Evaluating Lyon's legacy as SMMUSD chief

Superintendent positioned district for future equity work

LAST MEETING: Sandra Lyon has officially left the school district.

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN

There will probably be a rush to assess Sandra Lyon's legacy as superintendent of the Santa Monica-Malibu school district.

But, at least in the eyes of one Board of Education member, it's too soon to judge.

"People will say, 'What did Sandy really accomplish?" Oscar de la Torre said during Wednesday's school board meeting, Lyon's last with the district. "But there are things that we'll accomplish after you leave because of the seed that you planted."

Local businesses up for compliance checks

BY JEONG PARK
Daily Press Intern

State inspectors will be visiting Santa Monica businesses starting in July to check if they are complying with the state regulations.

Eight representatives from the California Board of Equalization's Statewide Compliance and Outreach Program will inspect retail businesses in the 90403, 90404 and 90405 ZIP codes. Home-based businesses will not be inspected.

About 98 percent of California businesses have valid permits, but the state has said noncompliance had contributed to more than $2 billion in uncollected taxes. The program seeks to educate businesses about their tax obligations and identify those operating without valid permits.

When state officials visited businesses in the 90401 and 90402 ZIP codes last year, they found that three businesses were operating without permits. Businesses in the 90401, 90402 and 90403 ZIP codes were inspected in 2009 and 2010.

Yating Campbell, a spokesperson for the California Board of Equalization, said the program's

Westside Coalition enlists religious groups to help locals in need

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

When an elderly woman arrived recently at Mt. Olive Lutheran Church, homeless and seeking help, officials at the Santa Monica congregation knew what to do.

First they contacted Darci Niva of the Westside Coalition, an alliance of local nonprofits and social service organizations, to discuss the woman's needs.

Then they put the woman in touch with the City of Santa Monica's Human Services Division, which offers a variety of support programs.

And then they connected her with St. Joseph Center in Venice, which coordinates a rapid rehousing initiative.

"She got the help she needed," Niva said. "These situations end up being very collaborative."

It was a single scenario, but it underscored the kind of collaboration that Niva is seeking to cultivate further within the local faith community, which her coalition views as a centerpiece in Santa Monica's efforts to help people who are socioeconomically disadvantaged, hungry, homeless or in need of other assistance.

Faith-based groups already play an important role in the Westside

Independence from taxes and loud fireworks

YOU'RE SITTING THERE, SIPPING YOUR coffee. You know there was something you wanted to do this morning. But, it is the Fourth of July. Awww. Fourth of July!

Holy Stars and Stripes! You're missing the parade! It's going down Main Street right now. Save the coffee and Daily Press for later. My Write will still be here when you get back.

It's good that the Ocean Park Association is sponsoring this event. In most communities across the land, Fourth of July events are sponsored by town government (City Hall), municipal fire departments, local veterans' organizations, service clubs or community oriented nonprofits.

Many years ago, this City used to shoot fireworks off the Santa Monica Pier on the Fourth. However, the celebration got out of hand with crowds swelling into seven and eight hundreds of thousands. Add alcohol and drugs, and crime soared. The City said "no" to beach fireworks.

It took a couple of years, but someone at Santa Monica College came up with of "Celebrate America" the Saturday before the Fourth of July, a free civic get-together on the main SMC campus with live entertainment and local vendors selling goods. Local groups set up exhibits and service clubs sold tri-tip steaks and other comestibles. A minimally publicized, low-key event held off holiday eased crowd-control issues and simplified event management. City Hall lent its support to the endeavor.

"Celebrate America" ends with a low-key fireworks display. My complaint is that they're not loud enough. Because it's being held in the middle of a residential neighborhood, the college keeps the "booms" and "thumps" to a low level. It's the "best sparkler show in town."

