SMMUSD budget projections show worsening finances

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

SMMUSD HDQTRSThe Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District has to get its spending under control if it wants to stay out of the red in the very near future, school officials told the Board of Education Thursday.

The district shows deficits in each of the next three years, a pattern which will only get uglier if the state government continues to cut money out of public education, said Jan Maez, the district's chief financial officer.

Maez mapped out three scenarios for coming years which she called "Best Case," "Worst Case" and "Worst Case with Hope."

Only in the best case scenario, which assumes no further cuts from the state level, does the district manage to maintain a fund balance by the end of 2014-15.

That balance is still $10 million less than the district has in the bank as the 2011-12 school year comes to a close.

In the other two, which assume almost $5 million in cuts from the state level, the district has a negative fund balance.

The "with hope" scenario optimistically assumes that the district will have $2 million in unspent funds each year. Although this has happened consistently over the past several years, it is not a budgeted savings and not a sure bet.

The negative numbers at the end of the third year in the two "worst case" scenarios could mean that the Los Angeles County Office of Education, which reviews school budgets, won't accept the budget as it stands.

That could mean more cuts on top of the $2.5 million in reductions that the board approved after is Feb. 18 study session, in which it decided to cut positions and increase class sizes at some grade levels.

Wilmont election goes forward as (un)planned

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

MAIN LIBRARY Democracy showed its messy side at a neighborhood group's annual meeting Saturday morning when angry residents demanded and won a chance to elect new leadership over protestations from the organization's chair.

The membership of the Wilshire Montana Neighborhood Coalition, more commonly known as Wilmont, voted 47-4 to proceed with their board election using provisional ballots, but only after a motion was passed to remove Chair Valerie Griffin. Griffin tried to adjourn the meeting before the vote could be taken in an attempt to stop the election.

Other business on the agenda, including a discussion of the new zoning law and crime, was put on hold.

Advocates for the vote held that Griffin and other members of her board have operated in secrecy, making decisions that were against the will of the Wilmont membership and inventing new eligibility rules to stymie would-be candidates and maintain their hold on the organization.

Some board members, however, accuse the 11 people who tried to get on Saturday's ballot of being organized by the Huntley Hotel, an outside business interest that has so far opposed the revitalization of the Fairmont Miramar Hotel & Bungalows, a major development project adjacent to the Huntley.

The Wilmont board has come out in support of the Fairmont remodel.

While all candidates objected to the one-note characterization of their motivations, they also stated that it shouldn't matter.

The bylaws of the organization define a qualified candidate as one who is a member of Wilmont and sends in a petition for candidacy with signatures from 10 Wilmont members at least 10 days before the election.

Any attempt to change those criteria was

State pushing more welfare recipients to work

CHRISTINA HOAG
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES Gov. Jerry Brown wants to shift the safety net protecting California's most vulnerable residents

Pressured by a $16 billion budget deficit, the governor is proposing a major overhaul of the state's welfare-to-work program with the strategy of slashing people's benefits to motivate them to get jobs faster.

The move, if approved by the state Legislature as part of the 2012-13 budget package, would save $880 million, but beyond the savings, analysts say it represents a shift in the philosophy of how the Golden State helps its neediest residents.

"It's a reversal of the state's historic commitment to these families and children," said Scott Graves, senior policy analyst with the California Budget Project. "It's a very significant change."

California is the national leader in welfare recipients. About 3.8 percent of state residents were on welfare in 2010, the highest percentage in the country. In fact, California

Federal officials investigate pilot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Federal authorities are investigating if a California pilot who lost his flight privileges for buzzing the Santa Monica Pier four years ago illegally sold rides to the public in his military jet.

The Los Angeles Times reports Saturday that investigators are trying to determine if David Riggs violated federal regulations that prohibits passengers to be aboard the Soviet-era planes unless the owners have the government's permission.

The newspaper says the inquiry of Riggs stems from a May 18 accident in Nevada when a L-39 Albatros crashed in the desert, killing the pilot and a passenger who had purchased a ride.

Riggs was flying with a passenger next to the ill-fated plane shortly before it crashed.

If Riggs violated regulations, he could face a suspension or another revocation of his pilot's license.

COMMUNITY PROFILES | PATRICIA COLTON

Author nominated for book award

BY SEAN FITZ-GERALD
Special to the Daily Press

WILSHIRE BLVD Patricia Colton walks into Coffee Bean, orders a Swedish berry iced tea, sits down and starts writing in her spiral bound notebook.

"I've been a writer my whole life," Colton said. "When I was young, I was not the kind of kid that would raise my hand in class. I would put my thoughts into writing ... I found that writing gave me a voice."

Colton, now 52, self-published her 644-page debut novel, "The Window Blind," which has recently been nominated by ForeWord Reviews as a Book of the Year finalist.

