Younger 2020 candidates hint at age divide in hitting Biden

WILL WEISSERT
Associated Press

Some of the younger candidates in the crowded Democratic presidential primary are suggesting that the early front-runner, 76-year-old Joe Biden , is too mired in the past.

Former Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke , 46, and Pete Buttigieg , the 37-year old mayor of South Bend, Indiana, have stepped up questions this week about whether GRADUATION: PEMA recognized it's first class of graduating students with colorful sarapes.

ANGEL CARRERAS
Daily Press Staff Writer

An independent parent group recently relaunched at Samohi is already having an immediate impact on the high school's student body.

During Samohi's Class of 2019 graduation, multicolored sarapes — a shawl worn over the shoulders — visibly popped amongst a sea of Samohi Vikings blue and gold.

The colorful shawls were representative of Padres, Estudiantes y Maestros Asociación (PEMA), an independent group within the district which seeks to empower Latino students with a family-like touch, provided to PEMA students at the first Latino PEMA graduation celebration held Friday, June 7 held at the Samohi Cafeteria.

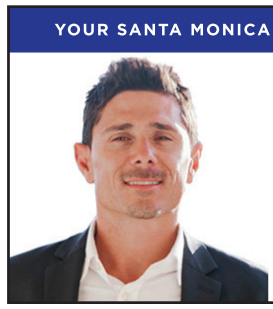

"We did everything from scratch," Rebecca Villegas, president of PEMA said. "I think it came out great. Next year, we hope it's even bigger."

The celebration saw students receive $2,100 in scholarships and give speeches to their friends and families, a packed event with an attendance

Harbor-UCLA Cardiologist to Be Installed as the Los Angeles County Medical Association's 148th President

Dr. Sion Roy, a Harbor-UCLA Medical Center cardiologist, will become the Los Angeles County Medical Association's (LACMA) youngest president in the organization's 148-year history at the Annual Installation of President and Officers on June 21st, 2019. Dr. Roy is also a Trustee to the California Medical Association and was elected to the Santa Monica College Board of Trustees on November 6, 2018 to serve a 4-year term. Dr. Roy will be the first county-employed physician and elected official to lead LACMA.

Dr. Roy joined LACMA in 2011 while completing his fellowship at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center and has had an interest in policy and advocacy since a young age, realizing that as a physician, "It's important to shape policy in our overly complex system because that makes a difference in the lives of patients. It's as important as the day to day contact," he said.

As the incoming president of the largest medical association in the state, representing one of the most diversely populated counties in the country, Dr. Roy will focus his one-year term on enhancing LACMA's role in the development of healthcare policies that increase access to quality healthcare for all patients.

"With Governor Newsom's ambitious healthcare agenda and the appointment of California's first-ever surgeon-general, LACMA and its physician members will be at the forefront of creating solutions for the most critical issues affecting healthcare and healthcare delivery in our county. We are committed to achieving universal access to quality healthcare for all the people of LA County and for all Californians. To attain this goal, physicians must lead to create positive change. LACMA physicians are committed to doing this." Dr. Roy said.

Dr. Roy is a cardiologist and Assistant Professor of Medicine at Harbor UCLA. Additionally, he serves as the Director of the Inpatient Cardiac CT program and Associate Cardiology Fellowship Program Director. In addition to being a trustee at Santa Monica College, where he previously served as adjunct professor teaching health policy, Dr. Roy is also an elected delegate and serves on the finance committee for the California Democratic Party.

LACMA is a professional association representing over 6,000 LA county physicians from every medical specialty and practice. Since 1871, LACMA has been at the forefront of the science, business and politics of medicine, ensuring that its members are represented in the areas of public policy, government relations, innovation and healthcare research and delivery.

New York ends religious exemption to vaccine mandates

DAVID KLEPPER
Associated Press

New York eliminated the religious exemption to vaccine requirements for schoolchildren Thursday, as the nation's worst measles outbreak in decades prompts states to reconsider giving parents ways to opt out of immunization rules.

