Recreational marijuana sales tax could appear on November ballot

CLARA HARTER
SMDP Staff Writer

City Hall has yet to legalize the sale of recreational marijuana, however they are already thinking about how to tax it.

In a June 14 Council meeting, Councilmembers voted unanimously to have staff research a ballot measure that would allow the City to place a Santa Monica tax on the sale of recreational cannabis.

What they were not unanimous about is whether that tax measure should appear on the November

Zuma Creek Bridge

The National Park Service and the Santa Monica Mountains Fund, the official nonprofit partner for Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area (SMMNRA), held a dedication ceremony for the Zuma Creek Bridge recently.

The event was attended by park officials, donors and local elected officials. The bridge offers a safe stream crossing for hikers, bikers and equestrians, as well as protection for important resources, like native amphibians living in the area. It was destroyed during the Woolsey Fire of November 2018.

The new bridge is the latest accomplishment in a long list of fire recovery efforts since the Woolsey Fire damaged 112 miles of trails, 30 structures and outbuildings, and 88 percent of federal park land in the Santa Monica Mountains.

"The bridge carries people over Zuma Creek on popular Backbone Trail, the premier 67-mile thru-hike of the Santa Monica Mountains," said SMMNRA Park Superintendent David Szymanski. "From what we've seen, members of the public are already making good use of this newly reconstructed crossing."

The Backbone Trail section between Newton Canyon Trailhead at Kanan-Dume Road and the north-south Zuma Ridge Trail was closed to the public while the bridge was being reconstructed over one month. The trail and new crossing reopened on May 13.

The funding for the bridge reconstruction project comes from a variety of donors, including the Santa Monica Mountains Fund, REI, the Ventura County Community Foundation (VCCF), Fund for People in the Parks, and CORBA (Concerned Off-Road Bicyclist Association). Collectively, these groups contributed $60,000 to purchase materials. It was constructed by NPS and SAMO Fund staff at SMMNRA

HOUSING ELEMENT

October 2021. In its February rejection letter, HCD provided several pages of notes, which City staff have spent the last four months poring over in order to produce the updated Housing Element.

Each city in California is mandated to produce an acceptable Housing Element once every decade, outlining development guidelines to allow for an increase in residential housing units to hit state-mandated minimums as well as other state standards (such as low-income housing availability).

Council's final approval comes just days after the Housing Element came before the Santa Monica Planning Commission on Wednesday, June 15. The Commission provided suggestions to Council en route to final submission, which is expected in July.

Perhaps the most substantial change in the updated Housing Element was in the overall housing capacity, or what HCD refers to as SSI (Suitable Sites Inventory).

"The SSI identifies parcels in the City that are the basis for demonstrating that the City can accommodate its Regional Housing Needs Assessment (RHNA) allocation of 8,895 units through assignment of housing units for each parcel in the SSI," a City Council staff report detailed. In other words, Santa Monica needed to prove there were zoning rules in effect to allow for nearly 9,000 new housing units to be built in the next decade.

In the original Housing Element, there was an SSI for 11,070 units. But, "in order to address HCD's technical comments," that estimate has been revised up to 13,000 units, nearly 45 percent above the RHNA number.

"Because the zoning does not exclude the probability of commercial development happening ... we don't have a prohibition on commercial development," Planning Manager Jing Yeo explained to the Planning Commission on Wednesday. "But that was something that was accounted for in the SSI, so there was a 15% across-the-board haircut. And that was one of the things that bumped up our overall capacity to make up for that loss."

In other words, HCD believed the first Housing Element was overly optimistic about the number of residential units likely to be constructed in mixed-use zones where it is permitted to develop non-residential uses. So, in response, staff bumped up floor-area ratio and building height maximums in several districts to accommodate more density. As detailed in City Council's staff report, these increases were kept "largely in commercial l boulevards north of the I-10 freeway (Wilshire, Santa Monica Boulevard, Broadway, Colorado, Olympic), Bergamot, and Downtown in exchange for lesser development standards in Pico neighborhood and neighborhood commercial areas such as Montana Avenue, Main Street, and Ocean Park Boulevard."

