Affordable mental health program for seniors to end after 30 years

Maya Furukawa

THERAPY WISE & Healthy Aging will end its mental health program.

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

Santa Monica will lose its only mental health program for seniors in June.

Seniors have been able to enroll in individual and group therapy for the past 30 years through WISE & Healthy Aging, the main service provider for older adults in Santa Monica. The program, which employs psychology graduate students and fellows to provide therapy under the supervision of WISE psychologists, will end June 30. It also provides psychiatric and case management services.

The decision has left many of the program's roughly 40 participants feeling abandoned and unstable, despite WISE & Healthy Aging's efforts to transition them to other mental health providers.

"I was referred to this program by a psychologist because I was deeply depressed and isolating myself," said Louise Steiner, who has been in group counseling for 10 years. "I don't know what I'm going to do without it. I'll probably just go back in my hole."

WISE & Healthy Aging is letting its contract with the Department of Mental Health expire because Medicare stopped providing reimbursements for therapy and the American Psychological Association changed its accreditation requirements for psychology students, said CEO Grace Cheng Braun.

The program cost $450,000 annually, about 5.5% of the nonprofit's total expenses, according to its 2017-2018 financial statement. WISE & Healthy Aging was able to bill

MICROGRANTS: Six residents were selected to launch $500 economic development projects.

Pico residents will teach classes on financial wellness, sell Oaxacan crafts and market small businesses in a "Buy Pico" campaign using $500 grants from the city of Santa Monica.

Six people were selected to create economic development projects through the city's Wellbeing Microgrants program, which launched last fall with a focus on building community in the historically underserved Pico neighborhood. The second round of projects includes jewelry-making classes, a pop-up beauty supply store and hair parlor, and economic empowerment workshops for middle schoolers.

The microgrants program is funded through a $1 million grant Bloomberg Philanthropies awarded to the Pico Wellbeing Project in 2015. The six projects were chosen from 14 applications submitted earlier this spring.

HORATIO WEST COURT:

140 Hollister Avenue
Built 1919, designated 1979

This is one of the finest remaining examples of architect Irving Gill's work in the field of social housing, as it shows Gill's interest in designing affordable alternatives to the single-family home. Gill used the courtyard as a transitional space between the street and the building interiors, and the configuration exemplifies the bungalow court typology. Gill's work was influenced by the region's Spanish Colonial Revival and Mission Revival styles. Abstracting elements of these styles, his designs were modern interpretations of these more traditional forms. In doing so, Gill became a pivotal figure in California Modernism. The court was restored in the 1970s. Horatio West Court has been recognized on the National Register of Historic Places since 1977.

Medicare for a quarter of the cost, Cheng Braun said. Most clients received treatment through Medi-Cal, California's public health insurance for low-income individuals and families.

Over the past few years, the program struggled to attract psychology graduate students because it receives its accreditation from the California Psychology Internship Council (CAPIC), not the American Psychological Association (APA), Cheng Braun said.

Fewer students are applying to CAPIC programs because the APA is moving toward requiring students in APA-accredited doctoral programs to participate in APA-accredited internships, which offer competitive stipends and are mostly affiliated with universities and large medical centers.

WISE & Healthy Aging has also been unable to find a new director for the program. Its former director retired last September after 10 years.

"(We have) been unsuccessful in finding qualified clinical leadership to take on a smaller-sized, community-based mental health clinic program," Cheng Braun said.

The program's two psychology graduate students are now transitioning clients to other Westside agencies that receive funding from the Department of Mental Health and accept Medi-Cal, such as Didi Hirsch, the Alcott Center, the St. Joseph Center and the Edelman Center, Cheng Braun said.

But none of them are in Santa Monica, and some clients rely on Mobility On-Demand Everyday (MODE), the Big Blue Bus' rideshare program for seniors and people with disabilities. Los Angeles County operates a similar program they could use to get to other treatment centers, Cheng Braun said.

"It's difficult for us as we get older to start finding new ways to get to something we need," said group therapy client Phyllis Grossman.