The Democrat-led Senate and Assembly voted Thursday to repeal the exemption, which allows parents to cite religious beliefs to forgo getting their child the vaccines required for school enrollment.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo, a Democrat, signed the measure minutes after the final vote. The law takes effect immediately but will give unvaccinated students up to 30 days after they enter a school to show they've had the first dose of each required immunization.

With New York's move, similar exemptions are still allowed in 45 states, though lawmakers in several of them have introduced their own legislation to eliminate the waiver.

The issue is hotly contested and debate around it has often been emotional, pitting cries that religious freedom is being curtailed against warnings that public health is being endangered. After the vote in the Assembly, many of those watching from the gallery erupted in cries of "shame!" One woman yelled obscenities down to the lawmakers below.

The debate has only intensified with this year's measles outbreak , which federal officials recently said has surpassed 1,000 illnesses, the highest in 27 years.

"I'm not aware of anything in the Torah, the Bible, the Koran or anything else that suggests you should not get vaccinated," said Bronx Democrat Jeffrey Dinowitz, the bill's Assembly sponsor. "If you choose to not vaccinate your child, therefore potentially endangering other children ... then you're the one choosing not to send your children to school."

Hundreds of parents of unvaccinated children gathered at New York's Capitol for the vote to protest.

Stan Yung, a Long Island attorney and father, said his Russian Orthodox religious views and health concerns about vaccines will prevent him from vaccinating his three young children. His family, he said, may consider leaving the state.

"People came to this country to get away from exactly this kind of stuff," Yung said ahead of Thursday's votes.

Supporters of the bill say religious beliefs about vaccines shouldn't eclipse scientific evidence that they work, noting the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1905 that states have the right to enforce compulsory vaccination laws. During the Assembly's floor debate, supporters brought up scourges of the past that were defeated in the U.S. through vaccines.

"I'm old enough to have been around when polio was a real threat," said Assemblywoman Deborah Glick, D-Manhattan. "I believe in science.... Your personal opinions, which may be based on junk science, do not trump the greater good."

Supporters also suggest some parents may be claiming the religious exemption for their children even though their opposition is actually based on scientifically discredited claims about the dangers of vaccines.

The bill would not change an existing state exemption given to children who cannot have vaccines for medical reasons, such as a weakened immune system.

Cuomo told reporters on Wednesday that he believes public health — and the need to protect those who cannot get vaccinated because for medical reasons — outweighs the concerns about religious freedom.

"I understand freedom of religion," he said. "I have heard the anti-vaxxers' theory, but I believe both are overwhelmed by the public health risk."

The current measles outbreak has renewed concern about the exemptions in many states. The nation last saw as many cases in 1992, when more than 2,200 were reported.

The majority of cases are from outbreaks in New York in Orthodox Jewish communities.

California removed personal belief vaccine exemptions for children in both public and private schools in 2015, after a measles outbreak at Disneyland sickened 147 people and spread across the U.S. and into Canada. Maine ended its religious exemption earlier this year.

Mississippi and West Virginia also do not allow religious exemptions.

Once common in the U.S., measles became rare after vaccination campaigns that started in the 1960s. A decade ago, there were fewer than 100 cases a year.

Restaurants have reservations about California's data privacy law

The English writer Virginia Woolf famously said, "One cannot think well, love well, sleep well, if one has not dined well."

But while that's the core belief of most chefs, restauranteurs, and food lovers, it is beginning to feel that the California Legislature disagrees.

From the war on plastic to limiting kids' drinks to minimum wage raises for tipped employees, California restaurants are struggling to stay profitable in the face of legislative mandates. Unfortunately, every piece of anti-small business legislation increases a restaurant's odds of failing – an ever-present fear. An estimated 60 percent of new restaurants close within their first year, and nearly 80 percent before their fifth.

And now, restaurant owners face another challenge: the impact of the California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA).

Under the CCPA, which goes into effect in 2020, establishments like restaurants that depend on attracting a steady clientele will be limited in their ability to conduct business operations and reach customers. Restaurants depend on the internet to promote themselves at a low cost, as a means of keeping prices low. If the CCPA restricts this access, we will lose a vital new tool for finding new customers and helping them find their way to our restaurants.