I know that some of you agree with me, as I've seen your comments on some of the local Facebook political sites. "Am I the only one that finds it completely ridiculous that the city of Santa Monica throws its Fourth of July fireworks on anything but the Fourth, just makes it feel like a complete joke in my opinion ... " posted one person. "Pretty soon they will have the 4th of July fireworks during Christmas," posted another.

Only in Santa Monica would we celebrate Fourth of July a week to 10 days before the actual holiday. I agree. It does make us look stupid. I'm not saying to do away with the event, but maybe change the theme to "Celebrate Summer" and promote it as a community gathering to celebrate just being together.

While the City of Santa Monica hosts, sponsors and supports - financially or otherwise - a number of community activities throughout the year, there are some pretty obvious opportunities for events that would do much to bring citizens together and celebrate the Santa Monica family just for the fun of it.

It seems like too many of the city-sponsored events are propaganda exercises designed to elicit certain behaviors such as conserving water, riding bicycles or walking to "save the environment" and reducing our carbon footprints. We throw a two-day party costing hundreds of thousands of dollars to get people to ride the new light rail, for example.

The social engineering never stops, and it's behind almost everything the city does. It all reminds me of those high school assemblies I attended in school. Sure, some of them were fun and entertaining, but they all had a message or strived to brainwash students like me into a way of thinking.

A previous column ("Is Santa Monica's LUVE initiative a threat to City Council?" June 20) received a swift reaction from readers. I connected the dots between the various developers and pro-growther entities who profit when there are minimal size restrictions and generous bonus allowances for including "community benefits" into new projects.

I wrote, "To those in power ... any attempt to restrict size, mass and shape of local development is viewed as a major threat to their power, wealth and profitability ... The real reason for backing the City's aggressive pro-development policy: earning money and lots of it."

More than one reader emailed and stated the reason for bringing in more money through developers' fees and higher taxes is that "it's only about what the money will buy." Some will say it's for childcare. Landmarks will say it's to protect history. Housing advocates will say it's for housing the huddled masses while the hotel union pitches jobs for deserving members.

The Chamber of Commerce will assure us that our quality of life depends on ever-increasing numbers of visitors, while certain councilmembers will say, "Affordable housing trumps all."

A former mayor will insist that billions are needed to cap the Interstate 10 freeway. And another council candidate will say anything he thinks will fly with voters, even temporarily. Talk about "laugh-out-loud?" Guffaw.

Everyone has their fingers in the pie. Taxes and development have become Santa Monica's World Bank for financing everyone's pet cause, favorite project or harebrained scheme.

Between the development revenues that will result from more expensive housing costs and the higher taxes (if approved) on the November ballot, Santa Monica is going to become more and more expensive for all of us to live in.

Sooner or later, "Celebrate America" won't be free, either. Then we can all celebrate that everything has a price and here, it's getting higher but not better.

Independence Ways

FROM THE EARLIEST MIGRATIONS ACROSS Africa millions of years ago — to today's international geopolitical conflicts — the struggle to equitably and sustainably live off natural resources has been a driving force in human history. 'Who controls access to what resources' often determines who lives well and who not, and is perhaps the greatest intersection between social justice and environment on our planet — for individuals, nations and between generations.

SANTA MONICA AND WATER INDEPENDENCE

One of the main reasons Santa Monica is an independent city today - instead of being a part of the City of Los Angeles - is that for most of its history, Santa Monica has controlled its own water supply.

When Santa Monica was first established in 1875, city founders Senator John P. Jones, Colonel Robert S. Baker and his wife Arcadia Bandini de Stearns de Baker built a reservoir filled from nearby Kuruvungna Springs (adjacent to today's University High in West LA), then piped water to Santa Monica. But as the city grew, residents watched neighboring Los Angeles gain rights in 1902 to the Owens Valley water supply (in Central California) — spurring LA's growth and development, while Santa Monica's own water supply remained limited.

