Poll: Quarter of voters still not picking favorite for president

JENNIFER AGIESTA
LAURIE KELLMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON They shrug at President Barack Obama and Republican challenger Mitt Romney. They're in no hurry to decide which one to support in the White House race. And they'll have a big say in determining who wins the White House.

One-quarter of U.S. voters are persuadable, according to an Associated Press-GfK poll, and both Obama and Romney will spend the next four months trying to convince these fickle, hard-to-reach individuals that only he has what it takes to fix an ailing nation.

It's a delicate task. These voters also hate pandering.

"I don't believe in nothing they say," says Carol Barber of Ashland, Ky., among the 27 percent of the electorate that hasn't determined whom to back or that doesn't have a strong preference about a candidate.

Like many uncommitted voters, the 66-year-old Barber isn't really paying attention to politics these days. She's largely focused on her husband, who just had a liver transplant, and the fact that she had to refinance her home to pay much of his health bill. "I just can't concentrate on it now," she says before adding, "If there were somebody running who knows what it's like to struggle, that would be different."

John Robinson, a 49-year-old general contractor from Santa Cruz, Calif., is paying a bit more attention, but is just as turned off by both candidates.

"I'm just bitter about everybody. They just keep talking and wavering," said Robinson, a conservative who backed the GOP nominee in 2008, Arizona Sen. John McCain, but is undecided between Obama and Romney. "There's nothing I can really say that's appealing about either one of them."

To be sure, many of the 1-in-4 voters

Husband-wife team take on Big Oil

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

MAIN STREET Tucked away in an office that caps O'Brien's Irish Pub & Restaurant, a green revolution is fomenting.

It's led by husband-wife filmmaking team Josh Tickell and Rebecca Harrell Tickell, a couple which mixes thorough research with daring investigation to create documentaries that explore the relationship between Americans and what they believe is one of our biggest addictions — fossil fuels.

Perhaps it's fitting then that they met over a car.

Tickell grew up in Louisiana, the state that processes 60 percent of the nation's oil. He watched friends and family become ill in "Cancer Alley," the section of the state with the highest concentration of oil processing facilities, which spurred his interest in alternative fuels.

He decided to spread the gospel of biodiesel using a car called the "Veggie Van," which he drove across the nation, teaching people how to make the switch and even produce their own biodiesel.

A decade before they met in person, Harrell Tickell saw the "Veggie Van" on one of its stops. Life led both of them to Southern California, where she saw the van parked in a driveway and decided to introduce herself.

It was a fateful choice.

"I decided to devote my life to using film and entertainment to inspire people, to transform their view of the world especially around alternative fuels, renewable, replacement fuels," Harrell Tickell said.

Though the "Veggie Van" was an effective marketing tool for biodiesel, Tickell got sick of giving the same speech to a new audience at every stop. Film represented a way to condense that information into a slick 90-minute package so the background information was out of the way, and the viewer can move straight to action.

"When you're watching a movie, your

Disney's 'Brave' shows mettle with $66.7M at box office

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES A new Disney princess has ascended to the box-office throne with a No. 1 debut for Pixar Animation's "Brave."

The latest from the makers of "WALL-E," "Finding Nemo" and the "Toy Story" movies opened with $66.7 million domestically, according to studio estimates Sunday. "Brave" added $13.5 million in 10 overseas markets for a worldwide start of $80.2 million.

Featuring a feisty Scottish princess, "Brave" was the first of Disney's Pixar animations with a female protagonist. And it left American hero Abraham Lincoln in the dust.

The 20th Century Fox action tale "Abraham Lincoln: Vampire Hunter" opened far back at No. 3 with $16.5 million, behind "Madagascar 3: Europe's Most Wanted."

DreamWorks Animation's animated "Madagascar" sequel had been No. 1 for two weekends and added $20.2 million to raise its domestic total to $157.6 million.

"Brave" is the 13th-straight Pixar release to open at No. 1 since "Toy Story" launched Hollywood's age of computer animation in 1995.

"Their track record is just unbelievable," said Paul Dergarabedian, analyst for box-office tracker Hollywood.com. "The Pixar brand just carries so much weight with the audience, it doesn't matter almost what the story is about if it has the Pixar name."

The weekend's other new wide release, Steve Carell and Keira Knightley's apocalyptic romance "Seeking a Friend for the End of the World," misfired with just $3.8 million, debuting at No. 10.

The Focus Features film, playing in much narrower release than other top-10 movies, stars Carell and Knightley as heartbroken neighbors on a road trip as a killer asteroid hurtles toward Earth.

Woody Allen's Italian romance "To Rome with Love" pulled in huge audiences in limited release, debuting with $379,371 in five theaters. That gave the Sony Pictures Classics brain can't discern whether it's real life or just the movie. It's a way to have a starting point, to have a real conversation," Harrell Tickell said.

