NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Canadian researchers writing in the journal, "Neurology," in June reported that 18 of 122 dogs belonging to epileptic children were able to sense, minutes ahead of time, when a child was about to have a seizure, and about 30 others showed unique reactions to a seizure event (including in some cases trying to protect the child from danger). Also in June, researchers at Germany's Max Planck Institute reported that Rico, a border collie they have studied for several years, can distinguish by name more than 200 objects and can even figure out the names of unfamiliar objects associated with familiar ones (attributed, as in the epilepsy cases, to the dog's high sensitivity to sight, sound and motion).

■ Ken James, 64, died in February when he fell off a stolen bicycle in Melbourne, Australia, and hit his head; police later found 435 bicycles and hundreds of parts in his home, stacked to the ceiling in every room (with only a few of the bikes having been legitimately acquired). And in May, a court in York, England, banned Norman Hutchins, 53, from all National Health Service hospitals and doctors' offices, based on 40 complaints since January of his attempting to grab surgical gowns and masks for his collection; he was described by his lawyer as "not a well man."

■ Andre Lamar Henderson, 30, was arrested after allegedly robbing a Madison Bank branch in Norristown, Pa., in June and coming away with $50; his holdup note had demanded "all your hundreds and fifties," and, as the teller later said, there was lots of money in the drawer but unfortunately for Henderson, no hundreds and only one fifty. And Knute Falk, 54, allegedly robbed a Bank of America in Beaverton, Ore., in June but was arrested when his getaway was delayed; he had demanded a bank customer's car keys, walked out, then returned after a minute or two, with his mask off, to ask the customer which key opens the door.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"They'll talk about me showing cleavage and my belly, but they don't say anything about the artists who accept an award and can't even talk because they're so drugged out. After the awards show, I go home, drink my tea and go to bed. "

Erasing the waste is a multi-million dollar clean up

$5 million education campaign will launch next month

BY SHRADDHA R. JAISWAL
Special to the Daily Press

With millions of people visiting and living near the Santa Monica coast each year, millions of dollars must be spent cleaning up after them.

And millions more are now being spent to educate people on how to stop their trashy ways. The second phase of a two-year, $5 million campaign will launch in August to teach coastal residents how to keep their waters unpolluted.

The program, "Erase the Waste," which is funded by the State Water Resources Control Board (SWRCB), is geared toward protecting the ocean, bay and city waters from seemingly innocent acts that create pollutants which go directly into storm drains.

"Part of it's getting people to understand first that whatever you throw in the street or leave in the street goes directly to the ocean," said Richard Katz, a member of the SWRCB. "It doesn't get treated somewhere, it doesn't get picked up by somebody, it doesn't get sorted."

Erase the Waste attempts to remind people of how their actions can result in devastating consequences.

Pesticide use, the improper disposal of motor oil, or leaving behind dog feces on the beaches and streets, along with cigarette butts, can cause millions of dollars in damage, beach closures and viral infections like hepatitis, according to the campaign's research.

When pollutants flow in to the city's storm drains, officials said it mixes together to form a type of "toxic soup" that eventually finds its way into the Santa Monica Bay.

"It's one of those issues where many people don't realize the consequences of their actions," Katz said. "People don't even think about 'Oh, it's a cigarette butt, or it's a styrofoam cup.' They don't think about a million other people doing the same thing in a month."

Fisher Lumber's gate keeper happily keeps 'em moving

BY JOHN F. MULLER
Special to the Daily Press

Bill Spruell loves to talk. Day in and day out, he stands in the Fisher Lumber parking lot, yelling greetings and instructions to pedestrians, sedans and trucks as they pass through.

"Comin' in, comin' out," his voice booms over the traffic as people and vehicles weave through the tricky corner. "Hello, sir. On your right. Through, through. Heads up! Comin' in, comin' in."

Spruell has been working as the gate guard at Fisher Lumber since 1997. He plans to stay with the Santa Monica company until it shuts down next March. He is in charge of directing traffic, watching for thievery and making sure that there are no accidents or injuries in the bustling lumber yard.

"To the faint of heart, he seems like the crazy man out there at the end of the yard," described one co-worker of Spruell, "but we all assure (customers) he's on the payroll."

Now 56, the Kentucky native moved to the Santa Monica-West Los Angeles area in 1965. After

The Q Line

There has been some debate lately over the perceived increase of graffiti in Santa Monica. City Hall-sponsored murals, which line walls throughout town, have been the latest targets.

Some people consider graffiti as art, while many believe it's nothing more than vandalism. Its roots derive not from gang activity, but from the hip hop culture when individuals created it to express themselves.

So this week, Q-Line wants to know, "Why can't graffiti be considered an art form, regardless of its illegality? Why isn't it socially accepted?"

Call (310) 285-8106 with your responses by Friday at 5 p.m. We'll print them in the weekend edition. Please limit your comments to a minute or less. It might help to think about the wording of your of response.

City collects up to three tons of trash every day at beach

TAKING IT FROM BOTH ENDS

The city of Santa Monica annually spends up to $5 million to manage urban runoff. It collects about 12 tons of trash each year from storm drain catch basins and other devices, said Neal Shapiro, Santa Monica's administrative analyst in the Environmental Programs Department.

One of the city's innovations to help purify storm water was the $9.5 million treatment facility which opened in December, 2000. The Santa Monica Urban Runoff Recycling Facility (SMURRF) treats an average of 500,000 gallons of urban runoff from the city's two main storm drains each day.

The facility removes pollutants such as oil, animal waste, plastic material, bottles and anything else that is picked up when rain washes the streets. Shapiro said the facility has pulled out items as exotic as plastic balls from McDonalds, chunks of concrete and even the occasional car muffler.

The city conducts tours through SMURFF to educate the community. A new city-sponsored program works with schools, neighborhoods and businesses to "Adopt a Catch Basin." The new program will place a device in a storm drain to collect trash and volunteers will watch over the basin. When there is a problem, the city is notified.

Although the city has no direct association with the Erase the Waste campaign, it has similar goals of keeping the ocean and area streets debris-free.

"Through the education campaign and through the neighborhood organizing campaign, we're hoping people will take responsibility and take action in their community to make their neighborhood a better place to live," Katz said.

THE CITY DUMP?

For Santa Monica, the neighborhood consists of miles of sandy shores. The rainstorm not only washes pollution from the surface streets into the water, but the litter left along the coast also make its way into the ocean.

"We get a lot of cups, bottles, cans (and) during the summer time, I get a lot of diapers and stuff like that," said Paul Davis, a beach maintenance crew leader in Santa Monica. "And this (Fourth of July) weekend, there's no telling what we're going to get."

Although trash along the beaches is not news to any resident or the frequent beach bum, the Fourth of July usually leaves the sand castles surrounded with litter.

"The fifth of July is the worst day of the year," said Davis. "That's why I've been trying to get them to change the (national) coastal clean up day to the fifth of July instead of the end of September."

Without the additional holiday weekend trash, the city picks up two to three tons of garbage on a daily basis, Davis said. Although the beach maintenance crew does their best, they are bound to miss some things along the coast, and those are what lead to beach closures.

"We also have to remember that part of the reason so many tourists come to southern California is because of our gorgeous weather and our gorgeous beaches," Katz said. "If our beaches are closed because of health threats, we're also hurting the economy."

