Police and fire agencies conduct active shooter training

Matthew Hall

TRAINING: On Friday, June 24, the Santa Monica Fire and Police Departments conducted an active threat training at John Adams Middle School. The objective was to train local first responders and test their response to high-risk, complex events involving multiple agencies and potentially multiple victims. According to SMPD, training on real properties such as local schools is critical for responders as it provides hands-on experience. The intensive training allows responders to learn the limits of their equipment and tactics in an educational and non-emergency environment before lives are on the line.

Officials decry 'sad day in America' as Roe v Wade overturned

EMILY SAWICKI

The Friday Supreme Court decision to strike down 50 years of abortion rights afforded in 1973's Roe v Wade has touched off a tidal wave of opposition across the country including seemingly unanimous outrage — and calls to action — among local elected leaders, health agencies and organizations.

With a religious conservative supermajority of justices currently sitting on the nation's highest court, many local agencies were already preparing for the overturning of federal abortion rights even before a draft decision was leaked earlier this session, precipitating county- and state-wide programs to strengthen and expand access to safe, legal abortions in California.

"The governors of California, Oregon and Washington today issued a Multi-State Commitment to defend access to reproductive health care, including abortion and contraceptives, and committed to protecting patients and doctors against efforts by other states to export their abortion bans to our states," a press release from the Office of Governor Gavin Newsom stated Friday morning. "This Multi-State Commitment affirms

Data sharing app breaks cycles of repeat homeless calls and arrests

In a single day a chronically homeless individual may elicit seven or more responses from various City departments, but a one-of-a-kind data sharing application has allowed the City to slice those numbers dramatically and get people the help they need.

For example, a chronically homeless individual could trigger a fire department 'man down' call for being on the ground and unresponsive, a police call for engaging in an altercation, a response from a homeless outreach

Biden vows abortion fight, assails 'extreme' court ruling

CHRIS MEGERIAN, ZEKE MILLER AND FATIMA HUSSEIN
Associated Press

President Joe Biden said Friday he would try to preserve access to abortion after the Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade, and he called on Americans to elect more Democrats who would safeguard rights upended by the court's decision. "This is not over," he declared.

"Let's be very clear, the health and life of women across this nation are now at risk," he said from the White House on what he called "a sad day for the court and the country."

Biden added that "the court has done what it's never done before — expressly taking away a constitutional right that is so fundamental to so many Americans."

Republicans and conservative leaders celebrated the culmination of a decades-long campaign to undo the nationwide legalization of abortion that began with Roe v. Wade in 1973.

"Millions of Americans have spent half a century praying, marching, and working toward today's historic victories for the rule of law and for innocent life," said Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., an architect of efforts to tilt the Supreme Court to the right.

Although Biden has previously expressed conflicted feelings about abortion, he delivered a forceful defense on Friday. Noting that Republican-controlled states now had a clear path to ban abortion even in cases of incest or rape, he said "it just stuns me."

> "Millions of Americans have spent half a century praying, marching, and working toward today's historic victories for the rule of law and for innocent life - Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell

And he warned that other legal precedents ensuring same sex marriage and access to birth control could also be at risk.

"This is an extreme and dangerous path this court is taking us on," he said.

The overturning of Roe v. Wade was not unexpected — a draft of the decision leaked nearly two months ago — but it still reverberated throughout Washington in what has suddenly become a new era in the country's battle over abortion.

The White House and the Justice Department said they would look for ways to blunt the impact of the ruling, and Biden said his administration would try to ensure that abortion medication is available as widely as possible and women aren't prevented from traveling across state lines to end pregnancies.

However, no executive actions were announced on Friday, and Biden conceded that his options were limited.

Protesters convened on the Supreme Court, where a crowd of abortion-rights supporters quickly swelled to the hundreds. One chanted into a bullhorn, "legal abortion on demand" and "this decision must not stand." Some shouted "the Supreme Court is illegitimate."

"It's a painful day for those of us who support women's rights," said Laura Free, an Ithaca, New York, resident and women's rights historian who came to Washington to do research. When she learned of the decision, she said, "I had to come here."

A competing faction demonstrated in favor of the ruling, holding signs saying "the future is anti-abortion" and "dismember Roe."