Though a longtime writer, it wasn't until recently that the local author formulated the beginnings of her first novel.

"I just started to have some ideas that came to me," Colton said. "I put them together, and I never intended for it to go anywhere."

Colton's novel chronicles the misadventures of Caterina, a middle-aged alcoholic, and Tyler, an 18-year-old heroin addict. The two protagonists cross paths and are transported to a fantasy world of healing and learning.

"My book deals with some really adult themes of addiction, rape and death, but there's the element of the fantastical to it," she said. "[The fantastical] is not so much there to soften any of those edgy themes, but it's more to add a different perspective — a bigger perspective that we don't always see in our day-to-day lives."

"The Window Blind" commences as a folie à deux, but through its course, introduces softer themes of love, companionship and redemption.

"Writers are always observing things," the author said recently at a cafe not far from her Santa Monica home. "I can't say there's anything in particular that inspired ["The Window Blind"] or any particular person, but there are definitely little things from my whole life that I've observed … that have found their way in."

Colton was born and raised in Santa Monica, as a member of a "claustrophobic" Irish family.

"When I was growing up — without that much exaggeration — there was almost a relative on every street," she said. "It was a huge family, and there were a lot of relatives that would live around town."

Colton's relatives were not only "around town," but some of them also served as influential figures in the city. Her uncle, John Bambrick, was a City Council member and mayor during the 1970s; her late uncle, Jim Bambrick, contributed his talents as a Santa Monica College Board member and as an instrumental figure in establishing KCRW as a community service of SMC in the late '70s and early '80s; and a handful of aunts and an uncle co-owned The Lobster (Ocean Avenue) with the Valdivia family in the '80s.

Because of her deep ties to the city, Colton said she's hard-pressed to find a street in Santa Monica that doesn't bring back old memories

Take a look at yourself, Osborn

Editor:

In response to your article "Bloom, Butler leading in the 50th" in the June 7 edition, candidate Osborn needs to look much closer to home when referencing "original sin." It was Osborn's negative campaign and misleading mailers that caused voters to abandon her, not photographs in Butler's materials.

It is ironic that Osborn makes the claim that photos of Pavley and Brownley in a Butler mailer "suggested that the two endorsed her," when she used images of Caesar Chavez, Martin Luther King, Jr. and President Kennedy in her 16-page opening mailer.

Congratulating Mayor Bloom while pointedly not congratulating Butler demonstrates a pettiness that only validates the voters' choice on Tuesday.

Let the voters decide

Editor:

The vote by the City Council on the issue of the nativity scenes will be held at City Hall on June 12, 2012. As I read through the Santa Monica Daily Press articles on the subject of the nativity scenes, it occurred to me that I didn't know how the majority of citizens in Santa Monica felt about the nativity scenes. Since people express one opinion in public and the same or sometimes another in the voting booth, I wondered what the result of a vote by the citizens of Santa Monica, being that they live and vote in Santa Monica, on the nativity scenes would be? And yes, in the very next voting cycle? Since the nativity scenes affect Santa Monica residents the most, I wonder if the decision should have ultimately been theirs.

And yes, I still believe, and feel that there is enough love, compassion and tolerance for everyone in Santa Monica to allow the nativity scenes to continue to be built every December, and viewed, unmolested within their traditional time frame.

May the love of the nativity scenes in December continue to bless our city's Palisades Park for decades to come.

May the love of Jesus Christ continue to bathe this city in prosperity, beautiful weather, and blessed sunshine. And may it be that Jesus' blessing be upon all the readers of the Santa Monica Daily Press.

Crow on the menu

HOW DO I LIKE MY CROW? BAKED, boiled or fried? I had predicted that Santa Monica Mayor Richard Bloom would come in third at best in the four person race for the 50th Assembly District seat. Pass more bird, please.

Once the votes were counted and the dust had settled, Bloom came in second behind Betsy Butler, 13,542 to 13,677. Fourth place finisher Osborn lagged 731 votes behind Bloom. It will be the battle of the "Bs" come November. Butler vs. Bloom.

A lot of you were also surprised that Bloom beat Osborn. Butler and Osborn both outspent Bloom by wide margins. What happened?

Both Butler and Osborn flooded mailboxes with color brochures. I've always stated that the candidate with the most color mailers usually prevails. In this primary, the negative tone and number of mailers may have worked against both. For example, Osborn accused Butler of being unfriendly to the environment by sending out thousands of plastic bottles, then mailed enough brochures to decimate a forest.

Osborn's campaign portrayal of Butler as a carpetbagger whose move into the 50th was engineered by Assembly Speaker John A. Perez didn't resonate. Neither did the controversy over how Osborn garnered some Democratic Club endorsements. Pointless, nasty arguments about who was a better friend to seniors were also poorly received.

