SO IT BEGINS: A work crew off-loads machinery Tuesday that will be used on the construction of a pair of new parks in the Civic Center.

Work begins on pair of Civic Center parks

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

CIVIC CENTER The "Three Amigos" are saddling up and going for a ride.

In the coming weeks, the trio of massive ficus trees will be pruned and temporarily relocated along with nearly 50 other trees so that crews can move 55,000 cubic yards of soil from the old RAND Corp. site to the future home of Palisades Garden Walk, a roughly 6-acre park that will be located across from City Hall adjacent to Interstate 10, city officials said Tuesday.

The tree relocation plan approved by the City Council calls for the Amigos to be carefully pruned and boxed and sit in place for 60 days while their roots adjust and the "initial shock wears off," said Karen Ginsberg, assistant director of the Department Community & Cultural Services at City Hall.

After the 60 days, each tree will be lifted, using a pneumatic lifting system similar to how homes are moved, and placed onto a truck bed. They will then be driven about 550 feet from their current location, lowered again using the lifting system and planted based on the approved park design.

As part of the relocation plan, 27 trees will be moved and replanted within the park while 20 palm trees will be moved and replanted at Woodlawn Cemetery. Two ficus trees will be destroyed because they are in a "serious state of decline," and have been for some time, Ginsberg said.

The 20 Washington robusta (Mexican fan) palms must be relocated out of the Coastal Zone, Ginsberg said, because the California Coastal Commission has a poli-

Brownley's school financing reform bill stalls in Senate

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

SACRAMENTO A bill to reform K-12 school financing, championed by Assemblywoman Julia Brownley (D-Santa Monica), has stalled in its progress through the state Senate after winning near-unanimous support in the Assembly.

The bill, known as AB18, would simplify school financing by reducing the number of categorical funds — funds that hold money that can only be spent on one purpose — to four large umbrella categories.

These larger categories would give local school districts the flexibility to choose where their state funding would best be spent, and would, supposedly, get rid of earmarks or unnecessary spending.

Although the bill passed the Assembly with only two "no" votes, it became clear that the state Senate would be a harder hurdle to jump, Brownley said.

Instead, she chose to convert the legislation into a two-year bill and use the extra time to try to address concerns brought during its debut in the Senate.

"I made the decision to make it what we call a two-year bill because it's a big, aggressive bill," Brownley said. "Trying to simplify a very complicated system takes time … We wanted to try to get the bill really right."

So far, AB18 has taken some heat from the California Teachers' Association and

GARRETT

Brad Garrett yucks it up at Edgemar

BY DANIEL ARCHULETA
Managing Editor

MAIN STREET When students enter comedian Brad Garrett's "Sitcom Intensive" class, the first question they ask shouldn't be about attracting an agent or manager.

Garrett, best known as the goofy brother from "Everybody Loves Raymond," said that it's common for his pupils to sign up for his class hoping that some of his industry knowledge will rub off on them.

Sure, Garrett, an Emmy-award winner, can help with that, but the reason he leads the series of classes at the Edgemar Center for the Arts on Main Street is to help people find their comedic voice.

"I don't think you can teach someone to be funny," Garrett said. "What I do believe what we can teach is where the jokes are — the time and pace of working with a partner."

This will be the fourth time he's led the six-week course at Edgemar. He does it to give something back to others who are trying to find their funny. He realized that not many acting schools focus on the art of the sitcom, let alone led by somebody with Garrett's chops and time in the business. Garrett is trying to impart some of the teachings he received as a young comic that don't come so easily.

Having served as both an actor and producer during his time on TV, it gives him a

Schwarzenegger returns to acting

SANDY COHEN
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES Arnold Schwarzenegger said he'd be back.

The former governor of California will return to acting with a starring role in the Lionsgate film "Last Stand." Schwarzenegger will play a border-town sheriff who unwittingly finds himself battling a notorious drug kingpin on the run.

Joe Drake, president of Lionsgate Motion Picture Group, said Schwarzenegger will "bring incredible magnetism" to the character of Sheriff Owens.

The role represents Schwarzenegger's first major movie role since 2003's "Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines." He made a cameo appearance in last summer's "The Expendables."

Drake said Schwarzenegger's appearance in that film "electrified the audience" and that he expects the action star-turned-politician to bring that same energy to this Western tale.

The film will be directed by Korean filmmaker Kim Jee-Woon. No shooting or release date was announced.

Schwarzenegger spokesman Daniel Ketchell confirmed Tuesday that Schwarzenegger will appear in "Last Stand" but did not elaborate.

Schwarzenegger said in May that he was putting his acting projects on hold after disclosing that he fathered a child with a family housekeeper and splitting with wife Maria Shriver.

Riverside officials propose splitting state

JACOB ADELMAN
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES Elected officials in Riverside County endorsed a proposal Tuesday to discuss cleaving California in two, but with a catch: No public funds can be spent on the budding secessionist movement.

Staffers for Jeff Stone, the Riverside County supervisor who dreamed up the idea for what he's calling South California, said proponents will turn to private donors — and possibly sympathetic city councils with cash to spare — to sponsor work toward the scheme.

City Hall donates fire trucks to storm-ravaged town

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

CITY HALL The City Council Tuesday approved a measure that would allow the city of Bayou La Batre, Ala. to keep two loaned fire engines, culminating an arrangement made when the town was rebuilding after the ravages of Hurricane Katrina.

In 2005, the southern coastline of the United States suffered one of the worst natural disasters in recent memory.

Hurricane Katrina, which eventually grew to a Category 5 storm, smashed through coastal communities, leaving utter destruction where homes, businesses and schools once stood.

While New Orleans with its infamous levees became the poster child for the disaster, other communities were negatively impacted as well.

Bayou La Batre, immortalized in the movie "Forrest Gump" as the home of Forrest's friend Pvt. Benjamin Buford "Bubba" Blue, looked like something you'd see on the nightly news, said City Councilmember Bob Holbrook.

