Baez remains connected to pier

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

SM PIER There's an old photo of a folk singer in a recently published book about the Santa Monica Pier's history, showing a young woman leaning back in a chair, her ankles crossed mid-air, her face slightly tilted upward, clearly amused.

The picture of the then 29-year-old Joan Baez, published in "Santa Monica Pier: a Century on the Last Great Pleasure Pier," was taken in the apartment of her good friend Colleen Creedon, a well-known local activist who lived in an upstairs unit of the Looff Hippodrome just above the carousel.

It is where Baez' fondest memories of the pier were born, where she spent nights sleeping on the water bed while her young son was still small enough to fit snuggly on a bean bag.

The pier was a place where she always remained connected and always intended to return.

Here comes the rush

High school students plan to crash classes at Santa Monica College

BY CATHERINE CAIN
Special to the Daily Press

SMC Teachers on the first day of summer school classes today may find far more students in their rooms than they bargained for, and more that never signed up.

Many high school students enrolled at SMC to take classes over the summer to get credits out of the way, fulfill graduation requirements or simply to boost grade point averages.

While this is not unusual, many high school students were not able to sign up for their classes this year. This is unusual.

As a result, many students have plans to attend the first day of class in hopes of getting a spot anyway, essentially crashing a course.

"It's probably a combination of things," SMC spokesman Bruce Smith said. "Over this past year, we have been experiencing, as all colleges have, higher enrollment. As the economy tanks, enrollment skyrockets."

Smith also cited classes being cut and students coming from other community colleges around Los Angeles as reasons for large class sizes.

Jessica Ro is an incoming Santa Monica High School senior who was hoping to sign up for a communications class

"The class was already full by the time high school enrollment started," Ro said.

She is planning to rush the class, or "show up and hope I get in," as she puts it. Spots in classes open up as some students usually drop out after discovering scheduling conflicts or too demanding a course-load. Unregistered students show up to the first few days of class hoping to fill the empty spots before anyone else.

Ro is not alone, as many high school students are planning on doing the same after discovering their classes were full moments after registration opened.

"I was told to sign up at 6 p.m. on the

State releases new guidelines for eating fish

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES The state Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment is updating its safe-eating guidelines for fish caught off Southern California because of PCBs, DDT and other contaminants.

Spokesman Sam Delson says officials expanded the sampling area from Ventura Harbor to Carlsbad. Fish from 22 species were analyzed for contaminants.

Consumers are warned to avoid white croaker, barred sand bass and topsmelt from Santa Monica Beach to Seal Beach Pier. Children under 18 and women under the age of 45 are also warned not to eat black croaker or barracuda from Ventura Harbor to San Mateo Point.

PCBs and DDTs are man-made chemicals that were banned in the 1970s. But by then large amounts of the contaminants had flowed into the ocean and were deposited on the seafloor off the Palos Verdes Peninsula. They continue to be absorbed by fish.

Swimming, sunbathing and smog-catching

BY EMMA TROTTER
Special to the Daily Press

CITYWIDE Starting today, Santa Monica kids can trash can relay, putt for points and bottle bowl their way to saving the environment. The Clean Air Olympics — which includes these tasks and many more — is just one activity available to kids at Camp Santa Monica through the O24U curriculum.

O24U activities like making smog catchers and playing asthma bingo are intended to help kids establish relationships with the world they live in and become more interested in combating the negative effects of environmental change.

"When kids make things or write about things, they learn in the process," said Dan Witzling, environmental program manager for BREATHE California of Los Angeles County (BREATHE LA).

BREATHE LA is teaming up with Child Care, Recreation, Enrichment, Sports, Together (CREST) to offer environmental education classes at CREST's Camp Santa Monica, open to kids ages 8 to 14. Classes run through August 28.

"The program is aimed at enhancing our environment and health," said Concepcion Rechtszajd, Community Services Program supervisor for CREST. BREATHE LA's O24U curriculum, developed in 2003, will add another component relating to health and environment to CREST's existing outdoor education programs.

The O24U curriculum includes six lesson areas — a general overview of air pollution and environmental changes, an examination of the health effects of toxins in the body, a survey of toxic indoor environments, a spotlight on kids who have made and can make a difference for the environment, a look at practical solutions and a study of alternative energy.

"BREATHE LA is unique because our mission is to promote clean air and healthy lungs, so we approach environmental education from a very personal level," Witzling said. "We encourage kids to find heroes and consider themselves heroes for the environment."