With their mission in mind, Santa Monica seemed the natural location to set up shop. City Hall broke major ground with its environmental initiatives like the ban on single use plastic bags and the decision to switch city fleet vehicles to compressed natural gas and other alternative fuels.

Santa Monica is a "radio tower," Tickell said, a place that other municipalities look to for inspiration and ideas.

It also provides unparalleled opportunities for outreach.

Screenings have resulted in major celebrities like Jason Mraz and Laura Dern, who played the female lead in "Jurassic Park," rallying to their causes.

"You make a movie about an oil spill and then a famous actor wants to build a green playground. There's no predictability about it, but it does make a difference," Tickell said, referencing Green Planet Production's newest movie, "The Big Fix."

Through their films and their lifestyle, the couple tries to prove that reducing our impact on the planet can be a painless experience.

They drive an electric car, but most days just walk 10 blocks from their home in Venice to their office in Santa Monica. Their brainstorming room has a large skylight that filters in natural light most of the day, saving them from flipping the switch unless they're working late into the night.

When this reporter's tape recorder ran out of batteries, Tickell came with rechargeables, nicely pointing out that "every major brand makes them now."

It's that "can-do" attitude and provision of simple, effective solutions that make Green Planet Production's films so popular.

Their first film, "Fuel," won the audience's "Best Documentary" award at the 2009 Cannes Film Festival. Their most recent film, "The Big Fix," was released a week ago. It's already the ninth most popular documentary on the iTunes Store.

"The Big Fix," follows in the first film's footsteps by highlighting a different facet of America's damaged relationship with oil: The sway that wealthy oil companies have on in the highest halls of our government.

The movie chronicles the oil spill that devastated the Gulf of Mexico in 2010 after an explosion on the drilling rig "Deep Water Horizon" unleashed millions of gallons of crude on the delicate marine environment.

Unlike most accounts of the disaster, however, the movie doesn't spend much time dwelling on how the explosion happened or which company — BP, which contracted it, or its owner Transocean — holds the blame for what happened.

Instead, it picks up the trail in the coastal communities in Louisiana after government officials declared the cleanup complete, when the lives of those who depended on those waters for their recreation and livelihoods were supposed to go back to normal.

The remaining hour of the finished piece lays out brutal evidence that not only was there still oil marring the formerly pristine waters of the Gulf of Mexico, BP, the company ultimately responsible for the cleanup, was actively covering up its existence with at least some help from the United States government.

The film shows machines combing the sand to cover up thick swatches of oil on the beach, and the shiny film of oil floating on the water where fishermen were pulling

Feeding the hungry

Editor:

Millions of people are locked in a vicious cycle of hunger and poverty. Poverty means parents cannot feed their families enough nutritious food, leaving children hungry and malnourished. Malnutrition leads to stunted development and shorter, less productive lives. Less productive lives prevent an escape from poverty. We have to break this cycle, and we can.

On April 10, ONE launched the Thrive: Food, Farming, Future campaign to address the root causes of hunger and poverty. ONE is calling on African leaders, donor governments and the private sector to focus on 30 of the poorest countries with smart agriculture and nutrition plans that need to be put into practice and funded.

We know these leaders will not act unless the people ask them to. Together, ONE and its 3 million members around the world can help end poverty for 50 million people and stop malnutrition from stunting the development of 15 million children.

The Thrive campaign asks each of us to help break the cycle of hunger and poverty by calling on world leaders to support these country-owned plans. As a member of the global community, I urge you to contribute your voice by signing the petition at www.ONE.org. This is not just another campaign. It is time for a new ambition, a new optimism and a new determination. We do not want people simply to survive. We want them to thrive.

A man on a mission

Editor:

I met a man, a quite interesting man to say the least.

This man lives alone, no wife, no kids, but only three dogs and plenty of fruit trees. His passion unlike many others is for caring for dogs, watching, feeding and providing a playground for birds, having god in his life, taking care of fruits trees, and turning another man's trash into another man's treasure.

His interesting craft is refurbishing Venice's unwanted furniture and creating his own unique outdoor decorations, all having a creative function of their own. This man has no home expect for his pickup truck, and treats any type of garden he takes care of as if it were his own. The fact of the matter is this man willingly accepts the scheduled destruction of the garden that filled him with joy for so long without even a push or a shove to defend his future happiness.

Instead of crying over this falling carton of milk heading toward the floor labeled "inevitable" this man chooses to find happiness elsewhere. It begins with his art, all of his pieces have to go somewhere, having high hopes they would land in the hands of the community. He promoted a sale of his own art work not even for his own benefit. Half of all the proceeds are going toward supporting HoPe Veterinary Center, a full-service care clinic for pets of the homeless. For this man having to bear being ripped of his joy and even being homeless himself this sale isn't about him, it's about the dogs. The dogs that help the blind find their way, the dogs that remind the elderly to take their medication, for all the dogs of all different shapes and sizes that provide companionship and love to those who need it most.