I urge the Legislature to modify the CCPA immediately to ensure that doesn't happen.

At my restaurant Caffè Bella, for example, we cannot rely on word-of-mouth endorsements alone to sufficiently fill the pipeline of new customers. We utilize some traditional marketing, but it is costly and not always what consumers are looking for (like an online menu). Internet marketing and an online presence is critical to our existence. We depend on the internet and social media to reach a large pool of people who may be looking for a place to dine. We don't want to use the internet to collect personal information; we want customers and potential customers to know about our restaurant, where we are located, and the specials we are providing.

We have a well-optimized social media program. We encourage food bloggers and influencers to write about us, because good reviews and mentions raise our profile in a search. We partner with food delivery services that provide food to their customers through location services. We nurture return business through a customer loyalty program, which we promote online and through email lists. Most importantly, we engage in local search engine optimization (SEO) practices, given that almost three-quarters of all searches are for local content.

But the CCPA could limit our ability to use the internet to market our restaurant to customers. For example, we could be unable to access non-personal data to identify and reach customers who are searching for a restaurant. And, customers could unwittingly decide to "opt-out" from receiving ads and other information they want and enjoy.

We could also be precluded from communicating with customers through low-cost advertising, putting us at a competitive disadvantage with national chain restaurants that utilize television and print advertisements. And we could be preempted from offering discounts and loyalty programs to keep customers coming back – a growing trend in the food and beverage industry used by not only small establishments like mine, but also large chains — because we can no longer share information with our rewards program administrator.

Most people, including restaurant owners, want to keep personal information private and most people want to continue to have access to an information-rich internet that saves time and money. We can and should make both happen.

The CCPA was rushed through the legislature process without sufficient input from the small business community and, in its current form, could adversely impact business owners like me. I urge the Legislature to support legislation that modifies the CCPA before the law takes effect in January.

Biden really provides new perspectives for the direction of the country after the 2020 election.

"We cannot return to the past," O'Rourke told MSNBC on Thursday. "That cannot be who we are going forward. We've got to be bigger, we've got to be bolder."

O'Rourke has spent months praising Biden's experience and perspective. His criticism now comes two weeks before Democrats gather for the first presidential debate of the primary and highlights the generational divide that some candidates are trying to draw in hopes of reshaping the race.

Though O'Rourke didn't mention Biden's age, he said Biden, a two-term vice president under Barack Obama, represents a return to the past. That echoes Buttigieg, who seemed to refer to Biden during a lengthy speech Tuesday designed to bolster his own foreign policy credentials.

"Democrats can no more turn the clock back to the 1990s than Republicans can return us to the 1950s," he said. "And we should not try."

Buttigieg was just shy of his eighth birthday when the 1990s began. When Biden announced his first run for president in June 1987, Buttigieg was 5.

Biden has long rejected notions he's too old for the White House, especially since President Donald Trump turns 73 on Friday. And Biden isn't the oldest Democratic candidate; that's Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, 77.

Biden, a seasoned politician who arrived in the Senate in 1973, insists he can remake the nation's politics after Trump.

But as Biden sits at the top of most polls, questions have begun to surface about whether some of the other candidates can get noticed. Brad Bannon, a Democratic pollster and consultant in Washington, said this is an issue in which younger candidates can potentially gain ground on Biden and Sanders.

"Basically, most voters think Washington is either Sodom or Gomorrah, or both combined, and I think the problem Biden has is he's been around too long," said Bannon, who is unaffiliated with any 2020 presidential hopeful. "People are very hostile to creatures of Washington."

Even O'Rourke's mild criticism demonstrates a shift for a candidate who had previously refused to speak ill of any other Democrats in the race, saying it simply wasn't in his DNA. Appearing Wednesday night on CBS' "The Late Show with Stephen Colbert," O'Rourke was asked jokingly, "If trapped on a deserted island with all 22 other candidates, which would you eat first?"

"I would die first," he said, refusing to take the bait.

Former Obama administration housing chief Julian Castro , 44, has also championed the fresh political perspective he says he can offer, telling The Associated Press while preparing his presidential run in December, "I think these times, right now, call for a new generation of leadership."

