SPREADING THE WORD ON THE NEW RULES: Santa Monica Baykeeper's Michael Quill spots a boat with fishing poles in the water in a protected area. He would eventually let them know that the area is what's known as a Marine Protected Area where fishing is prohibited.

Nonprofit works to protect the ocean

BY SEAN FITZ-GERALD
Special to the Daily Press

MARINA DEL REY It's an overcast Saturday and a recreational fishing boat is anchored in the Point Dume Marine Protected Area. Two men are onboard, both with lines in the water.

As of Jan. 1, 2012, a series of new MPAs — areas of the ocean that prohibit fishing in order to protect marine life and habitats — were created off Malibu's Point Dume, Palos Verdes Peninsula's Point Vicente and Catalina Island.

Michael Quill, Brian Meux and Karen Yoshida are studying the two fishermen intently from their own boat, a 24-foot 1976 Radon research vessel.

"Try to be non-threatening," Meux says.

"See, these guys just look like they don't know," Quill says to Yoshida. "We're just going to drive by and say, 'Hey.'"

"We're going to be as nice as possible and tell them about the area," Meux says. "Because there's spearfishing allowed in this MPA but no line fishing."

Quill scoots their boat about 200 yards from the fishermen. He leans starboard out the boat and cups his right hand to project his voice across the open water.

"Hey guys!" Quill says. "There's no fishing here. They've made this no-fishing. You got to go to Point Dume."

"Where? Here?" one of the fishermen yells back, waving his hand over the water.

"Yeah, since January," Quill says. "Go just beyond Point Dume, around into Paradise Cove or past El Matador down there — that building down there at El Matador — and then you're good."

The two fishermen nod their heads and reel their lines in.

"Right on," Quill says. "Thank you so much."

Quill, 56, is the MPA outreach coordinator for the Santa Monica Baykeeper, a nonprofit dedicated to protecting and restoring the Santa Monica Bay, San Pedro Bay and adjacent waters.

Quill is wearing a black, crew-neck sweatshirt, Maui Jim sunglasses, a yellow undershirt and black jeans. He has white hair with vestiges of yellow and he stands with a wiry frame at a towering 6-foot-6.

Along for the ride are Meux, 34, and Yoshida, 60. Meux is the marine programs manager for Santa Monica Baykeeper and Yoshida is a paralegal from South Pasadena volunteering to help out with the MPA watch.

"Michael, nice job," Meux says.

"I learn from the best, Meuxy."

"That is our exact target of our outreach on the water," Meux says. "We all try to be

Celebrating a cornerstone of local beauty

BY RANDY O. WILLIAMS
Special to the Daily Press

DOWNTOWN About the same time as "The Simpsons" first appears as a series of shorts on "The Tracey Ullman Show;" U.S. President Ronald Reagan challenges Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev to "tear down the Berlin Wall" during a visit to Germany; Bon Jovi's "Livin' on a Prayer" becomes the biggest hit song worldwide and Michael Douglas wins Best Actor for "Wall Street," beautician Fahimeh Betts was going into business on her own, opening a beauty salon near the corner of Fourth Street and Broadway in Downtown Santa Monica.

But this wasn't her first foray into business ownership. Having built up a series of profitable salons in her native Iran, the young woman lost it all as a result of that country's revolution crackdowns.

Broke in America, she began meditating early each morning at Santa Monica's Will Rogers Beach, searching for inspiration.

Starting over, borrowing money for rent from a relative in Canada, she began working three jobs here on the Westside.

Saving her money, the single mother thought about what she really wanted to do. It was the "love of everything tied to beauty" that inspired Betts to try again and open her own salon.

The location would be Santa Monica because "it is inhabited by friendly people of many different cultural backgrounds who want to look their best in a casual yet cosmopolitan atmosphere … and it is near the beach with lots of social activities."

With every penny going into her new venture, Betts would walk to the salon from her apartment at Second Street and California Avenue, but only after her meditation at the beach each morning.

It was her dedication to service and that daily beach ritual that got the young business woman through the trials of a start-up including the challenges of loss of business and

Bill would boost U2 guitarist's Malibu development

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. A controversial plan by U2 guitarist The Edge to build a cluster of mansions on 156 acres overlooking Malibu could get new life from a bill being promoted in Sacramento.

The California Coastal Commission nixed the development last year, citing concerns that it would irrevocably damage the environment.

But now some of the same lobbyists and lawyers behind the rejected proposal are pushing legislation that goes to the heart of how government agencies determine property ownership, and how they use the findings in deciding whether to approve development, the Los Angeles Times reported Saturday.

The property owners maintained they are five separate owners each building a single home on separate lots atop a scenic bluff, an argument that would have made it more difficult for the commission to reject their proposal.

The commission, however, determined last June that there was enough evidence to show the project was under common ownership, coordinated and led by The Edge, whose real name is David Evans.

Current rules say the Coastal Commission has authority to approve projects in environmentally sensitive areas, and it takes ownership into account. For example, the agency is more inclined to reject a plan for a multi-home project than a proposal to build a single-family house, according to the Times.

Under the bill, authored by Democratic Assemblyman Ben Hueso, state agencies would have to accept as fact that the person holding the deed is the property owner, the Times said. If the state sought to challenge true ownership, it would be held to the same evidentiary standards that apply in the court system.

The Coastal Commission and others argue that the standards would hinder public agencies because they have none of the court system's tools of discovery: subpoenas, depositions and sworn testimony.

Sarah Christie, legislative director for the Coastal Commission, told the newspaper the law would curb public agencies' abilities to fulfill their missions, giving any developers who game the system more clout and potentially leading to "more fragmented, inappropriate development" along the coast.

Environmentalists slammed the bill too.

"The forces who want to maximize their profit above all else are seeking to rewrite the rules in such a way that ensures the state government has limited ability to oversee and to take care of our public trust resources," said Adam Keats, an attorney with the Center for Biological Diversity, told the Times.

Hueso said he introduced the bill to rein in what he sees as an overzealous bureaucracy that uses arbitrary standards to block development, a notion shared by the California Chamber of Commerce and other business groups.

"If we have every agency in California cherry picking projects they don't like, it's going to create an enormous problem in our ability to do business in California," he told the Times.

The bill's purpose is not to advance the interests of the U2 guitarist, Hueso said. The lawmaker told the newspaper he got the idea for the legislation from Paul Bauer, one of the lobbyists The Edge hired last year to help him before the Coastal Commission.

