More access, more funding challenges in school arts

SMMUSD seeks enrichment for students amid budgetary changes

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

CITYWIDE Hundreds of students participated in Santa Monica High School's fifth winter dance showcase this past December, and officials noted that attendance was so strong at previous editions of the event that two performances were scheduled this year.

At Malibu High School, 23 of 24 students in the Advanced Placement photography passed the AP Studio Art 2-D Design exam in the spring of 2014.

The developments pointed to an ongoing dichotomy in the Santa Monica-Malibu School Unified School District, which is trying to make arts programming available to more and more students as it continues coping with a variety of funding challenges.

New partnerships and activities in arts disciplines came alongside major changes in how the Regional Occupational Program will operate and shortcomings in the district's centralized fundraising model.

"This has been a unique year in our district," said Janis Gabbert, chair of the district's advisory committee on visual and performing arts.

Gabbert presented her committee's work and recommendations to the Board of Education during its June 24 meeting, and further conversations are expected in the coming weeks. The school board plans to approve the committee's 2015-16 goals by October.

PROJECT DESCRIPTION: The proposed project would involve demolition of an existing 325-space public parking structure (City Parking Structure #3) and development of an approximately 100,000 square-foot theater building consisting of 90,000 sf of floor area for a theater use with up to 16 screens, 2,700 seats, and associated lobby, lounge, and food service areas; and 10,000 sf of retail/restaurant commercial space available for lease to commercial tenants unaffiliated with the theater operations. Dump Trump and The Terminator, Too

COMPARED TO COUNTRIES THAT ARE A thousand years old, the U.S. is essentially a teenager. And we often act it. Americans are enthusiastic and open but we can also be brash and rude. Of late, it seems we're getting worse.

One thing we've definitely gotten is heftier. In fact, one of three Americans is obese. And while many countries don't have enough food, July 4th in America includes eating contests on national TV. This year's winner at Coney Island consumed 62 hot dogs, 13,000 calories, in 10 minutes. And regurgitated it all afterwards. A lovely image ... not!

As a nation, we've also gotten obscenely narcissistic. Our top rated TV programs are reality shows highlighting people's extraordinary shallowness. And get this, Americans post 100,000,000 selfies a day. So it only makes sense that extreme narcissism has come to politics, witness Donald Trump currently polling second for the GOP presidential nomination. Who is more like an obnoxious teenager than the Donald, the bloviating billionaire?

It started with his "announcement speech" on June 16 in the gaudy Trump Towers. In Donald's grand entrance he rode down the escalator like a puffed-up potentate. (Trump has gotten so heavy soon he'll need a girdle.)

Ever-pompous, Trump bragged about the large crowd as if testimony to his charisma. However, reportedly Trump paid out of work actors $50 to cheer for him. Then began his long-winded, almost incoherent speech. Repeatedly, Trump reminded the audience how rich he is, which if you think about it, is pathetic.

In fact, Trump's boorish behavior somehow reminded me of the 1958 best-selling book "The Ugly American," turned into a movie starring Marlon Brando. (For trivia buffs, Brando's sister, Jocelyn, a Santa Monica resident, had a supporting role.) All of this to say, if anyone is the epitome of the "ugly American" it's the bully billionaire Trump. And no, I'm not referring to just his hair.

Back to Trump's speech. As he rambled it became obvious that he hadn't bothered to write one or, if he had, he was so in love with the sound of his own voice he abandoned it. Soon he managed to offend much of the world by describing Mexican immigrants as "rapists, murderers and drug dealers." Imagine the potential damage Trump could cause if he were president for even a day? Or an hour, for that matter. The thought gives me chills.

Switching subjects, recently I listened to another narcissist, our former governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger. He was being interviewed by Howard Stern, who's not long on humility either. Stern asked Arnold about the end of his 28-year marriage to Maria Shriver. But before I comment on Arnold's bizarre answer let's review an aspect of his personal life.

Amazingly, Arnold campaigned for governor knowing he had fathered a "love child" with his housekeeper in 1997. In fact, Joseph was born five days after Arnold's youngest child with Maria, Christopher. Arnold must have had to juggle delivery rooms. But it wasn't until 2011, while in marriage counseling with Maria, that Arnold finally confessed. (To have been a fly on that wall.)

Inexplicably, Arnold kept the housekeeper working for him. In fact, Joseph, who unfortunately has Arnold's chin, was practically raised in the Schwarzenegger's Brentwood home.