Hannah Salanoa, a clinical psychology postdoctoral fellow, said the loss of the program has been hard for her clients. Although WISE & Healthy Aging said it ended its mental health services because its a social services organization, not a healthcare provider, Salanoa said she thinks mental health is extremely important for seniors and at the center of their wellbeing.

"To prosper in whatever it is you're doing, it starts with your mind," she said. "Mental health is most important for older adults and seniors because they're more isolated."

WISE & Health Aging receives about $1.2 million in city funding and pays the city $122,000 annually to rent the Ken Edwards Center. City Council is poised to approve Tuesday a decrease in rent to $1 per year, however, in exchange for the nonprofit taking over maintenance of the building.

Councilmember Kevin McKeown said city staff is working with WISE & Healthy Aging to transition the mental health program's clients.

"Santa Monica is fully aware of the importance of local mental health services, especially for seniors who may have limited mobility or financial wherewithal to travel outside city limits," McKeown said. "We continue to work with WISE and the County Department of Mental Health to provide continuity for our seniors who depend on having access to an affordable local mental health program."

Bioleafs turn sun into fuel

Dear EarthTalk: What the heck is a "bionic leaf" and how does it help the planet?
- William Friend, Billings, MT

Brainchild of Harvard biochemist Daniel Nocera, the "bionic leaf" is a small man-made solar collector that takes sunlight and water and turns it into any of a variety of usable fuels or fertilizers. Nocera's first iteration, the so-called "artificial leaf," was developed in 2011 at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) and could split water into oxygen and hydrogen when exposed to sunlight in a process similar to (and inspired by) Mother Nature's photosynthesis.

Nocera soon thereafter moved his lab to Harvard and teamed up with Pamela Silver there to create the "bionic" version which takes the concept further. There they fed the resulting hydrogen to an on-board catalyst, resulting in the generation of immediately useable downstream liquid "fuels" such as fertilizer for farms, isobutanol to run generators and engines, and PHB, a precursor for bio-plastic.

The team's first version of the "bionic" leaf was about as efficient as natural photosynthesis, that is about one percent of the solar energy flowing in came out as biomass dense enough to use as fuel. But their most recent version ups the ante considerably, clocking in at 10 times more efficient than Mother Nature's fastest growing plants.

"If you think about it, photosynthesis is amazing," Nocera tells the Harvard Gazette. "It takes sunlight, water and air—and then look at a tree. That's exactly what we did, but we do it significantly better, because we turn all that energy into a fuel."

When mass-produced, these tiny solar "carbon-negative" fuel factories could be inexpensive enough for everyday people to use to power their vehicles and run their lights and appliances. Farmers with a small on-site array of bionic leaves could create enough fertilizer for their own needs instead of buying container-loads of synthetic fertilizer produced at sprawling CO2-spewing factories and shipped for thousands of miles.

The widespread application of bionic leaves could be especially advantageous in developing countries (and remote areas in general) where access to conventional fuels and fertilizers is limited and expensive or non-existent. Nocera hopes his work can bring the poor of the world their "first 100 watts" of energy through one form or another of the technologies he is developing. A Harvard-funded pilot program putting bionic leaves to use in India is just getting off the ground and Nocera hopes to expand globally within the near future.

The vision is for retiring every fossil fuel out there and replacing them with solar fuels from your own "bionic" garden. Imagine a world with no more utility bills or lining up at the gas pump? "You can use just sunlight, air and water," concludes Nocera, "and you can do it in your backyard."

Protecting vulnerable older adults from becoming victims of abuse

GRACE CHENG BRAUN, MSPH
President and CEO, WISE & Healthy Aging

More than two million seniors are abused annually in the U.S. And for every case of elder abuse and neglect reported, only an estimated one in 14 cases of elder mistreatment are reported. Financial abuse against the elderly is an area that continues to grow rapidly. It is estimated that 75 percent of the net assets in this country are owned by people age 50 years and older. Every year, thousands of Americans lose as little as a few dollars to as much as their entire life savings to fraudulent telemarketers. According to Congress, the loss is more than $40 billion each year. Everyone is a potential target – fraud is not limited by race, ethnic background, gender or income level.