Fiona Hutton, a spokesperson for The Edge, told The Associated Press the guitarist isn't paying anyone to lobby the bill. However The Edge and the other property owners "are actively working now to achieve a solution through the Coastal Commission process," Hutton said Saturday.

The bill's text echoes language at the heart of lawsuits The Edge and his partners have filed against the commission, according to the Times. Evans' attorney, Stanley Lamport, is also lobbying lawmakers to pass the new legislation.

Lamport told the newspaper his involvement had nothing to do with The Edge and that he was acting in his capacity as the legislative chairman of the California Business Properties Assn., the sponsor of the bill.

Save the rainforests

Editor:

The rainforests of the world and the Indonesian forests in particular, need our protection. They are a world treasure and an invaluable asset to the life of the planet. This is also the only home for endangered species including the Sumatran tiger and countless others.

KFC & Yumi Brands are continuing to take trees from this endangered area to quench its need for packaging materials. These companies have no sustainability policies to exclude products connected to rainforest.

Today we have all become aware of our eco-system. It's our responsibility to find and use products which do the least harm and if possible even help restore our damaged world. As individuals we can support or not support companies which have policies we agree with. I find it unconscionable that we would allow the destruction of such habitat for a paper bucket or other products.

Please, all companies including KFC & Yumi must control their choice of supplies. Please, for all our sakes put a halt to this unnecessary destruction.

Why single out the ACA?

Editor:

The Republicans, Tea Party and conservatives in the Roberts' Supreme Court are making a big fuss over "the individual mandate" in the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare). Don't the millions of Republicans and Tea Party faithful who are already benefiting from the ACA want affordable health care?

These conservative critics say the so-called mandate represents a huge encroachment into Americans' lives. Income taxes, car insurance, drivers' licenses and hundreds of other things are government mandated – so why has the Roberts' court only singled out the Affordable Care Act to go after? Plain and simple; this is just part of an ongoing Republican vendetta against President Obama.

The word "mandate" is a misnomer. No one gets carted off to jail if they fail to buy insurance. Instead, people who choose not to purchase insurance, thereby becoming "freeloaders" on the nation's health care system – will pay $695 in additional federal taxes. What's so shocking about that?

People who don't purchase health insurance impose added costs on the rest of us. The new law simply taxes them for their selfish choice.

Wilmont's soap opera

LIKE POLITICAL SOAP OPERA? How about the palace coup at the Wilshire/Montana Neighborhood Coalition meeting (Wilmont) last week?

Wilmont's board of directors supports the renovation and expansion of the Fairmont-Miramar Hotel because it would include on-site employee parking, eliminate the need for hundreds of hotel staffers to park on nearby residential streets and free up parking space for residents.

Residents of adjacent condos, the owners of the nearby Huntley House hotel (concerned about blocked views) and the usual slow-growthers oppose the renovation. They claim Wilmont's endorsement was made in secret without member input. They formed a coalition to seize control of the group and set things straight

Eleven persons — many who recently joined the organization — submitted petitions for election to the board at Wilmont's annual meeting on June 9. The group's bylaws state that candidates must live in Wilmont, be dues-paying members and submit petitions for candidacy with 10 valid signatures from organization members at least 10 days prior to the election.

Wilmont Chair Valerie Griffin announced just before the election that "long standing rules" required that board candidates must have been members for a year, attended at least three board meetings and have contributed to the group's activities. Unfortunately for Griffin, the "rules" are inconsistent with Wilmont's bylaws and therefore not legal.

When challenged about procedure, she moved to cancel the election because (get this folks) the organization's elderly membership chair had broken her hip and membership information was not available. Candidates and petition signers couldn't be verified.

These and other desperate tactics to thwart the coup were deployed. At the meeting, Griffin was quickly ousted and members voted overwhelmingly to go ahead with a provisional vote.

Ballots were sealed in a ballot box which was taken home for safe keeping by Wilmont's Vice Chair Albin Gielicz, who took over the confab after Griffin was sent packing. Members of the hostile opposition trying to take over Wilmont then trusted a current board member to take the ballots for safe keeping until they could be verified and counted? Whaaa?

It really doesn't matter who wins. With all the chicanery and foolishness, this neighborhood group has completely lost its credibility. No matter how the "new" Wilmont board votes on the Fairmont-Miramar or any other issue, it's all a bunch of hooey. Plus, does anybody really care?

The big question is: are coup backers a "one trick pony" or are they seriously interested in resuscitating Wilmont's credibility and solving broader neighborhood issues? Time will tell.

WHO ARE THEY WORKING FOR?

City officials are projecting that City Hall will be awash in red ink in four years. They are projecting a $4.6 million deficit by fiscal year 2015-16. Who knows, by 2202 the annual deficit could be $10 million or more

The reasons given for the projected deficits are increased employee retirement costs, added operating expense for new parks and city facilities and costs incurred by the dissolution of the Santa Monica Redevelopment Agency

City Manager Rod Gould told the Daily Press that steps will be taken to bring future spending in line with revenues. Those steps include a combination of fee increases and reduced spending

With ever larger annual deficits looming, what's a City Council to do? Commit to a 10 year giveaway of at least $8.120,245 annually to the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District!

A couple of weeks ago, council approved a 10 year schedule of payments on its Master Facilities Use Agreement and related supplements to allow school playing fields and athletic facilities to continue to be used for general community recreation.

The agreement (this year worth $8 million-plus) has built in two to four percent annual cost of living increases. It calls for annual review of payments based on the value of the school facilities and City Hall's "ability to provide additional compensation" — apparently not on the need to cut payments if municipal deficits soar.

City Hall bureaucrats and politicians were thrilled to "be able to provide more financial stability for the district," but what about the financial stability of the city, especially in the face of even larger deficits likely six, eight or 10 years down the road?

Councilman Bobby Shriver said a 10 year lifespan contract could put the city at risk. He wisely urged a more prudent, five year agreement — the same as the current contract. Council voted for the 10 year giveaway, instead.

Deeper red ink could mean reducing city services, laying off police and fire personnel and/or raising taxes and fees. Such moves are now more probable because City Hall has put SMMUSD's financial interests before its own.