LA IS ONLY THE BEGINNING

Funding for the Erase the Waste campaign comes from fines that are paid by industry polluters, Katz said. However, in the future, the SWRCB hopes to expand the program and join forces with corporate and city sponsors.

"We're hoping to take this to other parts of the state as well because LA is not unique in this problem," Katz said. "It's just like most things in LA, we're bigger, there are more people, and we have a larger problem and that's why we started here."

New state law requires translated contracts for Asians living in California

BY KRISTIE A. MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — When Yang Ye visited Wondries Toyota in 2000, he was looking forward to buying a car.

Although his English ability was limited, he knew the salespeople at the Alhambra dealership would speak his native Mandarin.

Yang said he and a Mandarin-speaking saleswoman negotiated the price of a 1997 Toyota Corolla and verbally agreed to a 12 percent loan. But the contract Yang ended up signing was written in English, and instead of paying $11,000 for the car at a 12 percent interest rate, he was charged more than $14,000 at nearly 17 percent.

Two years later, Ye and 11 other Chinese customers sued Wondries for taking advantage of their limited English skills, and the case was settled in April for an undisclosed amount.

The suit also spawned a new law that takes effect Thursday designed to protect immigrant consumers from being tricked into signing agreements they don't understand.

The Consumer Protection for New Californians bill will require certain businesses to have contracts available in four major Asian languages, expanding a 28-year-old state law that protects people who negotiate deals in Spanish.

"I hope the new law will be really beneficial to ... the customers," said Zhengrong Li, one of the 12 plaintiffs in the Wondries suit. "I think it will benefit the minority people in California, especially the people from Asia."

A similar bill stalled this year in an Assembly committee. It would have required certain businesses that advertise in foreign languages to include the terms and conditions of their offers in those languages.

The bill that goes into effect Thursday requires businesses that orally negotiate in Korean, Vietnamese, Tagalog or Chinese to give their clients contracts written in those languages. It affects businesses such as car dealers, apartment owners, bankers and legal service providers.

The bill's sponsor, Assemblywoman Judy Chu, D-Monterey Park, said these businesses were targeted because they often involve complex deals and lots of money.

Although the law also applies to layaway contracts and certain types of loan documents, it won't involve agreements for credit cards, mortgages, cell phones, cable TV or gym memberships.

The bill is being well received among California's Asian Americans.

"Those who take advantage of the people who don't speak English, they get money out of their pocket without doing (anything)," said Vietnamese immigrant Thuy Tran, 47, of Los Angeles. "I think it's a good idea for those who cannot speak English so they know what's going on."

Not everyone is as enthusiastic about the new law, including the California Motor Car Dealers Association, which opposed the bill because it didn't think the four Asian groups were large enough to justify the resulting expense to dealers, according to spokesman Brian Maas.

"The cost of translating those contracts and any subsequent agreements between the parties ... was substantial, and we felt it wasn't going to be implemented effectively," Maas said.

Chu disagrees, citing the demographic makeup of her suburban San Gabriel Valley district, which is 39 percent Asian.

She adds that more than 12 million people in California speak a language besides English at home, according to census data, and that 83 percent of this group speaks Chinese, Korean, Vietnamese, Tagalog or Spanish.

She predicts similar laws will be passed in other states with large immigrant populations.

Chu acknowledged the law means some additional costs to retailers for translation services but suggested the expense makes good business sense.

"If they are a car dealer that is investing in salespersons who speak a particular language, they are getting a great deal of their business from a particular community," she said. "And if that is the case, they actually stand more to profit than to lose" in complying with the law.

Richard Romero, general manager of two car dealerships in the San Gabriel Valley, supports the bill, saying it's part of doing business in a multicultural area like Los Angeles.

"Everyone should be able to have clear and concise information, especially financial information," said Romero, who manages Toyota of Glendora and Glendora Hyundai. "It provides them with a clear understanding of what they're signing for in the language that's easiest for them to understand."

Romero was ready with translated contracts, but not all businesses are. Chu said those that aren't risk having their agreements voided.

Dan Faller, president of the Apartment Owners Association of Southern California, said the organization probably won't have translated lease agreements ready for its 12,000 members until next year.

In the meantime, Faller said many illegal deals will likely take place, so he's advising owners to require prospective Asian tenants to bring interpreters with them when leases are discussed. The new law does not require translated contracts if the customer brings an interpreter.

But Faller said the real solution to the issue is for Chinese, Koreans, Vietnamese and Filipinos to learn English.

"If someone decides to come to the U.S., they should learn to become an American citizen," he said. "If you rented an apartment in China, would the agreement be in English?"

Terrence Casey, who owns numerous apartments in L.A.'s Koreatown, says until he receives the translated documents from the owners association, he is telling his managers to negotiate with prospective Asian tenants only in English.

But he says that will make it even harder for non-English speaking Asians to find apartments because they won't be able to negotiate in their native languages.

So will Asian versions of contracts contain as much fine print and jargon as typical English contracts, which even most English speakers have trouble understanding?

Bookstore bathrooms making a comeback?

Editor:

I went to the Barnes and Nobles on Third Street Promenade to ask why they closed the bathrooms.

I spoke to three employees, one the manager. The first told me they closed them because of the homeless and security issues.

The second told me they closed them because of security issues and had nothing to do with the homeless.

The next one, the manager said, "The store has no reason to give and doesn't need any to close our bathroooms to the public." She became testy and rude as well as raising her voice at me.

I asked why she was so nasty just because I was inquiring about the bathrooms.

She had nothing but more raised voice nastiness and I left before I was going to get maybe assaulted by her. I never raised my voice, or said anything improper during my inquiry. But she even had a guard come to her side while she berated me for asking.

I called headquarters at Barnes and Noble and they were very surprised at the fact that the bathrooms in this store were closed to the public.

I was assured by the CEO of Barnes and Noble, Mr. Mitch Klippers' secretary, that Barnes and Noble will fix this matter.

As for that nasty loud manager? I guess we can chalk it up to she has a bad attitude.

Cheap shot not appreciated

Editor:

Glenn Morris' letter in the SMDP, June 29 (page 6) regarding "Fahrenheit 9/11" was pretty typical, and maybe a little nicer than some of the comments from the ones that the film angers.

In his letter, Mr. Morris quoted others who no doubt said it better than he could have. And then, he proceeded to take a cheap shot by saying maybe Michael Moore could use a makeover by the "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy" group, which I'm sure Michael Moore would have found amusing.

Saying Michael Moore needed a makeover sure was an intelligent response to a great documentary. It's like the character Lucy in "Peanuts," who when faced with the facts would come back with, "You have a funny nose."

But then, it's so much easier to take cheap shots than to produce a work of art.

And by the way, when I saw the documentary, it was on a Monday morning and there was a line, and the only showing that was not sold out for the day was the 2 p.m. The people in the theatre gave the film a standing ovation when it was over, as they did in the theatre in LA where my daughter and son-in-law saw it. So go ahead with your cheap shots, Michael Moore can cry all the way to the bank.

That said, and in my opinion only, this was a war we never should have involved ourselves in. And one point Michael Moore's documentary made was that there was only one person in the entire Congress who had a child in the service — and that it was mostly the poor and the middle class who stepped up to the plate to defend their country.