Seniors, especially are targeted by con artists who are selling bogus products and services by phone. As a result, the potential for abuse is extremely high. The WISE & Healthy Aging Elder Abuse Prevention Program provides seniors with the knowledge and skills they can use to protect themselves from becoming victims of financial, physical or emotional abuse.

The major forms of elder abuse include: physical abuse (which may include, but is not limited to, such acts of violence as striking, beating, pushing, slapping, burning, and inappropriate use of drugs and physical restraints, force-feeding, and physical punishment of any kind); sexual abuse; abandonment; neglect; self-neglect; financial or material exploitation; hoarding; and emotional or psychological abuse.

Senior victims often lack knowledge about how to seek protection from their abusers, and are fearful of reporting the crime due to their dependency upon abusers for care or are reluctant to report family members. In reaching out to seniors, the community-based, social services nonprofit WISE & Healthy Aging works closely with a network of professional groups, organizations and agencies, including: County of Los Angeles Area Agency on Aging, City of Los Angeles Dept. of Aging, law enforcement, district attorney's offices, probate court, Adult Protective Services (APS), Public Guardian Office, FBI, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Consumer Affairs, U.S. Postal Service, private

They will take place over the summer, concluding in September.

"There are phenomenal ideas in the Santa Monica community and through the microgrants, the city is able to help residents bring their ideas to life," said Mayor Gleam Davis. "These projects form connections, nurture entrepreneurship, develop business acumen and will ultimately bring residents together."

Each project takes a different approach to supporting economic opportunity with common themes around financial empowerment, support for small businesses and getting creative start-up businesses off the ground, said city spokesperson Constance Farrell. The leaders of each project will also measure how well they are meeting their goals by surveying participants and tracking progress.

Two of the projects will provide financial education, but grantees Somya Munjal and Linda Myers plan to work with very different populations. While Munjal will run an afterschool workshop at John Adams Middle School, Myers will conduct a 12-session financial improvement class for people on parole and probation and domestic violence victims.

Munjal is the founder of Youthful Savings, which offers online classes in economic empowerment and leadership skills for teenagers. She plans to bring her platform to John Adams, said Catalina Langen, the Office of Civic Wellbeing's community engagement coordinator.

Myers will hold her classes in partnership with different banks in Santa Monica and the city's probation office and domestic violence shelter, Langen said.

"She's really trying to focus on those populations who are the most vulnerable and could use this type of structures as they're trying to figure out what their next steps are," Langen said.

Three of the projects aim to launch small businesses.

Inés Garcia is using her $500 grant to set her business selling Oaxacan jewelry, pots, purses and scarves in motion. Monika Armdariz will teach Pico residents how to make and sell jewelry in stores around the city and Kimberley Herron is holding a pop-up beauty supply store and parlor to kick off a business selling Black hair products, which are hard to find in Santa Monica.

Langen said Herron's one-day event at the Thelma Terry Center will bring in local hairstylists and feature a barbershop section, a kids' hairstyling station and a braiding station. Herron will also sell her hair products.

"Her long-time vision would be to have permanent space," Langen said.

Marco Marin's project will connect the entire Pico business community through a "Buy Pico" campaign. Businesses on the boulevard will be advertised throughout the city, Langen said. Marin also completed a project for the first round of microgrants.

"Marco's vision is to have big pictures of business owners across town as a way to look at who these people are, how established they are in the community and how you can support them," Langen said.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (June 10)