In 1912, the Santa Monica City Council considered a consultant's recommendation to either annex itself into Los Angeles to acquire an interest in the Owens River water, or purchase the private water companies serving Santa Monica at that time, including the Santa Monica Land & Water Company (successor to Jones and the Bakers). In 1916 residents approved a $712,500 bond measure to acquire those water companies with 56.6% of the vote, then in 1917 voted against annexation into LA. This was followed by three more city water bonds in 1923, 1948 and 1958 - to build five more reservoirs and gain more water-bearing land. Santa Monica was also one of the first cities to invest in the Metropolitan Water District (MWD) back in 1928, to bring in water from the Colorado River

In recent years Santa Monica has focused more upon reducing demand - a strategy that makes even more sense as climate change makes it more likely that future droughts will be increasingly severe. Since the adoption of the City's Sustainable City Plan in 1994, Santa Monica has adopted a range of ecologically-oriented water conservation, efficiency, storage and reclamation strategies and practices. In 2012, the City Council declared a goal of water independence by 2030. Today the City is already close to 80% local water and 20% from the MWD.

PUBLIC TRANSIT AND MOBILITY INDEPENDENCE

Here in Santa Monica we are rightfully celebrating the arrival of the Expo light rail line, which gives us a major new east/west public transit option — after almost thirty years of advocating for its financing and construction. At the same time, we are about to lose a far more modest north/south option, although most Santa Monicans probably don't know it.

I only found about this loss by chance, after recently returning to Los Angeles International Airport (LAX) from South America. After clearing customs, I went to the curbside FlyAway bus stop, only to find that their Santa Monica service was scheduled to terminate September 6. At $8 point to point between LAX and 2nd/Colorado (or vice-versa), the service has been the right combination of cost and convenience for me since it first opened in July 2014. Now this route is soon to be gone — which raises the painfully slow progress we are experiencing in Southern California to build a regionally viable public transit system.

When I was first elected to the City Council in 1996, there was already a working group in place of representatives from Santa Monica, Culver City, the City of Los Angeles and the County of Los Angeles, to look at some form of rail/trolley line that would eventually run from Santa Monica to the South Bay, including a stop at LAX. Today that north/south public transit corridor concept is no closer to reality, and the new Airport Metro Connector/96th Street Transit Station that will connect LAX to the regional rail system in 2024 will be built with out any such connection.

To fund our regional system, county voters have been asked to approve bond measures, which which owing to a requirement in Proposition 13 from 1978, require a 2/3 vote for approval. In 2008 Measure R passed with 67.22% of the vote, authorizing a half cent sales to raise approximately $40 billion over thirty years. In 2012 Measure J 'failed' with 66.1%, which would have extended the half cent tax another 30 years. On the state level, high speed rail between Los Angeles and the Bay Area remains a mostly unfunded dream.

On the federal level, American Public Transit Association estimated in 2013 that authorization levels for federal public transportation programs in Fiscal Years 2015 through 2020 should total approximately $100.4 billion, including approximately $24 billion to maintain and expand existing bus services, $37 billion to do the same with existing rail services and another $34 billion for projects in the federal "pipeline" for 45 new fixed-guideway starts and extensions.

PUBLIC TRANSIT OR WAR?

This all seems like a lot of money - but what about the costs of U.S.-sponsored wars in far off-lands to control the supply of oil and other natural resources? Between 2003 and 2015, the direct annual costs of the U.S. wars in Iraq and Afghanistan ranged between $68 billion and $186 billion. In 2010, Nobel Laureate Joseph Stiglitz estimated the direct and indirect costs of the war in Iraq alone up to that point was $3 trillion. These numbers dwarf the costs associated with funding our public transit needs.

Had we chosen to redirect those funds into public transit — instead of wars to occupy other countries to control their natural resources and distribution lines, we could have had a 2050 public transportation

A coal free reality

Dear EarthTalk

Are we really heading for a coal-free power future in the U.S. or is this just an environmental pipe dream

Jack Summa
Boston, MA

FAR FROM JUST AN ENVIRONMENTAL pipedream, the coal industry in the U.S. and around the world is in the midst of a major downswing. In 2011, coal dropped below 40 percent of total U.S. energy generation for the first time since the late 1970s, while in 2015 coal accounted for only 33 percent. And given the influx of cheap natural gas and the ascendance of renewable energy sources-not to mention recent coal mine safety lapses with tragic consequences-coal might not be able to mount a comeback.