Aside from blaming Bush, I also hold Congress responsible, both the Republicans and the Democrats who backed Bush in this war. I think that before Bush or any president and the Congress decide to go to war, it should be mandated that their eligible and elitist children be put in the armed forces and be right there on the front line fighting for their country. Let Mr. Bush send his daughters to Iraq, and then I'll believe him when he talks about sacrificing for your country. If they are not willing to send their children to die, then don't vote to send ours.

Beach shouldn't go to the dogs

Editor:

I would like to voice my exact sentiments of one of your letters to the editor regarding the not even officially proposed "dog beach." Ms. Bell sums it up when she states that the dog beach idea is a bad one.

First, let me state that I have three dogs of my own. I also would like to state that I do not dress them up like humans, do not throw birthday parties for them, do not let them bark (calling out in guardian speak) constantly to the chagrin of my neighbors, and am respectful of the vast majority of my non-dog owning human citizens. I also am an avid surfer, runner and volleyball player.

It is inconceivable that the vocal extremist wing of the "dog party" would be so completely selfish as to assume that a dog beach in Santa Monica would be just fine with everyone or could care less if it is not. I used to live right next to Joslyn Park before it became a dog park. Even though after it became an off leash dog run and could walk my dogs' right over to run, I eventually had to move because of the dust, noise and fecal air pollution. But, that was my problem and the dog run is still there, yet highly controversial even among dog owners.

Like Ms. Bell stated, Santa Monica has bent over backwards to establish many

COMMON SCENTS
BY CAROLE ORLIN

I have an issue to discuss today that involves everyone in Santa Monica (and everywhere else for that matter). Whether or not you read the SMDP, the LA times, watch TV, listen to the radio, drive a car, or use public transportation, there is no doubt that the cost of gasoline is a major concern. When we fill up our gas tanks or purchase any goods or services that have been able to adjust their prices to cover the upward spiral of energy costs, we are directly impacted.

Our dependence on foreign oil became real to me back in the 1970s. I have vivid recollections of waiting in my car for hours, in long gas lines, on designated days to fill up the tank. Every Congress and every President of the United States over the last 30 years, up to and including George W. Bush, has made commitments to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. Even Gov. Schwarznegger has pledged that California will build a "hydrogen highway" to reduce our dependence on foreign oil and protect the citizens from health dangers related to vehicle emissions. I have become increasingly skeptical that there is any real commitment by our government to have us succeed in solving the continued energy crisis. When we look back at the price of gasoline at 38 cents a gallon in 1973 (when the embargo began by Arab oil-producing nations of exports to the United States) and look at our gas prices jumping to $2.22 a gallon in May of this year, (even adjusting for inflation), are we really seeing any progress? Have we done anything to alter our demand for oil or make a serious push for energy efficiency? Is there any reason to believe that the Middle East will become a stable environment and that our suppliers of oil will "cooperate" with us?

An incredibly revealing and shocking book was published earlier this year: "House of Bush, House of Saud" by Craig Unger. Mr. Unger attempts to put September 11 into an historical context of the last 30 years. He unravels how personal fortunes affected public policies of President George W. Bush, his father (George H.W. Bush), and their associates, and how entwined we became (and continue to be) with the ruling family of Saudi Arabia. Between 1981 and 1986, the price of oil per barrel plummeted from $38 in 1981 to $11 in l986. Mr. Unger points out that: "The situation was so bad that Vice President Bush flew to Saudi Arabia to persuade King Fahd that the oil glut had made oil too cheap and was decimating west Texas oil companies."

This one example highlights how the public has been misled about the facts surrounding the oil issue and makes me feel the government's resolve is illusory. Perhaps our relations with the oil producing countries are so enmeshed and secretive that we will never really know the reasons why we are not actively and intensively seeking alternative fuel sources, and making the hydrogen highway a reality.

I know that we Americans pay less at the pump than many other countries, but now I am wondering if it is worth the price we are paying to continue our deeply convoluted relationship with the oil producing countries of the Middle East. I realize that the government's ties to the Middle East also involve many business interests other than oil, but if we could extricate or at least reduce our dependency on them for oil, we might be able to regain some of our strength and autonomy. Dependency by definition implies subordination, which greatly reduces our strength and power. Are we selling our souls for oil? Are we doing things that ultimately harm and weaken us as a country and a world power?

We in California consume more gasoline than any nation in the world, except for the United States as a whole. Further, our demand is growing. We (Californians) burned 10 percent more gasoline during January of this year than we did in January 2003. When you add the fact that our population is projected to grow from its current 35 million to more than 50 million in 2030, the problem will only get worse.

To add to an already volatile situation is the fact that we are competing for oil in a global market place that is seeing China emerge as a major player in the purchase of Persian Gulf crude oil.

According to Business Week magazine (June 21, 2004), over the last 10 years China's emerging middle class, numbering in the tens of millions, has emerged with enormous buying power and is spending much of its money on automobiles.

General Motors Corp. alone is planning to boost its number of vehicles sold there from 386,000 last year to 1.3 million vehicles by 2007. Volkswagen, currently positioned as No. 1 in auto sales in China, plans to spend $6 billion to double production over the next four years.

Competing for oil can mean only one thing — oil shortages and higher prices. There is now a plethora of information about alternative energy sources within our grasp. If we were really committed to change, and our government made the financial and political sacrifices necessary to implement a shift away from oil, it could and would become a reality. Change is uncomfortable at first, but new habits develop quickly, and I know that if we came together we could see change happen in our lifetime.

I have been as blasé as the next person about our dependency on the Middle East for oil, but between current events and a little reading and research about this subject, doors have been opened that cannot be closed areas for dogs. There are far too many people using our beaches the entire year to recreate. Beyond the health, safety and liability issues, the idea of running, swimming, breathing, playing through, over, in and around a beach dog run is ludicrous. La Playa simply was not meant for La Pooch.

Offense or defense?

Editor:

Former President Clinton, his administration officials and other Democrats continue to say it wasn't feasible for them to use military force to go after bin Laden and Al Qaeda, laying out all the reasons why they couldn't go on the offense. Personally, I feel it shows a lack of leadership that Clinton didn't attempt to educate America and take the bold steps necessary. But I digress.

Now, if we accept the premise Clinton continues to put forward that they took terror so seriously — and still tries to claim they did everything to protect the American people, but couldn't go on offense — then why didn't they go on defense?

Why didn't they beef up our ports, our borders, our water supplies, our food supplies, update and upgrade vaccines, and prepare first responders? Why didn't they secure the airlines and airports instead of reworking the 1996 Airline Security Commission report, eliminating or reducing many of their suggestions (and then realizing over $585,000 to the DNC shortly after that change)? Why didn't they insist the various intelligence agencies share critical information with each other? Why didn't they work to integrate data bases to better track who was coming into our country and making sure visitors left when their visas ran out? Why didn't they hire more Arab and Farsi speaking agents to help decipher domestic and international communications? And on and on and on ...

Had they begun working on any of these during the last administration, this president and this Congress would not be forced to spend billions and billions of dollars within a two-year period instead of amortizing it over the last decade.