Arnold told Stern that he took "full responsibility" for his infidelities but proceeded to blame his and Maria's therapist for the breakup of his marriage. Commenting on that, Dr. Drew Pinsky of the HLN Network's "Dr. Drew" show noted that Arnold's "taking responsibility" sounded like empty words. In fact, Dr. Drew (not to be confused with Dr. Dre) suggested that Schwarzenegger may have a borderline narcissistic personality disorder. (I say forget "borderline.")

Despite leaving Sacramento with three times the debt as when he took office, Arnold was still quite popular. Had he been a naturalized citizen, he likely could have won the GOP 2008 presidential nomination. (Had details of his love-child surfaced, he couldn't have won dog catcher, assuming dog catcher was ever an elected office.)

Trump is popular with 12 percent of the GOP but a record 57 percent view him "unfavorably."

And while years ago the Donald's ludicrous "birther" campaign made him look like a complete fool, his "Mexican rapists" comments got Trump dumped. NBC, Univision, Macy's, Serta, NASCAR and the PGA are among those who have ended their business relationship with the bombastic Donald.

Thankfully, Trump has zero real desire or chance of being president. In fact many pundits predict he will quit, and in an ugly manner, long before the GOP selects their nominee. So why is he running? The same reason Arnold blames the therapist. Ego.

At gunpoint you couldn't force me to view Arnold's "Terminator Genisys," which is bombing at theaters everywhere. But I'll absolutely be watching in August when the Donald bullies his way onto the GOP debate stage. Trump's bound to be rude and repulsive. A lovely image ... not!

A wonderful ending to an almost disastrous event

MANY OF YOU MAY NOT KNOW IT, BUT my whole life I've been involved swimming. My first swim team was at age six. Until I went to college, I don't remember not being on a swim team. Plus many years as a lifeguard, teaching swimming and water skiing, and many Red Cross certifications including the highest one; water safety instructor. Well with that and all my years of medical training, especially with emergency room work, it all came to fruition this morning. And I am so grateful I was there.

I was doing my swim workout this morning at the Santa Monica College pool, which is a 50 meters in length. I know many of the swimmers there including this one woman I had met at a few weeks ago who happens to be an excellent swimmer. Anyway, as I was coming up on about 25-meter mark, which is halfway in the pool, I saw someone on the bottom of the pool. This is not unusual as many people occasionally dive to the bottom and spring up or just dive to the bottom and kind of swim around a little and then come up.

But after my second stroke in passing her, I sensed something wasn't right. Just my sixth sense, after years of training in medicine and swimming. I then saw her hand twitch a little and I immediately knew something was very wrong. Instinctively, in mid stroke, I dove to the bottom of the pool (about 10 feet) and grabbed her. She was frozen like a solid block and I knew instantly she was having a seizure. I knew I had to get her up to the surface immediately. This was not easy as her entire body was in complete spasm, curled up in a ball. When I got to the surface of the water, I had to lift her to get her head out of the water as even her neck was rigid. I quickly put her on top of the lane line so I could keep her mouth out of the water. I also yelled to the lifeguards. Then with my lifeguard experience, I was able to get her to the side of the pool with her mouth facing up. When I got to the side of the pool, the guards were there and we got her on the deck.

Then I went into ER doc mode. No time to think, just act. Establishing a clear air passage and make sure she could breathe is essential. I turned her on her side, making sure that she did not bite her tongue or worse yet, swallow it. I also told the guards to call 911 (some one has to actually say this, never assume). I could hear her struggling to breathe but still passing air. Since she was still seizing, I did what I could to just keep her airway open. They brought some oxygen over and I was able to put under her nose, all while making sure she did not swallow her tongue.

I attended to her for the next 10 to 15 minutes until the paramedics came and I filled them in. She slowly but surely started to come around. Finally she eventually spoke; very slowly and hesitantly but otherwise appeared to be okay except that she was post-ictal (fatigued, disoriented, post seizure state). Of course they took her to the emergency room to be checked out. I did ask them if they could bring her to St. Johns hospital, which is right across the street from my office.

I called the ER doc shortly thereafter and he said she was resting fine.

He said she was extremely lucky that an experienced swimmer and doc was there for her. One major gulp of water at 10 feet down could have been disastrous.

Now it is 2 p.m. and I just came back from seeing her in the ER and she is being released. Her friends are picking her up.

She had no idea of what happened, so I filled her in.

She was stunned and extremely thankful. I gave her my card and told her to call me if she needed anything.

I can't tell you how grateful and honored I was that I was there at that time. I have had a lot of near death and death experiences pass in front of me with all my medical experience and other life experiences, but none where if I was not there immediately, the results could have been disastrous.