Bloom wisely avoided the attacks. His straightforward messaging primarily addressed two key concerns of voters. Creating jobs and increased funding for education were among his accomplishments as a Santa Monica political leader.

Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR) endorsed Osborn. It didn't do her much good. The leftist SMRR has no political relevancy or clout outside of Santa Monica. The 50th stretches from Malibu to Hancock Park and includes Pacific Palisades, Brentwood, West Los Angeles, Beverly Hills and West Hollywood. Only 18 percent of the district's voters are in Santa Monica.

One thing is for certain, with Bloom running for Assembly, he won't be seeking re-election to City Council. With a strong possibility that Bobby Shriver won't seek reelection either, two open seats may be up for grabs in November.

Calling all wanna-bes!

PARKING GOING UP?

City Hall is still doing everything it can to chase business out of Santa Monica.

It's never been easy to shop, dine or go to movies in Downtown Santa Monica. Years of misguided traffic policies have resulted in frustrating levels of congestion. Most of the city-owned parking garages on Second and Fourth streets are inefficient and uninviting. Downtown's panhandlers and inebriates don't contribute to a pleasurable family experience, either.

Our 9.25 percent sales and use tax is among the highest in California. The new, "smart" parking meters that sense when a vehicle enters or leaves a parking spot, rolls back leftover meter time to zero and prohibit "meter stuffing" if parked longer than the allotted time are also a big turn off.

So, what's next? Raise parking rates, of course.

Among the proposals being recommended by City Hall's Finance Department are the elimination of free two-hour parking in the city-owned Downtown parking structures and a doubling of metered parking rates to $2 per hour.

Don Patterson, the city's assistant director of finance claims the new parking rates will help redirect traffic away from Third Street-adjacent structures where parking is usually in tight supply to two outlying city garages where more space is available.

City Hall bean counters haven't figured out that the newer Civic Center and Library garages are underutilized because they're too expensive to begin with. The new parking plans would reduce rates in these two outlying garages to $1 an hour with the first hour and a half being free. Maximum rates would drop to $5 per day. Although the lower rates are a positive step, parkers still have to walk three or four blocks to reach the Third Street Promenade.

How about knocking off the social engineering and let motorists find their own way to outlying garages (with new, reduced rates) if space is unavailable adjacent to Third Street? City Hall should leave Downtown's parking rates alone.

Why? Compare the proposed parking costs with parking charges at key surrounding destinations.

• Westfield Century City: First three hours free, $7 for three to three and a half hours, $2 for each additional 15 minutes, $3 with AMC validation (up to five hours).

• The New Westfield Culver City (formerly Fox Hills Mall): Free parking, no time limit.

• The Grove: First hour free, one to three hours $3, $1 for every 15 minutes over three hours, movie validation $2.50 for up to four hours.

• The Promenade at the Howard Hughes Center: 30 minutes free, 31 minutes to one hour $1, One to four hours $2, $1 each additional hour. Prepay flat rate: $2.

• Westside Pavilion: First three hours free, three to four hours $5, four plus hours $2 every 30 minutes.

• Marina Marketplace: Free parking, no time restriction.

• Sherman Oaks Galleria: $6.80 hour (6 a.m. to 4 p.m.) $3 flat rate weekdays after 4 p.m. and on weekends/or $1 with validation.

City Council will review new rate proposals in July. If approved, rates will go up by September and you'll have one more reason to stay away from Downtown.

So much for "Shop Santa Monica." Look for even more folks to head out of town where there's less hassle and parking is cheap — or free!

Invasive species riding tsunami debris to U.S.

JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press

When a floating dock the size of a boxcar washed up on a sandy beach in Oregon, beachcombers got excited because it was the largest piece of debris from last year's tsunami in Japan to show up on the West Coast.

But scientists worried it represented a whole new way for invasive species of seaweed, crabs and other marine organisms to break the earth's natural barriers and further muck up the West Coast's marine environments. And more invasive species could be hitching rides on tsunami debris expected to arrive in the weeks and months to come.

"We know extinctions occur with invasions," said John Chapman, assistant professor of fisheries and invasive species specialist at Oregon State University's Hatfield Marine Science Center. "This is like arrows shot into the dark. Some of them could hit a mark."

Though the global economy has accelerated the process in recent decades by the sheer volume of ships, most from Asia, entering West Coast ports, the marine invasion has been in full swing since 1869, when the transcontinental railroad brought the first shipment of East Coast oysters packed in seaweed and mud to San Francisco, said Andrew Cohen, director of the Center for Research on Aquatic Bioinvasions in Richmond, Calif. For nearly a century before then, ships sailing up the coast carried barnacles and seaweeds.