So many resources open up between now and 2020 that, without a map, you could easily get lost. The next 10 weeks will bring you teachers and methods. Choose one, and stick to it. Let this be your rudder. Family helps, too, sometimes with encouragement, other times with giving you something to rebel against. Cancer and Capricorn adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 10, 3, 38, 4 and 17.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Play around with people's expectations. Make loud things quiet, small things supersized, timed things available at all hours of the day or night. You need a move that's going to get you noticed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). People tend to equate safety with familiarity. But just because it feels safe or unsafe, that doesn't make it so. Knowing a place doesn't make it a good place. Stay open-minded.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You aim to elevate your interactions to the level of art. If it's imbued with a certain feeling that's so you, it's probably art. If it's also personal and couldn't be created by anyone else, it's definitely art.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're willing to accept a full-color version of morality, as the black-and-white rules can't contain the entirety of the complex human spirit. You might say that your definition of a good person has matured some.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). People keep coming back to the ones who are fun to talk to, who add value to the exchange and change the mood for the better. All you have to do is intend to be that person today, and it all works in your favor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). It's annoying when other people tell you to relax (They are not the boss of you!), but when you tell yourself to relax, it's comforting, a letting up on the controls and an invitation to be super nice to yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Are you bored? You're riding a mid-zone sort of mood that could be getting too comfortable. The answer is to take a hard turn in one direction -- any direction, really. The change itself won't matter. What matters is that you made one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You can't win at two games at the same time. Play one game, and choose which one very carefully. Hint: Pick the one where you don't have to try hard to fit in and conceal your true nature in the process.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). These hours of your life are irreplaceable. There are opportunities in this day that will never come again. All the more reason to start off by recognizing this day for the gift it is.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Like the big-city convenience store that keeps pictures behind the cash register of the bad customers who are banned for life, you have your own list of the vanquished. Remember it. Enforce it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You're driven to give beyond what you're expected and/or paid to give. All the surplus -- that's the part of the gift that feeds your soul. So it always benefits you to deliver more than the call.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). It's good to know who you're doing things for because it lets you know who you can ignore. If you're pleasing your target audience, you can probably ignore your critics while you hone in on the feedback your people give you.

Solar Opposition to Jupiter

When the moon and sun are in opposition, the moon appears as full as we can experience it. It's the same way today as the sun pulls across the sky at Jupiter, our planet of luck and abundance. King Large shows up in all his opulence, taking up as much of our mental screen as he can. So go on, and feel lucky. You really are, you know?

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"What is the proper age to discuss sensitive topics with my beautiful young Aries daughter? She's only 12, and yet some of my friends are telling me I should fully inform her as to the ways of the world I have shielded her from for so long. They insist that if I don't talk to her, she'll get information elsewhere. Do you think this is true? I'm a Pisces."

It's a judgment call that only you can make. Note that the first sign of the zodiac is very different from the last sign of the zodiac. Since you are a Pisces, you may not remember being as innocent as your Aries appears to you. Yours is the sign of old souls, and Pisces are often wise beyond their years. Learning about the world wasn't as shocking to you as it will be for your innocent Aries. Keep in mind that we like to think of Aries as the pure lamb in need of a shepherd's care, guidance and protection, whereas the Aries likes to think of herself as the firstborn who must strike out with great zeal and sometimes rebelliousness. She is growing into her warrior spirit, so give her accurate information to arm herself with!

CELEBRITY PROFILES

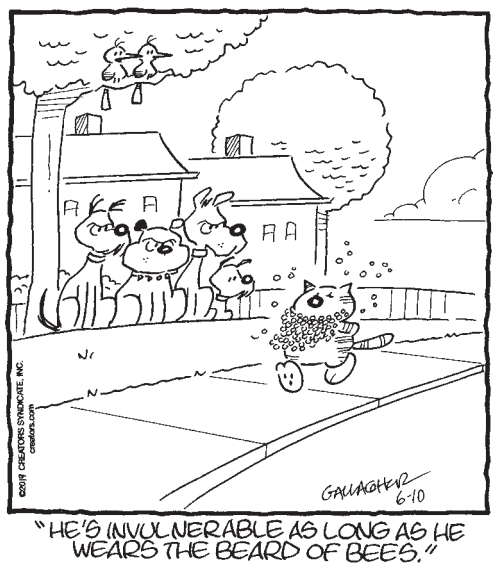

The spirit of Hollywood golden era legend Judy Garland shines through in the upcoming film "Judy" starring Renee Zellweger and "Game of Thrones" favorite Bella Ramsey. Unceasingly enchanting, Garland was born under a sociable Gemini sun. Her natal Mercury and Venus were in soulful Cancer, and her natal Neptune, the planet of dreams, was well-placed in Leo, the ruler of entertainment. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.
