Saturday afternoon when it was announced that former President Ronald Reagan died at his Bel Air home.

Reagan's body was transported to the funeral home a few hours after he died. When news hit that Reagan had passed on and his body was being brought to Santa Monica, hundreds of people began congregating at the intersection.

Cathy and Frank Bennett, and their friend Tom Gorman, who all live north of Montana Avenue, saw the news on TV and immediately came to the funeral home with American flags in tow. They were some of the first people to arrive on the scene — with only a few news trucks already there and broadcasting live. Within a couple of hours, news trucks lined the middle lanes of 20th Street and Arizona Avenue. By Sunday afternoon, the media outnumbered citizens by 3 to 1.

"I could have watched it on TV, but I wanted to contribute," said Gorman, who works in the music industry. "I'm here for the celebration of a life that accomplished a lot and was well lived — he left a mark on the planet."

Santa Monica resident Nancy Morse, who was walking off her lunch, stuck around to watch the events unfold. She said she was surprised that President Reagan would have chosen Santa Monica.

"I don't live in that upscale of a neighborhood," she said. "I would

MID-CITY — The last two men to see former President Ronald Reagan spent the weekend carefully preparing the 40th president's body in a Santa Monica funeral home.

a series of funeral events in California and Washington, D.C., which will conclude with a Friday burial at the Ronald Reagan Library in Simi Valley.

Gates Kingsley & Gates Moeller-Murphy, at Arizona Avenue and 20th Street, is one of the closest funeral homes to the Reagans' Bel Air home. It's also used frequently by the grieving families of Hollywood celebrities and high-profile political players. Reagan had personal ties to it.

"When the president returned to California he was asked to choose a funeral home, and this one fit the bill," said Joanne Drake, a spokeswoman for the Reagan family, who have grieved privately since the 93-year-old president died Saturday afternoon.

Gates Kingsley & Gates Moeller-Murphy was founded in 1932. Mark Gates, son of the founder and later funeral home director, served as mayor of Santa Monica decades ago. His son was chairman of the 1970 Los Angeles County reelection campaign for Reagan as governor.

For Boetticher and Ross, the task of preparing Reagan was humbling. "It's a huge responsibility, and SMC — A recent study suggests that there aren't enough recreational facilities in Santa Monica — but for $175 million in taxpayer money, the shortage can be met, officials said.

Recognizing that Santa Monica College and the Santa Monica and Malibu communities face a shortage of parks, physical education, recreational and other facilities, college officials are considering a $175 million bond measure for the fall ballot to fund a wide range of local projects. The projects would use "cooperative partnerships" — formal agreements with other entities — to operate the facilities.

SMPD investigates mysterious weekend shooting

By Daily Press staff

14TH STREET — Santa Monica Police responded to reports of an assault with a deadly weapon Saturday night. Officers arrived to investigate a call from the 1400 block of 14th Street at around 7:20 p.m.

The victim was taken to a local hospital by a family member and is listed in stable condition.

The victim told officers that he did not see or hear anything and could not offer any further details on the incident.

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

Kiwanis steps up for Olympic

By Daily Press staff

Olympic High School graduates now have a reason — and a place — to celebrate. Students were without a venue for the senior celebration to honor their achievement of obtaining a high school diploma.

After reading about their plight in an article on April 30 in the Santa Monica Daily Press, members of the Kiwanis Club of Santa Monica wanted to support the students. Sympathetic to their cause, the club membership wanted to acknowledge the effort the students put forth to become high school graduates.

Olympic is an alternative high school, and its student population is made up of vulnerable troubled teens and those with special education needs. Principal Suzanne Toyryla and her staff carry out a curriculum that provides these kids with a comprehensive community-based education, school officials said.

The club will provide the refreshments and appetizers for the celebration, and several members will be on hand to help host the event on June 9, at the Santa Monica Family YMCA community room, 1332 Sixth St.

Students on display

By Daily Press staff

Nineteen students in the highly selective SMC Art Mentor Program are showing their work at the college’s Pete & Susan Barrett Art Gallery.

The program is a year-long program for gifted visual art and art history students, selected by SMC’s art department faculty. The opening reception for the exhibition, “Available Space,” will be from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. on June 19 at the gallery, located at SMC’s Madison campus on Santa Monica Boulevard at 11th Street.

This year’s participants have wide-ranging future plans. Some will transfer to the Art Institute of Chicago, Rhode Island School of Design and UCLA. Others will continue studies at SMC or pursue gallery exhibits, art residencies, graduate school, art education, public art and film.

The works will be on exhibit from June 19 to July 17. They include paintings, sculptures, video, mixed media, photography and installation.

“We speak for the program’s entire faculty when we commend our students on both their individual and collaborative work, and anticipate their success as our future colleagues,” said Maurizio Barattucci, SMC art department chair.

Gallery hours are noon to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday, and noon to 8 p.m. Thursday. For more information, call (310) 434-3434.

U.S. Constitution revisited

By Daily Press staff

If you could add one amendment to the U.S constitution, what would it be and why?

High school students in the Los Angeles area were asked that question as part of the annual Ira H. Lurvey Memorial Writing Competition. The winners are students from Venice and Santa Monica high schools.

Rachel de Cou, a 12th grade student at Venice High School, won a $500 U.S. savings bond because she believes gender equality should be an amendment.

Nicole O’Keefe, also from Venice, received second prize for her essay “Revisiting the Equal Rights Amendment” and won $250 in savings bonds.