Now, hotspots like San Francisco Bay amount to a "global zoo" of invasive species and perhaps 500 plants and animals from foreign shores have established in U.S. marine waters, said James Carlton, professor of marine sciences at Williams College. They come mostly from ship hulls and the water ships take on as ballast, but also get dumped into bays from home aquariums.

The costs quickly mount into the untold billions of dollars. Mitten crabs from China eat baby Dungeness crabs that are one of the region's top commercial fisheries. Spartina, a ropey seaweed from Europe, chokes commercial oyster beds. Shellfish plug the cooling water intakes of power plants. Kelps and tiny shrimp-like creatures change the food web that fish, marine mammals and even humans depend on.

A 2004 study in the scientific journal Ecological Economics estimated 400 threatened and endangered species in the U.S. are facing extinction because of pressures from invasive species.

It is too early for scientists to know how much Japanese tsunami debris may add to the invasive species already here.

"It may only introduce one thing," said Cohen of the Aquatic Bioinvasions research center. "But if that thing turns out to be a big problem, we would rather it not happen. There could be an economic impact, an ecological impact, or even a human health impact."

The dock, torn loose from a fishing port on the northern tip of Japan, was covered with 1.5 tons of seaweed, mussels, barnacles and even a few starfish. Volunteers scraped it all off, buried it above the high water line, and sterilized the top and sides of the dock with torches.

But there was no telling whether they might already have released spores or larvae that could establish a foothold in a bay or estuary as it floated along the coast, said Carlton.

"That's the 'Johnny Clamseed' approach," he said, referring to Johnny Appleseed, the pioneer apple tree planter of the early 19th century. "While that is theoretical, we don't actually know if that kind of thing happens."

One thing they know is that the bigger the debris, the more likely it has something on it.

Chapman estimated there were hundreds of millions of individual living organisms on the dock when it washed up on Agate Beach outside Newport, Ore.

But even a small plastic float that washed up on a beach in Alaska carried a live oyster, said Mandy Lindeberg, research scientist at the NOAA Fisheries Auke Bay Laboratories in Juneau, Alaska.

The smaller bits of plastic expected to make up most of the tsunami debris won't have anything except species they picked up at sea, said Carlton.

On the dock, about half the plant species already exist on the West Coast, said Gayle Hansen, a research marine taxonomist at Oregon State University, who has spent hours with her eye scrunched up against a microscope examining samples from the dock.

Among the exotic seaweeds was one known as wakame, which has become a nuisance around the world, but is not yet found in Oregon, she said.

Whether hitchhiking species will survive here depends on randomness, she said. Seaweeds probably would not have survived to reproduce in the crashing surf at Agate Beach. It's the wrong kind of environment. But if they had floated into Yaquina Bay, very similar to their home waters in Japan, they could grow and reproduce.

THINKING OF THE ENVIRONMENT FIRST: The average office tosses out about 350 pounds of paper per year per employee. Reducing paper usage and buying paper with post-consumer recycled content can go a long way to reduce any company's carbon footprint.

Greening your business

Dear EarthTalk:

I own a small business and would like to do what I can to minimize its impact on the environment. Can you help me?

– Jacob Levinson
New York, NY

There are many ways to green up any business, large or small-and an added benefit might just be saving money. Just like individuals, businesses can measure their carbon footprints to get a sense of where they are starting from and to get some initial ideas of areas to focus on to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) offers a free "Simplified GHG [greenhouse gas] Emissions Calculator" to help small businesses get started. Another option is to enroll in TerraPass's "Carbon Balanced Business" program, which helps commercial entities measure and then offset the greenhouse gas emissions they are responsible for generating.

Beyond carbon footprints, there are many other things businesses can do to minimize their environmental impacts. The non-profit Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) reports that, first and foremost, businesses should shift the paper paradigm-the average office tosses out about 350 pounds of paper per year per employee. "Reducing your waste and purchasing paper with post-consumer recycled content can help save trees and nudge the pulp and paper industry, one of the most environmentally destructive industries in the world, toward a less damaging path," NRDC reports. Some easy ways to do this include: setting printers to use both sides of a page (or designating a "draft tray" filled with paper that's blank on one side); buying copy paper with a 30 percent or more post-consumer recycled content; collecting used paper separately for recycling; and stocking bathrooms with post-consumer recycled tissue products.

Getting more energy efficient is another way to save the Earth while saving money too. NRDC recommends taking advantage of the fact that most utilities offer free or inexpensive energy audits, whereby an engineer examines operations and provides a report about how to save on energy costs. Turning off lights and electronics at the end of the work day can save bundles of energy. "Plug all your appliances into a power strip and you'll only have to flip one switch at the end of the day," suggests NRDC. Also, setting computers to "sleep" or "hibernate" when inactive will further reduce a business's footprint. And NRDC says to lose the screensavers: "Flying toasters and slideshows can use up about $50 of electricity in a year." Lastly, when shopping for new office appliances, look for the EnergyStar label which means that the federal government has rated the particular unit highly in terms of energy efficiency.