Most of the materials for activities are supplied by local grocery and hardware stores, Witzling said. BREATHE LA is still looking to establish these partners in Santa Monica.

BREATHE LA sought out Santa Monica because its location makes it a micro-climate.

"We want kids to come away with a greater awareness of what they're surrounded by and any changes that need to take place," Witzling said.

The O24U curriculum was developed in compliance with state standards for environmental education implemented in 2006.

"No one wants to burden teachers with extra content," Witzling said. "The idea was how do we integrate environmental educa-

Schwarzenegger's airplane makes emergency landing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Federal investigators on Saturday were looking into what caused smoke in the cockpit that forced Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's private plane to make an emergency landing.

Authorities intend to follow-up with the New Jersey-based private charter company that ferried Schwarzenegger on his travels, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Ian Gregor said Saturday.

Gregor said the FAA will make sure NetJets Inc. diagnoses and fixes the problem that prompted the emergency landing on Friday.

Schwarzenegger's jet was about 10 minutes away from landing at the Santa Monica Airport on Friday evening when the pilot reported smoke coming from an instrument panel, Schwarzenegger spokesman Aaron McLear said in a statement.

The jet made an emergency landing after the pilot reported smoke in the cockpit. No one was injured.

The pilot made a "quick, steep, but safe landing" at 6:23 p.m. at Van Nuys Airport in the San Fernando Valley, McLear said.

Schwarzenegger tweeted about the incident, calling it "a little adventure," and posting a link to a photo of the jet parked on the runway on his Twitter feed.

"All's OK, though," he tweeted.

City fire crews met the jet on the runway, though there were no flames.

Schwarzenegger exited the jet and went to his Los Angeles-area home, McLear said.

NetJets spokeswoman Maryann Aarseth said the NetJets Hawker 800 was carrying the governor, three passengers and two crew.

"The crew followed standard emergency procedures by informing the passengers of the situation and diverting to Van Nuys where they landed the aircraft safely," Aarseth said in a statement Saturday.

There goes the neighborhood

Editor:

Although I spoke at the City Council hearing for 301 Ocean Ave., I believe that the demolition and construction scheduled for 236 Adelaide will have a much more profound effect on the affordable housing neighborhood on San Vicente Boulevard. The property on Adelaide backs up to an alley where many young and old renters reside only 20 feet away. So far, the owners of 236 Adelaide have removed an enormous tree, uprooted all of the shrubbery near the alley, and removed a fence around the Guard House. The noise level was unbearable, even with all windows closed and televisions blaring. They have used a wood chipper, a grader, an illegal leaf blower and construction drilling tools. The workers were so unprofessional that they used the grader to uproot shrubs and threw them into the air to get the dirt before loading into trucks. This created an alleyway full of dirt and debris. Whatever the shrubs might have been sprayed with permeated the air. It must have been hazardous because the workers wore masks. Personally, I have been sick for over a week because of the dust and debris.

Most of the construction is on hold because of an appeal which will be heard by City Council on July 14. The owners are not "rehabilitating" this property, they are building a McMansion. The construction, when it begins, will include the Carriage House, the Guard House, the Pergola, a new three-car garage, removing shakes from the home and roof, additions of 165 square feet and 44 square feet. They will remove the circular driveway, renovate the basement completely, add a new entrance to the front plus numerous other construction items.

The saddest part of this situation is that they are destroying the history and green space of Santa Monica's "best example of a Craftsman home." After meeting ALL SIX of the Landmark criteria, this property had been designated a landmark since 2002. Without enough research, the Landmarks Commission voted to let this demolition and construction go forward. Three of the members who voted for the original designation in 2002 thought that they had voted to landmark the entire property.

Let us hope that City Council takes a closer look at the historical and environmental impacts on their much prized affordable housing communities and neighborhoods on San Vicente Boulevard.

Developments coast on campaign contributions

PREVIOUSLY, I WROTE ABOUT THE development agreement for a new Downtown hotel that was before the Planning Commission on Wednesday, June 10. The agreement requested by developer Maxser & Co. was discussed and, by a five-to-one vote, forwarded on to the City Council for review and approval.

The controversial project is a conversion of a landmarked 1928 office tower at 710 Wilshire Blvd. into a 44-room hotel with a restaurant and retail space. A new 84-foot high hotel wing with 240 hotel rooms and 16 apartments on an elevated platform (think 1960s) with an open paseo, additional retail shops including a food market and four levels of subterranean parking with space for approximately 480 vehicles would be added on the current rear surface parking lot.