Should immigrants be allowed to run for president? Gilda De La Cruz from Santa Monica High school believes so, and that’s why she won third prize, a $100 savings bond.

Prizes were awarded on Saturday at Temple Mishkon Tephilo in Venice. The ceremony was highlighted by Ina Jaffe, correspondent for National Public Radio.

The Ira H. Lurvey Memorial Writing Competition is in its first year and is a joint venture between the Mishkon Tephilo congregation and the Los Angeles Times-affiliated Times in Education.

The judges include lawyers and journalists. Entries were judged on basis of brevity, clarity and insight. For more information, visit www.writingcompetition.org or call Mishkon Tephilo at (310) 392-3029.

The Q Line

Recognizing that Santa Monica College and the Santa Monica and Malibu communities face a shortage of parks, physical education, recreational and other facilities, college officials are considering a $175 million bond measure for the fall ballot to fund a wide range of local projects. Two years ago, voters passed a $160 million bond measure at SMC that funds nearly two dozen projects, and the local school district recently completed building and renovating nearly $100 million worth of new facilities using money that was generated by a school bond passed by voters in 1998.

So this week, Q-line wants to know, “Would you support another bond measure to build more facilities at SMC and local schools? Why or why not?”

Call (310) 285-8106 with your responses before Friday at 5 p.m. We’ll print them in the weekend edition. Please try to limit your comments to a minute or less. It might help to think first about the wording of your response.

OPINION

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thinking outside the cardboard

Editor:

I'm writing about the letter to the editor (SMDP, June 1, page 4). These poor homeless youths who are living on the street reading the paper and offended by the opinions of others. You would think that in the time that they wrote these letters they could have created their own resumes, or if they have resumes, in the time they wrote these letters, they could have faxed to at least 20 different employers in the area. They could go to Chrysalis or any number of other organizations on the Westside that help homeless people find houses, jobs and medical care. But they chose to write a letter to the editor and express their offense in hearing the opinions of the housed. Debbie writes "you can always offer homeless people a job instead of looking at us like nothing." Well, I can tell you Debbie, as a career counselor for the last five years, I have many times showed job listings, told homeless about where to get work for the day, the week, or to get a job part-time or full-time, and have even handed out resources that list addresses from organizations that help people. And I'm here to tell you that most homeless people that I have spoken to repeatedly keep asking me for money and often don't even accept a list of resources. They won't even take the paper that I've made time to put together for them. Why? I don't know. But I do know that something has to be done.

I came up with an idea. Why don't we opened a volunteer office, run by volunteers, that is the office of "Homelessness and Health and Employment"?

And every person who comes to Santa Monica has 30 days to find a place to live that is legal, meaning that it has an address where mail can be received.

Those who do not find a place to live in 30 days would register with City Hall as a homeless person. Then they would be asked to join the homelessness and health and employment program or leave the city. This would be for those people not only willing to work but also able to work.

For those that are homeless who cannot work for various reasons, we would call to different homeless shelters throughout Southern California, find a bed, and send them to that center with that bed, at no cost to them.

This is true management of homelessness. This is a humane way to deal with the stress in our community that is increasing and affecting both the homeless and the homed. Neither of whom wants that added stress or should have to deal with it.

Sucking services away from the real homeless?

Editor:

Regarding the ongoing letters to the editor dialogue concerning your profile of "Cancer" Alucard (SMDP, May 24, page 1).

Has anybody noticed that Alucard is "Dracula" spelled backwards?

This vampire and his friends (and the professional panhandlers which populate the Promenade) are a good part of the reason for the current anti-homeless climate in our once-friendly (at least, tolerant) city. They suck up food and services that might otherwise help truly homeless persons to return to mainstream society.

I hope in the future you will portray the real face of Santa Monica's homeless. To meet and learn about Santa Monica's truly homeless, I invite you (and your readers) to visit a meeting of Side by Side, a 10-year-old coalition of housed and homeless Santa Monica citizens. (The first, third and fifth Wednesday of each month, 7 p.m., Ken Edwards Center on Fourth Street.)

For more information regarding the homeless community's position concerning this subject, I refer you to the 2002 and 2003 "Review of Santa Monica's Homeless Services By Those Who Use Them" available from City Hall.

Facts and clichés reveal truth on immigration issue

COMMON SCENTS

BY CAROLE ORLIN

It's difficult to live in a state like California, where the growth surge has been and continues to be staggering, and not be aware of a very complex and sensitive issue: Immigration.

Whether it is the daily political debate in Sacramento that continues to simmer over illegal alien driver licenses or being confronted in the movie theater with Sergio Arau's current "mockumentary" entitled "A Day Without a Mexican," we continue to be challenged with assessing the extent of the link between immigration and the state's accelerating and unsustainable growth.

We can all readily see that there are too many people with too few resources. We can all sense that our quality of life, from Santa Monica to Sacramento, is directly impacted by overpopulation: Traffic congestion, air pollution, water and energy demands, housing affordability, school overcrowding, an overburdened health care system... It seems that political correctness has caused our decision-makers to fail to act when it comes to putting a halt to a growing population where part of the solution involves reducing immigration. In my attempt to become a better-informed citizen, I decided to look at some recent studies that: (a.) look at our population numbers and see where the statistics lead us; and (b.) look at some interesting clichés to see whether there is support for a valid challenge.