It appears that once again Gould, his staff and council persons Terry O'Day, Gleam Davis, Pam O'Connor, Bob Holbrook and his honor Mayor Richard Bloom are more concerned about the SMMUSD's solvency than the solvency of the city — and the residents — they're supposed to serve.

For the record, Kevin McKeown, who does business with the district, didn't vote.

THE RIGHT THING TO DO

City Council finally made the right decision in approving changes to the municipal code to ban unattended private displays in public parks. Their vote will bring Palisades Park in line with other city parks by eliminating the one exception City Hall had unfortunately extended to local churches for seasonal nativity scenes decades ago.

This was the only correct solution to a knotty problem. It'll pass Constitutional muster because free speech has not been abridged. Finally, some common sense on an emotional issue.

Romney championed green energy initiative

ANDREW MIGA & STEVE LEBLANC
Associated Press

BOSTON Mitt Romney slams President Barack Obama for using taxpayer dollars to pick "winners and losers" among green energy firms rather than allowing them to rise or fall in the free market. Yet as governor of Massachusetts, Romney backed a state program that targeted investments to individual green startup companies in hopes of boosting jobs and the state's revenues.

"There is nothing fair about a government that favors political connections over honest competition and takes away your right to earn your own success," Romney said in a campaign speech last week in St. Louis. And in Washington on Wednesday, he told the Business Roundtable, "I don't think the government should be investing in individual companies," adding, "I don't believe in the government picking winners."

It's an attack line the Republican presidential challenger fires at Obama over Solyndra, a solar firm that got a half-billion-dollar federal loan and was touted by the Obama administration before the company declared bankruptcy last year. Romney mocks Solyndra as a symbol of Obama's failed economic policies.

"When government rather than the market routinely selects the winners and losers, enterprises cannot predict their prospects and free enterprise is replaced with crony capitalism," Romney said in March during a speech at the University of Chicago.

As governor, however, Romney did much the same thing. He championed a $24 million green energy fund that used public money for equity capital and loans to renewable energy firms in the state. He said he hoped it would be a "major economic springboard" for the state.

Not every bet paid off. Some of the companies that received public backing under Romney, who amassed a fortune as a venture capitalist before entering politics, have since folded or have been sold at a loss.

The most recent was Konarka Technologies Inc., a Lowell, Mass.-based company that makes thin, flexible solar panels. The company, which received a $1.5 million public investment during Romney's first year as governor, in 2003, announced June 1 that it filed for bankruptcy protection, as it laid off about 80 workers.

The Konarka announcement came a day after a Romney campaign appearance at the former headquarters of Solyndra in Fremont, Calif., to portray it as a prime example of government waste and favoritism.

Ryan Williams, a Romney spokesman, said the decision to assist Konarka was made by an independent board about a month before Romney became governor.

"Gov. Romney has never believed that the government should play venture capitalist," Williams said. "President Obama has a lot of questions to answer about why he used taxpayer dollars to reward wealthy campaign donors for bad ideas like Solyndra."

Williams said since the green fund was established before he became governor, Romney's hands were largely tied.

Romney later vetoed $12.5 million from an emerging technology fund, designed to boost manufacturing in Massachusetts, because it would have let public officials pick and choose which firms to aid, Williams said. His veto was overturned by the Democratic-run Legislature.

Some of the green fund investments Romney touted as governor were made through complex financial arrangements to funnel money collected from a surcharge on electricity bills paid by utility consumers into a private venture capital fund to support local green energy companies.

The surcharges, which predated Romney's governorship, were first imposed in 1998, with the money going toward the state's Renewable Energy Trust Fund.

In January 2003, Romney announced a plan to use $15 million from the fund — by then it had collected about $160 million — to provide equity capital and loans to Massachusetts-based renewable energy businesses. He pushed to make sure that financial professionals rather than bureaucrats were given the power to decide which firms would get assistance, Williams said.

"The trust fund has been growing for years, and I believe now is the time to refocus its assets in such a manner that it can become a major economic springboard for the commonwealth by focusing on job creation in the renewable energy sector," Romney said during an event outside the Konarka plant during his first weeks in office.

The state invested the $15 million into the Massachusetts Green Energy Fund LP, a private venture capital fund. Other backers invested an additional $2 million, meaning the state retained a majority stake in the fund.

While the managers of the fund were free to pick which companies to invest in, the state placed two restrictions on their choices: The companies had to be based in Massachusetts and have a renewable energy focus.

William Osborn, a general partner at the Green Energy Fund, said the fund ended up investing in about a dozen companies. While most continue to thrive, Konarka and two others have either gone under or been sold at a loss.

What's next?

Now that the City Council has banned holiday displays in Palisades Park, it leaves supporters at a loss as to what to do next.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
How should the scenes be displayed now that they can't be placed in the park?

GREENER: There are many ways to define a sustainable community, but in general they sport healthy amounts of green space and shared vegetable gardens; mass transit, biking and walking replacing the majority of automobile traffic; and mixed use communities where schools, residences and commercial spaces are near each other and are powered by clean, renewable energy sources.

Living the green dream

Dear EarthTalk:

The term "sustainable communities" gets bantered around quite a bit today. Could you define it for me?

– Holly Parker,
Mechanicsburg, Pa.

KAID BENFIELD, SUSTAINABLE COMMUNITIES program director at the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC), uses the term "sustainable communities" to describe places "where use of resources and emissions of greenhouse gases and other pollutants are going down, not up; where the air and waterways are accessible and clean; where land is used efficiently and shared parks and public spaces are plentiful and easily visited; where people of different ages, income levels and cultural backgrounds share equally in environmental, social and cultural benefits; where many needs of daily life can be met within a 20-minute walk and all may be met within a 20-minute transit ride; where industry and economic opportunity emphasize healthy, environmentally sound practices."

In his March 2011 NRDC 'Switchboard' blog post entitled "A Trip to Sustainaville," Benfield lays out his vision for what a model of sustainable communities could look like, with neighborhoods sporting healthy amounts of green space and shared vegetable gardens; mass transit, biking and walking replacing the majority of automobile traffic; and mixed use communities where schools, residences and commercial spaces are near each other and are powered by solar panels, geothermal heat pumps or windmills.