She was in the worst place she could be; in the middle of the pool and 25 meters away from either of the lifeguards.

It would have been at least another 30 - 60 seconds or more before anyone even noticed her or even able to get her.

So this is a very, very happy ending to what could have been fatal.

I am very thankful that I was able to do what I did this morning.

Thank you for taking the time to read this.

P.S. And a big thanks to mom and dad for all those darn swim lessons!

Comic Pros and Comic Cons

SAN DIEGO COMIC-CON IS HERE ONCE again. By the time you're reading this the throngs will be lined up outside Hall H, the celebrities will land at the Marina Hilton helipad and cosplayers of all persuasions will be touching up the last minute details of their looks. Common wisdom dictates that as the show grows, the quality dips. To that I say "Don't be so glib."

My first time at the Con came when I was 18. Working for Geoffrey's Comics in Gardena, the store decided to spend the thousands of dollars at a chance to sell to people from all over the world. We did okay enough. My days consisted of ferrying ice across the convention floor, standing up for 10 hours and longingly staring at the massage booth that had set up next to us. But in my spare time I got to roam the floor, sometimes before the doors opened to the pubic. In those moments I got to chat up creators big and small, peek over Neal Adam's shoulder as he drew his first Batman book in years and worked out some choice retailer-to-retailer deals.

This year will be my return to San Diego Comic-Con after a four-year hiatus that included a failed career, a marriage proposal and subsequent wedding and a dive into the world of comic book store investment. The last time I went, in 2011, the Con was definitely packed, with a lot of big names rushing to make an impression. The Walking Dead was promoting the launch of its TV Show with a single, regular-sized booth, no larger than the one I worked when I was 18 (more on that later). A couple of years ago their booth space was the field at Petco Park where people were invited to run a zombie obstacle course. Things change, that's the nature of the show.

In the years since my hiatus, a lot of tangentially related media has crept in to the show. It is now common practice for fall shows to make their first big splash, in some instances screening their pilot episodes for the massive crowds in the convention halls, with varying success. Big super hero movies get their push, while mainstays like Artist's Alley face an uncertain future. However, some major players are choosing to skip Comic Con, Marvel included (blasphemy) either to promote elsewhere or because or lack of success in years prior.

The show is ever evolving and with it come pros and cons. A celebrity sighting is always nice, especially if you can spot them in costume, Adam Savage of the Mythbusters, I'm looking at you (I hope). And while the bottleneck at the middle of the floor seems to grow in size and force every year, you can still find rarities, Con exclusives, artists, weirdos, legends and still have time left over to eat an overpriced Cookie next to a Klingon.

Back when the show started attendees and retailers each would sleep in the lobby of the Cortez hotel in downtown San Diego. You could chat up the creators of Spider-Man, and if you were lucky, they'd invite you out to dinner. You can still schmooze today, provided you know where to go, or if you can make it past the velvet rope events that seem to proliferate more and more each year.

I'm anxious to return to the show. I'll be on the convention floor when you read this. And despite the grumbles, despite a little more work to find "actual comics", it'll still be fun. Don't let anyone tell you different.

Dr. Seuss's The Cat In The Hat

Not a word has been touched or added to Dr. Seuss's classic, ensuring anyone who's read the story will find themselves transported into the world they've always imagined. The Cat in the Hat is a children's book written and illustrated by Theodor Geisel under the pen name Dr. Seuss and first published in 1957. Geisel gave varying accounts of how he created The Cat in the Hat, but in the version he told most often he was so frustrated with the word list from which he could choose words to write his story that he decided to scan the list and create a story based on the first two words he found that rhymed. The words he found were cat and hat. The book met with immediate critical acclaim and financial success.