Cutting water waste will also make a business run greener. The group says to install faucet aerators and low-flow toilets, check for and fix leaks, landscape with water efficiency in mind and recycle gray water where applicable for nonpotable uses such as watering gardens.

Lastly, NRDC suggests creating a greener work environment, given that "employees are on the front lines of any sustainability initiatives" a business chooses to make-perhaps by creating a green team "with members from all divisions of the organization to help implement plans and bring new ideas to the table." Those looking to take their businesses down a green path should consult any of the free "Greening Your Business" guides on NRDC's website.

houses about a third of the nation's welfare recipients, while only housing one-eighth of the national population.

Most of the recipients, however, are children — more than three-quarters of the 1.5 million in the welfare-to-work program CalWORKs, which stands for California Work Opportunity and Responsibility to Kids. The rest are mostly single mothers who must work or participate in job training and related activities to receive cash assistance.

The state has traditionally held a relatively generous attitude toward welfare. For instance, CalWORKs gives cash grants to children even when their parents are ineligible for benefits for various reasons, such as being illegal immigrants, receiving disability, or failing to abide by the program's rules. Only three other states — Indiana, Oregon and Arizona — have such an expansive policy.

California also allows parents to receive job services and cash grants for up to four years. Before last year, the limit was 60 months.

The policies have made the program an expensive budget line — the state spends $2.9 billion on CalWORKs and related programs — and an easy target for lawmakers looking for costs to trim with little political fallout. In years past, lawmakers have proposed doing away with benefits to children with ineligible parents and even slashing the whole CalWORKs program.

The state's budget woes have given renewed impetus to whittle away at CalWORKs. Last year, the maximum five-year benefit period shrunk to four years and monthly grants were diminished 8 percent. A family of three currently receives $638 a month, less than the rate in 1988.

For the next fiscal year, the governor is proposing more sweeping cutbacks, including a 27 percent cut in cash assistance to children with ineligible parents and further slashing the time limit for full benefits from four years to two years.

Other rule changes would restrict benefits to mothers of younger children and families earning poverty-level wages and increase sanctions on those who violate program terms.

"We felt the program was losing its focus of welfare-to-work," said Todd Bland, deputy director the state Department of Social Services' welfare-to-work division. "The reason we wanted to refocus is because of the very difficult budget environment."

The changes also come at a time when California is appealing federal penalties of $160 million because it failed to move enough welfare recipients to private sector jobs of at least 30 hours a week in 2008 and 2009, a requirement to receive federal money that helps pay for CalWORKs. Many California recipients are given part-time, publicly subsidized jobs so they get work experience.

CalWORKs recipients say getting a regular job that pays enough to support a family is not easy as lawmakers think.

Sarah Smith, a 31-year-old divorced mother of four in Los Angeles County, had been a stay-at-home mother since the age of 18, only working sporadically between having children. She was forced to turn to CalWORKs a year ago after her husband stopped paying child support. She received $850 a month in cash aid and $700 in food stamps.

She's also been able to make herself more marketable through the job services the program offers. She's beefed up her clerical skills, self-confidence and resume with a minimum-wage, temporary job as a customer service assistant with the county Department of Social Services, but the job ends this month.

She's hoping she now will be able to find a permanent job. If not, she will try for a subsidized job program where the county pays half her salary and the private employer pays the rest.

Policymakers don't realize that people need a chance to rebuild their lives, Smith said, adding that CalWORKs aid is far from enough to live on.

"It's still a juggling act," she said. "People are trying to get jobs. No one really wants to be on welfare. Most people are trying to get off it."

Nearly half of CalWORKs families move off the program within two years, but about 18 percent are long-term. Those families are often have very young children and headed by parents who lack a high school diploma or job skills, or have a family member with a disability, according to a report by the Public Policy Institute of California.

Brown's reforms aim to get parents off welfare before they become entrenched. The plan calls for parents to be hired or employable within two years of entering the program by providing job training and counseling, mental health, substance abuse and domestic violence support services, and child care. They must either work or participate in those activities to get the cash aid.

After two years, the services and some money would be cut off if they do not find a private sector job — a move that would affect about 130,000 parents, according to the state Legislative Analyst's Office.

Those parents could still receive a much-reduced cash benefit for child maintenance. A parent with two children would receive $375 a month, a drop of $263.

If parents do find employment, they could still be eligible to receive services such as child care for another two years and some cash aid if their income remains below a certain level.

Social service providers say it's overly optimistic to expect the private sector to absorb tens of thousands of people, many with minimal job skills, with California's unemployment rate the second highest in the nation at 10.9 percent in April. Only 11 percent of CalWORKs parents had private sector jobs of at least 30 hours week in 2009, according to the Public Policy Institute of California.