Dodging a bullet

WILDLIFE LOVERS AND ANIMAL advocates were up in arms when, about six weeks ago, a young, male mountain lion that wandered into Santa Monica was killed during attempts to return it to the wild.

City Hall received hundreds of complaints from animal lovers who blamed its death on police and wildlife officials. I wrote in my June 4 My Write ("A real cat-astrophe," page 4), that "the public's anger should be redirected to the reasons why wild animals — bears, pumas, coyotes — are turning up in civilized areas more frequently and meeting fatal consequences: the diminishing of their natural habitat."

I declared that, "the real villains in this story are developers, real estate interests and speculators who buy up untouched property adjacent to national and state parks and erect developments that deprive wildlife of its homeland."

A male cougar's home range can easily be a couple hundred square miles and therein is the crux of the problem. According to wildlife experts, the cougar killed in a Downtown courtyard was probably searching for a new home territory away from older and more dominant male cougars in the Santa Monica Mountains.

"Anger over the loss of wildlife habitat — not limited just to mountain lions — should also be directed at state and federal lawmakers who aren't doing nearly enough to protect wildlife and natural habitat — not at law enforcement for protecting public safety," I wrote. Enter Chula Vista Assemblyman Ben Hueso (D-79th)

Hueso authored AB 2226, a bill that will make it easier to develop the entire California coast. It would undermine restrictions on environmentally unfriendly projects such as the 156-acre compound that U2 guitarist "the Edge" (his real name is David Evans) wants to build on a prime, environmentally sensitive Malibu ridge top that had previously been turned down by the California Coastal Commission (CCC).

Hueso, a former coastal commissioner, told the Los Angeles Times (June 16, 2012) that "he introduced the bill to rein in what he sees as an overzealous bureaucracy that uses arbitrary standards to block development ..." He added that his legislation was not designed to "advance the interests of the U2 guitarist" although that's exactly what it would have done.

The CCC, which overseas coastal development, closely scrutinizes larger multi-structure proposals. Tract developers often try to "cheat the system" by claiming that each of their building sites has different owners.

They even form limited liability corporations for each site to hide the identities of the real owners. Evans had falsely claimed each of the five mansion sites in his proposed compound had different owners.

AB 2226 required that the regulatory agency take claims that the entity holding the deed to a property(s) is the actual property owner at face value. If the state wanted to challenge ownership, it would be held to the same burden of proof that would apply in a court of law. Producing evidence of real ownership would therefore be difficult or impossible because, unlike the courts, the CCC lacks subpoena power, can't conduct depositions, engage in discovery and demand sworn testimony.

Passage of Hueso's bill would make it much easier for developers to scam the system. It would lead to larger and more environmentally destructive developments and further threaten critical wildlife habitat.

It's also special interest legislation like Huseo's that results in the low opinion most Californians have of their lawmakers.

The good news is that Hueso's bill, which was quickly approved in the Assembly by a wide margin last April 26, was killed in a Senate committee, last Tuesday. It became a dead issue after word got out about how damaging it could be for undeveloped coastal areas. The bad news is wealthy developers and speculators will find some other Sacramento patsy to further their agenda by writing legislation to make it easier to develop natural lands.

I called Betsy Butler's (D-53rd) Sacramento office and was told that initially legislators, including Butler, supported it when it was before committee April 17 because there was no opposition from wildlife, environment or conservation groups at the time. Butler is running for the 50th Assembly District seat this November.

When various citizens began looking at AB 2226 and realized that it would prevent the CCC from restricting environmentally damaging projects, they informed legislators. Butler changed her position on the measure to "abstain" (unfortunately, instead of voting "no") when it came before the full Assembly on April 26. By the time it reached the Senate Judiciary Committee last week, opposition to the bill had gone viral and AB 2226 was toast.

The real lesson here is public vigilance. Citizens need to stay informed. If we see legislation we don't like, we must let the politicians know how we feel. Write, e-mail or call your congressman, state senator, state assembly person and/or city council person and give them a piece of your mind.

Never think you can't make a difference. Share your thoughts with friends and co-workers. Send letters to the media. Go online and blog.

Hold that grudge. Get even at election time. Work to defeat politicians who vote for measures you oppose. Remember, scumbags shouldn't hold office.

Rio+20, the unhappy environmental summit

BRADLEY BROOKS
Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO It was hard to find a happy soul at the end of the Rio+20 environmental summit.

Not within the legion of bleary-eyed government negotiators from 188 nations who met in a failed attempt to find a breakthrough at the United Nations conference on sustainable development.