The Pier

Explore the Deep Space/Deep Sea Connection at Santa Monica Pier Aquarium

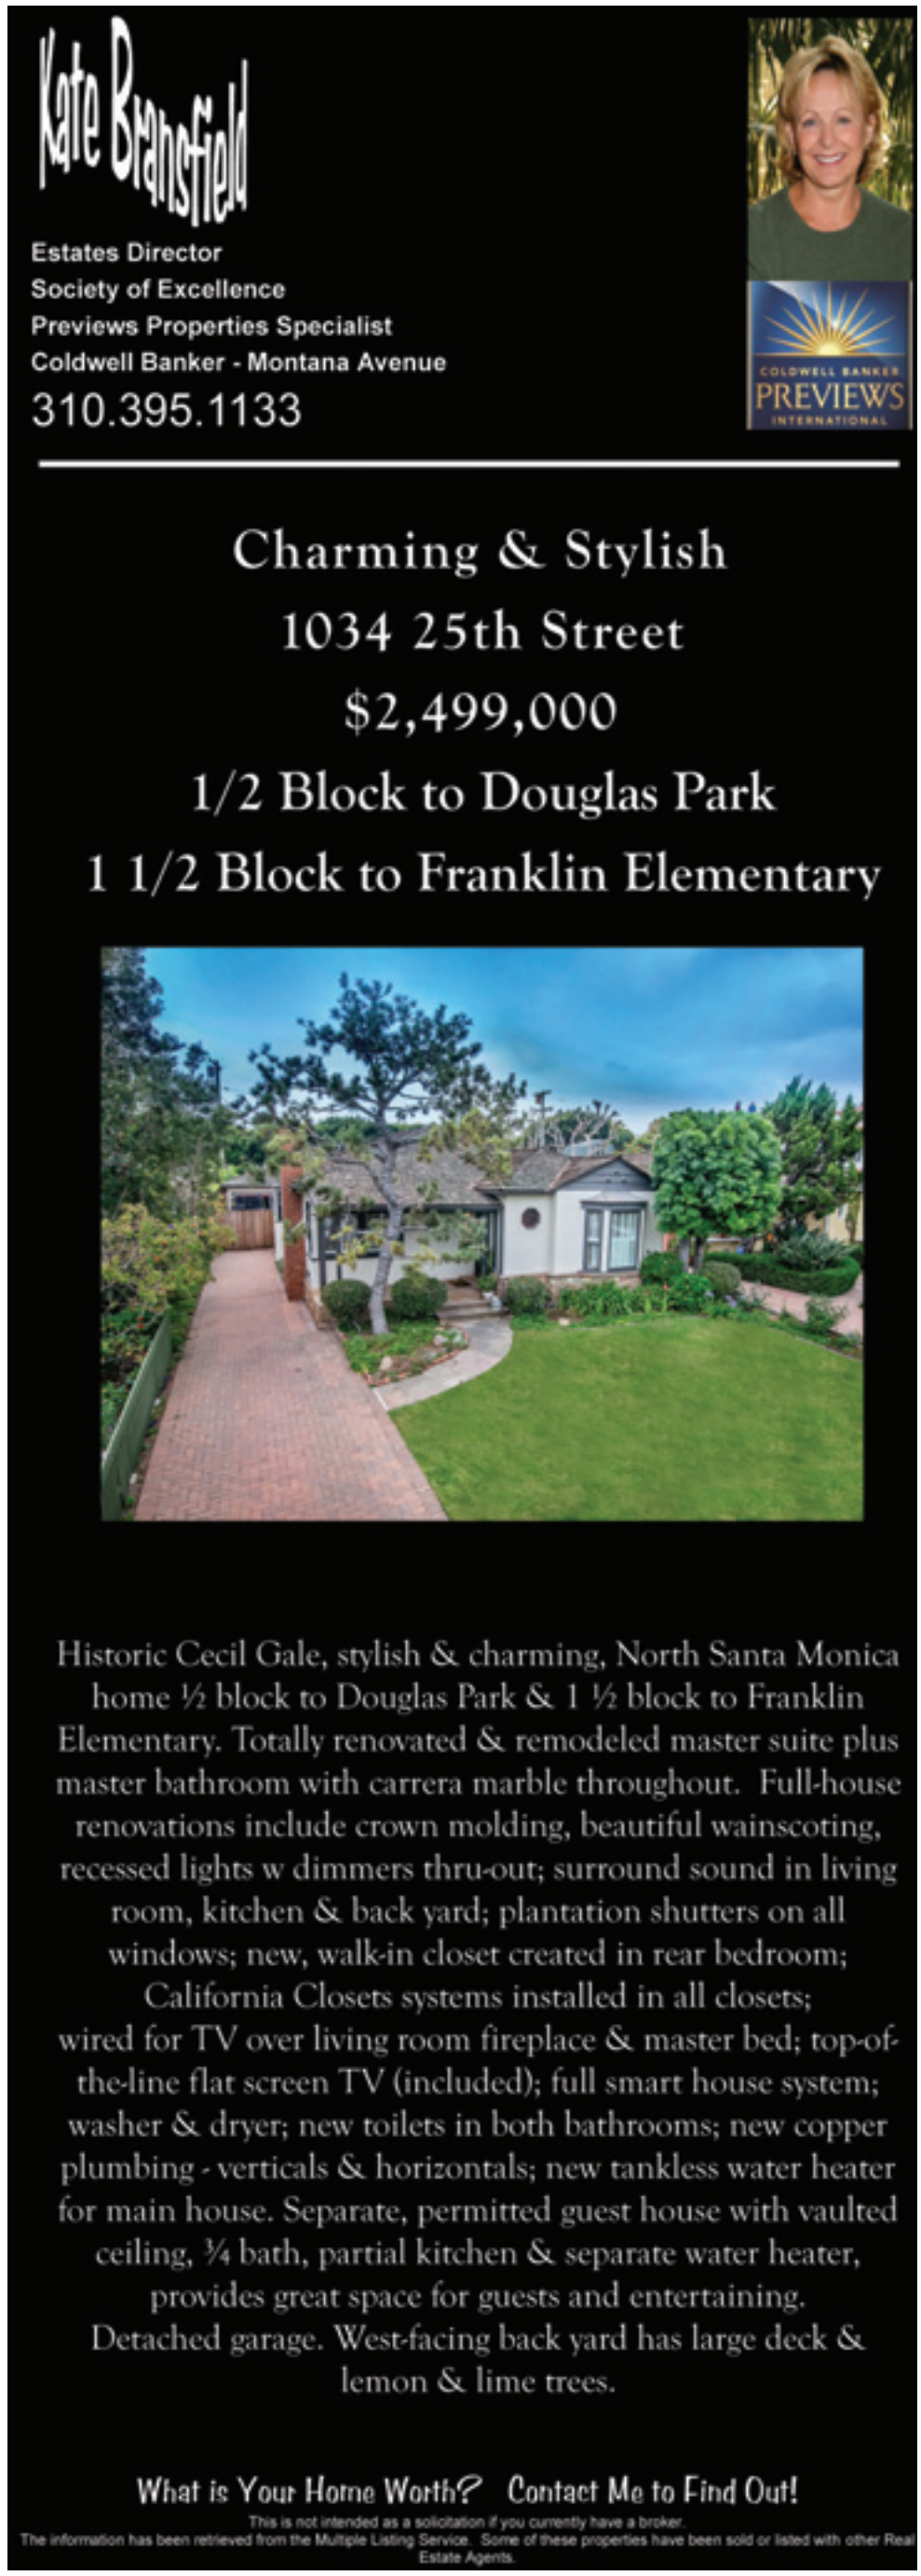

Celebrate exploration of the sea and the stars at Heal the Bay's Santa Monica Pier Aquarium on July 14, during NASA's flyby of the dwarf planet Pluto and its largest moon, Charon. Beginning at 3 p.m., the Aquarium will remotely broadcast a live conversation with an educator at the Jet Propulsion Lab in Pasadena as NASA's probe, New Horizons, makes its closest pass ever at Pluto. New Horizons — the fastest spacecraft ever launched — will attempt to take detailed measurements and record images and other data using techniques comparable to those used to explore the deep sea. The Aquarium will continue the Deep Space/Deep Sea connection through presentations, arts and crafts projects and activities on July 18 & 19.

The Santa Monica Pier Aquarium is located at 1600 Ocean Front Walk (beach level, beneath the Carousel building), Santa Monica. Hours: Tuesday - Friday: 2 - 6 p.m.; weekends: 12:30 - 6 p.m. Children 12 and under: free when accompanied by a paying adult; all others: $5 per person. Groups of 10 or more: $3 per person, regardless of age.

The Santa Monica Pier Aquarium is Heal the Bay's marine education facility located beach-level, just below the Carousel, at the Santa Monica Pier. The Aquarium is open to the general public http://www.healthebay.org/santa-monica-pier-aquarium/plan-your-visit/location-hours-fees and attracts more than 85,000 visitors per year. Since Heal the Bay acquired the Aquarium in 2003 from UCLA, more than half a million visitors have been welcomed during public hours and nearly 140,000 students have been educated during in-house education programs. http://www.healthebay.org/santa-monica-pier-aquarium/education paign to ban microbeads, tiny pieces of plastic often found in body washes and toothpaste that often end up in oceans and lakes.

This expedition was the group's 16th, and consisted of three legs of travel by boat, during which they conducted research on plastic pollution and brought together experts in the field to discuss new ideas for 5Gyres' communication with the public. The first leg took the non-profit from Miami to the Bahamas and the second from the Bahamas to Bermuda. Terry joined them on the third leg, which took him and a crew of about thirty people from Bermuda to New York City.

"I did community service in high school with 5Gyres so I knew the expedition was happening a couple months before hand," said Terry. "But I wasn't able to shell out the money to go."