When you consider that our economy is rebounding at the rate it is — in light of all the "catch up" we now need to do in order to secure the homeland and fight terror abroad — it's nothing short of a miracle we are doing as well as we are. It's because of the stewardship and the leadership of this president.

Personally I feel if they had brought the issue to the forefront for Americans to ponder years ago, we all could have been the eyes and ears for our fellow citizens — so too would the terrorists be on alert that we were aware of them. Might September 11, 2001 have been prevented altogether? Might every intelligence agency been looking harder and longer at those dots? Might the flight school operator been absolutely determined to see that his thoughts about the pilots got to more people and/or the right people?

We'll never know because the Clinton administration showed no leadership on the issue of terror — they were weak and simply reactionary, making excuse after excuse after excuse.

That's a fact.

Copyright law changes could be killer

Editor:

Your readers need to be aware of the Induce Act introduced by Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah. The Induce Act would make it illegal to aid, abet, or induce copyright infringement, which could make companies liable for violations committed by their customers.

This would be an enormous change in our copyright law. In fact, it could threaten many familiar technologies that have both infringing and non-infringing uses, like the videocassette recorder (VCR) and the Apple iPod.

In addition to endangering existing products, S.2560 would preclude future inventions. If the Induce Act is passed, the creators of the next iPod or VCR will have to subject themselves to approval from every major copyright holder before even getting to market.

This will create an unprecedented chilling effect on innovators and those who invest in their companies.

Our country has a long tradition of allowing companies to make information tools, even if those tools can be used to infringe copyrights. This freedom has fueled decades of innovation and created thousands of jobs.

The Induce Act would stall our nation's engine of innovation and drastically upset our copyright balance.

I urge all of your readers to fight it.

All you can eat on the Internet

Editor:

There's no justification for lawsuits against families: A Voluntary Collective License (VCL) system would let Internet providers offer "all-you-can-eat" downloads for a flat fee of $5 a month, and labels would get paid for each song. Total revenue would exceed what the major labels currently earn, but they'll never accept it. Why? Because the new system would make it easy to be a successful musician without signing a major label contract.

Changing your course in life is a necessary evil

HIP TO BE SQUARE

BY CAROLINE BODKIN

Our table inside the coffee house was separated from the table outside only by glass. Sitting alone at the table outside was a kid, 17 or so, dirty, wearing an old T-shirt that said "F--K YOU TOO," and gauged earrings. I wondered if he'll regret them later when the grandkids won't stop sticking their fingers through the sagging holes. Then I wondered if there will even be grandkids.

Outside, the kid put his own fingers up to his steel wool hair and scratched his head. He seemed angry at something and was drawing furiously.

My lunchtime companion, a young woman my age, nodded her head towards the glass and asked me, "Did you ever date someone your parents disapproved of?"

I thought instantly of Dillon, who I'd dated during my senior year of high school. He had a lot of tattoos, smoked, looked generally mean, kept a pretty bad reputation and friends who got into various sorts of trouble. His childhood was short.

"Disapproved?"

"Yeah, like if you'd brought this kid home?"

"Maybe," I said. "But my dad was smart enough not to let me know it if he did."

I looked back to the kid and imagined what this one's home was like. Whether he was poor and lost, or rich and lonely maybe. I wondered who in the world helped this kid feel safe.

When Dillon asked me to the homecoming dance senior year, a whole slew of girls told me not to go, saying he was a player and a dick. But I went. And that was the first of what became a few dates. Through them, I got to learn things about him others never did.

I saw his house (on the poorer side of town), and I met his parents. They seemed dedicated, though they weren't home much. I learned that Dillon lost his virginity by 13, and his best friend in a gang fight two years later. I guess he was "trouble," or just troubled, but he was always sweet to me. Something about the fact that I did my homework and never did sleep with him I think got his attention.

He was a talented artist. His drawings were dark, ominous and all done in charcoal. Were he brought up differently, he might have thought to go to illustration school, but his plan when I met him was to go into the Army. It seemed, at least, a place for some of his anger to go.

Outside, a man joined the kid at the table. He was a businessman type and from the way the kid didn't look at him, it seemed they were father and son — two people who should love each other but were having a hard time at it right then.

In the spring, Dillon and I broke up. I was going to college and that was all I could think about. He punched a hole in the wall that day and we didn't speak for a while, but eventually graduated as distant friends.

There was a crash outside — which broke my reverie — I looked to where the noise came from and I saw a shattered glass next to the table where the father and son were. Son was now yelling something at Dad, about not wanting to go to school, school's bulls--t and he hates the work and what's it for and you've been whitewashed by your s--t corporate job but not me, I don't have to do it like that.

And he stormed off.

Dillon didn't end up going to the Army. He went to a state school on a football scholarship and when I ran into him four years later he was ready to graduate. Still tattooed and still pumping iron and still kind. He thanked me that night — one of the biggest compliments I've ever received — he said if we'd never dated, he'd have never thought he could go to college.

But I told him he was the one who first showed me that changing your own course, through your own will, was possible. Even those who seem most destined in this world wonder about where they're going, and need someone to help them feel safe about it.

The dad was taking care of his bill outside, and somewhere the kid was alone again.

I think it's sad how much good people want to do for each other, and how we find so many fears to keep us from giving or receiving.

almost four years in the military, Spruell followed a path of labor intensive jobs to Fisher Lumber. While he was in the Air Force, Spruell counted money and made sure his Port Austin, Mich. base was fed.

The Washington-based lumber firm Weyerhaeuser Company sold the land out from under Fisher Lumber. The future of the property remains unclear. City Hall officials have expressed interest in the property, though it's unlcear what they would do with the land.

Twice divorced, Spruell lives on the border of Santa Monica and West Los Angeles. He has no children.

Here, the Daily Press sat down with the gate guard to ask about his experiences in the yard and his philosophy on life.

What do you say to direct traffic? What do you think you're known for?

"Comin' in, comin' out (laughs). All that I'm trying to do is make sure nobody gets hurt when they walk out the door. I try to keep them alert, make sure everything that's coming is visible. That's it (laughs). Just yelling. I'm not 'el presidente,' nothing like that. I'm just a regular old guy. That's all."

(Three co-workers break in:) "It's his catch phrases: 'Comin' in, comin' out.' Don't forget 'heads up.' And he prevents about a million wrecks a day, because he directs these big trucks out of that small parking lot. He prevents people from getting run over. He's even got little followers."

(Spruell laughs and resumes:) "Two little kids. I've got a couple of kids that tell their father, 'we wanna see that guy that talks loud.' Cute little kids. To me, they're like my own little gang, you know? Little bitty guys like this (holds his hand about waist high) say 'oh where's the guy? Oh there he is. Oh, how you doin'?"

How do you please people?

"I say good morning, you know, smile to their face, try to ask about the kids, the dogs, whatever pets they have, make them feel good. My thing mainly is to make them feel good ... If I can say 'good morning. Oh, wow, you're not smiling today. Well, how are you doing? How's your kids? How's your cat? How's your mother? How's your father? I don't even know your mother.' Little normal stuff like that. So you feel better.