Migrating to California from the East Coast nearly four years ago, I decided it was time to do some research and discover how much I didn't know about California's ever-increasing population. The most intriguing data that I reviewed was compiled by a non-profit corporation in Santa Barbara: Californians for Population Stabilization (CAPS). Two recent studies are set forth based on information from the California Department of Finance and from the Census Bureau, the former INS — now the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services — and from research on domestic migration.

Dr. Leon Bouvier, a demographer, using state figures alone concludes:

■ Immigration is responsible directly and indirectly for 98 percent of California's increasing population.

■ Direct immigration was responsible for 57 percent of California's growth from 1990-2000, with the rest coming from births to foreign-born women.

■ California made its largest population jump in history, 13 percent, in the 1990s, adding 4,208,000 people (more than the total population of Ireland).

■ In the slightly more than two-year period from April, 2000, to July, 2002, California's population increased by 1,244,385.

■ If we continue this 1.74 percent growth each year, the state will double its population in 40 years.

Dick Schneider, environmental consultant, found:

■ By combining state and federal sources and independent research that 100 percent of California's growth was the result of immigration and immigrant births, and that migration from other states was no longer a factor in California's present size.

■ The contribution of immigration is actually larger than reported by the state of California, because the Census Bureau admitted undercounts of both legal and illegal immigrants.

■ This factored in out-migration by both native and the foreign born moving to other states. The reason that immigration accounts for 100 percent of California's growth is partly because the native born population only increased by 2 percent over the decade, because of so many native-born residents leaving the state.

Richard Lamm, former Governor of Colorado and executive director of the Public Policy Institute at the University of Denver, has recently written about clichés.

Gov. Lamm addresses one of the greatest challenges to public policy, which is "knowing when and how to change a successful policy that has grown obsolete. Very few policies are immortal. Time is a kaleidoscope presenting policy makers with an ever-changing pattern. Yet the clichés from one era linger in our minds and public dialogue as if they were written in stone. Too often we confuse temporary success with universal wisdom. In (his) experience almost inevitably today's solutions become tomorrow's problems."

He used mass immigration (not specifically California's) as an example. While acknowledging that immigration has been good for America, he said we are no longer the nation of 65 million people that we were in the 1880s when we received the Statue of Liberty. Now we are a nation of over 290 million. "What other policy applicable in the 1880s is still applicable today?"

Another cliché — "Immigrants take jobs that Americans won't do" — is challenged as a cliché that has "now become a job destroying and wage lowering philosophy where employers use both unskilled and increasingly skilled immigrants to hold down wages and obtain cheap labor at the expense of American workers."

A cliché that especially angers Gov. Lamm is the suggestion that all discussion of immigration is racist. "(E)very immigrant-receiving country in the world has not only the right but also the duty to discuss and decide how many immigrants, which immigrants, and by what rules such decisions are to be enforced. It would be public policy malpractice not to debate and discuss such an important topic."

Gov. Lamm highlights the danger of clichés and sees them as the enemy of thought. Quoting from the physicist Niels Bohr: "'The opposite of a true statement is a false statement, the opposite of a great truth is often another great truth.' Of course immigration has been good for America, but mass immigration during the Twenty-first Century brings far more liabilities than assets."

There is nothing more I can add to this. All I can say is knowledge is power.

The Saturday shuffle: Much to do about nothing

HIP TO BE SQUARE

BY CAROLINE BODKIN

On Saturday morning, not 15 minutes after waking, my boyfriend and I were on the phone and had already listed 16 "To Do" items for the day's agenda: Go on a run or maybe a hike up Topanga canyon; see Michael and Sabrina's baby; read a script; meet Debbie for lunch; I'd pick up dry cleaning; he'd buy groceries; I'd call my mom; he'd research plane tickets to New York; maybe we'd wash the car; wish his best friend a happy birthday; and then we'd bake, decorate and deliver a cake and so on. All this was on the books before breakfast. So many things To Do, only one Saturday.

Plans had been made, and I was up, up, up!

Out of bed.

Blankets stripped away, shower taken, teeth brushed, hair combed, day started, up.

When your week is one to-do item after another, you begin to think that the only things to do are things you have to do.

It was 8:21 a.m. Before we did all there was to do, I figured we'd make breakfast, so 20 minutes after I'd first rolled towards the alarm, I found myself standing in front of the pantry, where I stared at the variety of pancake mixes. Whole Foods multi-grain, Bisquick and the strange buckwheat variety we'd picked up at Veganmart stared back at me. We all stared. I was stuck.

The better half walked up behind me and stood also, looking to see at what I was looking. He asked "Hon, what are you doing?"

"Multigrain, Bisquick or Buckwheat." He focused where I was focusing. And sure enough he stared just as hard as I did.

Options. What to do?

We continued to stare into the cupboard until a horn honking outside broke the spell, at which time he turned to me, as though he'd meant to for some time, and said, "Can't go hiking up Topanga because there's a street fair going on all weekend. Paper airplane making and pie eating contests. But there's Beachwood or Griffith or somewhere in Malibu." We stared at each other for a beat. Blinkered. And then turned back to the pancake problem.

I don't know how long we stood at the cupboard staring, or how I got from there to my next location ... the living room couch. But that's where I found myself over an hour later, watching old episodes of Twin Peaks, eating Wheat Thins. My boyfriend had found his way back to bed.

And I believe I was totally content. I was disinterested in anything outside David Lynch's cult show and averted my attention from the Laura Palmer mystery only rarely.