However, things changed when he received a call from 5Gyres co-founder Marcus Eriksen who told him his ticket had been sponsored by the outerwear company Helly Hansen.

With his spot on the trip secured Terry flew to Bermuda to meet up with the non-profit before the trip to New York.

"I was really excited to meet all the incredible people taking part in the expedition," said Terry. "It was a good chance to start networking." Among these people taking part in leg three were musician Jack Johnson, Nat Geo reporters Sergio Izquierdo and Eric Gonzales, and Mike Biddle, founder of MBA Polymers.

When the expedition began Terry and the crew got to work conducting research and discussing ideas for 5Gyres.

"Every day we trawled for plastic nonstop and every sample had to be analyzed," said Terry. "This meant using tweezers to pick out micro and macro plastic which took hours."

When they weren't trawling, members of the expedition were giving presentations. "After every meal someone gave a presentation on what they do and their ideas for 5Gyres," said Terry. "Everyone gave a talk and we'd have even longer discussions afterwards which I took part in."

For Terry, one of the standout moments of the trip was his presentation and the reception it got from the crew. "They were very enthusiastic about me continuing my policy work with Starbucks," said Terry, "It was great to get validation from that group of people."

This work with Starbucks was something Terry had conducted as part of an independent study program offered by his school. The main goal of his work was developing a policy proposal for coffee chains like Starbucks that aimed to cut down in-store waste by providing reusable mugs to "for-here" customers. Now, back in Santa Monica, he plans to continue this project in addition to working with 5Gyres more generally. "Marcus wants me to be a public face of 5Gyres for the public youth base," said Terry, "I'll be giving talks on the work I've done and getting more involved with their microbead campaign."

Reflecting on the voyage, Terry believes the non-profit accomplished what they set out to do.

"The expedition ended with 5Gyres having a clear new message," said Terry. "Many people still believe in the apocryphal island of trash in the middle of the Pacific which leads to suggestions of cleanup efforts. Plastic pollution in our oceans is more akin to a plastic smog. Plastic is being pumped out of 'horizontal smokestacks' such as our rivers and sewers."

The non-profit believes the solution to this problem is reducing the use of plastic "upstream" in cities like Santa Monica. Terry has already begun working with them to accomplish this.

school days and has no suspensions or major behavioral issues.

"This person is invisible to us," district administrator Irene Gonzalez-Castillo said.

The student — and the student's peers — became a little more visible last month when the Board of Education examined how the district serves its English learners.

Gonzalez-Castillo used the anonymous case study to highlight the challenges of determining the best academic pathways for students with varying degrees of fluency in the district's primary language.

About 9 percent of SMMUSD students (1,020) are considered English learners, according to Evan Bartelheim, the district's director of assessment. They speak 32 different languages and come from 50 different countries. Nearly two-thirds of them live in Spanish-speaking homes. Some 70 percent were born in the U.S.

"Underlying all of this is the relationship component," Bartelheim said. "We need to know who they are and their needs."

The district also has 184 long-term English learners — students in grades 6-12 who have been in SMMUSD schools for at least six years but who are still classified as below basic in language arts. That figure includes 74 at Santa Monica High School.

According to Gonzalez-Castillo, who cited research by Laurie Olsen, these students tend to struggle academically, are "stuck" at intermediate rubric levels and aren't engaged in class despite showing proficiency in social language. The likelihood that a long-term English learner completes a-g college requirements is just 20 percent.

They have a desire to continue education after high school, Gonzalez-Castillo said, but often they "don't recognize they don't have the skills ... to be successful in college and career. They don't realize they don't have the courses and the skills to get there."

As the district's English learners gain fluency, they are evaluated and reclassified with the hope that they won't need extra help all the way through high school.

But the district is relatively conservative when it comes to moving students from one proficiency level to the next — its rates are lower than those of the county and state.

"There's a lot of subjectivity in reclassifying," board vice president Jose Escarce said. "What's better for students? Are we taking the right approach (in being conservative)?"

Gonzalez-Castillo acknowledged that the district's system for keeping tabs on students after they advance through language assistance programs is imperfect.

"We know that (these students) struggle with reading and writing," she said. "We need to know these students deeply and make good decisions about reclassifications."

But, she added, "After reclassification, we don't have a good system for keeping track of them."

ART

The district is in the process of overhauling its popular ROP offerings to meet new state standards for career technical education.

ROP funding from the state for more than a dozen courses at Samohi and Malibu High — in digital design, film production, photography, acting, dance, stagecraft and technical theater — dried up last month, according to the committee's report.