"Most people when you see them in the morning, they have a grumpy face, (because) they haven't had their coffee yet, maybe their wife didn't talk to them or whatever. But, if I can get a smile out of you, to me that makes your day better too. I'm like therapy. People say, 'well, I feel bad.' I say, well explain to me how you feel bad. Look around the world now. Look at Iran. Look at Pakistan. Look at Libya, and all these other third world countries where somebody's jacking them up every day. Not here in the U.S. You might get a couple traffic tickets or something like that. Some police officer might go off on you sometime. But that's not bad. Over there, people wake up and somebody's tearing their door down.

"But people are always complaining. Why complain? Enjoy what you got now. In 12 more hours you might not have that to enjoy. The way we have these strange people running around and stuff, you know — they want to fly planes and blow things up, stuff like that, you know. That's naughty, man, that's naughty. Very naughty. But the human race is just the human race, that's all. They make mistakes."

What makes you smile in the morning?

"Just to be alive in the United States of America to me is the biggest smile in the world. To me, to wake up in the morning, knowing that you're not going to get it, you're not going to be dead yet, you know? To wake up is a bonus. Think about it. Somebody says 'oh, I feel bad.' You don't know how bad it feels when you don't wake up. So you can't say you feel bad, anyway. If you're dead you're out of it. I've never been dead yet, but I'm saying, you're alive. You're in a great country. You've got a job. You've got people who like you. You're around nice people."

Why did you choose to take this job?

"It's a job, sir, just got to be working, that's all (laughs)."

Can directing traffic in the yard be frustrating?

"Life itself is frustrating, it's just one of the things about life you just deal with. Everything in life is going to get you anyway, so you might as well just deal with it. Just deal with it. Since 1997, no accidents have been here. Not on my watch."

What are the hazards of the job? Have people gotten close to running you over?

"A couple times. You got to be very quick, that's all. They don't mean it. It's just being in the way sometimes, that's all. You got to be nice and honorable, and treat people very well. It's easy to do. You just got to have a smile on your face and say good morning, how you doin'? It works in any job, as long as you do it that a way. As long as you put them first, there you've got it in a nutshell."

How did you end up in Santa Monica?

"I moved out here in 1965. I went to the Air Force for almost four years. Got out. Sold cars for maybe a couple years. I drove for Bekins Van Lines for about eight years. A lot of hard work, cross country up in Canada. Interesting people, making a living. It was a very beautiful job. You go across country, you're your own boss, you meet some interesting people. It was a real good job. To me, any job is good, as long as you've got something to do. If you ain't got nothing to do, things get kind of cranky sometimes. From 1975 or 1974 off and on through 1994, moving furniture, driving a truck, nothing spectacular, just the old American way. Make sure you're paying your taxes, and make sure the government is up."

How has Santa Monica changed in the 39 years you've been here?

"I can remember I used to go walking on the beach at night and nobody would bother you. Now you've got to watch everything, keep turning around down there. It's still a nice place though, still a nice place."

Do you ever get celebrities in here?

"You got Dom Deluise comes in, uh, what's his name, the guy who played with Bill Cosby in 'I Spy,' Robert Culp, he comes in. Who else? Who was that dude? Magnum PI? The chick who played his girlfriend, she came here a couple times. What's his name, the dude who played in the 'Sixth Sense?' Who is that guy? Bruce Willis. He's cool. He's very cool, too. Very cool."

When do you have bad days?

"I've had two bad days: I got married twice. And that was two bad days. And that's about it. Everything else has been great (laughs). See, I'm bald headed. (Because of) my first wife, my hair fell out of my head. You get off work, you got to talk to the woman, you got to be very nice to them, and then say you get off at midnight, they want to talk until two o'clock in the morning. You've got to be back to work at four. That'll kind of work your hair out, you know.

"The second one ... she was just a woman. All women are the same. I don't care what nobody else says. They're all the same. I don't care what color they are. They're all the same. I don't care if they speak German, French, or whatever. They are all the same. Women are women. You got to experience what I'm saying. It's just one of those things that you find in life that you don't forget. I can't explain it about life. It's just one of those things you will encounter, and you'll say 'oh, this crazy old dude was telling about this (laughs).

"Men are stupid. I ain't going to lie about that. Men are very stupid. If they realize that most women ... you just treat them nice and consider them, it works out very nice. But men are stupid. We are. A lot of guys don't admit it, but we are. To me, the smartest thing in the world is a woman. I won't talk a lot about that, but they are very smart. Oh, they might talk a lot. Women talk. They talk every day, same time and same thing. What use is that? But they do, every day. Men, 'good morning, how you doin" that's it."

What do you think about Fisher Lumber closing?

"You've got a bunch of nice people that work here, you know. That means everyone's got to get a new job. We've got some good customers that come here that have been coming here since it's been open. They're going to hate it when we shut it down. I feel for those elderly people, especially. They've been coming here all their life and now they've got to do something different. And they love coming here."

What are you going to do when they close down?

"Well to be honest with you, I'm still a military guy, because I go day by day. In the service you went day by day because you don't know if you're going to be there tomorrow or not. I hope there's something better in 2005 but I haven't gotten anything yet. I'm just waiting to see what happens. I'm here with the company until we close down and then I go find something else to do, that's all."

When do you think you'll retire?

"Never. You got to at least cut grass or dig a ditch, whatever. Do something. Nine times out of 10, somebody says they say they retire today, next Friday he's dead because he did nothing. You've got to do something. The body tells you you've got to do something. You've got to be moving around. If you're not moving around, you will freeze up and die right there, you know. You've got to move around. Work is where I move."

Do you think people appreciate what you do?

"Every last one of them. Every last one of them. Yes, sir."

Challenges brought on behalf of Guantanamo detainees

BY IAN JAMES
Associated Press Writer

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Lawyers have filed suit demanding the U.S. government justify its detention of nine foreign terror suspects at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The challenges, filed Friday in the U.S. District Court in Washington, are the first since the Supreme Court's ruling this week that the prisoners may use American courts to contest their detentions.

"This is the beginning of trying to enforce precisely what the Supreme Court mandated as a way to obtain justice," said Jeffrey Fogel, legal director of the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights. "The first step is that the government has to respond."

Challenges were filed on behalf of two British citizens, three French citizens, a German Turk, a Jordanian Palestinian refugee, an Iraqi refugee and a Canadian.

More lawsuits are expected on behalf of other prisoners. About 600 men from more than 40 countries are being held on suspicion of links to al-Qaida or the fallen Taliban regime of Afghanistan. Some of the detainees have been at the prison for more than 2 1/2 years, with little or no contact with the outside world. Just four have had access to lawyers and three have been charged. Those named in the petitions Friday are not among them.

Fogel said the petitions were filed by lawyers from various law firms working in conjunction with the Center for Constitutional Rights. The lawyers were acting with the consent of the prisoners' families, he said.

In the petitions, some of which named multiple detainees, the attorneys said the government has exceeded its constitutional authority and asked the court to "declare that the prolonged, indefinite, and restrictive detention of (the detainees) is arbitrary and unlawful."

The Center for Constitutional Rights, a nonprofit legal organization, also sent Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld a letter on Thursday demanding access to 53 prisoners at Guantanamo. The Pentagon had yet to respond.

"No decision has been made on how we are going to comply with the Supreme Court ruling," said Maj. Michael Shavers, a Pentagon spokesman. "The ruling wasn't simple and while we certainly will comply, the exact manner is still being discussed."