When I did find a reason to look around, I'd see through the window people leading their lives in what I'd usually consider to be a healthy way. Yes, doing the things they wanted To Do.

A couple jogged by, following their fit dog. Seeing other people exercising on a day when I'd barely walked from the kitchen to the couch would usually make me feel anxious and unworthy.

Why wasn't I running with a dog? Where were my morals?

But on that day I simply watched them trot by ... trot ... trot ... pretty dog ... trot ... trot and then I returned my gaze back to the mountain view of Twin Peaks or ... whatever it was I was watching.

By 3 p.m. I couldn't remember a single thing I'd originally put on the day's agenda. I know we never ended up making pancakes. By about 4 p.m., my boyfriend found me from wherever he'd been doing nothing much of his own and we sat together. By 5 p.m. I couldn't have told you two things I'd done all day except nothing much. It's true the things I had To Do remained undone. But I know I felt better by the end of that day. Doing nothing felt like something.

The space left for doing nothing let things I have To Do now seem less difficult. My life for this moment feels a little more mine because of it.

Gardens, parks and education facilities part of new bond proposal

The bond proposal is the result of a year-long SMC board-ordered study of the college's facilities and an effort to identify partnership opportunities for physical education, recreation, culture, social welfare and transportation, officials said.

The study found that though Santa Monica has one of the highest population densities in Southern California, it "falls significantly below average in comparison to other Los Angeles County and Orange County cities in available park and recreation open space."

If the board approves the proposal, $100 million of the $175 million would be used for cooperative partnership projects with the cities of Santa Monica and Malibu and the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District. The bond would require 55 percent approval by voters in the college district, which encompasses Santa Monica and Malibu.

The average cost of the bond would be about $6.40 a month for the average homeowner and $1.12 per month for the average renter. The SMC board is tentatively scheduled to vote in July on whether to put the bond on the November ballot.

Voters passed a $160 million bond measure at SMC two years ago that funds nearly two dozen projects, including replacing the earthquake-damaged liberal arts building and temporary buildings with modern labs and classrooms. Facilities for the nursing, environmental studies, earth sciences and math programs also will be upgraded and improvements are needed to meet standards for campus lighting, security and the American Disabilities Act. Renovations are expected to be completed over the next 10 to 12 years. SMC had another bond issue for $22 million in 1992 to build an addition to the science building and library, but most of the buildings on campus are more than 50 years old.

And the local school district recently completed building and renovating nearly $100 million worth of new facilities. About $94 million has been spent in the past six years on 19 projects — everything from a performing arts theater at Santa Monica High School to a new pool at Lincoln Middle School to several new playing fields.

The money was generated by Proposition X — a school bond passed by voters in 1998. About $45 million of the construction costs were funded by Prop X, and the rest came from state funding dedicated for school facility modernization projects. The bond is expected to expire in 20 years.

The most recent report found that SMC is lacking in its physical education building, music complex, concert hall and several buildings at satellite campuses. SMC also faces a shortage of athletic fields, particularly for women's soccer; outdoor tennis courts; music and dance performance facilities; childcare facilities; and buildings to support new programs in emerging technologies, officials said.

The report also found that SMC provides virtually no instructional programs in Malibu and has no program that uses the college district's 26-mile coastline as a resource.

Discussions with officials from the cities of Santa Monica and Malibu, as well as the school district, revealed an opportunity for the agencies to pool their resources. Each agency makes a partial contribution and, in turn, is relieved of the burden of making the entire contribution, officials said. The college would be able to leverage its own investment in projects in a way not otherwise possible, officials said.

Proposed projects to be funded by the bond measure include:

- Physical fitness, natural history and marine biology facilities on the five-acre site at 415 Pacific Coast Highway, the location of the old Marion Davies estate.

- A new children's fitness outdoor park on SMC's main campus.

- A 3.6-acre botanical garden at the Civic Center.

- A new career opportunity center for emerging technologies and to improve the college's ability to vie for state and federal grants.

- A performing arts complex at SMC's Madison campus open to community organizations.

- An early childhood development lab and childcare facility.

- Extra physical education field space and earthquake replacement tennis courts.

- Improvements to the Santa Monica Pier Aquarium.

"Cooperative partnership projects that add field space in Santa Monica and Malibu will improve the instructional program, as well as be of benefit to a significant number of community members," the report says.

SMC President Dr. Piedad F. Robertson will present a report to the SMC Board of Trustees at 7 p.m. on June 7 in the Ilona Katz board room, business building, 1900 Pico Blvd. College officials then plan to make presentations to the Santa Monica and Malibu city councils, the school district, and at public meetings of campus constituencies and organizations.

STATE

Deal reached to purchase portion of Hearst Ranch

BY ROBERT JABLON
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — State agencies and conservation groups announced a tentative deal Friday to bar housing development on virtually all 82,000 acres of the Hearst Ranch, a stretch of coastal land that many consider among the most beautiful and threatened in California.

The deal, which will require public meetings before approval, calls for the Hearst Corp. to sell 1,500 acres of ocean-front land between Los Angeles and San Francisco to the state for $80 million in cash and $15 million in tax incentives, said Stephen Hearst, vice president of the corporation and great-grandson of William Randolph Hearst.

The price includes a conservation easement that puts more than 80,000 acres — an area twice the size of San Francisco — under a prohibition involving most development, said Sam Schuchat, executive officer for the California Coastal Conservancy.

The deal basically adheres to a proposal made in December 2002. If approved, it would be the largest conservation deal of its kind in state history, Schuchat said.