"The city contacted Bayou La Batre and offered to lend them any assistance we could," Holbrook recalled. "We have sister cities all over the world, but this is an American city, and we wanted to do something."

City Hall gathered nearly 20 vehicles and pieces of heavy equipment that were slated for public auction and paid to ship them to the stricken city to begin the process of clearing rubble and removing fallen trees from roadways.

"Their only tractor was sunk under water," Holbrook said.

Civilians also got in on the action, donating chainsaws and other equipment. Members of the City Attorney's Office even volunteered to lend their services to help apply for grants and skirt legal hurdles in the process.

A year later, the town's troubles still were not over.

"The tallest building left standing in the town was reserved for elderly people," Holbrook said. "They didn't have a ladder (on a fire engine) that could reach the top floors."

Holbrook, who was mayor at the time, reached out to the mayor of Bayou La Batre to offer two vehicles, one hook and ladder truck and one water pump engine, which were essentially on Santa Monica's third string and about to be cut.

Engines in Santa Monica tend to last about 10 years before City Hall replaces them, said Battalion Chief Walter Shirk.

"It's a matter of maintenance and new innovations, technical aspects that were no longer current," he said.

That didn't bother the mayor, a volunteer firefighter, who needed the well-maintained equipment to outfit the force he was in the process of trying to convert into a professional, paid department.

Fire Chief John Wiggins, a professional firefighter in Mobile, Ala. for 33 years, was called out of retirement to lead the department. He was shocked at what he found.

"After being a paid firefighter for that long of a time, it was atrocious," he said. "There was no equipment, and what equipment they had was outdated, not maintained and not suitable for fighting fire."

When he found out that two of Santa Monica's engines were available, he was "ecstatic."

"We were like kids at Christmas when we received them," Wiggins said.

Five years later, the engines are still down there, but until Tuesday, they were "on loan" from Santa Monica.

That became a problem when the

Chris to the rescue

Editor:

My dad, little brother and I were homeless, living in a Ford Econoline van in 1980. I was 12 and 13 during that period. It was the apex of surf-and-skate style in mainstream culture, years after it had been shaped and influenced by the Z-Boys of Dogtown. I struggled to look the part by trying to get my dad to buy whatever O.P. or Quicksilver rags I could find at Goodwill or Salvation Army thrift stores.

So much of our time living in the van was spent at the beach, where it was easier to stay clean (showers, the ocean). Ironically, one of the dirtiest-looking neighborhoods in the city was where we went to remain hygienic.

I was familiar with the Z-Boys from magazines. I knew what the guys looked like.

I like to believe that one of them was the guy who stood up for my little brother and me while our drunken father roughly dumped a shampoo bottle and its contents onto our heads, lambasting us for being embarrassed and ashamed about our obvious homelessness and use of the public showers as our family bathroom. It was true, I was ashamed. And, I thought all of those "cool kids" probably had really nice houses and moms and dads who doted on them. I only recently learned that guys like Chris Cahill were not the spoiled blond brats who had it made, like I thought they were ("Original Z-Boy Cahill dies at 54," July 6, page 1)

Someone who looked a lot like the pictures I had seen in skate magazines of Cahill told my dad to lay off. I'll never forget the skinny yellow-headed skater who kick-flipped his way through the little circle of youths who had gathered around our dysfunctional-family outdoor circus, during which daddy downed a can of Bud, kicked Michael and me in the ass over and over and told us to soap up and be proud because we had no right to be embarrassed about living in a van. This slight-looking young guy stood between where I and my brother Michael stood and where my much larger and rather intimidating father stood and said something like this:

"Lay off, man. Who do you think you are? Leave these guys alone, man. They're just kids."

Everyone seemed deferential to the blond skater. They dispersed while muttering phrases toward my dad, affirming the admonition of the guy I will always believe was Chris Cahill.

"Let the little dudes rinse off and kick it on the beach, man," were the last words he said before he slapped his board to the concrete and disappeared as quickly as he had arrived. I was sorry he was gone then; I'm sorry he's gone now.

Postscript: My father got sober in a 12-step program and has remained so for more than 30 years.

Won't you be my neighbor?

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A MURDEROUS mom to make one who isn't homicidal feel better about herself.

I've been a little down in the dumps over the past few weeks as the soul-crushing antics of my nearly 3-year-old daughter have forced me to empathize with those tragic women who purposefully drive off cliffs on their way home from the grocery store or go out for walks to the mailbox never to return by choice. I wouldn't dream of harming my daughter (despite her feeble cries that pointedly indicate I am to blame for each knot that I attempt to brush out of her hair in the morning), but there's a decent chance I just might disappear with my passport and a stack of unmarked bills if her current round-the-clock Sarah Bernhardt-like dramatic antics don't cease, like, three hours ago.

I didn't follow the Casey Anthony trial until the verdict last week, along with the unavoidable headlines that she appeared to have gotten away with the murder of her 2-year-old daughter. In the days following the bombshell verdict, a mob of cable-news pundits speculated that she will be in grave danger when she leaves jail this Sunday. Which got me to thinking: What if Casey Anthony were to move next door to me?

I mean, I wouldn't want her to become my neighbor if it would mean someone taking a shot at her, missing, and shattering one of my flowerpots instead or something. And I definitely don't want a sociopath who, you know, probably killed her own, around my kids. But assuming that Casey Anthony will be watched so closely until the end of days that she won't have the opportunity to burp without accounting for which can of soda in her recyclables caused the bodily faux pas, her presence just might perk me up a bit.