In a two-hour hearing, the Planning Commission and Yeo discussed several aspects of the Housing Element including a commitment to issue an average of 47 new building permits for ADUs (accessory dwelling units, also known as granny flats) each year. Much of that development is expected to be streamlined through SB9, the new state law that streamlines the construction of ADUs and other developments, such as duplexes, on single-family lots.

Initially, proposed language included a mandate that, "In addition, these SB9 units shall be required to be rented or sold." Yeo explained that meant that, essentially, any ADUs constructed through SB9 would need to be occupied.

But in the end, the Commission determined that language should be removed.

"That's a rental unit, and that's a very affordable unit, and the worst thing we want is for people to create affordable units, but worry about who it's being rented to or what the circumstances are," Commissioner Mario Fonda-Bonardi said. "I think it's really making us almost work against ourselves. It seems like we shouldn't be involved in those kinds of decisions."

There was also brief discussion about whether the Housing Element should highlight the potential property transfer tax measures that might be heading to the November ballot, one of which would direct funds toward affordable housing.

Commission Chair Ellis Raskin advocated that the City highlight this potential ballot measure as an example of a long-held commitment toward spending tax money on affordable housing, but Yeo and other commissioners said it was premature, as it was not even guaranteed to appear on a ballot.

In the end, the Commission approved more generic language: "Support measures that are not housing constraints to generate and allocate tax revenue for the acquisition and development of deed-restricted affordable housing."

These suggestions and others will be presented to City Council for final approval on Tuesday. The meeting is scheduled to begin at 6 p.m. and can be watched on CityTV or at santamonica.gov.

Metrolink Advances Earthquake Early Warning Technology that Automatically Stops or Slows Trains

Metrolink has announced an advancement in its Earthquake Early Warning System (EEW) with new technology that automatically applies the brakes for safe and rapid slowing or stopping of trains in the event of an earthquake.

A previous version of the technology that Metrolink deployed in September 2021 had the capability to send automated messages to train crews to begin to slow or stop the train but did not include automated brake enforcement. The next phase of this technology rollout is being tested along Metrolink's 91/Perris Valley Line between Riverside and Perris and is supported through a partnership with the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans) and the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS).

Metrolink's EEW is based on an interface between the USGS-operated ShakeAlert and Metrolink's Positive Train Control (PTC) system. ShakeAlert is an earthquake early warning system that provides important data within seconds of an earthquake being detected, including the earthquake's origin, time, location, and magnitude, so people and systems can be alerted before shaking begins. PTC is designed to prevent train-to-train collisions, over-speed derailments and other unsafe actions.

"The combination of ShakeAlert and PTC is a true game-changer for Metrolink," said Metrolink CEO Darren Kettle. "This latest advancement is a reflection of Metrolink's on-going leadership in system safety and an important milestone in our commitment to protecting our riders, workers and infrastructure."

The new system will also provide enhanced data to support inspection of the rail network and resumption of service following an earthquake.

"The program identifies where protection is needed on a rail network to safely continue rail operations," said Robert-Michael de Groot of the USGS Earthquake Science Center in Pasadena. "We are excited to be working together to provide real-time earthquake early warning alerts powered by ShakeAlert."

The new technology automatically processes ShakeAlert data and sends PTC messages to trains in the impacted area based on the severity of the earthquake detected. This latest update to the system adds PTC enforcement to automatically stop or slow trains when needed.

"Safety is always Caltrans' top priority," said Caltrans Acting Director Steven Keck. "The department embraces innovative new technologies like this one that will help protect riders when earthquakes occur."

The Perris Valley section of the 91/Perris Valley Line was chosen for the pilot test because testing would have minimal effects on freight train traffic.

ShakeAlerts do not predict earthquakes. Instead, an alert indicates that an earthquake has begun, shaking is expected, and protective actions should be taken. After the pilot phase on the Perris Valley Line, staff will evaluate its performance for potential expansion across the Metrolink system.