The conservancy is one of several state agencies that must sign off on the deal. Public hearings will be held this summer.

Funding will come from various bond measures already approved by California voters along with $23 million in federal transportation money.

Hearst attorney Roger Lyon said an independent appraiser has determined the land is worth more than double the asking price, but the company is willing to donate the difference.

Parties to the tentative agreement said they hoped to finalize it by the end of the year.

"We couldn't be more pleased," Stephen Hearst said. "I think it's good for every stake holder involved. ... I think it's great for California, for the environment."

Under the tentative deal, the company would give up the option to develop as many as 400 homes but retained the right to build a total of 27 homes on separate five-acre sites not covered by the housing prohibition.

The homes wouldn't be visible from Hearst Castle or Highway 1. The corporation also could build a 100-room inn.

The Sierra Club, which has fought development of the ranch for decades, previously expressed concern about the proposal and was taking a wait-and-see attitude about the tentative deal.

"We know that the state has been negotiating hard to get the best deal for the public. We don't know what that deal is yet and we won't know until they hammer out all the details," said Tarren Collins, who chairs the local Sierra Club chapter.

Collins said her group wanted to be sure the conservation limits would be enforced and would be unchangeable. Another concern was whether the agreement would prohibit agricultural development.

Under current San Luis Obispo County law, the Hearst Corp. could build "wineries, dude ranches and slaughterhouses" without going through development hearings, she said. That raises concerns about water use, fencing and pesticides.

Lyon said the deal "will definitely detail restrictions on intensified agricultural uses." He declined to provide specifics but said they will be laid out before the public hearings.

Lyons said the intent is to preserve a "working landscape" that permits the area's historic cattle ranch while prohibiting extreme changes to the environment.

George Hearst bought the first acres of the ranch in 1865. His son, William Randolph Hearst, later built Hearst Castle and filled the huge complex with art. It is now a state historical monument that draws visitors from around the world.

The Hearst Corp. began looking into selling the land and development rights after the California Coastal Commission in 1998 shot down a proposal to build an 18-hole golf course and 650-room resort on some of the ranch property.

The region is considered among the most beautiful in California, boasting miles of coast teaming with sea otters and elephant seals as well as inland forests and grasslands that are home to zebras and other exotic species imported by William Randolph Hearst.

The ranch is home to threatened red-legged frogs, endangered steelhead trout, native poppies and several species of oak found nowhere else.

"Our hope is that the ranch stays pretty much like it is today forever," said Al Wright, executive director of the Wildlife Conservation Board, which also must approve the deal.

There are 1,000 species of plants and animals on the ranch, he said.

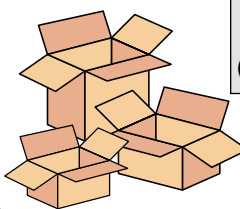

"It's a unique opportunity on the coast of California to find a property like this that's relatively undisturbed by man," Wright said.

Schuchat of the California Coastal Conservancy said he considered the ranch the most threatened landscape in the state because it is halfway between the huge and steadily growing urban areas of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

"We have a state of 35 million people ... we're going to add 10, 20 million in the next 30, 40 years. What are we going to look like then?" he said.

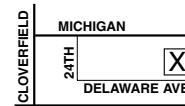

With the Hearst Ranch proposal, "we're sort of drawing some lines," he said.

Drones pressed into search at leakiest border stretch

BY ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

PAPAGO FARMS, Ariz. — A rusty barbed wire fence is all that separates the United States from Mexico in this stark, dusty area of the southern Arizona desert.

It's been mangled in places, cut in others, providing little deterrent to the thousands of illegal immigrants who slip through the border daily in countless places like this.

Stemming the influx along 350 miles of border in Arizona has been a daunting task for the Border Patrol. As the busiest illegal crossing point on the U.S.-Mexico divide, this stretch of frontier was a natural for the nation's first homeland security use of unmanned aerial vehicles.

Two Israeli-made Hermes drones leased by the Border Patrol are due to take to the air this summer to help agents spot, track, seize and sometimes rescue illegal crossers.

Concentrated mostly along a 220-mile western stretch of border that includes an Indian reservation, a wildlife refuges and a military range, the drones are only the latest hardware in the patrol's technological toolbox which includes tower-mounted cameras, ground sensors, night-vision goggles and portable lifts that let agents view down lines of highway traffic.

The hope is the drones can help stem a surge in illegal immigration that a buildup of border agents hasn't stopped.

The remotely piloted Hermes 450 craft, which can stay aloft for 20 hours at a time, are not armed with missiles like the Predators that gained renown in U.S. military and CIA operations. Predator-fired missiles have killed several top al-Qaida operatives in Afghanistan and Yemen.

The Border Patrol drones will carry cameras with thermal and night vision capabilities that can detect movement 15 miles away as they fly over vast stretches of cactus, mesquite and scrub-covered deserts, mountains and sprawling grasslands.

The aircraft, which Israel uses to patrol its frontiers, will be able to read a license plate, view a vehicle's occupants, even detect weapons, officials said.

"We're looking to make a determination: Has an incursion occurred? Do we need to respond? And if we do need to respond, we just need information as to how our officers can respond safely," said David Aguilar. Currently chief of its Tucson sector, Aguilar takes over as national Border Patrol chief on July 1.

Countless hours are squandered sending agents to check tripped border sensors and find and rescue migrants stranded in the wilderness, where scores of illegal crossers die from heat and dehydration each year.