Not among the thousands of activists who decried the three-day summit that ended late Friday as dead on arrival. Not even in the top U.N. official who organized the international organization's largest-ever event.

"This is an outcome that makes nobody happy. My job was to make everyone equally unhappy," said Sha Zukang, Secretary-General of the conference, nicely summing up the mood.

In the end, this conference was a conference to decide to have more conferences.

That result was hailed as a success by the 100 heads of state who attended. Given how environmental summits have failed in recent years as global economic turmoil squashes political will to take on climate and conservation issues, the mere fact of agreeing to talk again in the future constitutes victory.

Faced with the real prospect of complete failure, negotiators who struggled for months to hammer out a more ambitious final document ended up opting for the lowest common denominator. Just hours before the meeting opened Wednesday, they agreed on a proposal that makes virtually no progress beyond what was signed at the original 1992 Earth Summit, removing the kind of contentious proposals activists contend are required to avoid an environmental meltdown.

"We've sunk so low in our expectations that reaffirming what we did 20 years ago is now considered a success," said Martin Khor, executive director of the Geneva-based South Centre and a member of the U.N. Committee on Development Policy.

Indeed, the word "reaffirm" is used 59 times in the 49-page document titled "The Future We Want." They reaffirm the need to achieve sustainable development (but not mandating how); reaffirm commitment to strengthening international cooperation (just not right now); and reaffirm the need to achieve economic stability (with no new funding for the poorest nations).

Some of the biggest issues activists wanted to see in the document that didn't make it in included a call to end subsidies for fossil fuels, language underscoring the reproductive rights of women, and some words on how nations might mutually agree to protect the high seas, areas that fall outside any national jurisdictions.

"We saw anything of value in the early text getting removed one by one. What is left is the clear sense that the future we want is not one our leaders can actually deliver," said Greenpeace executive director Kumi Naidoo. "We now need to turn the anger people around the world are feeling into creative, thoughtful and meaningful action."

On the "glass half full" side of things, while the effort to make progress on multilateral talks among the collective U.N. body were a disappointment, the big gathering produced nearly 700 promises and advances made by individual countries, companies and other organizations, in total worth about $500 billion if actually followed through

For instance, the U.S. agreed to partner with more than 400 companies, including Wal-Mart, Coca- Cola and Unilever, to support their efforts to eliminate deforestation from their supply chains by 2020.

Andrew Deutz, director of international government relations at the Nature Conservancy, pointed out that Indonesia, Australia and Colombia all made strong commitments to protecting oceans in their national waters, in part to ensure future food security.

Despite the shifting global economic order, with the rise of nations like Brazil and China and a host of other "middle-income" countries, critics said negotiators still argued along the lines of old "north-south" arguments that pit richer developed nations against developing nations.

The Group of 77 nations that represents the poorest on the globe maintained their demand that richer nations in Europe and the U.S. recognize their "historic debt" eating up a much greater amount of the globe's resources since the industrial revolution began 250 years ago. They say rich nations should finance environmental improvements in the poorer nations, and also freely transfer technology that would help the developing nations use more renewable energy and build cleaner industrial sectors.

"Everything has been kicked down the lane a few years, we'll have to wait to formalize sustainable development goals and make the transition to a green economy," said Muhammed Chowdhury, a lead negotiator of Group of 77. "It's not a good scenario."

Defending the air

Dear EarthTalk:
Who are the "Clean Air Ambassadors" and what are they trying to accomplish?

Brenda Coughlin
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Clean Air Ambassadors are everyday folks from across the U.S. who have committed to speaking up for everyone's right to breathe clean, healthy air. The effort is part of the "50 States United for Healthy Air" campaign, a joint endeavor of Earthjustice, the American Nurses Association, the Hip Hop Caucus, the National Council of Churches and Physicians for Social Responsibility. In the spring of 2011 these Ambassadors-people from all 50 states and every walk of life-convened in Washington, D.C. to ask members of Congress, leaders at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and high-ranking officials in the Obama administration for stronger protections against air pollution.

Earthjustice, which specializes in litigating on behalf of environmental causes, initiated the effort as part of its larger "Right to Breathe" campaign. "Every year, many people young and old get sick because of air pollution," reports Earthjustice. "Clean air should be a fundamental right."

According to the American Lung Association (ALA), the most widespread kinds of air pollution are ozone (smog) and particle pollution (soot). "When inhaled, ozone irritates the lungs, resulting in something like a bad sunburn within the lungs," reports the group. "Breathing in particle pollution can increase the risk of early death, heart attacks, strokes and emergency room visits for people with asthma, cardiovascular disease and diabetes." In its 2012 "State of the Air" report, ALA reports that 127 million Americans-some 40 percent of our population-live in counties where either ground-level ozone or particle pollution is frequently at dangerous levels, despite significant progress in cleaning up the nation's air since 1970.