"CalWORKs recipients are living on a shoestring as it is," said Frank Mecca, executive director of the County Welfare Directors Association of California. "This is going to plunge many children into poverty and likely increase homelessness. You're shredding the safety net at a time when it's needed most."

Republicans say it's about time California pushed harder to get people to self-sufficiency, and say more is needed. Halving the time limit is a good move, but continuing to give parents cash for children with no strings attached defeats the purpose of welfare-to-work.

"It removes the responsibility from the parent. You're taking away the accountability from the oversight of the program," said Assemblyman Brian Jones, R-Santee, vice chairman of the Assembly Human Services Committee.

Instead of focusing on half measures of welfare reform, the governor should concentrate on job-stimulation strategies so people have a place to go, he said. "If there's no regulatory reform, he's wasting his time," Jones said.

The debate over CalWORKs' mission is likely to continue, especially if state revenues continue to fall short, said Caroline Danielson, policy fellow at the Public Policy Institute of California.

BUDGET

The fiscal situation for public education is dire now, and doesn't appear to be getting better.

The state has already cut 22 percent of the funds the district "should be" receiving, Maez said, but the board can expect an additional $5 million loss if neither of two tax measures expected to appear on the November ballot pass.

The two taxes are the mystery element that means the difference between a "worst case" and "best case" scenario.

The first, proposed by Gov. Jerry Brown, would raise income taxes on California's wealthiest and increase the sales tax by a quarter of a percent to 7.5 percent.

The other, by activist Molly Munger, would raise income taxes for most Californians, raising an estimated $10 billion.

As shown by the "best case" scenario, the district is still bleeding even if one of the two taxes pass.

"Even if the triggers aren't pulled, we need to find a way to address the deficit spending pattern," Maez said.

Members of the Financial Oversight Committee, an independent group that advises the board on budget-related issues, backed her up, calling for a strategy that would protect the district's financial position.

In an organization where approximately 85 percent of the budget goes to pay for salaries, benefits and other employee-related costs, attempts to balance the budget often come on the backs of individuals.

The district has managed to dodge the dramatic cuts seen elsewhere in the state because of strong support at the local level.

Taxpayers fork over $10.9 million in parcel taxes each year and City Hall provided $6.4 million in a sales-tax sharing scheme that paid off for the first time in the 2011-12 school year.

Both the Santa Monica and Malibu City Hall contribute another $8.2 million on top of that, and the district pulls in $2.3 million from properties it leases throughout the district.

It hasn't been enough to fully staunch the flow, and other factors outside of the district's control weaken it further.

For instance, approximately 40 percent of the cash promised to the district by the state is delayed, creating a severe cash flow issue.

The district's cost for borrowing money has been forced up, in part because of a calculation at the state level that assumes the district will get $17 million in new revenue from the dissolution of redevelopment agencies, entities that used property tax revenue for capital improvement projects and other things.

That money will never appear in district coffers, a fact the state will eventually recognize, but too late to save the district from borrowing to cover normal budgeted expenses.

Though Colton conceded that having omnipresent relatives was at times hectic and overwhelming, she attributes some of her artistic quirks to her childhood and admits that she has always had fodder for writing.

"Sometimes it was hard to be able to speak up because there was always a lot of talking — it was a lot of yelling, but it wasn't like [my family was] fighting," Colton said. "My natural inclination was to become more introspective — to go off and read something or go off and write something."

It wasn't until the fifth grade, however, that Colton considered pursuing creative writing. While at St. Monica's Elementary School, she wrote a short story titled "Justin," about a Beatles-like musician who struggles with failures as an artist.

"I got some good feedback from the teachers, and that kind of put in my head, 'Well this is something that other people think I'm good at, too,'" she said.

After graduating from St. Monica Catholic High School, Colton attended Santa Monica College and then UCLA, where she received a bachelor's degree in English. She said it was at UCLA that she began to enjoy the process of other types of writing, such as expository writing.

"When I would write something, I would learn so much about myself," Colton said. "I began to understand that writing, even if it wasn't creative writing, was such a road to self-discovery."

Colton went through what she likes to call her "vagabond stage," after graduating from UCLA in '82.

"I went to Italy about eight times; I really wanted to live and work there," she said. "The way I approached life after college was basically to work enough to fund my next trip."

Through various adventures in countries such as Spain, France and Italy — including a six-month job at an airplane-painting company in Bassano del Grappa — Colton let the inspiration soak in.

"[Traveling] was like osmosis — something you absorb for later," Colton said. "It was really inspiring to be in [Paris] … it was amazing to think, 'This is where some of my heroes have been.'"