"Technological advances have made natural gas, wind and solar-and efficiency-increasingly competitive," reports John Brinkley in Sierra Magazine. "The once-robust overseas demand for coal is disappearing."

Brinkley adds that a decade of sustained public advocacy for clean air and clean energy has left coal out in the dark. The Obama administration's landmark Clean Power Plan that forces big coal fired power plants to clean up their acts dramatically or shut down has been one major factor in coal's slide, while the Paris climate accord has sped up the process even more by taking a huge bite out of potential U.S. coal exports.

Over just the last five years, fully one-third of U.S. coal plants, some 232 different facilities, have been closed or scheduled for imminent retirement. Plans for another 184 new coal-fired plants have been shuttered-activists claim credit but the development of new technologies that make harvesting natural gas that much cheaper may have more to do with coal's death knell. For the first time in 200 years, no new coal plants are on the drawing board in the U.S.

According to the Energy Information Administration (EIA), which collects data and reports on energy statistics for the federal government, some 13,000 megawatts of coal power went offline in 2015 as a result of coal plant retirements, while wind energy added 8,600 megawatts and solar tacked on another 7,300 megawatts. The Sierra Club's Beyond Coal campaign reports that coal's downswing is just beginning, with another 50,000 megawatts of coal power predicted to go offline by 2030.

And the trend isn't stopping at the border. "Many countries that used to be reliable customers for U.S. coal just aren't into it anymore, partly because of last year's successful UN climate change conference in Paris," reports Brinkley. Even before the Paris agreement, China, the world's largest producer and consumer of coal, had been scaling back production and imports drastically in efforts to clean up urban air pollution and reduce its carbon footprint. In 2015, China cut imports of U.S. coal some 86.5 percent from 1.7 million tons to only 229,000.

Of course, coal is still big business in the U.S. and beyond, and it isn't going away overnight. But how long it can stick around as a viable contender for Americans' energy dollars is anybody's guess. "The trajectory for the coal industry is clear, but the timeline is not," sums up Brinkley.

system in place today. With it, we could have already greatly reduced our use of oil, our ecological footprint, while minimizing geopolitical conflict and the accompanying pressure to trade in our civil liberties in the name of 'security'

ECOLOGICAL SUSTAINABILITY MEANS REAL INDEPENDENCE

An economy based upon unlimited consumption of finite resources on a finite planet is inevitably destined to create Darwinian-like conflicts within our species. By contrast, an ecologically-oriented lifestyle promoting the use of renewable resources can enable us to realize a more equitable and lasting abundance.

With less than 5 percent of world population, the U.S. uses one-third of the world's paper, a quarter of the world's oil, 23 percent of the coal, 27 percent of the aluminum, and 19 percent of the copper, while creating half of the globe's solid waste.

As we celebrate our nation's political independence, let's also ponder the relationship between this per-capita consumption and the full-cycle sustainability and well-being of ourselves and others — and adjust our personal habits and our political choices accordingly.

staff seeks to visit all of the state's non-home based retail businesses every few years, although businesses located in ZIP codes with higher business density are visited more often because businesses in those areas change frequently.

Campbell said the visit often doesn't take long. The program's staff will identify themselves and ask the owner of the business a few questions about whether they have appropriate permits, she said. Businesses will also have a chance to ask the staff about the regulations.

"Our intent is not to disrupt the business. Our goal is to finish as quickly as possible," Campbell said.

If owners are not at their businesses during the visits, the staff will leave their cards and will try to come back later, Campbell said. She said businesses registered with the Board of Equalization would receive letters notifying them of the visit. Additionally, she said the state hopes to reach out to the businesses not registered with the board through its website and other media.