While there are many sources of air pollution, dirty power plants are among the biggest culprits. The ALA reports that over 400 coal-fired power plants across the country "are among the largest contributors to particulate pollution, ozone, mercury, and global warming." In 2011, the EPA issued the final rules that will cut the emissions that create ozone and particle pollution and, for the first time, set national limits on the toxic pollutants they can emit. While Earthjustice and other groups have challenged the EPA for not going far enough, the ALA is defending the plan as significant enough to warrant implementation.

Of course, everyone can play a part in cleaning up air pollution. The ALA recommends driving less, using less electricity, refraining from burning wood or trash, and making sure local school systems require cleaner school buses. Even better, get involved: "Participate in your community's review of its air pollution plans and support state and local efforts to clean up air pollution." Finding a local air pollution control agency is now as easy as steering a web browser to the National Association of Clean Air Agencies' 4cleanair.org website.

While there are no plans for another visit to Washington, D.C. by Clean Air Ambassadors in the near future, concerned citizens can do their part and join thousands of others in signing on to Earthjustice's "Right to Breathe Declaration" that calls on the federal government to require major air polluters to utilize existing technologies to significantly reduce the amount of air pollution coming out of their smokestacks.

Ocean level rise faster on East Coast than rest of globe

SETH BORENSTEIN
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON From Cape Hatteras, N.C., to just north of Boston, sea levels are rising much faster than they are around the globe, putting one of the world's most costly coasts in danger of flooding, government researchers report.

U.S. Geological Survey scientists call the 600-mile swath a "hot spot" for climbing sea levels caused by global warming. Along the region, the Atlantic Ocean is rising at an annual rate three times to four times faster than the global average since 1990, according to the study published Sunday in the journal Nature Climate Change.

It's not just a faster rate, but at a faster pace, like a car on a highway "jamming on the accelerator," said the study's lead author, Asbury Sallenger Jr., an oceanographer at the agency. He looked at sea levels starting in 1950, and noticed a change beginning in 1990.

Since then, sea levels have gone up globally about 2 inches. But in Norfolk, Va., where officials are scrambling to fight more frequent flooding, sea level has jumped a total of 4.8 inches, the research showed. For Philadelphia, levels went up 3.7 inches, and in New York City, it was 2.8 inches.

Climate change pushes up sea levels by melting ice sheets in Greenland and west Antarctica, and because warmer water expands.

Computer models long have projected higher levels along parts of the East Coast because of changes in ocean currents from global warming, but this is the first study to show that's already happened.

By 2100, scientists and computer models estimate that sea levels globally could rise as much as 3.3 feet. The accelerated rate along the East Coast could add about 8 inches to 11 inches more, Sallenger said.

"Where that kind of thing becomes important is during a storm," Sallenger said. That's when it can damage buildings and erode coastlines.

On the West Coast, a National Research Council report released Friday projects an average 3-foot rise in sea level in California by the year 2100, and 2 feet in Oregon and Washington. The land mass north of the San Andreas Fault is expected to rise, offsetting the rising sea level in those two states.

The USGS study suggests the Northeast would get hit harder because of ocean currents. When the Gulf Stream and its northern extension slow down, the slope of the seas changes to balance against the slowing current. That slope then pushes up sea levels in the Northeast. It is like a see-saw effect, Sallenger theorizes.

Scientists believe that with global warming, the Gulf Stream and other ocean currents are slowing and will slow further, Sallenger said.

Jeff Williams, a retired USGS expert who wasn't part of the study, and Stefan Rahmstorf, a professor of ocean physics at the Potsdam Institute in Germany, said the study does a good job of making the case for sea level rise acceleration.

Margaret Davidson, director of the Coastal Services Center for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Charleston, S.C., said the implications of the new research are "huge when you think about it. Somewhere between Maryland and Massachusetts, you've got some bodaciously expensive property at risk."

Sea level projections matter in coastal states because flood maps based on those predictions can result in restrictions on property development and affect flood insurance rates.

Those estimates became an issue in North Carolina recently when the Legislature proposed using historic figures to calculate future sea levels, rejecting higher rates from a state panel of experts. The USGS study suggests an even higher level than the panel's estimate for 2100.

The North Carolina proposal used data from University of Florida professor Robert Dean, who had found no regional differences in sea level rise. Dean said he can't argue with the results from Sallenger's study showing accelerating sea level rise in the region, but he said it's more likely to be from natural cycles. Sallenger said there is no evidence to support that claim.

Judge upholds Facebook ban for sex offenders

CHARLES WILSON
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS A national civil rights group said Sunday it would appeal a federal judge's decision to uphold an Indiana law that bans registered sex offenders from accessing Facebook and other social networking sites used by children.