According to the Vermont-based Institute for Sustainable Communities (ISC), sustainable communities are "economically, environmentally and socially healthy and resilient" and meet "challenges through integrated solutions rather than through fragmented approaches." And perhaps more important: Sustainable communities take a long-term perspective, focusing on "both the present and future, well beyond the next budget or election cycle" so that the needs of the current as well as future generations are met with adequate resources. ISC adds that the success of a community's efforts to be sustainable depends on its members' commitment and involvement as well as leadership that is inspiring, effective and responsive.

Some of the ways ISC has worked to further its goals include helping teach leaders from low income U.S. communities along the Gulf of Mexico how energy efficiency and ecological restoration can revitalize their otherwise struggling economies; developing community sustainability initiatives throughout war-ravaged parts of Kosovo, Serbia and Macedonia; installing green roofs on residences in the Chinese city of Shenzen as a pilot project to show how such "technologies" can yield significant carbon sequestration and other environmental benefits, and many more.

Key to any consideration of what makes a community sustainable is the acknowledgement that there is no such thing as perfection. "Sustainability is a process of continuous improvement so communities constantly evolve and make changes to accomplish their goals," reports Sustainable Communities Online, a web-based information and networking clearinghouse started in the 1990s by a broad coalition of sustainability-oriented organizations and managed by the Washington, DC-based non-profit CONCERN Inc. Those looking to learn more about sustainable communities and what makes them tick should be sure to check out sustainable.org, Sustainable Communities Online's information-packed website.

Falling boulder risk forces Yosemite Valley closures

TRACIE CONE
Associated Press

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. Falling boulders are the single biggest force shaping Yosemite Valley, one of the most popular tourist destinations in the national park system. Now swaths of some popular haunts are closing for good after geologists confirmed that unsuspecting tourists and employees are being lodged in harm's way.

On Thursday, the National Park Service announced that potential danger from the unstable 3,000-foot-tall Glacier Point, a granite promontory that for decades has provided a dramatic backdrop to park events, will leave some of the valley's most popular lodging areas permanently uninhabitable.

"There are no absolutely safe areas in Yosemite Valley," said Greg Stock, the park's first staff geologist and the primary author of a new study that assesses the potential risk to people from falling rocks in the steep-sided valley. The highest risk area is family friendly Curry Village, which was hit by a major rock fall several years ago.

A newly delineated "hazard zone" also outlines other areas, including the popular climbing wall El Capitan, where the danger posed by the rock falls is high but risk of injury is low because they aren't continuously occupied.

"Rock falls are common in Yosemite Valley, California, posing substantial hazard and risk to the approximately four million annual visitors to Yosemite National Park," reads the ominous opening line of the report.

The move to close parts of historic Curry Village, a camp of canvas and wooden cabins, comes four years after the equivalent of 570 dump trucks of boulders hit 17 cabins, flattened one and sent schoolchildren scrambling for their lives. The park fenced off 233 of the 600 cabins in the village.

The new report, obtained early by The Associated Press, now identifies 18 more that closed on Thursday.

An examination by the AP after the 2008 fall found park officials were aware of U.S. Geological Survey studies dating back to 1996 that show Glacier Point behind Curry Village was susceptible to rock avalanches. Yet visitors were not warned of the potential danger, and the park service repaired and reused rock-battered cabins.

Rock falls in and around the century-old Curry Village have killed two people and injured two dozen others since 1996. Since officials began keeping track in 1857, 15 people have died throughout the valley and 85 have been injured from falling rocks.

This new study, prompted by the 2008 Curry event, is the first to assess risk to people. Officials say dangers exist in nearly every national park but they are particularly acute in Yosemite given its unstable geology, which causes rock falls weekly. Park officials will use the study to develop policy that guides future planning.

Yosemite Valley is ringed by 3,000-foot walls of granite. Since the last glacier retreated 15,000 years ago, the biggest factor shaping the most popular tourist destinations in the park has been the sloughing of rock when granite heats and cools and eventually breaks along fissures and cracks.

Stock used laser mapping to create the first detailed look at the cliffs, which ultimately could identify which formations are most vulnerable.

The report shows the greatest dangers are within 180 feet of the base of the cliffs. However, there is a 10 percent chance a potentially deadly boulder will fall outside of the zone every 50 years.

With the removal of lodging from highly problematic areas and increased awareness, risk can be reduced by up to 95 percent, Stock said. "That's a huge reduction, but it's not possible to reduce all risk in the park."

Part of Yosemite's charm is the guest cabins and other structures built around boulders, some the size of houses. It was widely assumed that they could have fallen in one cataclysmic event. The new study concluded that the boulders had fallen over time, and the information was used to delineate the most potentially dangerous areas of the valley.

"It's easy now to look around and see all of these rocks and know there's a hazard here, but that hasn't always been the case," said park spokesman Scott Gediman.

In November 1980, falling rocks killed three people and injured 19 more on the trail to Yosemite Falls, the icon of the valley and one of the most popular visitor hikes.

The biggest modern-day rock avalanche occurred in 1987, when an unstable formation called Middle Brother on the north side of the valley launched the equivalent of more than 22,000 dump truck loads of rock onto the main road.

Last year 53 rock falls occurred, including a six-ton boulder that fell in September from the upper Yosemite Falls Trail onto a natural amphitheater. Fragments hit a footbridge where tourists take photos, but no one was injured.

Park officials said two employee dormitories and parts of three others built in 2005 would be closing, which will further exacerbate a critical staff housing shortage.

Also on the closure list: a half-dozen sites at Camp 4, a $5-a-night camping bargain near El Capitan used mainly by climbers.

A representative of the park's concessionaire said visitors with reservations in Curry Village this summer will still get rooms, and that some cabins can be moved to safer areas.

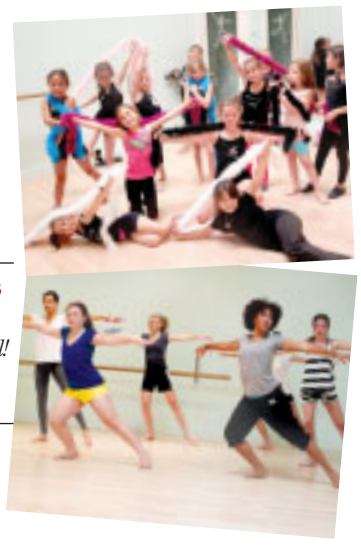

Rooms at the Yosemite Lodge and the historic Ahwahnee Hotel are not in the danger zone. But the Sierra Club's Tudor-style rough-hewn granite LeConte Memorial, a library and educational site, are.