Asked about Biden, Castro said: "I think that everybody brings their strengths. But I'll tell you that what I hear out there is that people want a new generation of leadership."

The issue remains on Biden's mind, too. Pressed by reporters this week in Iowa, he said, "People have a right to question all of our ages. It's a totally legitimate thing."

Biden also indicated he was expecting criticism during the upcoming debate.

"My guess is it's going to be an inclination, instead of talking about the future, it's going to be talking about the past," Biden said during a stop Wednesday at a cafe in Eldridge, Iowa. "And I'm about the future, not the past. For real, there are so many opportunities we have. And so much has to be done."

Associated Press writers Paul J. Weber in Austin, Texas, and Thomas Beaumont in Eldridge, Iowa, contributed to this report.

of over 250.

"It was a full house," SMMUSD board member Ralph Mechur said. Mechur, who opined at a September 2018 board meeting that he thought PEMA seemed dedicated to working with the community, was wowed by PEMAs immediate effect.

"It was great to be at an event celebrating the success of our students," he said. "It was a wonderful way to honor their work, their culture and their bright futures. It's important for us to recognize the backgrounds that all the students come from, to honor them and to make sure who they are is looked at as part of their personal strength."

PEMA now has roughly 100 members and will grow to other districts including Culver City and Venice. However, their beginnings were far more humble.

"The first week or so, we only had two students," Dr. Berenice Onofre, PEMA founder said. "We were afraid we wouldn't even get to six. I think by word of mouth the kids got there."

Word of mouth was aided by Dr. Mireles-Toumayan, a Spanish teacher at Samohi. Mireles-Toumayan was already a champion for Latino students in the school as an advisor for the Latinos Unidas club, spending time after class and after school aiding her students in their graduation plans.

In PEMA, she found a partner with similar goals.

"We wanted a voice for Latinos in the district," Mireles-Toumayan said. "PEMA welcomed all, regardless of background. I told my students about them and the numbers grew fast. My club was excited to work with them and join them."

One Samohi Class of 2019 graduate who benefited from PEMA is Cristian Cruz.

Cruz is Cal State Northridge bound, currently Undeclared but hoping to soon change assign Health Science as his major. A son of Latino immigrants, Cruz said he initially joined PEMA to stay close to his roots. He says PEMA helped him to improved himself, his grades and his life.

"They influenced me to strive for better things," Cruz said. "They made sure I didn't just go for the bare minimum, always asking me to ask more of myself."

After celebrating with PEMA at their first graduation celebration, Samohi's schoolwide celebration ensued. Cruz, along with other PEMA members wore their shawls with pride.

"For me, I wore it because I was proud of my culture," Cruz said. "It was a matter of representing."

AP Explains: Juneteenth celebrates end of slavery in the US

JESSE J. HOLLAND
Associated Press

A holiday that is spreading across the U.S. and beyond, Juneteenth is considered the oldest known celebration commemorating the ending of slavery in the United States.

It was originally celebrated on June 19, the day that Union soldiers in 1865 told enslaved African Americans in Galveston, Texas, that the Civil War had ended and they were free.

Celebrations include parades, concerts, and readings of the Emancipation Proclamation. This year, Juneteenth will also feature the first congressional hearing in more than a decade on reparations for slavery.

Here's a look at the holiday and its history:

BEGINNINGS

The celebration started with the freed slaves of Galveston, Texas. Although the Emancipation Proclamation freed the slaves in the South in 1863, it could not be enforced in many places until after the end of the Civil War in 1865.

Laura Smalley, who was freed from a plantation near Bellville, Texas, remembered in a 1941 interview that her former master had gone to fight in the Civil War and came home without telling his slaves what had happened.

"Old master didn't tell, you know, they was free," Smalley said . "I think now they say they worked them, six months after that. Six months. And turn them loose on the 19th of June. That's why, you know, we celebrate that day."

It was June 19, 1865 when Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger and his Union troops arrived at Galveston with news that the war had ended and that the enslaved were now free.