Heroes include F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ernest Hemingway, whose terse, minimalist style and punchy dialogue left marks on Colton's writing.

"["The Window Blind"] is pretty dialogue-driven," she said. "It's almost like a play or a screenplay in some ways."

It wasn't until 1993 that Colton marked the end of her vagabond years: she was married and had a daughter. She said crossing the threshold of 30 encouraged her to buckle down.

"I settled into this whole phase where I was the opposite of the vagabond," Colton said. "I became the most dependable person — I had the same job for 12 years."

The job was a position as an e-mail administrator at a software company called Candle Corp. Followed by a four-year stay at MGM Studios — she still has the black leather briefcase to show for it — Colton took her final job as an e-mail administrator at Jefferies and Co. in 2007, which was around the same time she started writing "The Window Blind."

"After I finished ["The Window Blind"], I shopped it around to different literary agents," Colton said. "I got rejections."

Detractors said Colton's novel featured everyday characters that did nothing in a world where anything could happen.

"I went back to the drawing table, and that's when I decided to really spend some time making [the story] better and refining it," she said.

Refining was a four-year process, but Colton's efforts earned her a nomination from ForeWard Reviews as a fantasy Book of the Year contender.

COLTON

ForeWard shines the spotlight on the achievements of independent publishers and authors, judging manuscripts for editorial excellence, originality of subject matter, accuracy, author credentials and professional packaging.

Award winners will be announced at the American Library Association annual conference in Anaheim, Calif., on June 23. With the decisions around the corner, Colton said she is excited to represent the independent scene.

"It would be cool to win, but if not, I have so much respect for the indie authors out there," she said. "I know [publishing] is really hard, and some of these people are really amazing."

Colton is presently working on obtaining a master's degree in English literature from Cal State Northridge, where she will graduate this December. The local wordsmith also works part-time in the membership department at KCRW and at SMC, as an instructional English assistant.

Upon graduating, Colton anticipates work on a second novel.

considered manipulation of the democratic process and a violation of the bylaws.

"A person who is in office in any organization has no right to choose their opposition," said Jim Pickerell, a professor at Los Angeles City College and one of the new candidates for the board.

The days preceding the vote were filled with a flurry of activity as candidates tried to ensure they would be given the chance to stand for election that the Wilmont board was actively trying to cancel.

On Tuesday, the candidates were informed that Wilmont had a requirement that candidates belong to the group for a year, attend at least three board meetings in the last six months and participate actively in the group's activities.

Thursday afternoon, Griffin told the Daily Press that she was considering canceling the vote because she couldn't determine whether or not the new candidates were eligible to stand in the election.

The board of Wilmont sent out an e-mail to the membership late Thursday night, less than 72 hours before the gathering was to take place, renaming the meeting a "community meeting" rather than the "annual meeting."

The one-word change makes a world of difference.

According to Wilmont's bylaws, the election of officers must take place at the group's annual meeting. By re-characterizing it was a "community meeting," the board felt that the requirement to hold the election would be lifted.

The reason provided for the change was the hospitalization of the 83-year-old director of membership, Marcia Carter, who had fallen and broken a hip.

Carter was the only one who had access to physical copies of membership information, some of which had not been recorded in any computer system. That documentation was necessary not only to establish who could vote, but which of the 11 candidates that had tried to get on the ballot at the end of May were eligible, Griffin said.

Many of the candidates joined the organization very recently, and most had signed each other's nominating petitions. That meant that the only proof that candidates were members and had valid nominating signatures was locked in Carter's apartment, making it uncertain that they were eligible to run. Griffin said.

Susan Scarafia, an active member of various Santa Monica groups, proposed that each person in the room cast a provisional ballot, which could then be authenticated when the membership rolls were available.

That drew a wave of criticism from active board members on the belief that the vote would be invalid. Vice Chair Albin Gielicz, who took over after Griffin was voted out, chose to proceed in spite of the naysayers.

"With all due respect, I think we will take the vote and let the momentum of the room go," Gielicz said, noting that if any legal review takes place to support or invalidate the vote, so be it.

The board will be consulting with legal counsel about the vote, Griffin said.

Ballots were put in envelopes which voters then sealed, signed and placed in a ballot box. The slit in the top of the box was then taped over and signed to prevent any kind of tampering.

Gielicz was entrusted with the box, which will make its debut in coming weeks when membership documents are available and another public meeting can be called to count the votes.

"Democracy prevailed, and I'll be able to walk out of the room content that we had the election," Gielicz said after the vote. "The validity and eligibility is all to be determined later."

Jeanne Dodson, a former chair of Wilmont and one of the 11 candidates running for the spots, said that she was thrilled with the outcome.