The 84-year-old Spanish Colonial Revival-style tower was designated a Santa Monica Landmark on Sept. 12, 2005. Landmark restrictions protect the tower's exterior facade but don't apply to new construction. The proposed new hotel wing facing Seventh Street is overly large, bulky and rivals Maxser's faux-Tudor style Jolly Roger Motor Hotel in the Marina for unadulterated tackiness. The present parking lot cries out for development, but this is not the right project.

Nevertheless, Planning Commissioners Jay Johnson, Gerda Paumgarten, Gwynne Pugh, Jim Ries and Terry O'Day voted to forward this pig's ear to the City Council for consideration for a development agreement that would allow greater height and mass than allowed by the present zoning codes. Only Ted Winterer saw how lame this was and voted no. Hank Koning was absent.

Maxser was a major contributor against Measure T, the failed ballot proposition last year that would have limited commercial development in the city. The developer contributed $10,000 to Save Our City, the anti-T committee co-chaired by Planning Commission Chairman O'Day that raised nearly $800,000 (mostly from developers and real estate interests) to defeat the measure.

Without an ordinance that may have slowed the oncoming parade of large commercial projects, proposals for large developments, especially in the mid-cities neighborhood, continue unabated.

A development agreement for the construction of a motion picture office and studio facility at 1834 Colorado Ave. (at Stewart Street) is the subject of a joint meeting between the Planning Commission and Architectural Review Board Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the City Council chambers.

The proposed project — possibly the future home of Lionsgate Entertainment — is a 151,600 square foot, five floor building, with underground parking for 584 vehicles. A separate child care center is also planned for the property owned by California Creative Studios, LLC. Neighbors concerned about traffic and other impacts would be wise to show up and voice their concerns.

Big commercial developments aren't the only real estate projects that are getting special attention from City Hall these days. Previously, the City Council had exempted 100 percent affordable housing projects from public development review as a way to expedite development of public housing without your (and my) annoying "two cents worth."

Community Corporation of Santa Monica, the city's largest public housing provider with nearly 2,000 units in their portfolio, has purchased 2802 Pico Blvd. and plans to turn the present car repair lot into a new, four floor, public housing project.

Public housing projects receive bonuses allowing for greater height and density — in excess of current zoning codes — and usually offer little or no opportunity for public comment. The final community workshop for 2802 Pico is a rare opportunity for neighbors to speak out about this project's size, parking access, retail space (if any), congestion and other concerns. It will be held Wednesday, June 24, at 7 p.m. at the Santa Monica Business Park Conference Center, 3200 Ocean Park Blvd.

The 2802 Pico project is "for large family occupancy" according to a Planning Department memo. It will consist of 36 or 37 two and three bedroom units for very low to low income families and may have one small store front. Sunset Park neighbors are already concerned because the project is on commercial property at Pico and 28th Street and its projected height is four floors (40 feet) in a C4, commercially zoned area with an existing 30-foot height limit.

A similar 33-unit apartment project is being developed by city-affiliated CCSM at 2602 Broadway — formerly the Berkshire skilled nursing care facility. Another 32-unit housing project is proposed to replace an existing 14-unit apartment building at 430 Pico. All three projects are expected to be ready for occupancy by summer, 2012.

The new developments just keep on coming. Our increasingly pro-development Planning Commission and City Council tend to approve everything fobbed off on them these days. Maybe its because they've found a new, almost inexhaustible source of campaign contributions — developer money.

Then they atone for their greed by promoting massive amounts of public housing for non-residents while telling us it's benefiting Santa Monicans. What nonsense!

The hostile takeover of childhood is underway

CHILDREN ARE IN GREATER PHYSICAL, psychological, emotional and spiritual danger now than at any other time during the life of this nation — and the threat is coming from a multi-billion dollar industry that is using the latest advances in psychology, anthropology, and neuroscience to transform children into profitable consumers from cradle to grave.

It's no surprise that the pre-teen demographic has become a major draw for marketers and big business. There are presently 52 million kids under the age of 12 in the United States. These kids spend $40 billion of their own money on everything from clothes and music to toys and electronics annually, but more importantly, they influence an additional $700 billion in parental spending.