Park interpretive exhibits explain the rock fall phenomenon, but no signs warn visitors about potential danger.

"We are about as close to predicting these events as others are at predicting earthquakes — which is to say not very close," Stock said.

break-ins during the repairs from the 1994 Northridge earthquake, but through it all her desire to help men and women look their best was the key to enduring the lean times.

From the start, the Hair Designers Studio has offered a full range of services including programs covering hair, make-up, manicure and skin care for both men and women.

Regardless of what service they seek, one of the first things clients notice at the Downtown salon is a small but prominently placed sign that really says it all: "Let me drop everything and work on your problem."

The notice represents what you can expect in a relaxed atmosphere. A talented hairstylist bringing all their focus and energy on your hair for the time you are at her work station. That focus might produce many questions — some of which could seem irrelevant at first. However, because so many factors come into play when it comes to a good hairstyle, you must trust that the inquiries involving your occupation, lifestyle and social activities will collectively help the stylist achieve the best results possible.

It is also one of the Hair Designers Studio's keys to success.

With clients ranging from men and women across the socio-economic spectrum in their teens to their 60s and some having coming in from the start, the owner reveals one of the reasons she has succeeded from the first day she opened her doors a quarter-century ago.

"It is very important to have a consultation with a first time client", says Betts. "I ask what they want and why I believe their choice is good or bad for them. They realize we are more experienced in what style suits a person's face best. I sit down with them and explain with hand gestures and going over their face looking in the mirror what they should consider. Always they trust me and when I finish they say 'wow.' I even take a before and after picture so they can judge for themselves."

However, with the fickle nature of fashion and rapidly changing trends there are heavy demands on Betts and her staff that requires a constant education on the latest tools and styles in the field.

"To keep up with all the fashions and styles we constantly take classes," says the studio owner. "We also go to an annual fashion convention down in Long Beach. Different companies come and educate my staff and I as to what the coming trends may look like."

Social media and other aspects of the Internet also play a role in the beauty biz. The salon uses Facebook to draw attention to their services, with the goal of getting prospective clients to come in for that initial consultation.

But the web world can also lead to some false assumptions about what might work best for a given individual's features.

"The internet has been more responsible for the globalization of styles than pretty much anything else," Betts says. "American girls see something online from France or England and they talk their boyfriend here into trying it and boom it spreads. I have recently traveled throughout Europe and the Middle East and see how fast styles have caught on globally and much of it is due to the exposure hair designs get on the Internet.

This creates a problem sometimes because new clients come in demanding some cut they saw online and don't want to hear from you that it won't work with their personal features."

Keeping up with trends, offering a complete range of beauty programs and personalized service, but still making time for those early morning meditation sessions at nearby Will Rogers Beach, Betts also counts passion as a core reason why she has been so successful all these years.

"I love what I do because the world of beauty is something in my heart. My eyes shine and my smile widens when a client leaves our salon full of self-confidence. It has been a great run and I can't think of a better place to live and work. I'm very happy to be in this corner and having fun being successful. In 25 years it is my hope that my daughter will celebrate the 50th anniversary of our business in Santa Monica."

unassuming, non-confrontational — from a faraway distance — and try to help [fishermen] so they don't get hit by a warden ticket."

"Ah man, that would blow their summer," Quill says.

If caught, MPA violators are either fined a variant sum of money or assigned jail time.

Quill, Meux and local volunteers like Yoshida collaborate to note boating activities in and around the MPAs and to make sure local fishermen are aware of the new laws.

For Quill and Meux, there's no science to community outreach, as they say their practice is constantly evolving.

As outreach coordinator, Quill says his main priority is educating and informing recreational anglers.

"I ask [the fishermen] what they want instead of telling them what to do," he says.

"These guys know more than I do in terms of fishing, in terms of the ocean, in terms of being on the water."

On a typical morning, the two meet at Tahiti Way, where their boat is docked, and they hit the water at 8:30 a.m. sharp. Quill alights at a fueling pit stop to drop off some maps at a nearby convenience store.

"The maps have become the gateway," Quill says. "They really have helped. It's interesting because the MPAs were such a divisive thing, but they can now bring the community together to discuss and start planning … rather than fighting."

Quill's maps depict a portion of the California coast line and the Pacific Ocean —specifically the area from Leo Carrillo State Beach down to Long Beach, where there are four main MPAs: the Point Dume SMCA and State Marine Reserve and the Point Vicente "no-take" SMCA and Abalone Cove SMCA.

The MPAs have different designations: SMRs and no-take SMCAs prohibit fishing and harvesting of all marine resources while regular SMCAs permit spearfishing of pelagic finsfish, Pacific bonito and white seabass.

"[MPAs are] like creating a national park, where these fish — a lot of them are very territorial — will stay in this protected area and they will start reproducing more because they aren't being fished out," Quill says.

If working MPAs are close enough, Quill says spill-over can occur, in which surpluses of marine life will travel from one MPA to another.

"That's the theory: We'll have more fish to fish, and the more fish that stay in the MPAs will generate more fish outside the MPAs," he says. "We're not here to be the enforcement or the authority, we're just trying to get the community involved in maintaining and taking care of the habitat."

It's 9:16 a.m. and Meux, Quill and Yoshida are logging the Radon into the open ocean at 20 knots. There's a 2-3 foot western swell coming in with light chop, but it feels like they're hammering the boat into the water like a wooden roller coaster — everybody on board is jerking like dancers in a frenetic waltz.