The drones weigh almost 1,000 pounds, have a 35-foot wingspan and can fly faster than 100 mph. They will patrol at 12,000 to 15,000 feet — while being able to swoop in close when necessary, Aguilar said. Pilots on the ground will remotely control them unless the flight is preprogrammed, with another agent interpreting the images and using global positioning to send agents to respond by ground or air.

The Hermes 450s join a number of UAVs being used domestically. Remote-controlled planes help gather data for environmental studies and patrol Western skies on wildfire watch. In Alaska, the Coast Guard is also testing a drone this summer for fisheries patrols and other uses.

Some less sophisticated aerial surveillance has also been ongoing in southern Arizona: a citizens' patrol group has been using an oversized remote-controlled model airplane for a year, which feeds live video of border crossings to its Web site.

The two Hermes 450s are a key element of the Department of Homeland Security's efforts to achieve "operational control" of the border. Their $4 million mission ends Sept. 30, when it will be assessed to determine the future of drones with the Border Patrol.

Currently, about 2,300 Border Patrol agents work in Arizona. With less than four months left in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1, the patrol's Tucson and Yuma sectors (the latter stretching into part of California) have caught 399,642 illegal immigrants.

The border drones' introduction is not without detractors, chiefly among immigration advocates.

Tucson attorney Isabel Garcia, co-chairwoman of the human rights organization Derechos Humanos, said their use will be another step toward fully militarizing the border and away from the law barring use of the military to enforce civil law.

"Everything they have done so far has created chaos, instability, death and insecurity rather than security," Garcia said.

A Tucson minister who has helped set up desert water stations for migrants called the use of drones a "mixed bag" because it will militarize the border but may also assist search and rescue efforts.

"As far as search and rescue, that sounds really good to us," said the Rev. Robin Hoover of Humane Borders, a faith-based immigrant advocacy organization.

Kerry, Nader at risk of being branded downers

BY CALVIN WOODWARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The America that John Kerry sees is weighted by millions of job losses, millions of people without health insurance, a “wage recession” for those who do have work, schools begging for money, exploding gas prices and “poisoned” alliances world-wide.

Then there’s the America that Ralph Nader sees. It’s in really bad shape.

He talks about foul air, impure food, 13 million hungry children, corporate domination, “mindless” SAT scores “controlling our definition of intelligence,” kids who need love being put on antidepressants instead, corrupt political parties, a government that hasn’t had a good idea in 30 years, and a president who acts like an “out-of-control, West Texas sheriff.”

If this is morning in America, Americans may want to crawl back into bed.

As Kerry and Nader compete for votes in their common cause of beating President Bush, they risk coming across not just as agents of change, but as Glum and Glummer.

Opponents of an incumbent president need to tell people what’s wrong, so they don’t just re-elect him, but must do so in a way that does not sink their spirits, say students of political rhetoric. And Kerry’s indictment of Bush fills many of his speeches on the stump.

But one of the Democrat’s latest ads is a warm and fuzzy counterbalance, a family heavy portrait in which a soothing Kerry assures Americans: “We’re a country of optimists, we’re the can-do people and we just need to believe in ourselves again.”

To Kathleen Hall Jamieson of the Annenberg Public Policy Center, that’s a sign the campaign recognizes the danger of slipping into a prosecutorial mode that will just bum people out.

“You have to be optimistic and hopeful,” she says, “without being happy with the way things are going.”

Ronald Reagan personified the upbeat, his vision of morning in America attractive even to many with a hard life. Bill Clinton, the “man from Hope,” couched his criticisms of the first President Bush’s economic record with an infectious, can-do-better energy.

“The message that gets out to the public in digested form can’t be, ‘everything’s wrong,’” Jamieson said. “It has to be, ‘I’m optimistic about what change I can produce.’”

But there’s a risk, too, in being too buoyant in a time of dispiriting developments in Iraq and on other fronts. Historians recall that Hubert Humphrey’s cheery reputation — he was known as the “happy warrior” — did not fit the dark times of 1968 when he ran for president.

“There’s a difference between prudent optimism and ostrich optimism,” said Stanley Renshon, a political psychologist at the City University of New York. He credits Bush with confidence in his own abilities, “not an optimism that buries its head.”

Kerry has a quick smile when he uses it, and a quick wit anytime, but also sad eyes and a lantern jaw that underline the gravity of the situation on count after count against Bush. Even so, he unfailingly presents himself as a solution to the problem.

Nader, with less to lose and more freedom to speak his famously cantankerous mind, attacks everything under the cancer-causing sun.

Asked Thursday whether he thought conditions are worse in the country than when he ran in 2000, the independent presidential candidate said: “It’s almost like time has stood still. Just add 9-11 and Iraq — it’s a society caught in a traffic jam.”

He talked of the wreckage in a recent speech to Virginia university students.

Nader said enough people die as a result of having no health insurance that it’s as if the country suffers six 9-11 terrorist attacks a year.

He said pretty much everything worthwhile that the government is doing has been around for three decades or more, and even those old programs are shrinking from attrition. “We’re lunching off the past.”

“What is a corporation anyway?” he demanded. “It doesn’t vote. It doesn’t die in Iraq.... It dominates us. It’s as if a robot emerges in our midst.”

Drug laws are “demonic,” he went on. And of the kids who are diagnosed with attention deficit disorder, “most of them need love, an arm around the shoulder, attention, some time. Instead, they get Ritalin, an easy fix.”