The Bush administration contends the men are "enemy combatants" who pose a threat to America and can be held without legal rights. The Supreme Court rejected the administration's argument that the detainees could not take their complaints to U.S. courts.

The British citizens, Moazzam Begg and Feroz Abbasi, are among six detainees Bush has said are candidates for the tribunal the military has formed to preside over trials of terror suspects.

Two of the nine were seized in Gambia, lawyers said _ Jamil El-Banna, a Jordanian Palestinian refugee, and Bisher Al-Rawi, an Iraqi refugee, both of whom had been living in Britain.

The others named in the petitions include:

■ French citizens Mourad Benchallali, Nizar Sassi and Ridouane Khalid, all of whom according to lawyers were seized in Pakistan. Lawyers said Benchallali and Sassi were studying the Quran at the time, while Khalid was studying Arabic.

■ Murat Kurnaz, a German Turk whom the lawyers said was detained in Pakistan.

■ Omar Khadr, a Canadian who the lawyers said is 17.

Big-budget musicals turning Las Vegas Strip into Broadway West

BY CHRISTINA ALMEIDA
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS — Twenty-five hundred miles from New York City, in a place known more for lounge acts and showgirls, a Broadway revolution is brewing.

For years, touring companies of America's best theater talent have crisscrossed the country, playing to packed houses from Cincinnati to San Francisco.

Now an increasing number of big-budget musicals, including the Tony Award winning "Avenue Q," are putting down roots in an unexpected place. Instead of choosing cities like Los Angeles and Chicago, the shows are heading to Sin City.

"The great thing about Vegas is that we don't have to go to America," said Kevin McCollum, an "Avenue Q" producer. "America will come to us."

Word that "Avenue Q" would bypass a national tour to begin an open-ended engagement in Las Vegas next year surprised many in the theater world, and was a major coup for the city that thrives on profile.

When the curtain goes up on "Avenue Q" in September 2005, the Las Vegas Strip will be home to no fewer than four big-budget musicals.

"We really are becoming the entertainment capital of the world," said Myron Martin, executive director of the Las Vegas Performing Arts Center Foundation. "We've said it for years, but with Broadway, it adds a little bit more legitimacy."

Las Vegas has long been a draw for big-name entertainment and has played host to Broadway shows on tour. But it wasn't until 1999 and "Chicago" that the local tourism industry realized there was a market for long-running theatrical productions.

The sexy musical parlayed what was supposed to be a 17-week stint celebrating the opening of the Mandalay Bay hotel-casino into a yearlong engagement. It was the first Broadway show to successfully manage an extended run in Las Vegas.

The show's success kept hotel executives thinking of Broadway. When the opportunity arose last year to land "Mamma Mia!" — the high-energy show built around songs from the Swedish pop group ABBA — Mandalay Bay snapped it up.

"The key to the show is the music and the nostalgia that the music brings," said Glenn Medas, Mandalay's vice president of entertainment. "What is unique about that show versus other shows is that when you see `Mamma Mia!' you want to see it again."

For the show's producers, opening a permanent production in Las Vegas was an opportunity to tap into the city's seemingly endless stream of visitors, some 36 million a year.

"People come to Las Vegas to have fun, enjoy the city and enjoy the company of other people," said Nina Lannan, the show's executive producer and general manager. 'Mamma Mia!' fits into that."

The producers figured Las Vegas would be a great market; they just needed to find a resort willing to break the old Vegas standard of short shows. Conventional wisdom always had been to keep the patrons gambling.

The "Mamma Mia!" strategy has been a hit. Since opening in February 2003, the show has filled an average of about 85 percent of the theater's 1,744 seats nightly. The success also prompted a recent rise in ticket prices, which now range from $49.50 to $110 and compare to those on Broadway, where the top ticket is about $100.

But the coziness of Broadway can sometimes be hard to replicate for those shows requiring smaller theaters. For "Avenue Q" it was essential. The show's Las Vegas home at Steve Wynn's new megaresort will be a $40 million, 1,200-seat theater.