Businesses most commonly commit violations such as not applying the correct amount of sales tax to transactions and not having the proper permits, Campbell said.

The program's staff will assist businesses in getting valid permits if the businesses do not have them. Businesses can apply for many permits online or through the Board of Equalization's field office, Campbell said. The staff will also assist businesses in filing taxes correctly, as business owners may not be aware of certain sales tax deductions and exemptions, Campbell said.

Campbell said the program has generated $467.5 million in revenue since it started in 2008.

Main Library

Soundwaves: Alex Cline & Areni Agbabian

The Santa Monica Public Library will present percussionist/composer Alex Cline and vocalist/pianist Areni Agbabian on Wednesday July 20 at 7:30PM in the Main Library's Martin Luther King Jr. Auditorium at 601 Santa Monica Blvd.

Combining stirring, evocative compositional material with open, subtle improvisation, Agbabian and Cline will present a set of original, introspective, spontaneous, and uncategorizable music that explores the realms of the sonically rich, emotionally spacious, and spiritually adventurous.

Areni Agbabian is a highly accomplished pianist and distinctively sonorous vocalist as well as a resourceful composer whose deep and eclectic musical background includes classical music performance, traditional Armenian liturgical singing, and free improvisation. Perhaps best known for her beautiful vocal contributions to the music of pianist Tigran Hamasyan, Agbabian has worked with a variety of notable artists largely in the creative jazz genre. She is an artist of unusual depth and breadth as well as uncommon sensitivity. For this performance she will be paired with Alex Cline, a veteran drummer-percussionist-composer long known for his work with such artists as Julius Hemphill, Vinny Golia, Arthur Blythe, Bobby Bradford, Tim Berne, Henry Grimes, Don Preston, Hafez Modirzadeh, John Carter, Jeff Gauthier, Charlie Haden, Joseph Jarman, and countless others, including his twin brother, guitarist Nels Cline. In his collaborations with Agbabian, he focuses largely on some of the resonant metal percussion instruments in his vast collection, including many instruments originating in various parts of Asia. The blending of such arresting sounds with Agbabian's expansive, probing piano explorations and pure, crystalline voice creates a rich and vibrant musical adventure in which the listener may be both dramatically moved and gently soothed.

LYON

Lyon, who served as the top administrator in SMMUSD for the last five years, this week began her tenure as superintendent of the Palm Springs Unified School District. She's now in charge of a system that has about 23,000 students in 27 schools.

Lyon's stint as chief executive of the local district was characterized by several notable changes and successes as well as by numerous community controversies.

The seed to which de la Torre was referring was Lyon's impact on the local district's decision to hire education reformist Pedro Noguera to curb achievement gaps that have persisted between minority students and their peers.

"Being superintendent in Santa Monica and Malibu is the most difficult job that any public servant can take on," de la Torre said. "You came into a difficult place, and there were things that were here that pre-dated you. They surfaced at a time when we needed a leader to steer the ship."

Improving equity in SMMUSD was perhaps Lyon's ultimate goal, as evidenced by the time devoted to the issue during the district's annual convocation in August and the district's ongoing work with Noguera. But Lyon's energies were often spent on other issues, including litigation over chemical testing and cleanup in Malibu, debate over centralized fundraising and the possible creation of a separate Malibu district.

The May announcement of Lyon's departure elicited cheers in Malibu, where parents have repeatedly criticized her for the district's handling of environmental remediation.

"We hope that new leadership will bring common sense to the district and put protecting children and teachers' health as their first priority," America Unites for Kids leader Jennifer deNicola said in a statement.

School board members offered parting tributes at the meeting June 29, praising Lyon's dedication and stewardship.

"For me, having had the opportunity to work closely with her, I felt and feel that, up to the last minute here, Sandy has brought to our a district a balance of gentleness and toughness, listening and leading, structure and openness," board president Laurie Lieberman said. "She really embodies the values we want our students to possess: resilient, team player and critical thinker. We are really, really going to miss her."