Unfortunately, the media onslaught begins early, often abetted by well-meaning parents who have bought into the trendy but unfounded "smart baby" pitches from media conglomerates selling Brainy Baby, Baby Einstein, and Baby Genius programs and products (Baby Einstein is a billion dollar industry). According to research reported in the Archives of Pediatric & Adolescent Medicine, 40 percent of infants are watching screen media regularly by the age of three months. Ninety percent are viewers by the age of two. The Federal Trade Commission has concluded that children ages 2-11 see more than 25,000 advertisements a year on TV alone. This does not include product placements.

The statistics bear this out: in their documentary, "Consuming Kids," the Media Education Foundation reports that "Forty times as many young people are now being diagnosed with bipolar disorder than 13 years ago ... Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder: almost four and a half million children in this country have been diagnosed with ADHD ... Doctors are writing a growing number of prescriptions for anti-depressants for children — as many as eight million a year."

How did we get to the point where our children are treated as walking commodities? First and foremost, America has lost its moral compass.

Second, along with the loss of a unifying cultural value system, any true sense of spirituality has been lost. This creates a spiritual void that American culture is attempting to fill with materialism.

Third, the bedrock of society — the family — is in serious trouble. An institution that once nurtured and protected children is now besieged from virtually every quarter. Approximately 50 percent of all marriages — even among professed evangelical Christians — end in divorce. And for the first time in American history, as the U.S. Census Bureau reports, married couples make up less than 50 percent of American households.

Fourth, technology is no friend to families or children. Technology, now essentially autonomous, destroys a vital control once exercised by parents.

Finally, the increasing loss of an overarching value system and the family structure has led to the destabilization of necessary societal "mediating structures" — neighborhoods, families, churches, synagogues, schools and voluntary associations. When they function as they should, mediating structures limit the growth of the government and promote freedom and democracy. But when these structures break down, society — that is, people — look to mega-structures, such as the state, as a source of values.

What, if anything, can be done? In various countries, laws curb television advertising aimed at children. For example, in Sweden and Norway, television advertisements are not permitted on programs directed specifically to children under the age of 12. Such laws as these are a good place to start. But with the overwhelming influence that American corporations wield, it is doubtful that any such protections will be passed into law in America.

Parents are going to have to limit access to televisions and computers, put away their cell phones and spend time with their children. Eat family meals together, take walks and avoid introducing your children to the consumer world of stores and malls.

Parents should set and enforce realistic limits for television watching and electronic game play. Above all, keep violent media programs and games away from young eyes.

Last, but not least, become politically active. Contact your local, state and national legislators and educators by way of phone calls, e-mails and letters and put pressure on government officials regarding measures to protect families and children.

The Q Line

Growing support

A movement is afoot in Santa Monica to turn a vacant lot in the Pico Neighborhood into a community garden. Residents are calling on city officials to dig deep and purchase the parcel.

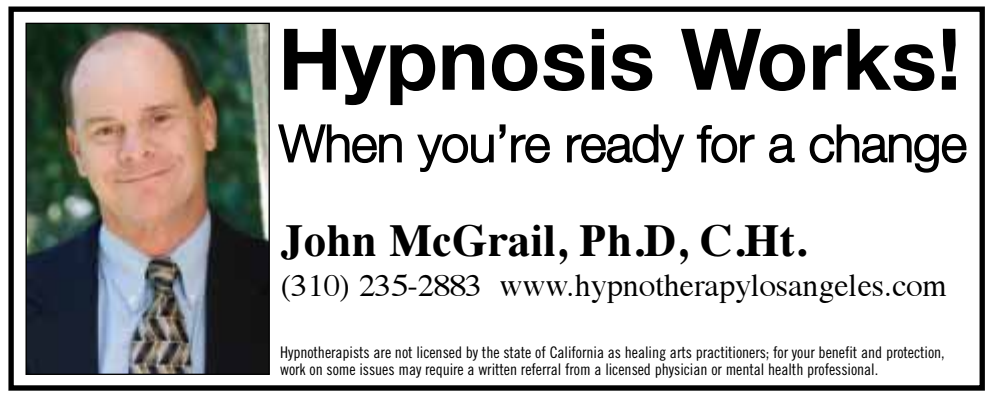

So this week's Q-Line question asks:

Should the city make the move and buy the property or is the time just not right?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. Please limit responses to a minute or less.

NOT SO FAST: Some climate change doubters blame global warming on sunspots and/or solar wind. Many climate scientists agree that natural variations in the sun's output could be playing a role, but the vast majority view it as very minimal and attribute Earth's warming primarily to emissions from industrial activity — and thousands of peer-reviewed studies back up that claim.