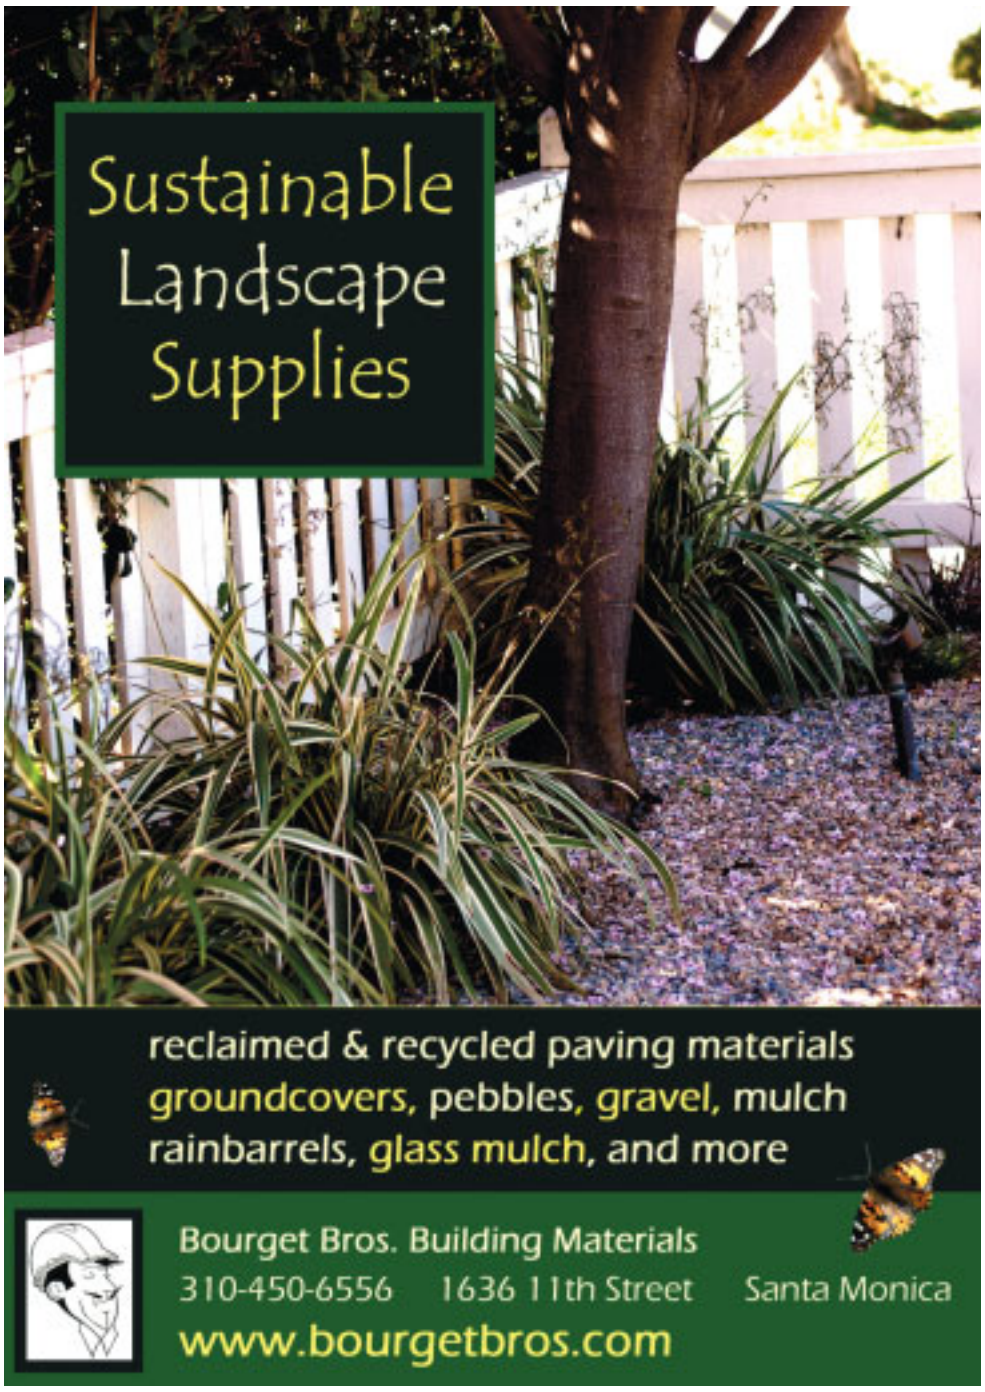

Meux says it's the guys who don't use their boats frequently that are usually not aware of the new regulations — making them susceptible to fines and tickets.