On Friday, Judge Tanya Walton Pratt said in an 18-page order that the state has a strong interest in protecting children and that the rest of the Internet remains open to those who have been convicted.

"Social networking, chat rooms, and instant messaging programs have effectively created a 'virtual playground' for sexual predators to lurk," Pratt wrote in the ruling, citing a 2006 report by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children that found that one in seven youths had received online sexual solicitations and one in three had been exposed to unwanted sexual material online.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana filed the class-action suit on behalf of a man who served three years for child exploitation, along with other sex offenders who are restricted by the ban even though they are no longer on probation. Federal judges have barred similar laws in Nebraska and Louisiana.

"We will be appealing," ACLU legal director Ken Falk said in an email Sunday to The Associated Press. Appeals from federal courts in Indiana go to the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago.

Courts have long allowed states to place restrictions on convicted sex offenders who have completed their sentences, controlling where many live and work and requiring them to register with police. But the ACLU claimed that that Indiana's social networking ban was far broader, restricting a wide swath of constitutionally protected activities.

The ACLU contended that even though the 2008 law is only intended to protect children from online sexual predators, social media are virtually indispensable and the ban prevents sex offenders from using the websites for political, business and religious activities.

But Pratt found that the ban is limited only to social networking sites that allow access by children, and that such sites aren't the only forms of communication on the Internet.

"The Court readily concedes that social networking is a prominent feature of modern-day society; however, communication does not begin with a "Facebook wall post" and end with a "140-character Tweet," she wrote.

Though the law doesn't list which websites are banned, court filings have indicated the law covers Facebook, MySpace, Twitter, Google Plus, chat rooms and instant messaging services. Earlier filings indicated LinkedIn was also covered by the ban, but Pratt's ruling said it wasn't because children under 18 can't sign up for it.

in the catch of the day even as officials pull up in boats to chase off the documentary team.

It also demonstrates the impact that the oil, and methods used to contain the spill, had on locals' health.

The Environmental Protection Agency OK'd the use of Corexit, a chemical dispersant, to clean up the mess left by the spill. Corexit, however, is toxic to humans and wildlife.

People living near the water developed lesions and respiratory problems, ailments the film suggests were caused by the heavy use of the chemical in the Gulf.

Harrell Tickell herself became ill after prolonged exposure in the course of the 18 months she and her husband spent in Louisiana collecting footage after all of the other news vans had left.

In the end, the film doesn't ask if people and the environment are suffering as a result of the spill, but why the government didn't do more to rein in the company ultimately responsible for the mess before the accident, and why it has ignored clear signs that the oil is still causing problems in the Gulf of Mexico.

The short answer the filmmakers put forward is a simple one — the vast amount of money that large corporations are capable of pumping into the pockets of politicians, particularly in campaign season.

Tickell and Harrell Tickell's movies dig down into the broad, more abstract causes of problems like the oil spill, one of the reasons Santa Monica High School marine biology teacher Benjamin Kay shows his students films like "The Big Fix."

"I think it's pointing out one of the central issues of our society," Kay said. "Big corporations do have money, power and influence, and that is probably one of the key things that the students and I discussed after seeing the film."

Kay shows all three Green Planet Production films to his students, and got a screening of "The Big Fix" with the filmmakers themselves.

The power of Green Planet Production's work is twofold. With one hand, it points to the problems in the world, the vast injustices wreaked on the planet by oil companies and other powerful industries that destroy in search of a buck.

With the other, it offers workable solutions that allow the average citizen to fight back.

After showing "Fuel" to his class, one student went home and started making biodiesel in her garage, Kay said.

"It's very empowering," Kay said. "If we could just do 'this,' think of all the problems we could solve."

To that, Tickell and Harrell Tickell can say, "mission accomplished."

POLL

who today say they are uncommitted will settle on a candidate by Election Day, Nov. 6.

Until then, Obama and Romney will spend huge amounts of time and money trying to win their votes, especially in the most competitive states that tend to swing between Republicans and Democrats each presidential election. Obama and Romney face the same hurdle, winning over wavering voters without alienating core supporters they need to canvass neighborhoods and staff telephone banks this fall to help make sure their backers actually vote.

"It presents an interesting challenge to the campaigns," said Steve McMahon, a founding partner in Purple Strategies, a bipartisan crisis management firm. "Moving to the middle means winning these voters, but it also means creating problems with your base."

Obama has sought to straddle both the left and the middle by announcing policies that expand access to contraception and allow immigrants brought illegally to the United States as children to be exempted from deportation and granted work permits if they applied.