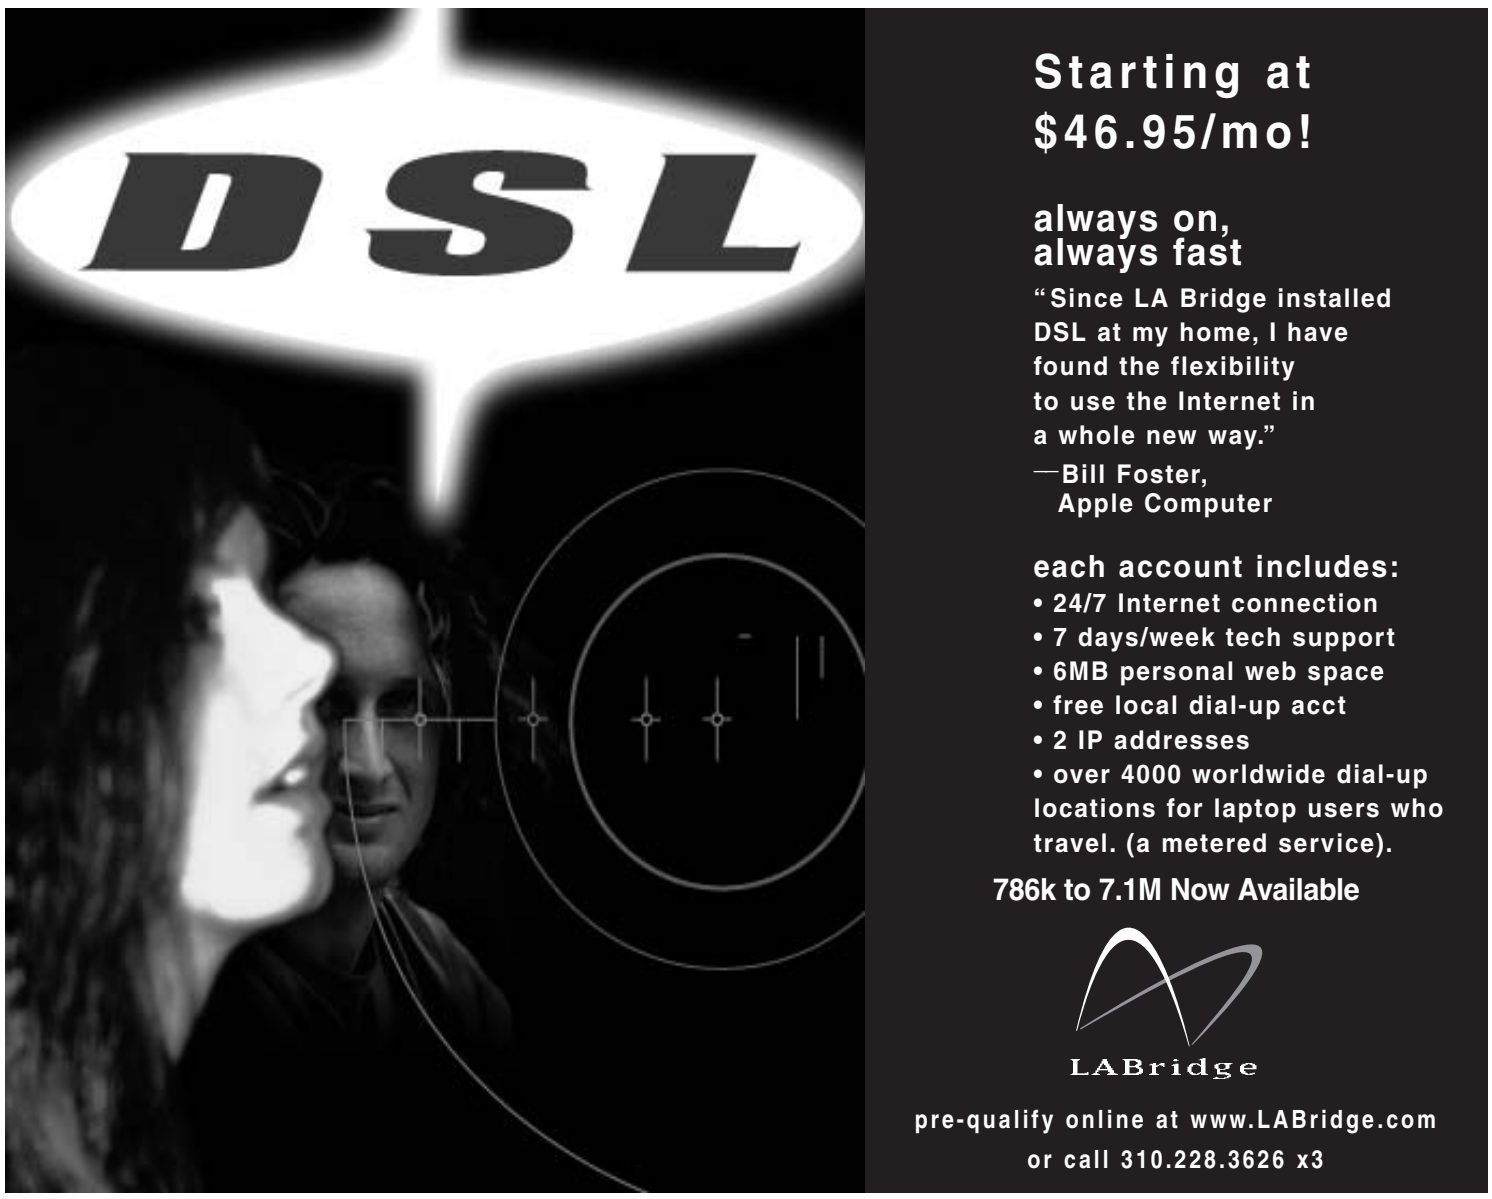

"In Steve we had someone who not only loved the show, but was willing to build an intimate theater," said McCollum, the producer. "Part of the show is the environment in which you see the show."

For some in the business of musical theater, Las Vegas offers an opportunity to bypass Broadway.

Earlier this month, the producers of "We Will Rock You" — the West End musical incorporating the legendary songs of Queen — announced the show's North American debut would be in August, as part of an extended engagement at the Paris Las Vegas hotel-casino.

"Vegas is just a wonderful place to launch a show, when you think about the risks you can take here and the openness of the audience," said Jane Rosenthal with Tribeca Theatrical Productions.

Rosenthal, who co-founded the New York-based company with actor Robert De Niro, said producers decided Las Vegas was a better choice for the show, which was largely panned by critics in London.

Bush's democratic push crashes on shores of Tripoli

BY KEN GUGGENHEIM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — First, President Bush hailed the political handover in Iraq as a giant step toward democracy for the entire Middle East.

Then, his administration announced it was resuming direct diplomatic ties with Libya, where Moammar Gadhafi has ruled for 35 years.

Democracy may be the administration's future hope for the region. But for now, as the warming of relations with Libya makes clear, it still gets trumped by security concerns in the fight against terrorism.

Oil-rich and terrorism-laden Saudi Arabia is not democratic, either, nor is Egypt. But both are U.S. friends.

The United States has not cut ties with Syria, though it considers Syria a sponsor of terrorism.

The administration sees Libya, in particular, as a huge diplomatic success and has gradually moved to improve relations.

Gadhafi has agreed to give up his nuclear weapons program, revealed secrets about the nuclear black market and taken responsibility for the 1988 bombing of Pan 103, promising to pay compensation to relatives of the 270 victims.

"In practice, Gadhafi and his inner circle monopolize political power," the State Department said in its latest human rights report. Libya's "human rights record remained poor, and it continued to commit numerous, serious abuses."

Supporters of Bush's approach note that improving relations with Libya eliminates a potential threat and sets an example for countries such as North Korea and Iran about the benefits of disarming.

Also, U.S. businesses will have new opportunities in Libya's lucrative energy sector.

Still, it was odd the administration would announce it was opening a liaison office in Tripoli just as Bush was making a pitch for democracy in the Middle East. He spoke of his hopes for the region last week after the handover of political power in Iraq.

"I believe that freedom is the future of the Middle East, because I believe that freedom is the future of all humanity," Bush said in Istanbul, Turkey. "And the historic achievement of democracy in the broader Middle East will be a victory shared by all."

Those who endorse Bush's dealings with Libya contend the United States is more likely to promote democracy by having relations with Tripoli.

But the administration has not always used that approach in dealing with dictators, most notably with Fidel Castro in Cuba.

There is "a gap between rhetoric and reality" because the administration has not pressed Libya on democracy, said Michael Rubin of the conservative American Enterprise Institute.

"It's representative of schizophrenia in White House policy," he said.

Libya is still subjected to U.S. penalties because it is on the State Department's list of terror-sponsoring nations. The department says Libya has curtailed support for international terrorism, but maintains contact with "some past terrorist clients."

Despite signs Gadhafi is weary of being treated as a pariah and ready for reform, there also are indications he has not changed.

Most troubling are allegations that Libya took part in a plot last year to kill Saudi Arabia's crown prince. Libya denies the allegations. The State Department says if that proves true, "it would call into question continued development of relations with Libya."

Gadhafi has not stopped his extremist rhetoric. In Europe last April, he said he hoped that no evil would "force us to go back to the days when we use our cars and explosive belts."

In June, Gadhafi expressed regret that President Reagan died before standing trial for the 1986 U.S. airstrikes that killed Gadhafi's daughter and 36 other people. The air raid was in response to a discotheque bombing in Berlin allegedly ordered by Gadhafi.

The rhetoric has not discouraged members of Congress from both parties who support the opening with Libya.

In January, Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., became the first member of Congress to visit Libya in 30 years. "We will be living for quite some time with occasional outbursts of inappropriateness," he said.

"But the facts on the ground are changing," said Lantos, top Democrat on the House International Relations Committee.

Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa., who has visited Libya twice this year, said, "I don't think we have a choice but to engage fully and understand it's not going to be easy along the way."

Fake presidential candidates learn the ropes from real politicos

BY LIZ SIDOTI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — What if Omarosa Manigault-Stallworth, villain of "The Apprentice," tried to scheme her way into the White House?

Or reigning "American Idol" champ Fantasia Barrino gave up her singing career to take on George W. Bush?

R.J. Cutler, producer of "American Candidate," hopes he has an Omarosa or Fantasia among the 10 finalists chosen to compete on the reality TV show. It premieres Aug. 1 on Showtime.