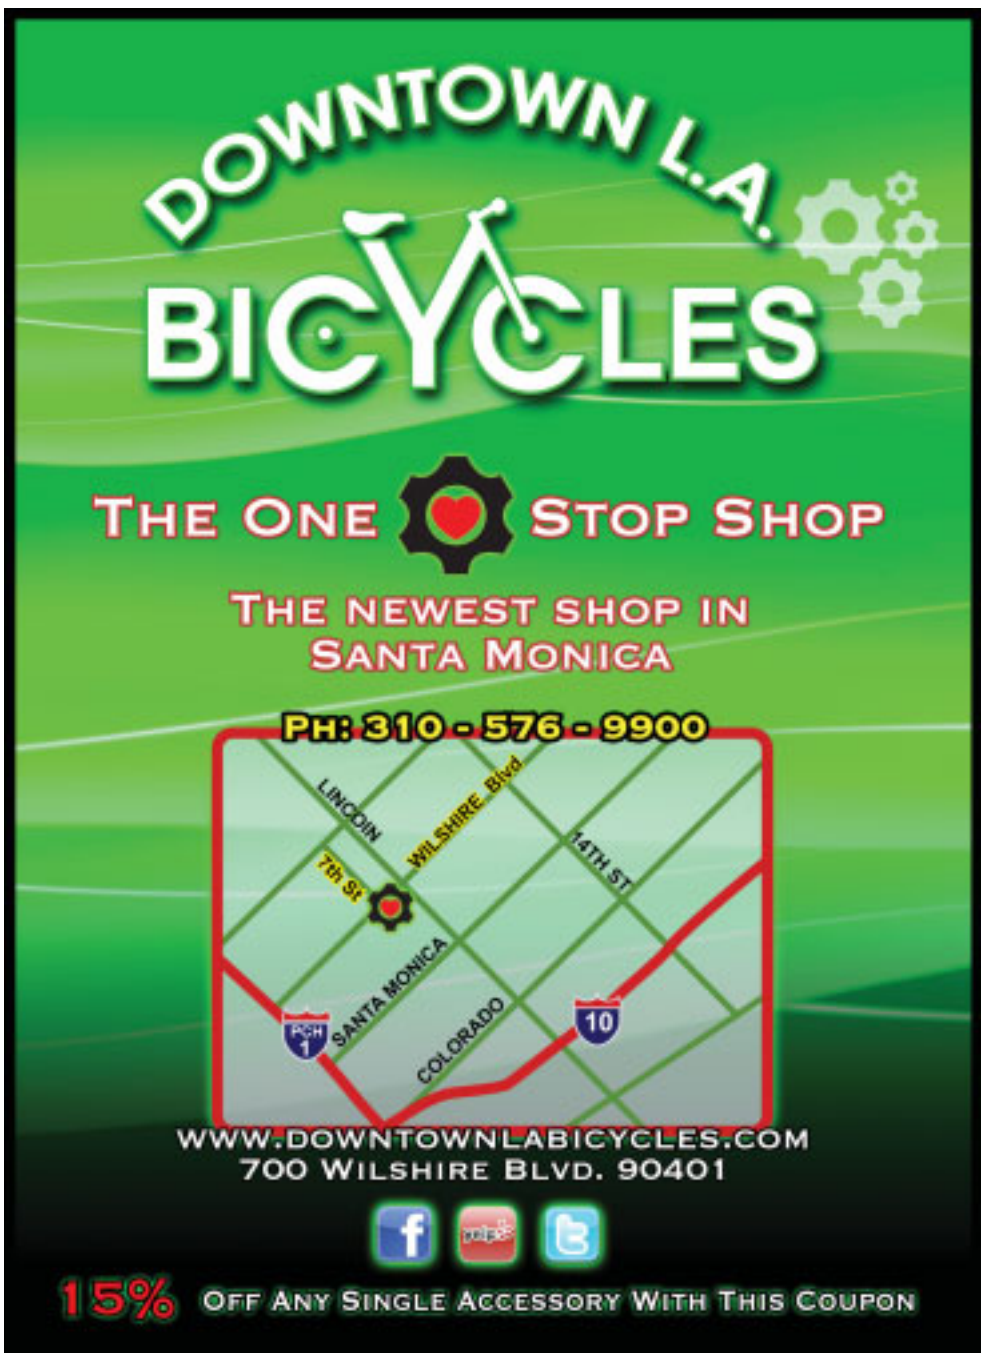

"If guys are fishing in the MPAs, it's not protection," he says. "We're on this ecological decline right now — with a lot of species — and … a lot more people need to hear about it."

Meux's passion for and understanding of marine biology are beyond his years; he's a big guy — a 6-foot-4, former rugby player from Berkeley, Calif., where he studied integrative biology — with short orange hair and a goatee that ruddies his chin and lower lip. Driving the boat, Meux stands with one hand on the wheel and the other on the stick; he's wearing a blue cap emblazoned with the SMBK insignia, a striped shirt and jeans and is explaining the trifecta of recovery to Yoshida.

"This is what you do in declines," he says. "You set little protected areas aside … and it's just part of the recipe for recovery — the other part is knowing your seafood and well-managed fisheries."

Though groups like SMBK are proponents of the MPAs, some fishermen have expressed dissatisfaction with the new laws.

Larry Brown, a member of the Marina del Rey Anglers Fishing Club, says that the closures have been devastating to the California sport industry and that private boat anglers and sport fishing boats have lost most of their prime fishing spots.

Brown spoke as an individual on the matter because his fishing club has not formed a collective opinion on the issue.

"If you're a fisherman, you just want to fish," Brown says. "If you wanted to go on a boat ride, you'd be in a sailing club."

As an experienced angler who spends more than 80 days of the year on the water, Brown also noted that tackle shops and sport fishing boats have lost customers and have seen reductions in sales revenues. Because of this, many have gone out of business, including the ones that service private boaters and fishermen.

"We had a very bitter taste in our mouth when this thing crescendoed and ended," Brown says. "We're the ones that are the best stewards of the ocean. The impact that the recreational fisherman has on the environment is so much less than the commercial."

Many recreational fishermen are also conservationists, Brown says, but they have different approaches than the regulations set forth in the MPAs.

"We wanted to work with some of the NGOs to limit all the bad practices and allow some of the modest ones, but they just didn't see it," he says.

Brown says that the sport anglers advocated sensible management tools, such as reduced limits, partial closures for spawning periods and bans and slot limits — a tool used to regulate the sizes of fish.

He says: "We have a love affair with our ocean."

Quill says most transects take roughly 70 minutes to complete. He and whoever is volunteering document any type of boat they see — everything from Coast Guard boats to commercial fishermen to kayaks — and note their activities.

By documenting boating activities, Quill and Meux are able to see how well fishermen are abiding by the new MPA laws and what areas need better monitoring.

After documenting 13 boats — only one of which was fishing in an MPA — the transect is over. One of 13 is a great percentage, Quill says.

"Now we take the pictures and the data and we digitize it," Meux says. "We make a spreadsheet and a map out of it and we send it to [the California Department of Fish and Game]. It's information for them — for their wardens, who are limited in time and resources."

After noon, the SMBK Radon hammers back toward Marina del Rey. Meux is at the stick, and Quill and Yoshida are lying down, enjoying the spray of the wake.

It's 1:50 p.m. by the time the boat is docked. The only thing left to do is to clean the equipment and the motors.

"It's such a nice day out," Quill says.

The sun has finally come out. It's the perfect temperature, he says.

Quill lies down on his back and spreads his arms and legs out like he's making a snow angel. He exhales heavily.

"It's so nice," he says. "I could just lie here all day."

LEGEND

DRY -- each location is graded on an A – F scale based on bacterial pollution levels present in the surf zone
WET -- grades for days of recorded rainfall and the following 3 days
ns -- no sample taken

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

NFL

Tomlinson to call it quits after 11 seasons or action

BERNIE WILSON
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO LaDainian Tomlinson will retire from the NFL as a member of the San Diego Chargers.

The Chargers said Sunday that Tomlinson, who was the NFL MVP in 2006 with San Diego and is the fifth-leading rusher in league history, will re-sign with the team on Monday and then announce his retirement.

Tomlinson was drafted in the first round by San Diego in 2001 and spent the first nine years of his career with the Chargers. He played the last two seasons with the Jets.

Tomlinson had said recently that he might continue his career if the right opportunity was available. Some fans hoped the Chargers would bring back Tomlinson as a third-down back, but that appeared impossible as long as general manager A.J. Smith is in control.

Tomlinson, one of the biggest stars in Chargers history, had a less-than-smooth separation with San Diego in February 2010. While his production had fallen off and injuries were mounting, he had a public tiff with Smith. The GM even mocked the star running back at one point when Tomlinson said he'd like to finish his career in San Diego.

Days after his release from the Chargers, Tomlinson held a tearful news conference at the suburban country club where he and his wife lived.