"We don't know who won or lost," she said, "but the important thing is that democracy prevailed."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Banks accepts Seahawks minicamp tryout offer

TIM BOOTH
AP Sports Writer

SEATTLE Brian Banks has accepted the offer of Seattle coach Pete Carroll and will get a formal tryout with the Seahawks during their upcoming minicamp.

The 26-year-old Banks was a one-time high school star at Long Beach Poly who was recently exonerated in a California rape case in which he was falsely accused. Banks served more than five years in prison.

Banks' agent, Bruce Tollner confirmed Sunday that after flying to Kansas City for a workout with the Chiefs, Banks will return to the Pacific Northwest and take part in the Seahawks' minicamp. The minicamp starts Tuesday, but Banks' first day will be Wednesday.

Banks had a private workout at the Seahawks practice facility last Thursday. Following the workout, Carroll said he wanted to bring Banks' back for the minicamp and see him on the field.

Early night, Scorpio

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Note a sarcastic tone around you that forces some strong, fixed reactions -- not only from you, but also from others. An element of shock runs through your actions. Naturally, misunderstandings will arise. Center yourself. Tonight: Head home, relax ... then decide.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ While there is an element of harshness that surrounds you, do not lose focus on your bigger goal. Opportunities appear later today, when people calm down. Straighten out a misunderstanding as soon as possible. Tonight: Make it early.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Sometimes being a natural-born leader is no fun. You inevitably will have to deal with a difficult situation. You have a lot of empathy for those around you, but at a certain point you need to cut the line and deal with what is required. Tonight: Burning the candle at both ends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Do necessary research. Though people could say some wild and outrageous things, you will not want to trigger a reaction. If you need advice, detach from your immediate situation. Tonight: Could be late.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Others try to come through for you but get hit with one problem after another. You might decide to do what you must on your own, but there could be a liability that you have yet to see. You are walking a tightrope, and it might be close to impossible not to involve others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Defer to others with the knowledge that this, too, will pass. If you act, there will be a problem; however, if you do not act, there also will be a problem. An element of the unexpected can turn nearly any situation upside down. Tonight: Nap, then decide.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Focus on one project at a time. Whatever you do, do it 100 percent if you want to feel good about the results. The unexpected occurs involving a key partner. You might need to regroup afterward. Tonight: Go with a loved one's choice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Your imagination helps you understand where others are coming from. You could find a pushy friend to be a distinct problem. In fact, what this person does could trigger a series of events that you might prefer not to deal with. Tonight: Make it an early night.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You move slowly but successfully. You might witness a lot of confusion along the way. Determine just how involved you want to be with the present happenings, as a child or loved one could get testy. Tonight: When push comes to shove, you'll discover the implication of a misunderstanding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You make efforts that could backfire. You observe others' frustration levels and give some thought to tossing your own demands in the air. Settle in and find the most effective course of action. Tonight: Do only what you must.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ You might want to say little and observe more. There is a side of you that wonders why you are caught in the middle of a situation. Misunderstandings will prevail if you are not careful. Tonight: Do your errands. Then catch up on someone's news.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You get an extra push into your day, but you also could be overwhelmed by what is going on around you. Consider what is happening, and be careful as you decide how much to invest, emotionally and financially. Tonight: Enjoy the moment.

Happy birthday

This year you learn to let go even more. Make it OK for both sides of the Twins to voice their thoughts. You also might discover that many people get confused by your distinctive personality. If you are single, you could meet someone very sensitive. The issue is that you have a salty sense of humor at times, which this person could take too seriously. If you are attached, what you say and what you do often reveal different agendas. These mixed messages could become an issue between you and your sweetie. PISCES often is very emotional, yet he or she pushes you hard to achieve your goals.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Felix Velazquez's meticulous attention to detail could have served him well in legitimate endeavors, but was unfortunately displayed in a recent attempt to stalk an ex-girlfriend in Broward County, Fla. He had already been to prison for a 2008 stalking when he allegedly devised a fake double kidnapping -- of her and him -- so that he could "rescue" her and win back her affections. According to prosecutors, he created 23 pages of maps, photos and, reported the South Florida Sun-Sentinel, an "encyclopedic amount of detail about (the woman's) routine, her appearance, friends and driving routes to work" and thought he had convinced a former cellmate to do the abduction. However, as frequently happens, the cellmate got queasy and told police, who devised their own elaborate ruse to sting Velazquez. He is awaiting trial.

■ The family of a 13-year-old girl filed a lawsuit in Queensland, Australia, in April after their daughter, in a physical education tennis class at an upscale private school in Mudgeeraba, was hit in the eye by a bad shot from a fellow 13-year-old. The injury came as the girls were "smashing" balls back to each other from the baseline during a lesson. (Brisbane's Courier-Mail newspaper reported that several schools in Queensland state have banned such "dangerous" schoolyard activities as "cartwheels" and "red rover.")