After all, that someone could be without her kid for a month while out partying and participating in things like hot body contests (good for her, by the way, for having a hot body just two years after giving birth!), lie about it and seemingly feel no remorse makes me feel like I should have demanded a recount when I didn't win any mother of the year awards on the second Sunday in May. Last week I had the house to myself for two blessed hours and felt so guilty stretching out on the couch and watching something other than Dora and that rascally little fox Swiper that I turned off the TV after 15 minutes to empty the dishwasher instead.

If I went so far as to solicit Casey Anthony to move in next door, I wouldn't be the first person to surround myself with bad people to make me feel better about myself, would I? How else do you explain those who associate with O.J. Simpson (post-murder trial, pre-current jail stint) or the Kardashians? After all, the last neighbors I want are do-gooders making me feel worse about myself than I already do for raising a child whose current method of communicating is shrieking like she's the next contestant on "The Price is Right," only if "The Price is Right" were actually a euphemism for the gateway to hell.

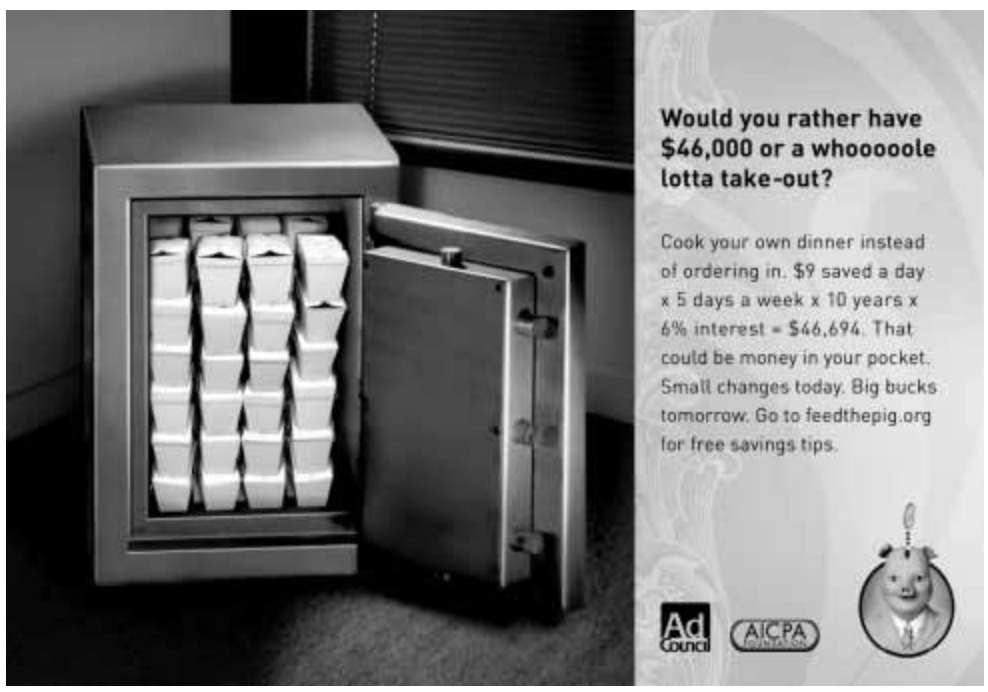

WHAT IF CASEY ANTHONY WERE TO MOVE NEXT DOOR TO ME?

No, at the moment I'd rather have Chris Hansen patrolling my neighborhood with confidence that he can film his entire next season of stings on "To Catch a Psychopath" in one fell swoop (assuming NBC hasn't canned him before then because of the sting on him) than live in an area in which doors are left unlocked at night because the worst that can happen is a bear comes inside for a midnight snack and is gone by dawn, conveniently taking with it the lunchmeat that should have been thrown out last month.

Of course, if Casey Anthony were to move in next door, I might have to pull my shades all the way down at night. Not for privacy, but because the light from her room might keep me awake. You must not sleep when the best fib you could come up with is that someone named Zanny the nanny took off with your kid: rookie mistake.

I don't know that knocking on Casey Anthony's door to borrow a cup of sugar will make this phase of my daughter's toddlerdom any less stressful (please, God, let it be just a phase and not a foreshadowing of the next 15 years), but at least it might make me feel a little better having a constant reminder that there are moms failing at parenting even more dismally than me.

Why do the Jews vote Obama?

IN A RECENT INTERVIEW, FORMER deputy Secretary of State Elliot Abrams said that President Barack Obama "sees Israel as a problem," reminding us of the question that won't go away. It's a question that is being asked by many a political pundit, and not just on the island of Manhattan or in Israel. As an American-Israeli who is often interviewed by perplexed conservative talk show hosts and having written extensively about this president's relationship with Israel, the recurring question of American Jewish support for Israel has become the question that I can no longer avoid.

It goes something like this: Is President Obama really hostile to Israel, and if he is, why does he still have massive Jewish support? Furthermore, will there be a lateral shift in 2012? Concerning the first question, I believe that the answer is clear to almost all Israelis. There have been three major opinion surveys taken in Israel in the past two years that have posed the question, "Is President Obama pro-Israel?" The results have ranged from only 4 percent answering affirmatively in the first poll to 15 percent in the most recent one, taken at the onset of the 2012 presidential campaign. With few exceptions, Israelis have been appalled ever since that very first confrontational White House meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, when, after receiving a stern lecture from the president about the illegality of Israeli settlements, the prime minister was ungraciously left alone fending for his dinner. Furthermore, most Jewish Israelis, whatever their views, were offended by President Obama's unprecedented political ambush this past May, when he publicly demanded that Israel return to its precarious pre-1967 borders as Netanyahu was boarding his plane for a visit to Israel's best friend and ally in Washington.