Heated debate

Dear EarthTalk

Don't some scientists point to sunspots and solar wind as having more impact on climate change than human industrial activity?

David Noss
California, MD

SUNSPOTS ARE STORMS ON THE SUN'S surface that are marked by intense magnetic activity and play host to solar flares and hot gassy ejections from the sun's corona. Scientists believe that the number of spots on the sun cycles over time, reaching a peak — the so-called Solar Maximum — every 11 years or so. Some studies indicate that sunspot activity overall has doubled in the last century. The apparent result down here on Earth is that the sun glows brighter by about 0.1 percent now than it did 100 years ago.

Solar wind, according to NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, consists of magnetized plasma flares and in some cases is linked to sunspots. It emanates from the sun and influences galactic rays that may in turn affect atmospheric phenomena on Earth, such as cloud cover. But scientists are the first to admit that they have a lot to learn about phenomena like sunspots and solar wind, some of which is visible to humans on Earth in the form of Aurora Borealis and other far flung interplanetary light shows.

Some skeptics of human-induced climate change blame global warming on natural variations in the sun's output due to sunspots and/or solar wind. They say it's no coincidence that an increase in sunspot activity and a run-up of global temperatures on Earth are happening concurrently, and view regulation of carbon emissions as folly with negative ramifications for our economy and tried-and-true energy infrastructure.

"[V]ariations in solar energy output have far more effect on Earth's climate than soccer moms driving SUVs," Southwestern Law School professor Joerg Knipprath, writes in his 'Token Conservative' blog. "A rational thinker would understand that, especially if he or she has some understanding of the limits of human influence. But the global warming boosters have this unbounded hubris that it is humans who control nature, and that human activity can terminally despoil the planet as well as cause its salvation."

Many climate scientists agree that sunspots and solar wind could be playing a role in climate change, but the vast majority view it as very minimal and attribute Earth's warming primarily to emissions from industrial activity — and they have thousands of peer-reviewed studies available to back up that claim.

Peter Foukal of the Massachusetts-based firm Heliophysics, Inc., who has tracked sunspot intensities from different spots around the globe dating back four centuries, also concludes that such solar disturbances have little or no impact on global warming. Nevertheless, he adds, most up-to-date climate models — including those used by the United Nations' prestigious Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) — incorporate the effects of the sun's variable degree of brightness in their overall calculations.

Ironically, the only way to really find out if phenomena like sunspots and solar wind are playing a larger role in climate change than most scientists now believe would be to significantly reduce our carbon emissions. Only in the absence of that potential driver will researchers be able to tell for sure how much impact natural influences have on the Earth's climate.

Higher college enrollment numbers means higher jilted student numbers

high school concurrent date, and I understand that SMC students were given a two-week priority," said incoming senior Salonee Bhaman, who tried signing up for Physics 14. "I called at 6 p.m. and had to keep calling until 6:05 p.m. to get through, at which point my course was closed. It was a little surreal."

Despite rumors about college students getting preferential treatment this year, Smith insists nothing has changed since last year.

"[High school students] are not any lower [a priority] than usual this year," Smith said. "It's just that it's probably harder to get into a class because of increased enrollment overall."

While a few extra days to a week are given to continuing college students, this is not a new system.

"California Education Code 76001(e) specifically directs community college districts to assign a low enrollment priority to special part-time or full time students … in order to ensure that these students do not displace regularly admitted students," vice president of enrollment development Teresita Rodriguez said. "Students still enrolled in high school are part of this category."

Smith explained that often in times of economic stress, community college enrollment increases due to people looking for job retraining or better education for higher quality jobs.

To make things worse, several Los Angeles community colleges such as nearby West L.A. College have decided not to hold sessions this summer due to California's budget problems. As a result, students normally enrolled at L.A. colleges are signing up for summer classes at SMC to complete required courses.

> "I UNDERSTAND THAT SMC STUDENTS WERE GIVEN A TWO-WEEK PRIORITY. I CALLED AT 6 P.M., AND HAD TO KEEP CALLING UNTIL 6:05 P.M. TO GET THROUGH, AT WHICH POINT MY COURSE WAS CLOSE. IT WAS A LITTLE SURREAL."

"With the budget cuts facing all segments of education in California, I am afraid that the demand for college courses currently outweighs the availability," Rodriguez said.

Some students are looking to other colleges and programs for classes and some have just given up, but many are planning to take their desired classes by storm.