Board member Ralph Mechur said he admired Lyon's ability to approach issues through the lens of what would be best for students.

"I know that Palm Springs will have the same success," he said.

Added board member Richard Tahvildaran-Jesswein: "I wish you weren't going."

Lyon thanked her senior cabinet, union leadership and district staff, giving a special mention to her assistant, Sarah Wahrenbrock. And she expressed confidence in the direction of the board, which will look different by the end of the calendar year. Jose Escarce has announced he won't seek re-election to the governing body, and the terms for Mechur and Maria Leon-Vazquez are also set to expire in December.

Lyon said the board is in position to improve equity and reduce disparities in academic success in the district over the coming years.

"I really feel that our team in full is in place, and the work's defined," she said. "You've got two strong interims ready to go. ... I can never thank you enough for your professionalism, support and passion for this community."

Leon-Vazquez said Lyon didn't back away from the problems facing the district.

"Despite all the negativity that came through with a lot of the hard issues, I give it to you that you took it," she said. "It's hard. You took it with much grace. You learned a lot, I'm sure. You steered us, and we're getting going."

COALITION

Coalition, making up 11 of its 42 member organizations, according to Niva. But officials believe there's more progress to be mad on that front, especially considering churches and other religious institutions often serve as entry points for people seeking help.

"We've realized that houses of worship across the region have people coming to their door looking for assistance, and the rabbis and pastors are not always sure what resources are available or how to navigate the system," Niva said. "People we know are being asked for rental assistance or a motel for the night, and it can be hard to know where the best help is."

The Westside Coalition is trying to bridge that gap by hosting informational events for dignitaries in the local faith community. The goal of the events is to educate faith leaders about what to do when people in need come to their churches, synagogues, temples and mosques.

The sessions are held the first Wednesday of every month at 9 a.m. at St. Monica Catholic Church, which Niva said has been "at the forefront" of the recent effort to engage faith groups. She noted the work of Delis Alejandro, a coalition leader and a pastoral associate at the California Avenue congregation.

The coalition's regular monthly meetings are held on third Thursdays at 9 a.m. at Mt. Olive.

Through the coalition, representatives from the Santa Monica homeless liaison program and police officials have spoken with faith leaders about addressing issues associated with the local homeless population.

"A lot of people think, 'If I call, are they just going to arrest them?'" Niva said. "So those events have been really good."

A popular referral destination is the aforementioned St. Joseph Center, which administers a rapid rehousing program. Niva said someone in need was recently placed in an apartment after connecting with one of the coalition's faith partners.

Beyond bringing struggling citizens closer to the aid they seek, Niva said, members of area faith groups can also have other impacts. Through the so-called Welcome Home program, some bring furniture, toiletries and groceries to people who have already been placed in housing. Others conduct demographic surveys or advocate for funding using their collective political voice.

"The faith community is powerful by virtue of the numbers," Niva said. "They're fabulous partners."

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ In May, an apparently devout woman named Katy Vasquez of Winter Park, Florida, posted a sincerely written entry on Facebook (and told Huffington Post in an interview) that she had just seen a "sign from God" -- a cross -- as a smudge in her infant's soiled diaper. "I prayed to God for a sign that everything would be OK," she gushed to the reporter. "It might not be the prettiest sign, but he put it where he knew I'd see it." (Hence, News of the Weird retires the recurring theme begun in the 1980s with Jesus in a rust stain on an abandoned refrigerator.)

■ To their great surprise, Sophie Scafidi and friends, on an outing in Hampton Beach, New Hampshire, in June, learned that a man spying on and photographing them through a camera lens hidden in a Gatorade bottle painted black was not violating any law. Although the lens was rigged to the man's phone, which contained beach photos, including some of children, police informed Scafidi that even surreptitious photography in sleazy circumstances, as long as done on public property, was legal -- and that the only law broken in the incident was by the person who snatched the "camera" to show police.