Garrett Bess, with Heritage Action for America, a lobbying arm of the conservative Heritage Foundation, said his organization would be working in states to continue efforts to limit abortion.

"This has been a long time coming," he said.

Biden and other Democrats hope to use outrage over the court decision to rally voters in November's midterm elections. Although nationwide legislation ensuring access to abortion appears out of reach, more Democratic victories at the state level could limit Republican efforts to ban the practice.

"Congress must act, and with your vote, you can act," Biden said. "You can have the final word."

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said the court's ruling "is outrageous and heart-wrenching" and fulfills the Republican Party's "dark and extreme goal of ripping away women's right to make their own reproductive health decisions."

Many Republican-controlled states are poised to severely restrict abortion, or even ban it outright.

In a statement, Attorney General Merrick Garland said the Justice Department "will work tirelessly to protect and advance reproductive freedom." He said that in addition to protecting providers and those seeking abortions in states where it remains legal, "we stand ready to work with other arms of the federal government that seek to use their lawful authorities to protect and preserve access to reproductive care."

He also noted that the Food and Drug Administration has approved the use of mifepristone, a drug used to end pregnancies.

"States may not ban mifepristone based on disagreement with the FDA's expert judgment about its safety and efficacy," Garland said.

Lawrence Gostin, who runs the O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health at Georgetown Law, said before Friday's ruling that he expected the Biden administration to be "to be nibbling around the edges, and is not going to do anything really profound."

Gostin said he's discussed a variety of options with administration officials but believes they are "gun shy" given the potential for legal challenges that could lead to more roadblocks from a Supreme Court dominated by conservatives.

Some of Gostin's suggestions included having Medicaid cover the cost of traveling across state lines to end pregnancies, as well as expanding access to abortion medication that can be delivered by mail.

The Rev. John Dorhauer, the general minister and president of the United Church of Christ, drove from Cleveland to Washington to attend one meeting earlier this month. Another virtual meeting was held this week, featuring Vice President Kamala Harris.

"It was rather impressive to see the commitment the White House and the vice president's office has had to gather advocates from around the country," Dorhauer said.

However, there are also concerns that the administration was not ready.

Dr. Colleen McNicholas, chief medical officer of Planned Parenthood of the St. Louis Region and Southwest Missouri, attended a recent virtual meeting with abortion providers and said she expects "a true health crisis."

"I think that we should have been preparing for far longer than we have been," McNicholas said. "Do I think that they recognize that this a problem? Yes. Do I think that they're prepared in this moment? No."

Associated Press writers Will Weissert, Mike Balsamo, Matthew Daly, Lisa Mascaro and Mary Clare Jalonick contributed to this report.

Editor:

When Donald Trump was in office, he and Mitch McConnell made three lifetime appointments to the Supreme Court. McConnell went so far as to defy Ruth Bader Ginsburg's dying wish—that the next president appoint her replacement—by packing the Court with Amy Coney Barrett just eight days before the 2020 election.

The result? Today's Supreme Court has been taken over by a hyperpartisan supermajority that just dismantled abortion care in America.

But there's something we can do. The Judiciary Act of 2021 would add four seats to the Supreme Court bench—restoring balance to the court. It's the solution we need to move away from the extremely partisan rulings that now threaten our fundamental freedoms. Recent polling showed that the majority of voters support expanding the court.

Congress has changed the size of the Supreme Court seven times already in our nation's history. It's time to do it again. I'm urging our representatives to back this important bill now so we know they want to protect the rights of the American people. The stakes are too high to stay quiet on this important issue.

Editor:

Right now, the right to abortion care is at risk because of a deliberate, decades-long takeover of the Supreme Court by powerful right-wing extremists. We're seeing the culmination of this takeover as the Court just overturned Roe v. Wade, the landmark ruling that made abortion access a constitutional right. This opens the door for states to outlaw abortion and take us back to a time when women were forced to go through with an unwanted pregnancy, potentially endangering their health and hurting their ability to provide for their families.