"I am planning to rush the class, albeit with mixed emotions," Bhaman said. "I was hoping signing up would be swallowing a bitter pill because it was good for me, not wheedling with the pharmacist for it as well."

tion with learning that already exists."

CREST's after-school programs presented a perfect opportunity. The O24U curriculum will also be offered there starting next fall.

"CREST is exactly the type of partner we look for," Witzling said, citing CREST's status as a "clearinghouse" for all of the Santa Monica elementary schools. "Hopefully, we'll be able to reach more kids more efficiently."

To date, BREATHE LA has provided this type of program to about 5,000 students. Five years from now, Witzling hopes to have served 100,000.

BREATHE LA is an independent nonprofit that has existed under different names since 1903. CREST, a collaboration between the city of Santa Monica's Human Services Division of the Community & Cultural Services Department and the Santa Monica Malibu Unified School District, offers summer camps and before- and after-school programs.

To sign kids up for Camp Santa Monica, parents should visit crest.smgov.net. The summer program costs $170 per week for residents of Santa Monica and $190 per week for non-residents.

Baez to perform at pier next month

When her manager began booking venues for the summer tour, Baez made it a point to include a concert in Santa Monica.

"I always wanted to go and give a concert there," the legendary folk singer said during a recent interview.

She'll finally get her chance on July 9 when she takes the stage as part of the 25th Annual Twilight Dance Series, performing alongside her son Gabriel Harris who is now a percussionist.

The frequent visits to see Creedon sparked the often-spoken myth that Baez once lived at the pier. When arsonists set fire to the Looff Hippodrome in 1974, taking out Creedon's unit, the activist relocated to the Sea Castle just a few blocks south.

"The water bed took over the entire room," Baez recalls of the Sea Castle. "I have a huge memory of (Harris) bouncing around on the water bed."

The 68-year-old singer got her start during the Newport Folk Festival in 1959, then a drama student at Boston University where she was surrounded by friends who "shared a passion for folk music," according to a 2008 biography by Arthur Levy.

"Her repertoire reflected a different sensibility from her peers," Levy wrote. "In the traditional songs she mastered, there was an acknowledgement of the human condition."

Baez' first solo LP came in the summer of 1960 with Vanguard Records.

Along with her music, Baez would over the next 49 years become known equally for her political activism, which often times would be embedded together, her songs reflecting the times, whether it involved civil rights, free speech or anti-war movements.

She remembers the anti-war activity in and around the pier where her ex-husband would give speeches.

Today the singer remains involved with the pier as one of two co-chairs of its centennial planning committee, the other title going to Robert Redford, who wrote the foreword for Jim Harris' Santa Monica Pier book.

It's an association that Baez' calls "honorary."

"I try to show up for some (events)," she said.

BACK IN THE DAY: Joan Baez relaxes at a friend's apartment on the Santa Monica Pier. The folk singer was just 29 at the time.

At one of those events — the pier concert series — Baez is expected to perform songs from her newest album, "Day After Tomorrow," produced by Steve Earle.

Unlike some of her previous works, Baez said that "Day After Tomorrow" isn't a message album, but rather a reflection of what is going on in the world.

"It wasn't trying to attack any particular subject," she said. "It wasn't an environmentally conscious album, it wasn't an anti-war album … it wasn't a protest album."

While the album doesn't come with the messages as its predecessors did, Baez thoughts still remains with the issues of the world, most recently the demonstrations over the elections in Iran.

"It is the most exciting thing happening in the world at the moment for me and for them," she said. "I think with all the miserable things going on, this is worth talking about because it is hopeful."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Police in Indianapolis charged Fifth Third Bank manager Dwayne Roberts, 31, with arson and theft after the failure of his scheme to cover up embezzlement. Police said that Roberts elaborately staged a fire inside a locked vault so that an undeterminable amount of money would burn up, thus perhaps covering his cash shortage. However, after Roberts had set the fire and locked the vault, he realized he had left his keys inside and could not re-open the vault or lock the bank's doors or drive home.

■ Donny Guy, 31, was arrested in Hickory, N.C., in May and charged with burglary of the Captain's Galley Seafood restaurant in a caper caught on surveillance video. Guy was immediately a suspect because he lives in an apartment about 50 yards from the restaurant, and there were two paper trails from the restaurant almost to his front door. The video revealed that, in carrying away the two cash registers in the dark, the burglar failed to notice that the spools of paper in each machine had snagged on something in the restaurant and were unraveling with each step he took.