Santa Monica Artist Wins Best of Miniatures Award

Lori Pollack, an artist and resident of Santa Monica, California, has won the Best of Miniatures award in the continuously competitive June 2022 San Diego Watercolor Society (SDWS) Member's exhibition "Bring Color," an in-gallery show of the SDWS at 2825 Dewey Road in Liberty Station, San Diego, CA. Pollack's painting titled "Vibrant Succulent" was selected by prominent local artist Susan Keith for this honor, out of over 200 entries. Keith said of the painting, "This is really a standout in transparent water color. The highlights on this are really beautiful, how she has done them in different shades and values of pink. In contrast she has cool colors for the darker values. I love it, it is beautiful."

PAINTING: The work has won an award.

Over the last several years, Lori has rededicated herself to creating art using watermedia. During the pandemic, she created a new body of work inspired from her daily walks. Her signature style is to "push the colors" just past reality for an eye-catching and unique result. Lori finds that watercolor paints let her capture the intensity of colors seen in light, shadows, and reflections. She is drawn to nature and scenes of beauty and tranquility. In her paintings of flowers, plants, animals, and still-life objects, she takes a closer look and brings those small details to a place of importance. Pollack is an award-winning member of the Valley Watercolor Society and the Pacific Art Guild as well as of the SDWS. More of her work can be found at https://www.loripollackart.com/

Paintings can be viewed and purchased directly from the gallery, and are also available to view and purchase on the SDWS website at https://www.sdws.org/galleryart.php?cat=6996.

Editor:

The six percent increase passed by the Rent Control Board is, ironically, tied to the rate of inflation. I say ironically because, for those on fixed incomes - including elderly, retired and disabled Santa Monica residents - this historic increase is not a stand-alone thing. It adds to the pressure that already exists in the form of higher prices for just about everything.

Folks on fixed incomes are not getting richer. Some are, in fact, saying that being forced to live with a six percent rental increase might well mean being forced to choose between eating and keeping a roof over their heads.

If a solution to the problem exists, then it is incumbent upon the Rent Control Board to figure it out and implement it without delay.

Joan Walston, Santa Monica

Editor:

Again, math illiteracy is displayed by our Rent Board commissioners. When the year-over-year inflation rate is 10.8% (as reported just this morning on NPR), a 6.4% increase will cause housing providers to fall exponentially behind the inflation rate. In fact, the allowable annual rent increases for over two-thirds of the entire history of rent control in Santa Monica have been below the inflation rate. That is the actual math.

Ironically, the Rent Control Board has arbitrarily increased its tax on housing providers 15.2%. How is such a greater-than-inflation-rate justified?

Jan Ludwinski, Santa Monica

A 1914 structure at 1665 Appian Way was owned by racist advocate John Stotler

CLARA HARTER
SMDP Staff Writer

In a June 14 City Council meeting, Councilmembers voted to repeal two recently designated landmarks, including a property built and formerly occupied by man who fought to prevent Black people from purchasing property in Santa Monica.

The two properties are a 1914 multi-unit residential structure located at 1665 Appian Way and a 1937 industrial warehouse located at 631 Colorado Ave.

Both appeals of landmark status were heard and considered separately. In the case of 1665 Appian Way, Council voted unanimously in favor of the appeal, while for 631 Colorado Ave there was a 5-2 vote in favor of the appeal.

Demolition permit applications had been submitted by the owners of both properties, which led people to file applications for landmark status to preserve the buildings. Following the stripping of their respective recently designated landmark statuses they will now both be eligible for demolition.

The Landmark Commission voted in November 2021 to designate 1665 Appian Way as a landmark.

The building was constructed by John Stotler, who lived in one of its units and was a founding member of the Santa Monica Bay Protective League, an organization that advocated against Black property ownership and access to the Santa Monica Bay.

The consultant hired by the City to study the property concluded that the property itself was not associated with the racist activities of Stotler. The consultant also concluded that the property was eligible for landmark status on the basis that it was a rare historical example of affordable multi-family development close to the beach.