Just be yourself tonight, Cancer

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You might feel unusually patriotic this Fourth of July. You'll look at your loved ones and realize how important they are to you. You also will recognize the importance of this country in your day-to-day life. Tonight: Count on your graciousness to come through in a big way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ You are likely to feel as if you have to be very diplomatic in your interactions with others. Your feelings will emerge when dealing with a stubborn friend at a distance. You often wish you could get this person to fall in line. Enjoy the festivities. Tonight: Hang out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ You often try to please people more than they recognize. You could go to extremes to make sure everyone's July Fourth is up to snuff. A loved one might be extremely dominating. Don't let this person's demanding ways get the best of you! Tonight: Curb a need to be possessive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Your personality melts barriers, and you might be surprised by what is shared as a result. A close loved one could be unusually manipulative, causing a problem between you. Decide if you want to let go of dealing with this behavior right now. Tonight: Just be yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Now is an appropriate time to say little and step back some. For some of you, you could be working through a problem on a deep level, whereas others could be extremely emotional. Understand what it is you want from a particular friend. Tonight: Play it low-key.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Conversations among friends will make you smile. Meanwhile, you could be putting someone on a pedestal and might not be seeing him or her realistically. If you become a bit more observant, you'll see this person as he or she really is. Tonight: Where the crowds are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Defer to others, even though you know exactly how you want today's plans to go. No one can have his or her way all the time. Share more, but refuse to get into a contested situation with someone. Follow your sixth sense, and you will land well. Tonight: Where your friends are.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You seem to be busy with last-minute errands or helping guests feel more in a celebratory mood. You like to help others enjoy themselves, and you have an opportunity to do that right now. You might decide to organize a softball game. Tonight: Slow down a little.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You might be more willing to let someone else steal the stage right now. This person needs and likes to be dominant. You sometimes have difficulty allowing others to steal your thunder. Your instincts will come through in guiding you. Tonight: Be with your favorite person.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Defer to a loved one. Allow this person to decide your plans or put the finishing touches on what has already been decided. Refuse to make demands that barely can be met. If you find that you feel the need to be in control, try controlling your mood! Tonight: Say "yes" to an offer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ You are likely to decide that you would like to do something totally different. What is stopping you? Others could be so involved in your plans that you might feel as if you have little choice but to invite them to join you. Tonight: Go along with the moment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Your imagination manages to fill in the blanks with a child or loved one. Be sure that you are being realistic and not creating fantasies that can't be fulfilled. Try to be more anchored. Listen to a trusted friend and what he or she has to share. Tonight: Fun and games.

Monday, July 4, 2016

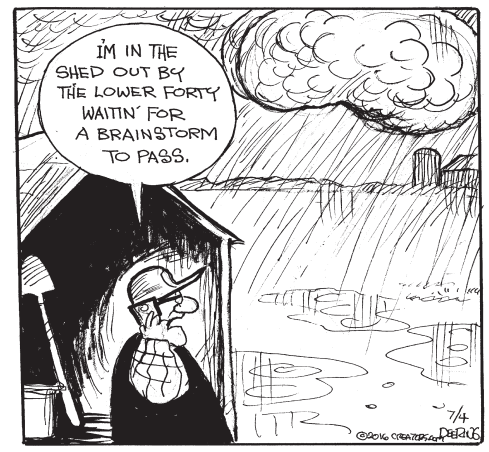

This year you break past self-imposed restrictions. You see how you sometimes stop yourself from getting what you want. Charisma becomes your middle name. Be careful, though, as you could be unusually narcissistic as well. Make a point of listening to others more often. If you are single, your charm will make you even more appealing to potential suitors. If you are attached, your attentiveness will make all the difference in how smoothly your relationship runs. Try to be more involved in your sweetie's life. A fellow CANCER might be even moodier than you are!