Both issues are popular with his core supporters and centrist voters. The president also is promoting a list of what he says are bipartisan measures that would help homeowners, veterans, teachers and police officers, and he accuses Republicans of causing gridlock by refusing to act on them. It's a pitch intended for independent-minded voters frustrated by inaction in Washington.

Romney has broadened his tea party-infused message from the GOP primary and softened his tone as he looks to attract voters from across the political spectrum.

He abandoned the harsh immigration rhetoric on Thursday when he pledged to address illegal immigration "in a civil but resolute manner" while outlining plans to overhaul the green card system for immigrants with families and end immigration caps for their spouses and minor children. In doing so, he risked inflaming conservatives who make up the base of the Republican Party.

Overall, the poll found that among registered voters, 47 percent say they will vote for the president and 44 percent for Romney, a difference that is not statistically significant.

Those totals include soft support, though, meaning people who lean toward a candidate as well as those who said they could change their minds before November. The poll showed that these persuadable voters are equally apt to lean toward Obama, Romney, or neither, with about one-third of them in each camp.

The survey also showed that these voters are more likely than others to say they distrust both Romney and Obama on the major issues. They are far more likely to think the outcome of the election won't make a big difference on the economy, unemployment, the federal budget deficit or health care.

Party politics and wedge issues have dubious weight with this group. The poll found more independents fall into this category than partisans. The partisans who are persuadable are more likely to be in the ideological middle than either liberal Democrats or conservative Republicans. Seventeen percent of persuadables say they consider themselves supporters of the tea party.

The poll also found that demographically, they are more likely to be members of Generation X (between the ages of 30 and 49) than other registered voters. Many, 71 percent, have not graduated college. They are a bit more likely to have lower incomes than all registered voters. Fifty-two percent of persuadables have incomes below $50,000, compared with 44 percent of all voters.

On other characteristics — gender, religious preference and race — they're split similarly to other registered voters.

The Associated Press-GfK Poll was conducted June 14-18, 2012 by GfK Roper Public Affairs and Corporate Communications. It involved landline and cellphone interviews with 1,007 adults nationwide, including 878 registered voters and 228 persuadable voters. Results for the full sample have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 4.0 percentage points. For registered voters it is 4.2 points and for persuadable voters it's plus or minus 8.3 points.

BOX OFFICE

release a whopping average of $75,874 a theater, compared to $16,028 in 4,164 cinemas for "Brave."

"Brave" features a voice cast led by Kelly Macdonald and Emma Thompson in a mother-daughter story of a young Scottish princess defying tradition that requires her to marry against her will.

The film proved that audiences will turn up for a female hero, not just the male protagonists of past Pixar flicks, such as Woody and Buzz of "Toy Story," the robot of "WALL-E" or the rat and his chef buddy of "Ratatouille."

"Brave" matched the $66.1 million debut of Pixar's "Cars 2," with male automotive lead Lightning McQueen, over the same weekend a year ago.

"It is a phenomenal thing, these guys and their mastery of big storytelling and character development, delivering something that plays well to adults as well as kids, to girls as well as boys," Dave Hollis, Disney's head of distribution, said of Pixar.

The audience for "Brave" did lean toward females, who accounted for 57 percent of viewers. Two-thirds of the film's business came from families, who also continued to flock to "Madagascar 3," making a rare weekend when two PG-rated movies led the box office.

The R-rated "Abraham Lincoln: Vampire Hunter" was a clever idea — the 16th U.S. president waging his own civil war against the blood-suckers of the republic. But critics were unimpressed, and action fans had only a passing interest in the movie, which featured relative unknown Benjamin Walker as Lincoln.

Still, it was made for $69 million, a modest budget for a summer action movie, and 20th Century Fox had hopes it would hold up well over the next week or so before "The Amazing Spider-Man" and "The Dark Knight Rises" swoop in to take over cinemas in July.

"It's actually a good start for this movie," said Chris Aronson, the studio's head of distribution. "This is an interesting and untested genre that I think audiences are going to continue to seek out. Mash-ups have been done, but the historical mash-up has not been done."

Estimated ticket sales were for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Where available, latest international numbers are also included. Final domestic figures will be released Monday.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

County pulls $30 million in 49ers stadium funding

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA CLARA, Calif. A California county has surprised both the San Francisco 49ers and city of Santa Clara leaders by pulling $30 million in tax funds from the new 49ers stadium.

Santa Clara County officials told the Mercury News Saturday that they would rather spend the money on teachers.

The team and the city said voters had specifically earmarked redevelopment money to help build the $1.2 billion stadium and that the county has no right to keep it.

The 49ers and Santa Clara officials will craft an official response this week. Lawsuits are likely, according the newspaper.

The revocation occurred Friday by a new board that oversees property tax from redevelopment zones.