Granger read from General Order No. 3, which said: "The people of Texas are informed that, in accordance with a proclamation from the Executive of the United States, all slaves are free. This involves an absolute equality of personal rights and rights of property between former masters and slaves, and the connection heretofore existing between them becomes that between employer and hired labor."

The next year, the now-freed slaves started celebrating Juneteenth in Galveston, and the celebration has continued around the nation and the world since.

WHAT DOES JUNETEENTH MEAN?

The term Juneteenth is a blend of the words June and nineteenth. The holiday has also been called Juneteenth Independence Day or Freedom Day.

According to Dee Evans, national director of communications of the National Juneteenth Observance Foundation, there will be Juneteenth celebrations in almost every state this year.

Black Texans took the holiday with them as they moved around the country and overseas, Evans said, and what started as a local celebration went international.

Forty-five states and the District of Columbia recognize Juneteenth as a state holiday or day of recognition, like Flag Day. Countries like South Korea, Ghana, Israel, Taiwan, France, and the U.S. territory of Guam have held or now hold Juneteenth celebrations.

A resolution recognizing Juneteenth as a national holiday passed the Senate last year, but the accompanying resolution has not been approved in the House.

REMEMBERING THE PAST

Juneteenth celebrations used to revolve around the church with speeches and picnics, said Para LaNell Agboga, museum site coordinator at the George Washington Carver Museum, Cultural and Genealogy Center in Austin, Texas, which has one of the only permanent Juneteenth museum exhibits in the country.

It changed around the 1960s with the civil rights movement, she said.

"It became a little more secular and stretched over more than one day," Agboga said. "It became kind of a time of community gathering ... It's really more huge parties and huge parades and big concerts, but always bringing in freedom. It's all about freedom."

More than 150 cities will have Juneteenth celebrations this year, Evans said.

Each celebration is different, from parades in places like Philadelphia, Chicago, New York, Atlanta, San Francisco and Houston, to concerts in Tulsa, Oklahoma, Denver and Marietta, Georgia, to free genealogy workshops outside of Washington, D.C., to readings of the Emancipation Proclamation.

Agboga, Evans and others are working to for defining a Southern California cuisine that reflects the region's ties to Southeast Asia and its farmers market ethos. Next Tuesday, chef Bryant Ng is opening Cassia's Rice & Noodle Kitchen, a restaurant within a restaurant that will be available exclusively for takeout or on food delivery apps.

For most people, drooling over Cassia's menu online is the closest they get to that rich, tangy laksa or that seabass infused with turmeric and lime — which, like most of the menu, will run you between $20 and $50.

Now, imagine a world where the best spicy dry noodles Cassia can offer were available for a little more than $10. And you could eat them while watching the Netflix food documentary that sparked your craving for something doused in chili oil in the first place.

Chefs in Cassia's kitchen will be whipping up rice bowls and noodle soups with the same ingredients used in the main restaurant. Instead of sending the dishes out into the chic brasserie-cum-warehouse dining room, however, they'll hand them off to a Postmates or UberEats driver who will deliver them to your door.

Ng said he and his business partner and wife, Kim Luu-Ng, have always wanted to create a restaurant that was more accessible. But to serve the quality of food Cassia is known for at a lower price point, something had to give.

"We all know the restaurant business is changing, and we don't know in what direction it's gonna head in," Ng said. "The reality is every restaurant is going to have to look at its bottom line. Wages, rent and the cost of raw materials are all going up, but you can only charge so much for a dish."

Those constraints meant Ng had to think creatively about where to cut costs.

"Why not create a kitchen within a kitchen?" he said. "The food will be prepared by the same people at Cassia with the same sourcing and care, but because it's only delivery, we can pass on those savings to the guests."

Cassia's chef de cuisine John Stenbakken and sous chef Eleanor Hurtt developed a menu inspired by the rice and noodle dishes served in the main restaurant, featuring noodle soup with pork and shrimp wontons and lettuce cups with minced soybeans and mushrooms accompanied by plum hoisin sauce.

"The soul is still pretty much the same," Ng said.