But most Jewish Israelis are not Jewish Americans and that is where the difference lies. Having lived in the United States for 35 years before immigrating to Israel almost 20 years ago, I know as well as anyone that Jews are not monolithic supporters of Israel. I wish it were otherwise, but as with any American voter, there is a process of prioritization that occurs when selecting presidential candidates and for most American Jews, Israel is not at the top of the list. In short, the litmus test of American Jewish support is not Israel. Liberal positions on issues such as abortion, gay marriage, school prayer, and health care are what determine the vote in the core of the American Jewish community. Obama's confrontational positions on Israel may be a problematic gut issue for many American Jews, but it is easily rationalized away by Democratic talking heads who insist that most Israelis actually support the pre-1967 borders, even though Israel's undoubtedly left-leaning former Foreign Secretary Abba Eban once referred to those borders as "the borders of Auschwitz," cynically referring to the notorious Nazi concentration camp, where over a million Jews were slaughtered. The implications of his statement to such a potential Israeli withdrawal from its historic heartland are obvious.

The sad fact is that most American Jews, while not necessarily economic liberals, are definitely social liberals who would find it socially and culturally difficult to support a staunchly pro-Israel conservative candidate like Michele Bachmann for president. The term knee-jerk liberal or knee-jerk Democrat certainly applies here and while most American Jews would decry such a characterization of them as close-minded ideologues, the facts validate the veracity of such a categorization. In 1980, Ronald Reagan ran against the incumbent Jimmy Carter, whose anti-Israel credentials certainly rival those of Obama. When Reagan succeeded in capturing 35 percent of the Jewish vote, it was considered a major accomplishment, as many independent-minded Jews for whom Israel was a high-priority issue shifted to the other side of the aisle, but the majority of Jews remained faithful to the overall Democratic agenda and rationalized away the anti-Israel feeling and lack of genuine warmth for Israel that Carter conveyed.

Obama is a similar case in point. This president, whose sympathies clearly lie with the Islamic world that he claims to be so inspired by, is no friend of Israel. His lack of appreciation for the Israeli narrative has been obvious since long before his victory in 2008. It's no coincidence of nature that his first major foreign policy speech was given in Cairo, Egypt, during which he repeatedly proclaimed his deep respect for the religion of Jihad, or Holy War. It's also no coincidence of nature that he bowed down to King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia. Last but not least, it's certainly no accident that he has chosen not to visit Israel even once during his term of office. Ideological litmus tests aside, the time has come for American Jews who truly care about Israel to remove their rose-colored Democratic glasses and to consider an alternative.

DAVID RUBIN is the former mayor of Shiloh, Israel – in the region of Samaria, known to much of the world as the West Bank.

Got PMS? New campaign says milk can help with that

BY JULIET WILLIAMS
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO The dairy group that created the "Got Milk?" campaign is back with a new marketing strategy that already is generating plenty of buzz.

The California Milk Processor Board is encouraging men to buy more milk for their wives and girlfriends, which the campaign says will help them fend off the symptoms of premenstrual syndrome.

However, the statewide campaign launched this week entitled "Everything I Do Is Wrong" was drawing criticism online for ads saying men are the real PMS sufferers as their wives and girlfriends behave strangely every month.

The campaign's website has a color-coded "current global PMS level," a "video apology enhancer" and a "mistake verification system" wrapped around pictures of puzzled men.

The board's executive director, Steve James, says the Internet, radio and billboard campaign is meant to encourage open conversations between men and women about an awkward subject.

"It was certainly not meant to be offensive. None of the humor is aimed at women. The humor is aimed at how clueless men are in dealing with emotional situations," James said Tuesday. "All of the humor is built around men's cluelessness."

Through the end of August, billboard ads will appear throughout California showing confused men holding cartons of milk accompanied by tag lines such as "I'm sorry I listened to what you said and NOT what you meant," or "I apologize for not reading between the RIGHT lines."

A group of men waved signs with those messages at a rally in Hollywood on Tuesday as part of the promotional campaign, which organizers say will include skits and "PMS-themed comedy shows."

The campaign is based on studies that have found a link between calcium intake and fewer PMS symptoms.

It cites a 2005 study published in the Archives of Internal Medicine that found calcium improved PMS symptoms in more than 1,000 women. The study received some funding from GlaxoSmithKline, which manufactures calcium supplements.

The board also refers to a 1999 study published in the Journal of the American College of Nutrition that found calcium could relieve symptoms such as irritability, depression, anxiety, social withdrawal, headache and cramps. Its author also served as a consultant to and had financial ties with the drug maker.

Sheri Zidenberg-Cherr, chairwoman of the University of California, Davis Department of Nutrition, said she was not aware of any studies that showed calcium could improve the effects of premenstrual syndrome, although the FDA recommends daily consumption.

"I'm not familiar with research supporting that relationship at this time," said Zidenberg-Cherr.

Cal State University system OKs 12 percent tuition hike

BY AMY TAXIN & TERENCE CHEA
Associated Press

LONG BEACH California State University on Tuesday approved another 12 percent increase in student tuition this fall to offset a deeper-than-expected cut in state funding.

With a 13-2 vote, the CSU Board of Trustees passed the annual tuition hike of $588, which comes on top of a previously approved 10 percent increase for 2011-2012.

CSU officials said the increase is needed to preserve educational quality and avoid large-scale enrollment cuts that would prevent tens of thousands of students from attending one of the system's 23 campuses.

"These are not easy choices," board Chairman Herbert Carter said. "We don't take great delight in doing this. We do it because we think it is in the best interest of the young people of this state that this university be available to them."

One third of the new revenue will be set aside for financial aid.

Annual tuition for in-state undergraduates will increase to $5,472, which doesn't include room, board or campus fees averaging $950.

Annual tuition will increase $678 for credential program students and $720 for graduate students.

The recently approved state budget reduces CSU funding by $650 million, or more than 20 percent. The system stands to lose another $100 million if the state generates less revenue than projected.

"The enormous reduction to our state funding has left us with no other choice if we are to maintain quality and access to the CSU," said Chancellor Charles Reed.