Third World countries? “We suck the minerals out of them. We brain drain them.”

He asked the college students: “Are you being processed?” They sat quietly, some nodding in assent.

“How we pamper ourselves,” he said contemptuously several times. He ticked through more of his list of wrongs.

“Does all this depress you?” he asked.

Finally a note of hope: “We can still reassert the sovereignty of the people.”

Alaska’s ice hotel succumbs to summer

By The Associated Press

FAIRBANKS, Alaska — The frozen martini glasses are disappearing, ice chandeliers are falling from the ceiling and the walls of the Aurora Ice Hotel are shrinking.

Sunshine and high temperatures have assaulted the ice hotel at Chena Hot Springs Resort since March, causing enough melting to persuade owners to abandon plans for keeping the building through summer months.

Workers removed foam panels designed to keep the ice hotel cool on Wednesday. They will let months of planning and creative carving melt in the June sun.

Resort owner Bernie Karl and ice carver Steve Brice finished the structure in late December and had hoped to keep the hotel open throughout the summer by using the foam panels and thousands of feet of hose pumping coolant through the ice walls. The creators, however, underestimated the power of Fairbanks spring sunshine, said spokeswoman Brenda Hewitt.

“With any luck, we’ll be able to start over again next year,” she said. “We learned a lot.”

Hewitt said the resort stopped accepting guests for ice hotel rooms at the end of March and planned to use April as a testing period for how well the structure could hold up in warmer weather.

By the end of May, it became clear that the hotel could not be saved. People entering the building now wear hard hats because pieces of ice chandeliers are falling, Hewitt said.

News of the melting disappointed several tourists and organizations with plans for a summer visit to the United States’ only ice hotel, which featured a bar with martini and shot glasses made of ice as well as ice beds in the rooms.

Men’s Journal had planned a fashion photograph shoot inside the hotel this summer, Hewitt said. Two couples recently drove up from the Lower 48 to visit the hotel, only to learn that rooms were not available. It was a setback for a building that carried high hopes and survived initial concerns about structural safety from the state fire marshal.

“At least the place never burned down,” Hewitt said with a laugh.

Ronald Reagan had ties to local funeral home

Carolyn Sackariason/Daily Press
A motorcade escorting President Reagan's body travels through the alley between 19th and 20th streets on Saturday. (Inset) The hearse leaving Santa Monica for Bel Air.

to be able to serve our country and our president, it's the pinnacle for a funeral director," said Boetticher, 57, a 39-year veteran in his line of work.

"It's the pinnacle of our careers," added Ross, 48, of Corona, Calif. "This certainly is the one that will stand out. I'll take this experience to my grave."

Gates Kingsley & Gates Moeller-Murphy is owned by a parent company that oversees more than 1,400 funeral homes across the country.

Reagan's casket will remain sealed through a six-day series of funeral events that will conclude with a private interment service at the Ronald Reagan Library Friday evening.

Nancy Reagan and other family members are scheduled to accompany the casket from Gates Kingsley & Gates Moeller-Murphy to the Ronald Reagan Library in Simi Valley this morning. A private ceremony will be held, and Reagan's casket will then be kept in the main lobby of the library from noon until Wednesday, so the public can pay respect. Reagan was a popular president, overwhelmingly elected to both terms, who specifically asked that the public be included in his funeral, Drake said.

Next, Reagan's body will be flown from the naval base in Pt. Mugu to Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland. Ceremonies will be held in the rotunda of the U.S. Capitol and the Washington National Cathedral before Reagan will be flown back and buried at the Ronald Reagan Library.

Though the Reagans haven't spoken publicly since the passing of the former president, Drake on Sunday read a statement thanking the public for erecting makeshift memorials around the country and expressing their deep sense of loss. The passing was bittersweet for Nancy Reagan, Drake added.

"While it is an extremely sad time for Mrs. Reagan, there is definitely a sense of relief that he is no longer suffering and is in a better place," she told reporters in a mid-afternoon Sunday press conference. Hundreds of well wishers and members of the media have camped out in Santa Monica since Saturday.

Tracy Akins, 32, a physical therapist who lives in Santa Monica, called Reagan a great man and said she was drawn to the site by early memories of his presidency.

"He's the first president that I really remember," Akins said. "I was 8 when he went into office — and just the fact that he was from California."

Other members of the crowd came from miles away.

"He brought the country back from, as Jimmy Carter put it, the malaise we were going through at the time and made us feel good about being Americans again," said Ron Preston, 44, of Northridge, who works for Sony Pictures. "He was my favorite — my favorite president."

Bridal salon owner Laura Rubin agreed.

"He helped tear down the wall and bring democracy to the area," said the 59-year-old resident of Marina del Rey. "We really felt good about being Americans under Reagan."

have thought he would have gone to another place more upscale, more noteworthy."

The Santa Monica Police Department, which has operational plans in place for special circumstances like this, descended upon the area just in time to begin managing the scene. SMPD Lt. Clinton Muir and Sgt. Jay Trisler organized media trucks to serve as barriers from the crowds and police activity. Hundreds of police personnel were on hand to control the growing crowds, most of whom were aching to catch a glimpse of the motorcade arriving with the president's body. But they became a bit unruly and frustrated when LAPD officers led the procession through the alley between 19th and 20th streets instead of in front of the funeral home.