Each week, the candidates will be judged on their completion of a specific challenge meant to show viewers the insides of a presidential campaign, such as holding a campaign rally or participating in a debate. Week by week, contestants will be eliminated; the last candidate standing wins $200,000 and "a nationwide media appearance after the show" to promote his or her platform, according to the program's Web site.

One goal of the 10-episode series, Cutler says, is to illuminate the political process and engage viewers who don't usually get involved.

Actual politicos are guiding the contestants through the steps of a campaign. Rich Bond, a former Republican National Committee chairman and a consultant on the series, sees the show as "yet another way to goose the system to get more people involved."

During a recently filmed segment, the candidates created a 60-second commercial after getting a primer from Carter Eskew, a veteran Democratic consultant, on the finer points of ad-making.

"Political ads are best when the candidate has a clear sense of passion," Eskew told the candidates. "Ads are clearly an attempt for you to get your message out there — unfiltered."

The tutorial over, the candidates retreated to separate offices, where they worked with a consultant of their choosing to write a script, sift through stock videos and choose a location to film.

In one room, Matt Bennett, Wesley Clark's former communications director, huddled over a desk. "You need to put some daylight between yourself and the others," he told contestant Bruce Friedrich. "You can't be too circumspect."

Next door, Erik Potholm, who has done ads for House and Senate candidates, counseled Park Gillespie on the footage he should use and where to film — either at the Lincoln or Jefferson memorial. "I think the Lincoln will give you more options," Potholm said.

After the planning session, the candidates and their consultants hit the monuments to shoot their ads. "I want you to have a conversation with me," Democratic media consultant Morgan Young told contestant Lisa Witter. "A little bit more of a smile."

The 60-second ads were shown to focus groups, who ultimately decided which candidates would advance in the competition.

The candidates say the consultants make the race as close to reality as possible. "It's great to be around these great political minds who have run real campaigns and who have given real discourse on the process," said Chrissy Gephardt, daughter of former real-life candidate Dick Gephardt.

Contestant Malia Lazu said the consultants make the show work. "I come from grass-roots politics and we don't have the money for those kinds of people," she said. "Working with them, that's when it feels real."

Cutler, who directed "The War Room," a documentary on the 1992 Clinton campaign, said the consultants "make this as real an experience as possible."

Eskew, Al Gore's strategist in his presidential campaign four years ago, said he was skeptical at first and joined the show simply to have some fun. The consultants are paid a modest honorarium.

"Look, we had some fun in 2000, but we could probably count those days on one hand. The thing that's fun about this is — and this is kind of corny — that it's nice to see people who are passionate about what they're doing. It's also nice for me not to live and die on how they do."

Republican pollster Frank Luntz said, "I love it more than anything else I'm doing" because of the commitment of the candidates. However, he added: "It confirms my desire to stay out of electoral politics. I don't envy what these candidates do. And I admire them more because of it."

Middle America theater company draws curtain on '9-11'

By The Associated Press

DECORAH, Iowa — The president of a company that owns movie theaters in Iowa and Nebraska is refusing to show director Michael Moore's "Fahrenheit 9/11."

R.L. Fridley, owner of Des Moines-based Fridley Theatres, says the controversial documentary incites terrorism.

Fridley said in an e-mail message to company managers that the company does not "play political propaganda films from either the right or the left."

"Our country is in a war against an enemy who would destroy our way of life, our culture and kill our people," Fridley wrote. "These barbarians have shown through (the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001) and the recent beheadings that they will stop at nothing. I believe this film emboldens them and divides our country even more."

"Fahrenheit 9/11" won best picture at the 2004 Cannes Film Festival and has grossed millions of dollars at the box office. Moore won an Academy Award for an earlier work, "Bowling for Columbine."

Critics accuse the film of being an unfair and inaccurate portrayal about President Bush's policies before and after Sept. 11, 2001.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The farm family that hosted heiress Paris Hilton and her friend Nicole Richie for the first season of "The Simple Life" says life has not always been easy since the show aired.

Albert and Janet Leding of Altus took in the two in while Fox television crews filmed the glamorous pair cleaning chicken coops and examining cows. This season they are driving a recreational vehicle from Florida to California on "The Simple Life 2."

The Ledings say they have received reams of fan mail and dozens of friendly phone calls since the first season aired. But mom Janet Leding says one message hurt her feelings.

When Entertainment Weekly magazine asked Hilton last month if she kept in touch with the Ledings, she replied, "I changed my number."

Leding wonders why.

"She made us sound like we were trying to stalk her," Janet Leding said. "Who's been calling her? We talked to them a couple of times right after they left. Nicole — I talked to her about three times. We weren't trying to call them all the time. We don't care one way or other."

But Janet and her husband Albert said they can't speak for the boys of Altus, population 118, some of whom became more than friendly with Hilton and Richie.

"They may have tried to contact them," Janet said.

NEW ORLEANS — A basketball film starring Ben Affleck is among a number of major film and television projects to be shot in the New Orleans area, prompting the city and state to launch an effort to earn the Big Easy another nickname: "Hollywood South."

In the two years since the state of Louisiana created a tax break for film companies, the New Orleans area has attracted more than $200 million in such projects, Mayor Ray Nagin said last week.

"We are attracting major motion pictures to our city," Nagin said. "There's so much work we're not able to train individuals quickly enough, so we're importing way too much talent."

Ideally, New Orleans would have local companies that can help directors design and build sets in the state, provide makeup artists and hair stylists, even on-location catering for film crews, Nagin said.

PARIS — An appeals court rejected Lance Armstrong's attempt to force a publisher to insert the cycling star's denial of doping allegations into copies of a new book.

Armstrong filed an appeal last week after a lower court rejected his bid to force publisher La Martiniere to insert a rebuttal into "L.A. Confidential, the Secrets of Lance Armstrong."

The appeals court upheld a lower court decision last week — the day before the start of this year's Tour de France, where Armstrong is going for a record sixth straight victory.

On June 21, a judge said Armstrong's request was an abuse of the legal system and ordered him to pay the authors and publisher a symbolic $1.20 fine.

The French-language book, which hit French bookstores two weeks ago, was written by David Walsh and Pierre Ballester. It relies in part on allegations by a former Armstrong assistant, Emma O'Reilly.

In it, she claims Armstrong once asked her to get rid of used syringes and give him makeup to conceal needle marks on his right arm. She acknowledged that she didn't know what was in the syringes.

Armstrong has denounced the book's claims as "absolutely untrue."

VILNIUS, Lithuania — Lawyers for French rock star Bernard Cantat, who was sentenced to eight years in prison for the beating death of his actress-girlfriend, have asked the Lithuanian Justice Ministry to let him serve the rest of his sentence in France.

Cantat, lead singer of one of France's most popular bands, Noir Desir, was convicted of manslaughter in March for beating Marie Trintignant to death in a Vilnius hotel room in July 2003.

The case horrified many in France, where both were well-loved. Trintignant was the daughter of film star Jean-Louis Trintignant and a noted actress in her own right.

Mindaugas Silkauskas, deputy director of the International Law Department of the Justice Ministry, said the ministry had already asked the country's Prisons Department to draft the necessary documents needed to place Cantat under French supervision, according to the Baltic News Service.

The Justice Ministry will decide if Cantat should serve his sentence in France. It's not yet clear if or when he could be sent to France.