Shortly after the tuition vote, the board approved a controversial $400,000 compensation package for Elliot Hirshman, the new president of San Diego State University. That's $100,000 more than that of his predecessor Stephen Weber.

In a letter to the board chairman, Gov. Jerry Brown criticized the move, questioning whether Hirshman should be paid twice as much as the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

"I fear your approach to compensation is setting a pattern for public service that we cannot afford," Brown wrote.

CSU officials defended the move, saying the university needs to provide competitive compensation to recruit and retain top administrators.

Carter acknowledged the governor's concerns and said the board would create a task force to review CSU's policies on selecting and paying administrators.

About 50 students marched and chanted outside the board meeting in Long Beach, carrying signs that read "Fund instruction, not corruption" and "No cuts, no fees."

On Thursday, the University of California's Board of Regents is scheduled to vote on raising tuition by 9.6 percent above the previously approved 8 percent increase for the coming academic year.

If approved, annual tuition for in-state undergraduates would increase $1,068 to $12,192, which doesn't include room, board or campus fees. One third of the new fee revenue will be used for financial aid.

Betty Ford remembered at bipartisan memorial

BY JEFF WILSON & JOHN ROGERS
Associated Press

PALM DESERT First ladies, past and present, and others who called the White House home remembered Betty Ford on Tuesday, not just for her decades-long work against substance abuse but for her contributions to a political era when friendship among lawmakers helped them govern.

Speakers, including former first lady Rosalynn Carter and journalist Cokie Roberts, also hailed her as a force of nature whose boundless energy and enthusiasm, coupled with a steadfast determination to do what was right, pushed the country toward a commitment to equal rights for women and other causes.

Ford, who died at the age of 93 on Friday, reshaped the role of first lady with her plain-spoken candidness.

In doing so, she helped bring such previously taboo subjects as breast cancer into the public discussion as she openly discussed her own battle with the disease. She was equally candid about her struggles with drug and alcohol abuse, and her spearheading of the creation of the Betty Ford Center to treat those diseases has benefited thousands.

"Millions of women are in her debt today and she was never afraid to speak the truth even about the most sensitive subjects, including her own struggle with alcohol and pain killers," Carter said. "She got some criticism, but I thought she was wonderful and her honesty gave to others every single day."

Behind the scenes she was also aggressive and effective, said Roberts, who noted that Ford's late husband, President Gerald R. Ford, confided to her privately that his wife badgered him relentlessly into stronger public support of equal rights for women.

The former first lady mapped out plans for her funeral well in advance, including who would deliver her eulogies, and Roberts said she told her to be sure to let people know that politics does not have to as acrimonious as it is today.

"Mrs. Ford wanted me to remind everyone of the way things used to be in Washington, and I wouldn't be at all surprised if she timed her death to make sure that she could convey the message of comity during this week, when it seems so badly needed," she said as former President George W. Bush, a Republican, sat in the audience next to Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, a Democrat.

Sitting in the same pew with them were first lady Michelle Obama, former first lady Nancy Reagan and Carter. Other mourners who packed the church included former California first lady Maria Shriver and Ford's four children.

Bush, accompanied by former first lady Nancy Reagan, arrived just a few minutes ahead of Michelle Obama and the others. The former president, wearing a dark suit, blue tie and white shirt, chatted quietly with Reagan as they waited for the services to begin. He greeted Clinton as she took a seat next to him.

"It's very nice to see you getting together after the fact, but we wish some of you would get together beforehand," Roberts said of those in the audience of approximately 800 people.

Other invited guests included President Richard Nixon's daughters, Tricia Nixon-Cox and Julie Nixon Eisenhower; President Lyndon Johnson's daughters, Lucie Baines Johnson and Lynda Bird Johnson Robb; Robb's husband, former U.S. Sen. Charles Robb; and former California Gov. Pete Wilson.

Following the funeral, members of the public were invited to file past the casket and sign a guest book until midnight.

On Wednesday, Ford's body will be flown to Grand Rapids, Mich., where another church service will feature remarks by Lynne Cheney, wife of former Vice President Dick Cheney, and historian Richard Norton Smith. Former first lady Barbara Bush was expected to attend that event.

Later Thursday, her body will be interred at the presidential museum along with her husband on what would have been Gerald Ford's 98th birthday.

Ford, the accidental first lady, was thrust into the White House when Nixon resigned as president on Aug. 9, 1974, and her husband, then vice president, assumed the nation's highest office. Although she always said she never expected nor wanted to be first lady, she quickly embraced the role.

When Roberts' father, Democratic Congressman Hale Boggs, was the House majority leader and Ford's husband was the House minority leader, Roberts recalled, they could argue about issues but get together as friends afterward. Their families became close, as did the Ford and Carter families, despite Jimmy Carter defeating Ford in the 1976 presidential election.

Rosalynn Carter recalled her husband was governor of Georgia when she met Ford during a visit the first lady paid to their state.

"We invited Betty to stay at the governor's mansion. She was the most distinguished guest we had ever had but when she arrived she was so warm and friendly that she immediately put me at ease and we had a good time together.

"Of course I didn't tell her then that my husband was thinking of running for president," Carter added, provoking laughter.

But even after Ford's husband lost his re-election bid to Carter's husband, a lifelong friendship remained intact.

The two-hour service began after California Highway Patrol motorcycles and squad cars escorted Ford's hearse and her family members to the church in four black sedans and six SUVS. The hearse pulled up to a side entrance, and the casket was carried inside, followed by about two dozen mourners, including family members.

Other mourners arrived later by the busload, after the family was given private time inside the church. Family spokeswoman Barbara Lewandrowski said family members had also gathered over the weekend to reflect on Ford's life.

"They are reading emails and telling stories, enjoying each other's fellowship," she said.

A program prepared for the service featured a picture of Ford, the Emily Dickinson poem "If I Can Stop One Heart From Breaking," and the words, "The family thanks you for your support," followed by the signatures Mike, Jack, Steve and Susan, Ford's four children.