City Councilmembers disagreed with both conclusions, but took greater issue with the idea of allowing the home of a former racist to become a landmarked property.

"I don't want to glorify this gentleman. I don't see the value of this ramshackle vacated apartment house," said Councilmember Phil Brock.

Councilmembers were particularly moved by the speech of Robbie Jones, a lifelong Santa Monica resident who is the owner of Black Santa Monica Tours and Concierge and steering committee member of the Santa Monica Black Lives Association.

"We did such good work at getting the Belmar project commemorated, remembering the families that were moved out or burned out or taken out of that community. This council is really doing some good work regarding just trying to repair the pain; This right here just brings all this back up... this is offensive, I am outraged," said Jones.

Jones was referring to the destruction of homes and businesses owned by African Americans and other marginalized groups in the 1950s in the Belmar Triangle Neighborhood to make way for the City's expanded Civic Center.

"When Robbie Jones said to me that walking by that building makes her cry, that did it for me," said Mayor Sue Himmelrich, explaining why she would be voting to repeal the landmark designation.

Revoking the landmark status of the second property at 631 Colorado Ave was slightly more contentious, with Himmelrich and Councilmember Christine Parra voting to preserve the landmark status and the remaining five councilmembers voting to revoke it.

The Landmark Commission was also more divided when it approved the designation through a 4-2 vote in a January 2022 meeting.

Their reasoning included the fact that it was the first light industrial commercial building in the south-east portion of Santa Monica's downtown; its Art Deco/Streamline Moderne style; its use of Groutlock bricks; and the fact that Etta Moxley, a prominent leader in the African American Women's Club movement, lived on the site prior to the building's construction.

From 1937 to 1955 the building was home to the Aztec Brewing Company, which was an example of the shift towards industrialization Downtown. Most recently it was the home of offices for Bay Films.

"I get the sense and with all due respect to the applicants here, that there's a little bit of an attempt to sort of shoehorn this building into historical significance and it's not working for me," said Councilmember Gleam Davis, later adding, "I think when we overreach in identifying landmarks, we really do in some respects diminish the real landmarks in our city."

Mayor Sue Himmelrich disagreed and did feel like the building's architecture and historical uses were of landmark worthy significance.

"I buy the argument, frankly, that this does satisfy [landmark designation] criteria number one, because it represents a point in time in 1936, 1937 where we were switching to industrial in that part of town," said Himmelrich. "I think it's an attractive building that has a certain style and I think that the brickwork is significant."

Councilmembers agreed that the building was not of historical significance due to the fact that Etta Moxley formerly lived on the site in a different building. However, they indicated an interest in making Moxley's contributions to racial justice in Santa Monica better known.

Following the landmark repeal vote, councilmembers voted to ask the owner of whatever structure is built on the land once the property is demolished to add a commemorative plaque with information about Etta Moxley.

TAX

ballot. While some Councilmembers want to move the process forward as quickly as possible, others fear that a measure this election cycle would be rushed and potentially hurt the chances of other revenue raising ballot measures passing.

In general, City Council supports the idea of legalizing the sale of recreational marijuana, which is already the norm in most other municipalities. In a May 10 meeting, Councilmembers gave staff direction to return with a study session on the process to do so.

Currently, Santa Monica only allows for the sale of medicinal cannabis under very strict conditions stipulated in the Santa Monica Cannabis Ordinance. These regulations are so onerous that so far no dispensary has opened doors, even though medicinal sales have been legal since 2017. There are two dispensaries currently in the works.

If Santa Monica were to legalize recreational sales, most of the tax revenue would automatically go to the state. Councilmembers Oscar de la Torre, Phil Brock and Lana Negrete therefore propose preemptively approving a local tax measure so the City would be ready to capture some of the profit immediately following legalization.

"We are right now in difficult times in terms of our budget and we're thinking that there will be missed opportunities in terms of how we might be able to take advantage of that tax base that we're losing now to our neighbor in Los Angeles," said de la Torre, who supports placing the measure on the November ballot.