But it's possible to undo this damage. The Judiciary Act would add four seats, restoring balance to the Supreme Court. It's the solution that recent polling showed is supported by the majority of Americans, and it's what we need to move away from partisan rulings that dismantle our rights and freedoms. With Roe dead, some fear rollback of LGBTQ and other rights

JOHN HANNA
Associated Press

The U.S. Supreme Court's decision allowing states to ban abortion immediately stirred alarm Friday among LGBTQ advocates, who feared that the ruling could someday allow a rollback of legal protections for gay relationships, including the right for same-sex couples to marry.

In the court's majority opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, Justice Samuel Alito said the decision applied only to abortion. But critics of the court's conservative majority discounted that statement.

And in a separate concurring opinion, Justice Clarence Thomas said the court should review other precedents, including its 2015 decision legalizing same-sex marriage, a 2003 decision striking down laws criminalizing gay sex and a 1965 decision declaring that married couples have a right to use contraception.

"Let's just be clear. Today is about this horrifying invasion of privacy that this court is now allowing, and when we lose one right that we have relied on and enjoyed, other rights are at risk," said Jim Obergefell, the plaintiff in the landmark ruling legalizing same-sex marriage, who is now running as a Democrat for the Ohio House.

Abortion opponents celebrated the potential for states to ban abortion after nearly 50 years of being prevented from doing so. Some also argued that the case did not have implications beyond that, noting Alito's specific statement.

"And to ensure that our decision is not misunderstood or mischaracterized, we emphasize that our decision concerns the constitutional right to abortion and no other right," Alito wrote. "Nothing in this opinion should be understood to cast doubt on precedents that do not concern abortion."

Still, said Paul Dupont, a spokesman for the conservative anti-abortion American Principles Project, conservatives are optimistic about the potential for future victories on cultural issues, though getting more states to ban abortion is "a huge enough battle."

"If there is a thought that this could apply elsewhere, you know, they're not going to say it here, and we're just going to have to see," Dupont said.

Many abortion opponents insist that overturning Roe will not affect access to birth control or LGBTQ rights. Other factors could protect those rulings too: The Obergefell decision that legalized same-sex marriage was based on equal protection, and hundreds of thousands of couples have relied on it to wed, a precedent that many courts would be loath to disturb.

Still, a sharp increase in anti-LGBTQ rhetoric in the U.S. and opposition to some forms of birth control from some quarters on the right have advocates concerned that those rights are vulnerable.

The court's three most liberal members argued that the majority decision "breaches a core rule-of-law principle, designed to promote constancy in the law" and "places in jeopardy" other rights.

At the White House, President Joe Biden pledged to do everything in his power to defend a woman's right to have an abortion in states where it will be banned. He warned that the ruling could undermine rights to contraception and gay marriage: "This is an extreme and dangerous path."

Then there is Thomas' concurring opinion, which Sarah Warbelow, legal director for the pro-LGBTQ-rights Human Rights Campaign, called an invitation for "stirring up fringe organizations, fringe politicians who want to harm the LGBTQ community."

> "Let's just be clear. Today is about this horrifying invasion of privacy that this court is now allowing, and when we lose one right that we have relied on and enjoyed, other rights are at risk - Jim Obergefell

"There are clearly members of the court who have an outdated notion of what America looks like today and have a fantasy of returning to their painted idealism of a 1940s, 1950s America, certainly not what it really was in the 1940s and '50s," she said. "And that is terrifying."

Connecticut Attorney General William Tong, a Democrat, called the decision "dangerous" and warned that it carves the nation into two parts. He predicted there will be "a tsunami of radical litigation and legislation aimed at further eroding rights we have taken for granted."

"Make no mistake — this is just the beginning of a systematic right-wing effort to rewrite decades of bedrock legal precedent," he said.

Associated Press writers Jessica Gresko in Washington, Susan Haigh in Hartford, Connecticut, Julie Smyth in Columbus, Ohio, in Lindsay Whitehurst, in Salt Lake City, contributed to this report.

the governors' commitment in response to the U.S. Supreme Court's unprecedented decision to strip away a constitutional right that has been in place for half a century, leaving abortion regulation to the states. The sweeping decision means that for patients in more than half the country, home to 33.6 million women, abortion care is illegal or inaccessible."

Part of Newsom's effort includes a $125 million Reproductive Health Package designed "to expand access for women and help prepare for the influx of women seeking reproductive health care from other states," according to the Governor's press office, as well as support for proposed legislation to enshrine the right to abortion into California's Constitution.