"Let's be real: That stadium is going to get built whether or not you get this $30 million," county tax collector George Putris, the oversight board member who proposed the motion, told a 49ers attorney at the meeting. He said the need was greater at other public agencies, such as school districts. The motion passed 4-3.

The move was so unexpected that Santa Clara leaders claim it was done in violation of public notice laws.

Santa Clara voters approved a 2010 measure that allocated $40 million in redevelopment funds for the stadium, which is set to open in 2014.

The state later did away with redevelopment agencies, and Santa Clara's redevelopment fund had only paid $10 million toward the stadium. So the 49ers loaned Santa Clara leaders the remaining $30 million and started construction, thinking they'd be paid back from future property tax revenues.

A 49ers spokesman declined to comment when asked whether the decision could affect stadium construction, which began in April. Officials have said the team would simply absorb the cost if it loses the funds, which amount to less than three percent of the stadium's total price tag.

Return calls tonight, Cancer

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ A nice even pace draws a strong response. You finally might see a relationship become more nurturing or amiable. You also might turn the corner with a difficult situation. Tonight: Say "yes."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You know what you need to do and what reaction to expect. You are full of fun and evenness. You finally discover a way to maximize your energy and meet all of your daily needs. Remain focused. Tonight: Give some thought to your home or domestic life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Your ability to understand what motivates you on the deepest level makes for even greater clarity. How you impulsively handle a personal matter could surprise even you. Investigate what you need to do in order to evoke a certain response. Try more optimism. Tonight: Catch up on a pal's news.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ You might want to reconsider a personal matter more carefully. Do you feel as if you need something just for yourself? If so, who is responsible for making that happen? Tonight: Make and return calls.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Be sensitive to your needs as well as others'. Curb a tendency to extend yourself too far or overwhelm people. You have many different, versatile talents. You know what you're doing and exactly why. Tonight: All smiles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ You are a sign that overthinks. You also have a tendency to make a situation bigger or harder than it is. You need to mellow out and think a little less. This inner chatter could go nowhere quickly. Be optimistic about an offer that you did not expect. Tonight: Think positively.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Listen more openly to news that surrounds a personal project or situation. A discussion in a meeting could be unusually enlightening. Recognize the plusses and negatives of a situation. Hold less in and be more open. Tonight: Get some extra Z's.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Now your words have punch. You will see a different reaction than you originally expected, but you'll end up getting exactly what you desire. Be more positive and forthright than in a recent period. Tonight: Zero in on what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Be as clear as possible. You know what to do, and others know it. Take the lead if you see the path. You could be overwhelmed by what is happening. Listen to an offer with a great deal of cynicism. Tonight: A must appearance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You might want to consider alternatives that would please nearly everyone. Be even and steady. Know what you want from this situation. Be more cheerful and upbeat than in the past. Tonight: Look up to the stars.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ You will want to do more for a key person in your life. You'll think about what is needed and make strong choices. A discussion with this person could reveal many more opportunities than what you conceived. Tonight: Have an open discussion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ You might want to make a difference, but you need others to work with you in order to make this happen. Allow greater give-and-take between you and others. There is new camaraderie developing that could be very exciting. Tonight: Be nice -- go along for the ride.

Happy birthday

This year you make a major change involving your personal and/or domestic life. You have been weighing the pros and cons of a matter that has been making you sad. Finally, discussions can happen. If you are single, you might be up for a change of pace. This year could find you meeting someone significant to your life history. If you are attached, an open exchange between you and your partner will lead to solutions. Recognize the role that finances play in your interactions. Become more organized and disciplined, and you only can gain. Take good care of yourself. VIRGO can be critical, but he or she evokes a response from you.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Desmond Hatchett, 33, was summoned to court in Knoxville, Tenn., in May so that a judge could chastise him for again failing to make child-support payments. Official records show that Hatchett has at least 30 children (ages 14 down to "toddler") by at least 11 women. He said at a 2009 court appearance that he was "through" siring children and apparently has taken proper precautions since then. (In Milwaukee, Wis., in April, Sean Patrick was sentenced to 30 years in prison for owing more than $146,000 for 12 children by 10 mothers, and the city's Journal Sentinel newspaper reported that, before being locked up, two convicted pimps, Derrick Avery and Todd Carter, had fathered, respectively, 15 kids by seven women and 16 children with "several" mothers.)

■ The Associated Press reported in May that Kentucky prison officials were working behind the scenes to resolve the thorny question of whether inmate Robert Foley deserves a hip replacement. Normally, a prisoner in such extreme pain would qualify. However, Foley, 55, is on death row for killing six people in 1989 and 1991, and since he has exhausted his appeals, he is still alive only because a court has halted all executions while the state reconsiders its lethal-injection procedure. Furthermore, all local hospitals queried by the prison to perform the procedure have declined to take Foley because the prison considers him dangerous.