Tomlinson finishes his career with 13,684 yards and 145 touchdowns.

Tomlinson won the MVP in '06, when he set league single-season records with 31 touchdowns, including 28 rushing, and 186 points. He ran for a career-high 1,815 yards that year, giving him the first of two straight league rushing titles.

He ran for 914 yards in 2010 with the Jets, but carried only 75 times for 280 yards last season, playing mostly on passing downs.

Tomlinson spoke at the public memorial service for Junior Seau on May 11, drawing the biggest cheers of the night.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Your passionate side emerges. You seem to be a ball of fire wherever you go, no matter what the topic is and no matter who you are discussing it with. Realize that not everyone can handle this much snap, crackle and pop. Tonight: Try to chill out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Without intending to be challenging, you come up with a different idea nearly every time someone has a suggestion. Your creativity is great, but others might not understand that you are trying to be helpful. Try subtlety. Tonight: Make it easy -- order in.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ You smile and others respond. Someone close to you might be in a disagreeable mood, which could cause a problem. You have tried to deal with a home or personal matter, but you might be totally exhausted by the issue. Tonight: As you like.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★ Know when to pull back and say little. It appears that nearly anything you might say could be misinterpreted. This might not be the result of your doing, but of others'. Even saying "yes" to something could be a problem if someone wants it to be. Tonight: Do your thing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ You could be pushed beyond your normal limits, and your finances might be playing a role in this situation. Only you can work it out, perhaps with some advice here and there. Tonight: Whatever you need to do.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ You might be bucking the establishment. Curb your sarcasm and anger for now. Do not take recent events personally, especially those that occurred in the past few days. Tonight: Could be late.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Stretch your mind and get an overview. You could feel as if you have been pushed or ignored lately. Try to get a perspective on the situation. Strive to detach and understand someone's position, rather than react in haste. Tonight: Get some exercise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Zero in on what you want. A possessive friend or loved one attempts to point you to his or her "right" path. Others might be a little too sure of themselves and the validity of their opinions. Tonight: With a favorite person.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You could be pushing too hard for your own good. You simply cannot be everywhere all the time. You need to zero in on what needs to happen with a group. Allow others to take a greater amount of responsibility. Tonight: Sort through invitations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★ Keep reaching out for someone at a distance. This person might be out of sorts and could have difficulty expressing his or her real issue. You just might be misfortunate enough to be in the line of fire. Stay neutral, if possible. Tonight: Relax. Screen your calls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ A partner or someone close to you is on the warpath and lets you know how angry he or she is. Being charming or trying to make this person laugh simply will not work. Make yourself unavailable at a certain point. Tonight: Let the fun begin, even if it is Monday.

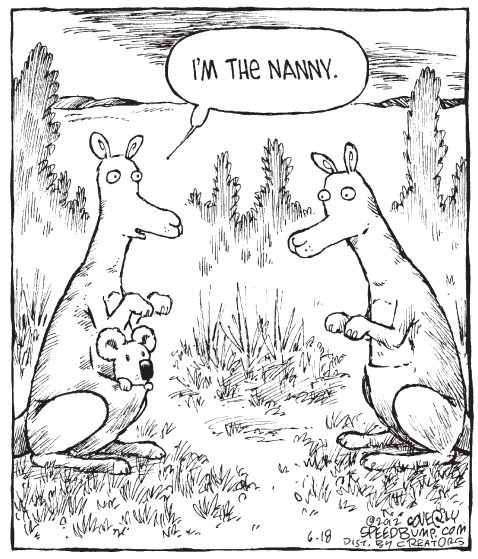

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Others seem determined to let you know how they feel. You come from a very different place -- a place that others sense but cannot identify with. Focus on your personal or domestic priorities right now. Tonight: Happy at home.

Happy birthday

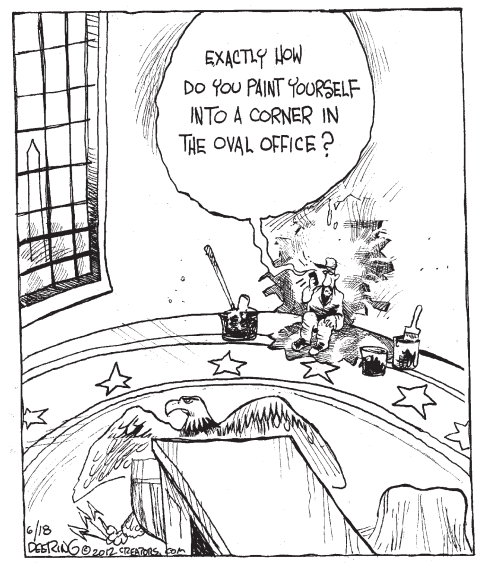

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year your ingenuity seems endless. You nearly always find a solution -- so much so that others often seek you out when they face a problem. Use care with your finances, but recognize that on some level, you will always feel as if you do not have enough. If you are single, opportunities to meet people come forward with ease. Date until you find someone significant to your life. If you are attached, do not dominate the relationship, as you sometimes do. Remember that it takes two to tango. LIBRA tends not to be as responsive as you might like.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Norway is home to perhaps the most inmate-friendly prison in the world (as mentioned previously in "News of the Weird"), but the correctional system has an imminent crisis, as Anders Behring Breivik (the confessed killer of 77 people last year) is nearing formal conviction and sentencing. Officials fear the sociopathic Breivik will try to kill inmates to add to his toll, yet Norwegian law forbids solitary confinement as cruel. Consequently, according to a May report by Norway's Verdens Gang newspaper, the officials have begun a search to select, hire and train appropriate "friends" to hang out with Breivik behind bars to win his trust and prevent further mayhem. Among Breivik's favorite recreational distractions: chess and hockey.

■ Collections of comically poor translations are legion, but the Beijing municipal government, in sympathy with English-speaking restaurant-goers, published a helpful guidebook recently of what the restaurateurs were trying, though inartfully, to say. In an April interview with the authors, NBC News learned the contents of "Hand Shredded A$$ Meat" (sic) (merely donkey meat) and other baffling English descriptions (all taken from actual menus), such as "Cowboy Leg," "Red-Burned Lion Head," "Blow-up Flatfish With No Result," and the very unhelpful "Tofu Made by Woman With Freckles" and "Strange Flavor Noodles."