At the County level, efforts began in January to make Los Angeles a "haven county" for abortion access. At the time, all five LA County Supervisors voiced unanimous support to embark on a program to expand abortion access to out-of-state residents, while identifying "opportunities to reduce and address health disparities by expanding reproductive and sexual health services, supplies and education, for marginalized communities and those who might be harder to reach."

> The Supreme Court is criminalizing women — Senator Bob Hertzberg

On Friday afternoon, the LA County Department of Public Health released a statement affirming the continued legal access to abortion across California, calling the June 24 Supreme Court decision "shocking in its disregard for the health, rights, and dignity of half of the U.S. population."

The statement also provided an update on what is now called the Safe Haven Abortion Project: "It seeks to improve access to abortion and to the full spectrum of reproductive health services for Los Angeles residents and for people who travel here from states where abortion is no longer an option. Access to the full spectrum of sexual and reproductive health care, including abortion, is fundamental to the health of individuals, families, and communities."

LA County District Attorney George Gascón's office released a statement following the Friday decision, indicating he was among 83 elected prosecutors who signed a document arguing "that using limited criminal justice resources to prosecute personal healthcare decisions runs counter to their obligation to pursue justice and promote public safety."

Gascón called the Supreme Court decision "a sad day in America," echoing the sentiments of many fellow elected officials.

On a local level, Councilmember Phil Brock took to Twitter to declare: "Every woman must have the right to make ALL decisions about themselves and their body. It is always their choice, not a man's. The Supreme Court is wrong!"

Also on Twitter, both candidates for Third District Supervisor weighed in against the decision.

"The Supreme Court is criminalizing women," Senator Bob Hertzberg was quoted as saying. "The majority's theological bent wants to keep women barefoot and pregnant and is a throwback to when women were property and knew their place. That past is our future if Americans don't wake up and vote."

West Hollywood Mayor Lindsey Horvath Tweeted: "Today is a painful day in American history. This Supreme Court has decided millions of people should be without reproductive healthcare access, putting their lives at risk and deepening political divisions in this country more than ever before. There is no easy way to heal the wounds of this legal assault on the women of our country. Reproductive freedom – safe, affordable, accessible, culturally-competent, gender-affirming quality healthcare including abortion - must be the law of the land."

Rick Chavez Zbur, who just won the race to represent Santa Monica in Assembly District 51, issued a statement saying "this week, our greatest fears have come true," adding that his "heart breaks for all the women and child-bearing people throughout our country who are poised to become second-class citizens."

U.S. Representative Ted Lieu, representing Santa Monica in Washington, issued a press release stating he was "distraught" over Friday's news.

"It is, unfortunately, exactly as we feared," Lieu said. "The Republicans' decades-long war waged in support of forced birth has culminated in this appalling decision. Roe v. Wade was settled law according to the confirmation testimonies of the Justices who just voted to overturn it. These Justices lied to the Senate and the American people to be confirmed. It should come as no surprise that public confidence in the Supreme Court is at its lowest. Conservative justices, who have often decried legislating from the bench, will now impose their radical views on abortion onto the rest of the country."

Venice Family Clinic, which together with South Bay Family Health Care services about 45,000 patients, issued a statement condemning the Supreme Court decision, with CEO Elizabeth Benson Forer saying, "this dreadful decision will jeopardize women's lives and health."

As of Friday, abortion had been outlawed or severely limited in five states due to so-called "trigger laws" designed to come into effect immediately upon the overturning of Roe v Wade. Those states include Kentucky, Louisiana, Oklahoma, South Dakota and Texas, with additional bans or restrictions soon to be implemented in Wyoming, Utah, Tennessee, North Dakota, Missouri, Mississippi, Idaho and Arkansas, according to analysis by Politico. Several other states have legislatures poised to impose new restrictions or bans, but no laws on the books.

team for camping in public, another fire department call for a medical emergency, and so on. Each department will respond to an acute concern, but traditionally has not had the capacity to address the overall problem or coordinate interdepartmental interventions.