For most restaurants, though, delivery is incidental; the menu is not crafted around foods that travel or reheat well. Cassia's fried cauliflower with fish sauce is a favorite of Ng's, but he wouldn't put it on the menu at Cassia Rice & Noodle Kitchen only for it to go soft while sitting in the back of a car.

So even though a delivery from the kitchen will probably spend up to half an hour in transit and arrive hot, Ng wanted to make sure the new menu would taste just as good at room temperature or reheated. He looked toward food he knew traveled well or tasted better the next day, such as Persian dishes from a restaurant in Glendale that he often takes to-go or French braised stews, which are left to sit overnight to absorb flavor.

"The test is, can you leave it out for five hours and eat it without heating it up," Ng said. "Is it still tasty? The answer is yes."

While some might worry that these new culinary frontiers could threaten brick-and-mortar restaurants, Ng believes they can coexist. People didn't stop going to the movies when streaming services came out, and they won't stop going to restaurants to spend time with friends and family, go on dates or do business, he said.

"I see it as a huge growth potential for the industry as a whole. For us, this is another source of revenue within the restaurant itself," Ng said. "But the whole point is that we can now offer food at a lower cost that you can eat at home. It's a win-win for everybody."

Cassia Rice & Noodle Kitchen will be available on Caviar, ChowNow, Postmates, Doordash and Uber Eats starting Tuesday. Its hours will be Sunday through Thursday from 5 to 9:30 p.m. The menu will range from $8 to $15.

JUNETEENTH

make sure Juneteenth celebrators don't forget why the day exists.

"In 1776 the country was freed from the British, but the people were not all free," Evans said. "June 19, 1865 was actually when the people and the entire country was actually free."

It's also a day to remember the sacrifices that were made for freedom in the United States, especially in these racially and politically charged days, Agboga said.

"Our freedoms are fragile, and it doesn't take much for things to go backward," she said.

Santa Monica's 27th annual Juneteenth Festival takes place Saturday, June 15 11 a.m. – 5 p.m. at Virginia Avenue Park. For more information, visit Santa Monica's Virginia Avenue Park Facebook page (@vapark) or call 310-458-8688

Chris Carrey PAL Scholarships Recipients Receive $37,000 At Santa Monica Police Activities League Recognition Dinner

Academic dreams do come true, especially for 11 Santa Monica Police Activities League (PAL) youth who were honored with personal recognition and individual scholarship funds totaling $37,000 as presented by the Chris Carrey PAL Education Scholarships program on Monday, May 6 at the DoubleTree Suites in Santa Monica. More than 250 guests attended including scholarship recipients and their families, and the Chris Carrey PAL Education Scholarships donors.

Through a joint gift from Ed Simmons and Standard Parking and from Neil and Karen Carrey, an endowment fund has been established for the Chris Carrey PAL Education Fund. This fund provides scholarships for post-high school education expenses to a PAL member who meets required criteria, shows financial need, successfully completes an application package, and is selected by the Chris Carrey PAL Education Fund Committee. The scholarship recipients are presented annually in May at the PAL Recognition Dinner and Awards Ceremony. Now in its 17th year, more than 100 scholarships totaling $280,000 have been awarded to PAL youth.

The 11 Chris Carrey PAL Education Scholarships 2019 recipients include Erica Atkins, Jessye Bautista, Sammy Bonilla, Katalina Bravo, Nadia Cyprian, Jesse Del Rio, Claudia Espinoza, Kevin Felix-Madrigal, Cesar Gomez, Jasmine Morales, and Zaahir Shorter.

The Chris Carrey PAL Scholarship presenters included Michael Flinkman, Kiwanis Club of Santa Monica; Neil Carrey; Ed Simmons, SP Plus; Baker & Hostetler; Mary Ann and Jim Powell; Patty and Cheryl Loggings; Laurel Rosen, Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce; Lauralee Asch; Jean McNeil Wyner; Sgt. Rudy Flores; Omark Holmes. Santa Monica Travel and Tourism; Helen Albright; Erin Deviny, PAL Board of Directors; and Nancy Grass, Charlie Yen, and Deirdre Weaver, Santa Monica College.