Gabbert urged the board to continue funding visual and performing arts courses that have been categorized under the ROP umbrella. More than 850 students took ROP courses this past year.

Meanwhile, this past school year was the first in which money from the Santa Monica-Malibu Education Foundation's centralized campaign was implemented, allowing the district to offer a smattering of new arts programs.

SMMEF, which raised about $2.3 million in a 17-month drive that officials hoped would bring in $4 million, supported arts programming in a big way. The foundation contributed more than $557,000 towards the expansion of visual and performing arts programming in elementary schools and paid for an additional $346,000 worth of arts activities in the district this past school year, according to the committee's report.

The district made "substantial progress" in improving access to arts education, committee officials said, and Gabbert urged the school board to maintain funding for programming through a partnership with PS ARTS.

The partnership allowed 91 percent of elementary students to receive visual arts instruction, 78 percent to receive music instruction, 62 percent to receive theater instruction and 34 percent to receive dance instruction.

Other benefactors have also helped the district on its quest to provide arts enrichment for all students. Money from the Peggy Bergmann Arts Endowment Fund, for example, was used to pay for instruments and semi-private lessons for several hundred financially disadvantaged students.

"It's a huge closing of the achievement gap we're making happen," Gabbert said.

FILM REVIEW

THE OVERNIGHT

Rated R
79 Minutes
Limited release June 19th, / wider release June 26th

The Overnight is an intimate look at the lives of two young couples dealing with the sense of perceived isolation that comes with the first addition to the family, where old friends may fall more distant before new friends with kids surface in their neighborhood environment. On one night, our four protagonists encounter some unexpected twists that add outrageous "color" to their daily routine. The story shows us what happens when established inhibitions are broken down through the unexpected outlet that new acquaintances and unforeseen circumstances can bring over the course of an evening. A current of hilarity runs beneath what seems on the surface to be a serious tale.

This movie lets us look into a mirror of the moral conditions imprinted upon us by our society, of our preconceptions on how to handle those natural sexual urges always mischievously lurking under the surface of our respectable adult facades. The hypocrisy is that we believe that we erase the temptation to cheat on our partner by framing our existence by with strict moral rules. However, the constraint of these rules is often at the very heart of a misbegotten lapse in loyalty.

Our society in this country has especially harsh rules about nudity. While living abroad in my late teens to early 20's, I witnessed the startlingly different attitude that Europeans had towards their bodies. While visiting some French friends for a family picnic, it was suggested that we all go swimming in the lake. Everyone, including children, immediately stripped naked out in full view in the public grounds without any embarrassment, and climbed into their bathing suits. You find that when no one else feels awkward, you become completely relaxed about it as well. Often in our country, our inhibitions can compound themselves and then spread to affect those around us.

Adam Scott, Taylor Schilling, Jason Schwarzman and Judith Godreche create wonderful and natural characters as the couples. Be advised that the make-up team uses some prosthetics (you'll see). Writer/director Patrick Brice has created a tightly written narrative. It's not surprising to see that the Duplass Brothers, Mark and Jay, are involved in the production — this film's style is similar to their quirky, fun HBO series, Togetherness.

This movie is not for kids. Ironically though, kids would take in stride all the unexpected and awkward moments that happen in the film much more easily than do adults, as their innocence is still intact. In fact, the two boys in this story are the foundation of its balance. In a pivotal scene, we see that the kids lack the inhibitions of the adults, and it adds a wonderful sense of comedic absurdity to a potentially shocking scene. In The Overnight, some very sensitive subject matter is handled with great humor. Writer/director Patrick Brice was nominated for three audience awards for this film: Sundance Grand Jury, SXSW Film Festival and Edinburgh Film Festival. See this movie, then look at yourself and have a good laugh.

KATHRYN WHITNEY BOOLE was drawn into the entertainment industry as a kid and never left. It has been the backdrop for many awesome adventures with crazy creative people. Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

Heal the Bay is a nonprofit environmental organization making Southern California coastal waters and watersheds, including Santa Monica Bay, safe, healthy and clean. We use science, education, community action and advocacy to pursue our mission.

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON JULY 4 AT ABOUT 2:10 A.M.

Officers received a call from a resident in the 2600 block of 25th St. about escorting partygoers out of his residence. When officers arrived they saw a male subject being pushed out of the residence and a woman subject being pulled into the residence with the door slamming behind her. Moments later, the door opened and the woman ran out along with another male subject. The officers' investigation revealed the woman was a stripper and the resident had demanded sexual acts. The victim refused and attempted to leave the residence but was pulled back in by the resident and assaulted with the intent to commit a sexual act. The resident was arrested for Kidnapping and Assault to commit specified sex offenses. Richard Jay Rogers 47, of Santa Monica had bail set at $100,000.