The Santa Monica Connect App changed that. This unique data sharing platform was created in partnership with Akido Labs and allows police officers, firefighters, human services staff, and homeless service providers to share real time information on around 120 of the highest utilitzers of the City's emergency response systems.

This information sharing allows for more timely and informed responses that can prevent individuals from generating repetitive calls for service and frequent police encounters.

"Prior to the Connect program, these services were all working with pen and paper, sharing printed pictures of patients during scheduled case conferencing meetings and asking if others had seen them. This significantly slowed down collaboration and coordination across these services so much that it was starting to become ineffective," said Dr. Karthik Murali, head of Public Health for Akido Labs.

The Connect application, on the other hand, pulls realtime data from each of the department's respective response tracking systems and automatically populates homeless utilizers' profiles with information from every call for service they generate. Because the application pulls information from data that each department is already internally recording, it does not place any additional demands on emergency responders or service providers.

The application was first piloted for a 10 month period in 2019. During this time the police department saw a 33 percent decrease in encounters with homeless high utilizers of the 911 system and 37 percent fewer arrests of these individuals. The fire department also saw a 27 percent reduction in calls for services related to individuals experiencing homelessness.

The partnership with Akido was spearheaded by Santa Monica Chief Information Officer Joseph Cevetello, who was acting on instructions from former City Manager Rick Cole to develop a data tracking system to eliminate inefficiencies in the City's homelessness response model.

"He [Cole] said, 'here's the challenge: Santa Monica probably spends more than any other municipality in California on support for those experiencing homelessness... but I'm not sure that we get the best outcomes we can... not only am I not sure, I don't know, and the reason why I don't know, is because we have various groups who respond to homelessness and there's not a lot of information sharing going on between them," said Cevetello.

For over twenty years, Santa Monica has targeted a population of chronically homeless individuals with the highest barriers to accessing help for intensive attention from outreach workers. The City was doing this long before it was adopted as a best practice by the County of Los Angeles.

To this day, the City maintains a list of the highest need individuals who generate the greatest number of 911 responses and matches them with a case worker from a homeless service provider. Currently, The People Concern's Homeless Multidisciplinary Street Team manages the bulk of these clients and through the practice of relentless engagement, seeks to connect them to the services they need to transition off of the streets.

Although this type of engagement is a longstanding practice, prior to the Connect application tracking down these individuals was like throwing darts while blindfolded.

"In the olden days if you couldn't find your client at the regular outreach location, service providers would go searching up to ten different locations," said Brian Hardgrave, Human Services senior analyst.

> The SM Connect app led to a 33 percent reduction in police calls for the chronically homeless

This included looking at the LA County Sheriff's Information Center to see if their client had been arrested anywhere or cold calling emergency rooms in hope that a sympathetic nurse or social worker would be willing to let them know if their client was hospitalized. Locating hospitalized clients was especially challenging as there are multiple emergency rooms in the area and they will often log homeless patients as 'Trauma Johnny' or 'Trauma Jane' if they are unconscious or in need of urgent medical attention upon arrival.

With the Connect application, case managers receive a notification when the fire department is transporting their client to a hospital. The case manager can then visit the emergency room and try to connect their client to appropriate long-term care.

"Something like a seizure related to an alcohol withdrawal, it may be an imminent medical issue, but the treatment they need is long-term substance abuse intervention that is not going to be provided by the ER," said Zachary Coil, The People Concern program director. "We've been able to go to the ER... see the person and we've been able to make calls for treatment or advocate for a detox [program]."

Case managers are also notified if there is a firefighter EMT call where their client refuses transportation to the hospital. If the case manager is working at the time of the incident, they can then visit the scene and try to generate a different response.

"We're able to follow up with one of the Venice Family Clinic providers we've worked with, or our psychiatrist, or just go and see them and take them ourselves to the hospital, so we're able to help them get their medical needs met that they refused emergency transport for," said Coil. "That's been extremely successful for some people."

By enabling case managers to be at the right place at the right time, the application provides the opportunity to leverage an emergency encounter into an opportunity for service delivery and, ideally, a longer-term care intervention.

A similar phenomenon takes place through the police department data shared on the Connect platform. Case workers are notified when their clients have a police interaction or when they are arrested, and can then come meet them in jail.