"We know of Mom's love, her love, her love of God and it's personal touch on her life bringing good out of evil, healing out of brokenness, joy and dancing, yes dancing. She was quite a dancer ... dancing out of sorrow," her son Michael Ford told mourners.

She was such a good dancer, Carter noted, that she was once a member of the celebrated Martha Graham dance troupe and performed at New York's Carnegie Hall.

groups that advocate for adult education.

Adult education supporters feared that by lumping money specifically earmarked for programs aimed at older students in with other categories in a block called "Base Funding" could lead to school districts axing the program in order to pay for other things.

Adult education has already taken major hits under so-called "flexibility" measures, which have allowed school districts to take money from the programs, or close them altogether, to support K-12 education, said Teri Burns, a legislative advocate for the California Association of Adult Education Administrators.

"Generally, the public's perception is that schools should serve K-12 education," Burns said. "When funding is tight, the pressure is on where to direct those dollars. You're pitting the cute little first grader against someone who's a young adult, or an older adult who doesn't have great work or English language skills, and is a less sympathetic character."

These concerns prompted Brownley to remove adult education from the "Base Funding" category, and preserve it as its own category for the time being.

By removing it from one of the four main block funds envisioned in the bill, adult education will be safe from having its funding absorbed into other uses.

Part of the decision to hold off on the bill is to invite opinions and concerns so that the bill won't have any unintended consequences, Brownley said.

"There's clearly lots of concern about adult education," she said.

Still, Brownley holds that the basic architecture of the bill is sound, and this process will help fill in some of the details that need to be addressed.

"All of the stakeholders have a fundamental agreement. The system is broken and needs to be changed," she said. "Now we need to get all the details nailed down."

Brownley carried a similar bill earlier in her term which got through both the Assembly and the Senate only to be vetoed by former Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger.

The previous version created a working group that would be used to hash out the details and special interests.

This time, Brownley intended to cut out the middle man and make a working group out of the legislative process.

She still hopes to pass the bill before the end of her term in 2012.

"I've been working on this since I've been in the legislature," she said.

department needed to bring them to a professional mechanic to replace cables that are required to stay up-to-date on appropriate certifications.

"It takes money, big bucks, to do that," Wiggins said. "You also need verification that the trucks belong to you."

So in May, the Bayou La Batre Fire Department requested that City Hall transfer the title of the engines, a result always expected under the loan.

City Hall would have donated the engines outright if it had been possible to get the process done quickly enough, Shirk said.

The donation is a boon to Santa Monica for two reasons. First, the old engines would cost more to ship back across the country than they're actually worth, according to a staff report.

Second, the loan of the engines came with a promise that Bayou La Batre would be there for Santa Monica, like a brother in arms, if a natural disaster ever struck.

"We did it to help another city. The only agreement we had with the mayor was that when the big one hits, they'll be here," Holbrook said.

cy preventing City Hall from replanting them anywhere within the zone, including the park site. The trees are considered to be an invasive species.

Seventy-six trees will be protected and remain in their current location, including "Morty" a massive Moreton Bay fig tree.

The most challenging aspect of the work will be transplanting the Three Amigos, which sit directly in the way of the future extension of Olympic Drive between Main Street and Ocean Avenue, Ginsberg added.

The total cost of the project, including the removal of a temporary parking lot and fixtures used for city employee parking and special events, is $913,000. By relocating the soil, city officials said they will save an estimated $2.8 million and be better for the environment. The soil will be used to build four hills incorporated into the park's design.

The park, and the adjacent Town Square project in front of City Hall, were designed by James Corner Field Operations.

Construction updates and photographs will be posted on the project web site smciviccenterparks.com so members of the public can follow the progress of the park's construction.

The removal and relocation of trees has become a hot topic in Santa Monica. The issue first gained traction in 2008 when residents formed Santa Monica Treesavers in an attempt to stop City Hall from uprooting 31 ficus trees lining Second and Fourth streets in Downtown as part of a streetscape improvement project. Many trees were saved, some remaining in place while seven were relocated.

Most recently, residents living on Georgina and Marguerita avenues raised concerns about a City Hall plan to replace 32 palm trees there damaged by an untreatable fungus with sycamore trees. Residents worried that the sycamores would damage the "iconic look" of the streets. City officials held meetings with the residents, apologized for not including them prior to picking the sycamores and decided to go with a different variety of palm.

unique perspective that he's eager to pass on.

"I've seen how both sides of the industry work," he said. "I've had a real cold wake up call to all the ends of the business."

Once students realize that Garrett isn't going to line them up with an agent, Garrett digs in.

His primary teaching tool: Fearless freedom finds funny.

Being relaxed is key for any aspiring comic who hopes to be fearless.

"It's the only way to get through a scene comedically," Garrett said. "What we teach is the ability for people to be vulnerable and authentic in any comedy scene."

The course itself is broken up into six parts. The first three, four-hour sessions are spent working on scene study and character development. The second half of the course sees the student actors working together with partners or in a group on a final comedic scene or monologue of their choice.

The final class is a showcase before a panel of industry professionals who are expected to give candid critiques to Garrett's students.

Garrett selects people he hopes will be kind, but he isn't afraid to let his pupils have it if they just aren't hitting their marks.

"You have to be honest," he said. "Not everybody is Lucille Ball or John Candy."

As not to crush anybody's dreams of comedic stardom, Garrett and the Edgemar staff weed out applicants before they ever step foot in his class.

"They have to have a background," said Michelle Danner, Edgemar's artistic director. "We review each student before we admit them into the class."

For Garrett, he's just excited about spreading his knowledge of comedy and the hard knocks it takes to get ahead in what is obviously a tough business.

"I tell these new actors, 'if you blow an audition, you aren't going to go out again,'" he said. "The best way to be discovered is to kick-ass in an audition."