Sudoku

Fill in the blank cells using numbers 1 to 9. Each number can appear only once in each row, column, and 3x3 block. Use logic and process of elimination to solve the puzzle. The difficulty level ranges from (easiest) to (hardest).

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Because the walkway in front of a Publix supermarket in Fort Lauderdale had seen its share of Girl Scout cookie sellers, Patrick Lanier apparently thought the venue a natural for his product. On June 4, he plopped down a live, 5-foot-long shark he had just captured, and which he hectored shoppers to buy, asking $100 (and occasionally tossing buckets of water on it to keep it shimmering). He had less success than the cookie-peddlers, and in short order loaded it back into his truck, took it to an inlet and released it. However, he did avoid the police; it is illegal to sell fish without a commercial license.

■ Ingrid Paulicivic filed a lawsuit in September (2010) against Laguna Beach, California, gynecologist Red Alinsod over leg burns she bafflingly acquired during her 2009 hysterectomy -- a procedure that was topped off by the doctor's nearly gratuitous "name-branding" of her uterus with his electrocautery tool. Dr. Alinsod explained that he carved "Ingrid" in inch-high letters on the organ only after he had removed it and that such labeling helps in the event a woman requests the return of the uterus as a souvenir. He called the branding just a "friendly gesture" and said he did not know how the burns on Paulicivic's leg occurred. (Update: In 2012, a court in Orange County, California, ruled that Alinsod's regimen did not constitute malpractice.)

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You could be taken aback by a situation that is changeable and somewhat touchy. Use your sixth sense with a money matter that is extremely important to you. Be aware that you might need to allot some social time for your friends. Tonight: Invite loved ones to join you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ A friend or work associate will play a strong role in making plans for a short getaway. When you hear this person's ideas, you might realize that you are not on board. Revise your plans while you can. Be more direct with someone at a distance. Tonight: Whatever pleases you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ It might be wise to pull back and understand what has to happen in order to make your life work appropriately. A conversation with a loved one will allow you to open up to a novel idea. Nearly anything could become possible. Tonight: Add some mystery to your image.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Be more detailed in your description of what you want. Somehow, you see situations differently from how others see them. Be sure to ask for more feedback, as you easily could make a mistake. A partner who has been difficult might loosen up. Tonight: TGIF!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ You might be focused on the coming weekend and opting for a more leisurely few days than what you have had in the recent past. Taking time off will help you deal more effectively with others. Use this period to reflect on what you want from someone. Tonight: Schedule a massage.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ If you can, take off early and head to your favorite weekend spot. You might enjoy yourself much more than you realize. You have a way about you that draws a lot of attention, especially when you are out of your immediate circle. Tonight: Go for something exotic.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You might decide to do something differently from how you have done it in the past. Follow through on your feelings; you will find that your plans become invigorated as a result. A friend has an unusual way of demonstrating his or her caring. Tonight: Add some romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You might consider taking some time off from your usual style. You are likely to enjoy making plans and getting together with others. All you have to do is go along for the ride. Letting go of a need for control is good for you, though it could be difficult. Tonight: Say "yes."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You will discover that you have little choice but to put up your feet and relax. You might try to stir up some fun; however, unless it fits into your normal routine, you could find yourself all alone. Someone you care about will appreciate your efforts. Tonight: Friday night rituals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Whatever you touch has an element of creativity. A loved one might distance him- or herself, as he or she might not be used to seeing you in this manner. You could find that your feelings are changing about a friend. Tonight: Make amends rather than create an uproar.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ You will be focused on a personal matter. Dealing with a family member could be somewhat difficult, and it might take all you've got to make it work. Your feelings could be changing about this situation, especially if you can detach. Tonight: Invite friends over.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ A friend might be quite rigid. Be more laid-back and observant when it comes to this person. Know that you cannot change anyone but yourself and your reactions. Tap into your imagination when speaking with a child or new friend. Tonight: Let it all happen.

Friday, July 10, 2015

This year you express some of your mental ramblings and desires. The possibility of traveling to a foreign country emerges. You won't always have an opportunity like this one, so act accordingly. If you are single, anytime from summer on, someone quite significant to your life could introduce him- or herself. How important this bond becomes will be determined by you. If you are attached, you will find that your sweetie seems to be changing right in front of your eyes. Know that this is a process -- what you see now might not be what you see later. Go with the flow. TAURUS often proves his or her friendship with you.