"Each time they [homeless high utilizers] are in custody, case workers can plan for what's next, whether it's treatment or a housing option," said Thomas Mastin, officer in charge of SMPD's Homeless Liaison Program. "That's why you saw a decrease in the amount of arrests."

Mastin also said that this can be a good opportunity for case managers to work with clients who have substance abuse issues as they sober up and become more lucid while in custody.

These in jail interventions have been happening less frequently during the pandemic as the County enacted a temporary zero bail policy for many low level offenses in order to reduce density in jails. However, Mastin expects these interventions to become more frequent as the emergency bail schedule expires on July 1. In general, he is a big supporter of the Connect application and an advocate for creating stronger connections between the police department and service providers.

"Getting that information channeled to caseworkers really can be a big money saver and time saver for the City in general, for the police department, for the fire department, even for our hospitals," said Mastin. "Money like this is well spent when you can coordinate that service to reconnect people to those social services that law enforcement can't provide."

Although the Connect application has all of these benefits, the City was initially hesitant to partner with Akido to develop the platform due to the highly sensitive nature of the data it shares. For example, a lot of the health data collected during a fire department EMS call is protected under HIPAA, while most of the police department's criminal justice data is similarly confidential.

Akido Labs was able to ensure the Connect app abided by these privacy laws by working closely with the City Attorney's office and developing an interface that displays different information depending on who is signed in.

"If you're a cop, you're going to see all the criminal justice data, but you're not going to see all the HIPAA data. If you're a community service provider, you're not going to see any of the criminal justice data that you shouldn't be seeing... the protections are in place as part of the platform itself," said Cevetello.

The innovative nature of the SM Connect app and the impressive outcomes generated for Santa Monica are now gaining widespread attention. Several other municipalities are in talks with Akido about developing a similar program and this August both the City and Akido will be recognized as a winner of CIO Magazine's CIO 100 Awards.

The US CIO 100 awards, which are currently in their 35th year, recognize 100 organizations for their IT innovation and leadership. According to Cevetello, Santa Monica is the only municipality to receive a CIO 100 award this year, as for the most part they are awarded to organizations in the private sector.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (June 25)

Out of a few odd interests and some seemingly random wins, truly something remarkable comes together. Plans will be made and remade as a project grows to a size that helps the most people and uses the least resources. A charmed relationship will be the jewel of the year. You'll have a hot property on your hands. Leo and Aries adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 19, 3, 38 and 21.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your project has great significance to others, perhaps fulfilling a wish of one who came before or providing a vicarious thrill for someone who can't duplicate your success. This is not a burden; rather, it's extra motivation to succeed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You've no interest in hollow encouragement. It takes effort to see another person's talent, and it takes creativity to imagine potentials. These qualities will be woven into the sort of support you give and receive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Pleasant surprises are still surprises. Today you'll prefer not to be startled any which way, and the precautions you take to guard your leisure and protect your bubble of coziness will make this a relaxing time indeed.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You don't have to do it all alone. There are many who would be happy to guide you. The trick is in posing the right questions. But even the wrong questions will get you a little closer to what you need, so just ask.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Your feelings are interpretations of events. The events themselves are not good or bad and have no feeling at all until you make one inside you. You can remake feelings inside you too, which you'll do today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Worry, like the late afternoon sun, can give a long shadow to even very minor things. Conversations with the reasonable and competent will steer you away from unhelpful and distorted perspectives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Thinking is harder than it looks, which is why it's so easy to get lazy and let others do it. Not today. You'll apply intellectual vigor to stay on top of business and find better deals and arrangements for you and yours.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). When you don't get what you want the first time, it's not a sign that you should give up. What's worth having may come with the price tag of several failed attempts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It's good to know that change is coming, though you dislike having change sprung on you at the last second. The excellent communicators who let you know what to expect will win your loyalty.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Human concerns may be an infinitesimal point in the cosmic immensity, but a single feeling can feel as heavy as the whole universe inside one person. Forget about scale. If it's a big deal to you, it's a big deal, period.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The stronger stance is always the most compassionate one. Even so, compassion can come in many forms including tender, practical and even stern.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). No need to wait until you have the most comprehensive and up-to-date information because no one else has it either. You'll learn by doing. Until you apply yourself, you won't know what you know.