The class, which has already been filled, begins July 26 and runs through Aug. 30.

"After the meeting, we were flooded with people wanting to volunteer and help," Stone's chief of staff Verne Lauritzen said.

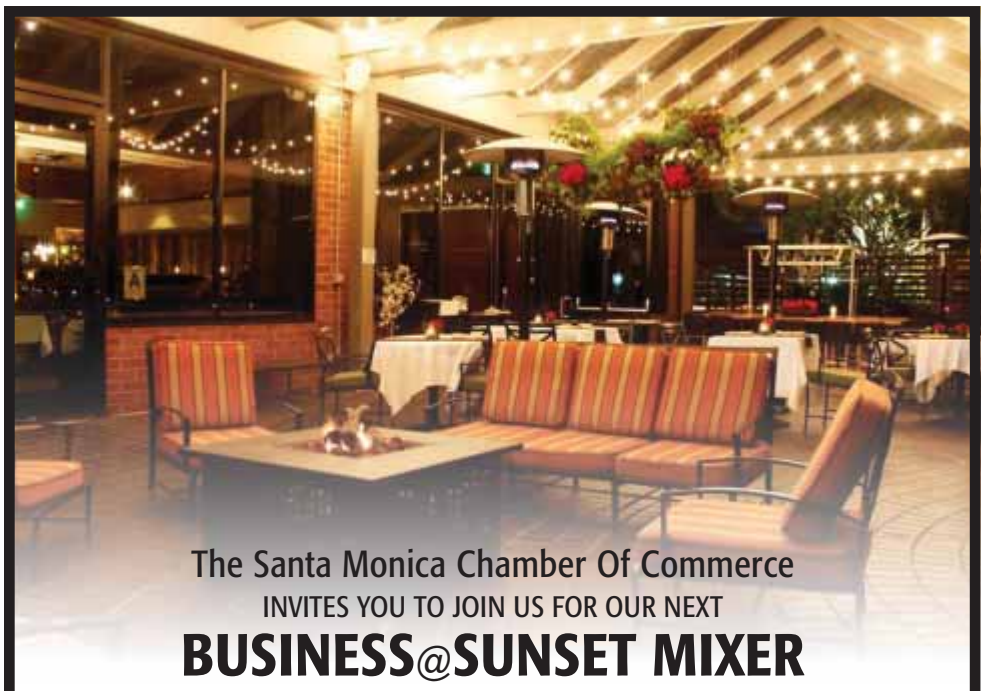

But the lack of financial support from the county is bound to make what was already a longshot proposal even less likely to gain traction.

"It's not clear how this would work out in practice," said University of California, Riverside political science professor Shaun Bowler.

Stone's largely agricultural district of desert plains and boulder-studded hills saw rapid population growth during the last decade's housing boom, and he wants 13 mostly conservative California counties to break away to create a 51st state.

The Republican supervisor's formal motion, which Riverside County's board passed 4-0 with one absence after adding the no-public-funds caveat, calls for officials from the 13 counties to come together and discuss the idea.

Stone has called California too big to govern and chastised state lawmakers in Sacramento for raiding local government coffers to support what he characterized as runaway spending.

Pennsylvania looks into possible cheating on tests

BY KATHY MATHESON
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The Pennsylvania Department of Education is looking into a report that has surfaced highlighting possible cheating on state standardized tests in at least 35 districts and noting aberrant scores in dozens of others, a spokesman said Tuesday.

The forensic analysis of the 2009 Pennsylvania System of School Assessment results does not assert cheating occurred, but says certain answer patterns and erasures make the results suspicious.

Among the school districts identified as having multiple testing irregularities are Philadelphia, Hazleton, Connellsville and Lancaster. Many other districts were cited for one or two inconsistencies.

The department was unaware of the report — issued in July 2009 under a previous administration — until it was published Friday by The Notebook, an independent news service covering the Philadelphia school district, said Timothy Eller, a spokesman for Education Secretary Ronald Tomalis.

"It's very frustrating to the secretary that nothing was done in the past with it," Eller said. Tomalis became education secretary earlier this year in new Republican Gov. Tom Corbett's administration.

Then-Education Secretary Gerald Zahorchak, who served under Democratic Gov. Ed Rendell and is now superintendent of the Allentown schools, declined comment on Eller's remarks. He said he had not seen the report, but such assessments are conducted routinely by the company that administers the tests, and any subsequent investigation would be handled by a standards and practices commission and the results noted in their annual reports.

"These are not unusual," he said. "These are normal things. ... I can almost guarantee you that many superintendents would say to you 'Yeah, we've been notified about people trying to influence inappropriately the PSSA work.' It's something the department and the state does very, very well — investigate and get to the bottom of complaints."

The news comes days after officials in Georgia revealed a massive cheating scandal in Atlanta, with nearly half of the city's 100 schools involved. State investigators said 178 educators had fudged standardized tests used to meet federal benchmarks dating back to 2001.

That same week, the U.S. Department of Education began looking into cheating allegations in Washington, D.C. Over the past several years, such scandals have surfaced in school districts in Baltimore and Houston, as well as Texas, Michigan and Florida.

Experts say many districts can feel pressured to meet testing standards to avoid penalties under the federal No Child Left Behind legislation, or to ensure positive results for teachers who are rewarded based on student performance.

In Pennsylvania, the PSSA is given annually in various grades to assess math and reading skills. Minnesota-based Data Recognition Corp. analyzed scores from 2009 and found hundreds of aberrant results, and singled out in the report about 90 schools with the most flags.

Based on statistical properties, the report said the suspect results were "highly improbable."

It noted that any possible fraud could have been perpetrated by students, teachers or other officials. But the company also stressed that the scores could have been obtained fairly.

"Their scores, response pattern, and number of erasures were aberrant, from a statistical probability perspective," the report states. "This does not imply that the school or student engaged in inappropriate testing activity."