"PAL youth work very hard on their school programs throughout the year and the Chris Carrey PAL Education Scholarships program is a terrific way to reward their academic commitment," says Eula Fritz, Director at Santa Monica Police Activities League. "Their support allows the students with an opportunity to attend colleges and universities that may otherwise be out of reach."

The annual PAL Recognition ceremony also provides an chance to bestow Community Recognition awards to deserving members of the community who have had an impact on the lives of youth. This year's award recipients were volunteers Amy Albuera and Monique Robinson.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (June 15)

You've been known to have the best time doing things that others think of as hard work. When you take the time to figure out which endeavors and people are a good fit for you, high energy and endurance come with the territory. You'll include loved ones in your passions and interests and could helm a club or company. Libra and Sagittarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 4, 44, 38 and 16.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Activity can be invigorating or draining. It can show love or hide its lack. Action in and of itself proves nothing. To understand, look at the entire context. Let a person's intention weigh heaviest in your calculation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). There's a part of life that's gotten intolerable. You can't abide by the way it is. Your choice is to create a change or to live differently with the unchanged version.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). In a dynamic duo, one person acts; the other builds on it. If the other person opposes the action instead, and has good reason to do so, this may also be acceptable, as the best partnerships involve checks and balances.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll make tender connections, mostly because you genuinely care about others. Also, you're consciously trying to create an emotional safety zone around you – how attractive!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). A competitive instinct takes over. You suddenly see what it will take to win the prize. You'll only have a split second to determine whether this move will be worth it. Trust yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You've been so lucky. Convenience has been the normal state of things. But there are some things that you don't mind waiting for. In fact, the waiting makes them even more worthwhile.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). It's not that you're trying to hog all the work or show off by lifting the entire burden of it. It's just that by the time you show someone else how to do it, you could have finished it already, and done a mighty fine job of it, at that.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Can you change the world in one day? Of course! You just won't see how right away. But you can trust that your actions can and will set off a course of events that makes a profound difference for many.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Nature is, as a rule, much more powerful than the will of a human. This is why it's better to listen to nature and work within her limits and structures. Supreme success comes to those who treat nature like the mother she is.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You like to be good and do the right thing. You just don't like other people telling you what "good" is, or what "the right thing" is, for that matter.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You're sort of like a civil servant whose mission is to "protect and serve," only those served won't be the general public. There's a specific group who needs you very much, and you'll show up strong for it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Wherever you go today, you'll be content to be there, in part because you carry your sense of belonging with you at all times. It goes well your deep curiosity and appreciation for the people you encounter.

Cosmic Communication Warning

Mark Twain said, "If you tell the truth, you don't have to remember anything." Maybe so, but in these last days of the super-communicative twin solar journey, it's still a bit hard to remember whom you told which story to, even if the story is absolutely true. Repetition will be something the socially smart will keep track of this weekend.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"How can I tell if a Virgo guy loves me?" Admittedly, it's harder to detect love's signals from this practical guy. In fact, sometimes he doesn't even realize when he's starting to fall into love's grip. The first signs of love come when Virgo starts thinking about the other person's happiness and well-being and how he wants to contribute to it. He's a man who understands how to care for, comfort and nurture others. He's naturally inclined to give the specific help and attention that will allow his loved one to thrive. He enjoys striving to reach his own potential, and that involves being someone others can depend on. He wants to be a helpful, responsible member of his team. He is, at his very essence, a giver. That's why this generous man must steer clear of high-maintenance types who will take advantage of him. To inspire strong, loving feelings in a Virgo man, be a person who appreciates all he is willing to contribute but isn't necessarily in terrible need of it. A partner who is self-sufficient will take each of his contributions as a wonderful gift without making him feel trapped by expectations. Knowing the effort that such gestures take the ideal partner will constantly credit and compliment his generosity.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

Neil Patrick Harris was barely recognizable as Count Olaf in the television series "A Series of Unfortunate Events," though his Gemini wit and charm shines through even the most effective disguises. Harris has natal sun and Saturn in brilliant Gemini, with Mercury and Venus in nurturing Cancer, which paints the cosmic picture of a parenting superstar with a strong psychic bond to his children.