Residents who live behind the funeral home also grew a bit frustrated when they were told by secret service that they wouldn't be able to move their cars from their parking spaces for up to 48 hours. Clearly inconvenienced, one woman said the president picked the wrong day to die — she had to be somewhere.

"What a horrible day to die," she said. "He was a nice guy, but come on."

Others were upset because they were told to move their cars off the street. Some were even towed.

"It's been a bizzaro day," said Becky Heath. "It's a zoo around here."

Others questioned why so much police and CIA presence was necessary. Snipers were stationed on adjacent rooftops, the Reagan family's secret service personnel guarded the building, and police were deployed into strategic areas.

Although the costs have not yet been tallied, there will be considerable expense to the city of Santa Monica for the two days Reagan's body has been here.

Gloria Kabbash, a retired Santa Monican who has lived here most of her life, said what she remembers most about Reagan was his accomplishments as a politician and an actor.

"I loved the man dearly ... I think President Reagan was loved by a lot of people," she said. "I like when he told those Russians to knock down that damn wall."

Kabbash said she feels for the family, especially because of the pain they have had to endure watching the former president deteriorate from Alzheimer's Disease.

"My father died of the disease too," she said. "It is the worst disease ever."

Nancy Reagan is expected to arrive at the funeral home this morning to escort her husband's body to the Reagan Library in the Simi Valley. SMPD Chief James T. Butts Jr. has been invited to ride in the motorcade.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Killer John Wayne Gacy's art exhibited in Florida

By The Associated Press

■ WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Some paintings by executed serial killer John Wayne Gacy are on display at a South Florida antiques store despite objections from some who say profits from selling the art is "blood money."

Nineteen paintings — including a $195 image of a bird and a $9,500 depiction of dwarfs playing baseball against the Chicago Cubs — are for sale.

The collection represents about one-tenth of the Gacy paintings collected by Steve Koschal, a celebrity autograph expert who corresponded with Gacy during the final four years of his incarceration in Illinois.

"You'd be surprised who buys these paintings," Koschal said. "You might think some tough motorcycle gang off the street, but it's doctors, lawyers, professional people, Hollywood and media types."

Gacy, a building contractor and amateur clown, was convicted of luring 33 young men and boys to his home in the Chicago area for sex and then strangling them between 1972 and 1978.

■ MEXICO CITY — The director of "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban" says he strived to be faithful to the books by J.K. Rowling as he crafted the third movie in the Harry Potter series.

"As the books evolve, the tone gets more dark with each one," Alfonso Cuaron said Saturday at a news conference following the film's first night at the box office.

Cuaron also directed the gritty coming-of-age film "Y Tu Mama Tambien" about two Mexican teenagers and an older woman. He took over filming the magic-infused Potter series from Chris Columbus, who made the first two Potter movies and cheery family films such as "Home Alone" and "Mrs. Doubtfire."

Cuaron said he had to exercise restraint to be faithful to the original Harry Potter tale but he enjoyed the same creative freedom in his interpretation as in his earlier films.

"I was here only to interpret the book. But everything is filtered through you," he said.

■ BAGHDAD, Iraq — More than 500 soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen crowded around a stage at a U.S. installation to hear country star Toby Keith and 1970s rocker Ted Nugent.

"You guys are doing a great job over here," Nugent told the audience Saturday.

It was one of several stops in Iraq for the pair, who are visiting Iraq as part of a USO tour.

They had previously performed for U.S. service members in Kosovo, Germany and Italy.

■ LOS ANGELES — Grammy-winning gospel singer Andrae Crouch has claimed a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, calling the tribute "another open door to tell people about Jesus."

As the star was unveiled Friday, Crouch's gospel choir sang to a crowd of about 400, which included Marilyn McCoo, Billy Davis Jr., state Sen. Richard Alarcon and Jean-Luc Sibiude, consul general of France.

Crouch, 61, joins fellow gospel artists Mahalia Jackson and the Rev. James Cleveland on the Walk of Fame. His was the 2,256th star awarded on the celebrity sidewalk.

Crouch plans to release "Mighty Wind," an album featuring guest appearances by Marvin Winans and Fred Hammond, later this year. He has won six Grammys for gospel performances and one for a pop-contemporary gospel album.

■ WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Collectors took advantage of a rare opportunity Saturday when Barbra Streisand put hundreds of items from her films and personal life on auction to benefit several charities.

The collection included everything from gowns Streisand designed and wore in movies and concert appearances to her prescription eyeglasses and customized 1986 Ford mobile home van.

"I'm just here to get as many beautiful things as I can get," said Kathryn Philpott-Hill, a dentist who traveled from North Carolina to attend the auction.

In all, the 421 items up for auction were worth an estimated $600,000, said Darren Julien of Julien Entertainment, which organized the event.

Philpott-Hill offered $23,000 for a satin shirt Streisand wore on "The Judy Garland Show" in 1963, but was outbid by an Internet buyer.

Helping Streisand's charity also was important to Philpott-Hill, who purchased several items, including a rhinestone-covered gold silk and chiffon gown Streisand wore to the premiere of "Funny Girl" for $5,250.

"As much as I love collecting, I have an even deeper commitment to the support of good causes I've been able to provide through the Streisand Foundation, the beneficiary of this event," Streisand wrote in a letter to participants.

Proceeds will go to the Streisand Foundation, which helps promote civil liberties, democratic values, women's issues, AIDS research and other causes.

About 100 people attended the auction at the Pacific Design Center in West Hollywood. Also, bidders were able to participate online at www.JulienEntertainment.com.