The Philadelphia schools are willing to investigate the cheating allegations, but spokeswoman Jamilah Fraser said in a statement that such probes are difficult because of teacher turnover, student transience and the vagaries of memory.

The district has received about 10 to 15 accusations of breaches in test security in each of the past three years, and a few have been substantiated through internal investigations, Fraser said. Alleged violations could range from "low-level" offenses, such as failing to cover materials during a testing period, to more serious ones.

She also noted the district has a "very robust test monitoring protocol." Approximately 75 percent of schools, including charters, receive unannounced visits to random classrooms during PSSA testing, Fraser said.

In Connellsville, interim Superintendent Tammy Stern said she was a high school principal during the 2009 exam period. She heard nothing about cheating at the time.

"I'm not aware of any problems or improprieties," Stern told The Associated Press.

Lancaster district spokeswoman Kelly Burkholder said discrepancies in student enrollment and attendance led to the flags for three schools cited in the report.

"Our flags are not a result of testing impropriety but a result of our highly mobile population," Burkholder said.

Hazleton officials were not available for comment Tuesday.

It's not clear how often forensic audits were conducted under the previous administration, Eller said. The July 2009 report refers to that being "the first year of data forensic analyses for the PSSA." A Data Recognition Corp. spokeswoman declined comment.

Eller noted the department's 2010 budget had no money for audits, but that Tomalis has ordered them reinstated for this year.

Democratic state Rep. Michael McGeehan, of Philadelphia, said in a statement that he met last weekend with a group of Philadelphia teachers who alleged cheating at their school.

On Tuesday, he suggested that Tomalis create a "whistleblower hotline" for educators to report allegations of wrongdoing without fear of retaliation.

WET -- grades for days of recorded rainfall and the following 3 days
ns -- no sample taken

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Play it low-key tonight, Aquarius

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Take charge of an issue. You might want to rethink a situation, especially if you are inadvertently triggering it. Remember, you have a choice. Opportunities come forward. Tap into your intuitive sense in order to succeed. Tonight: Until the wee hours.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Don't push others to do what you most likely would do better. Make a call to a loved one at a distance when you have some quiet time. A sudden insight could be most uncomfortable. You have a way or style that makes a difference. Tonight: Follow the music.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ A close relationship draws your attention. The unexpected adds a dimension. Zero in on what you want in the middle of perceived confusion. Others might not be as quick on their feet as you are. Tonight: Dinner with a friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Defer to those around you, especially to a close associate or respected loved one. Unexpected developments impact you. A meeting allows you to see the right path. Look at all your supporters! Tonight: Accept an invitation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Dive into work as if you want to take tomorrow off. You might be amazed by how much can be accomplished. Pressure builds in a unique manner. Someone might be deliberately giving you false info. Tonight: As late as you can go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Be reasonable about a situation involving a project, child or new friend. What has occurred in the past doesn't need to happen anymore. You can change directions if you stay grounded and centered. Tonight: Midweek break.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You could be exhausted by everything that you have had to handle. You might want to revise your thinking concerning a draining situation. Only you know how much you can handle. Don't let anyone tell you otherwise. Tonight: Happily at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Keep communication flowing, though at some point someone could have a strong reaction. Realize that you might not have the control you had at first. Tonight: Hang out; visit over munchies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Honor a financial obligation, even if it makes you very uptight and a little out of kilter. A risk most likely won't pay off. Think before you leap, and you will be much happier. Understanding evolves. Tonight: Stay grounded. Go for a walk.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Resourcefulness comes naturally, yet even more so today. A surprise might stimulate this gift, and you come out with flying colors. Inevitably, Lady Luck drops in your path in some viable form. Accept the gift. Tonight: Whatever puts a smile on your face.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Know when to pull back. You really don't need others to support you in a key venture. Most likely, at this present time, they could change their mind. Be aware of the costs of this particular project. Tonight: Play it low-key.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Zero in on key goals in a meeting. Others respect how you handle situations and the choices you make concerning them. Friendship plays a bigger role than normal. Be grateful for this person and what he or she naturally offers. Tonight: Midweek fun!

Happy birthday

This year, you often juggle two different issues, people or situations. You also might find yourself endlessly debating the pros and cons of acting in a certain way. Issues like resentment and guilt could come forward. Your understanding grows as a result. If you are single, you meet many people, as you are unusually attractive this year. However, having a stable relationship presents its challenges, as you swing from one extreme to another. If you are attached, learn to juggle your different intimate needs with your mate's. Sometimes you might want to be close; others times you desire to be left alone. CAPRICORN has the same issues but a different approach. You can learn from each other.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

Blow Against the Empire: Bank of America (BA) had the tables turned on it in June after the company wrongfully harassed an alleged mortgage scofflaw in Naples, Fla. BA had attempted to foreclose on homeowners Warren and Maureen Nyerges last year even though the couple had bought their house with cash -- paid directly to BA. It took BA a year and a half to understand its mistake -- that is, until the Nyergeses sued and won a judgment for expenses of $2,534, which BA promptly ignored. The Nyergeses' attorney obtained a seizure order, and two sheriff's deputies, with a moving truck, arrived at the local BA branch on June 3 to load $2,534 worth of furniture and computer equipment from the bank's offices. After about an hour on the phone with higher-ups, the local BA manager issue a check for $2,534.

-- Police in Doncaster, England, were on the lookout in June for an organized group of four female and two male shoplifters who hit a liquor store on Bentley Road in May but left an interesting crime-scene story on the surveillance video. While five of the crew distracted employees, one woman, wearing pants, walked to the back but emerged minutes later wearing a large wraparound skirt and waddling slowly toward the front door. After the unsuspecting employees bid farewell to the six, they discovered that the office safe was missing and concluded that the waddling woman was holding it between her legs.