Councilmembers Kristin McCowan, Gleam Davis and Sue Himmelrich all agreed that putting such a measure on the November ballot would be too rushed, particularly given that there is not enough time to complete community polling prior to the August 12 deadline to approve measures.

"I would never put anything on the ballot without polling…We all got all the mail about the library, right? Everybody wants libraries open blah, blah and then when we want the [library] parcel tax, it's not going to pass," said Mayor Sue Himmelrich, referring to the unfavorable poll results for a potential parcel tax to raise funding to reopen libraries.

Councilmember Gleam Davis also fears that there is not enough time to perfect the ballot language measure.

"If you put something that's, pardon the pun, half-baked on the ballot in November and people vote against it, it's going to be very difficult to bring it back no matter how much you've refined it, or thought about it, or amended it," said Davis. "People say 'well, I already voted against it, I'm not going to vote for that.'"

The last key worry raised about placing the measure on the November ballot is that it would inadvertently hurt the odds of other tax raising measures passing, even though the recreational weed tax would not take effect until the legalization process is complete.

"We are already talking about putting a transient occupancy tax measure on the ballot. We are likely going to have one or two property transfer tax measures and Santa Monica College has just announced they're putting a bond measure on the ballot," said Himmelrich, later adding, "people's capacity to accept taxation only goes so far."

De la Torre disagreed that preparing a tax would be time intensive, pointing to the fact that there is boilerplate language available from approved measures in other cities and that City Attorney Douglas Sloan oversaw a similar process while working in the City of Fresno.

Brock also supports adding the measure in November, saying that otherwise Council will not have the opportunity to do so until the 2024 election.

"I do believe we have to vote for a tax first, because if we don't, then the state would get revenue, but the City would get absolutely nothing," said Brock. "We probably have a million and a half, two million in potential revenue a year to Santa Monica from having retail outlets."

While Council remained in disagreement over when such a measure should appear on a ballot, they all agreed to have staff research the potential measure.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (June 20)

You'll ask better questions to turn your work in a lucrative direction. You'll bring different resources together to create something efficient and unique. Also in the stars: personal work earns tender rewards. You'll get in on the ground level of a venture. Big planning goes into a formal event — one for the ages. Taurus and Libra adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 22, 15, 9 and 40.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). There are things that happened years ago that you still cringe to think of, and this is a lucky day for letting go. You're not defined by the past. You're entitled to making as many iterations of yourself as you please.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Animals are never on their phones — one of the many things you appreciate about them. Your connection to creatures will bring joy, grounding and the sense of living totally in the moment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Often the best way to say things is not the first one that pops to mind. A friendly, diplomatic approach takes practice, and you'll get plenty in the weeks to come. Today's power question: What if we did it this way instead?

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Your solo strength is remarkable, but sociability has definite advantages. For instance, exercising with friends gives you an endorphin boost, and the accountability factor makes it easier to establish the habit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). People who are tired have cranky opinions and complaints and are not fun to be around. You don't want to be that person, so you believe what your body tells you and make rest and relaxation a priority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). An exclusive group intrigues you. Are you familiar enough with its culture to join? Find out more. As you gain a measure of expertise, doors swing open. As usual, you'll remain modest and focused on others all the way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Some degree of worry is to be expected and will serve you well, helping you anticipate and avoid future problems. You'll take stress in stride, handle it with grace and attract good fortune.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll welcome contradictions. Without contrast we couldn't see or understand anything at all. Comprehension of light relies on the outlines of darkness. Detail is shading.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). While the success of others may not pose a threat to your own, you wouldn't be human if you didn't occasionally find it annoying. You'll wisely avoid the futility of competing when it's not a competition.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You'll turn down your inner heat to keep the emotional weather around you mild. It works. You'll stop the wind. It's easy to go faster than the wind when there is no wind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Every behavior has a payoff. To change a behavior, understand its payoff. Figuring out your own motives will require objectivity, honesty and compassionate nonjudgment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Thinking back on your journey, those times of uncertainty and awkwardness were an essential part of the deal. It takes feeling lost to appreciate the relief of being found, even (and especially) in regard to finding yourself.
