STARR

'Starr' of the athletic community

BY HANNAH BERKMAN
Special to the Daily Press

WASHINGTON AVE Jerry Sandusky and Bernie Fine are but two of the recent cases of sexual abuse in an athletic organization. These highly publicized cases show that bullying, sexual harassment and abuse are still occurring in the athletic world today.

Katherine Starr, founder of Safe4Athletes, Santa Monica local and former Olympic athlete, plans to change that with her new organization.

Starr was a victim of such abuse herself, and conceived this organization to help current young athletes and protect them from such unfortunate incidents.

"I'm a two-time Olympic athlete, in the '84 and '88 Olympics, and my lead Olympic coach sexually abused me throughout my entire elite career," Starr said. "I knew that these issues weren't being addressed, and the same thing is still going on. I carry a lot of

A quick guide for this year's election season

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

CITYWIDE Candidates, start your engines. Campaign season is upon us.

While the presidential candidates have been duking it out publicly for months, Monday is the first day for Santa Monica's political hopefuls to pull papers for the local elections, and candidates are already lining up for their shot at public office.

Four City Council seats, two Rent Control Board seats, three positions on the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District Board of Education and two spots on the Santa Monica College Board of Trustees are all up for grabs.

If previous elections are any guide, that means that Santa Monicans can batten down the hatches for four months of campaigning, cajoling and more paper mail than they receive at any other point of the year except maybe the winter holidays.

As the players in the democratic drama make themselves known, here's a rough map of the road to Nov. 5, Election day.

NOMINATIONS

Today is the first day that people feeling the itch of civic duty can pull nominating papers, documents that prove that somebody in Santa Monica wants to see a particular name on the November ballot.

Make that 100 somebodys.

Prospective candidates have just over four weeks to file 100 valid signatures with the City Clerk's office. Those signatures must come from Santa Monica residents that are registered to vote, and any errant or duplicate signatures will be thrown out during the vetting process.

Cities consider plan to seize mortgages

AMY TAXIN & CHRISTINA REXRODE
Associated Press

FONTANA, Calif. In the foreclosure-battered inland stretches of California, local government officials desperate for change are weighing a controversial but inventive way to fix troubled mortgages: Condemn them.

Officials from San Bernardino County and two of its cities have formed a local agency to consider the plan. But investors who stand to lose money on their mortgage investments have been quick to register their displeasure.

Discussion of the idea is taking place in one of the epicenters of the housing crisis, a working-class region east of Los Angeles where housing prices have plummeted. Last week brought another sharp reminder of the crisis when the 210,000-strong city of San Bernardino, struggling after shrunken home prices walloped local tax revenues, announced it would seek bankruptcy protection.

Now — and amid skepticism on many fronts — officials from the surrounding county of San Bernardino and cities of Fontana and Ontario have created a joint powers authority to consider what role local governments could take to stem the crisis. The goal is to keep homeowners saddled by large mortgage payments from losing their homes — which are now valued at a fraction of what they were once worth.

"We just have too much pain and misery in this county to call off a public discussion like this," said David Wert, a county spokesman.

The idea was broached by a group of West Coast financiers who suggest using the power of eminent domain, which lets the government seize private property for public use. In this case, they would condemn troubled mortgages so they could seize them from the investors who own them. Then the mortgages would be rewritten so the borrowers would have significantly lower monthly payments.

Steven Gluckstern, chairman of the newly formed San Francisco-based Mortgage Resolution Partners, says his main concern is to help the economy, which is being held back by the mortgage crisis.

"This is not a bunch of Wall Street guys sitting around saying, 'How do we make money?'" he said. "This was a bunch of Wall Street guys sitting around saying, 'How do you solve this problem?'"

Typically, eminent domain has been used to clear property for infrastructure projects like highways, schools and sewage plants. But supporters say that giving help to struggling borrowers is also a legitimate use of eminent domain, because it's in the public interest.

Under the proposal, a city or county

Drivers will be allowed to text, with restrictions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JOSE, Calif. California drivers will be allowed to text when they're behind the wheel of a car, as long as they're using a hands-free device, and with some restrictions.

Under a bill signed into law by Gov. Jerry Brown on Friday, beginning Jan. 1, drivers will be able to send, dictate and listen to text messages, but only if they're using a voice-activated device attached to a cellphone by a headset or Bluetooth earpiece, or a program inside a vehicle, like OnStar.

AB 1536, sponsored by California Assemblyman Jeff Miller, R-Corona, will allow Californians to text behind the wheel for the first time since texting while driving was outlawed more than three years ago.

"There's all this brand-new technology coming out that people want to take advantage of and use, and under current law they are unable to do that," Miller told the San Jose Mercury News.

But the San Jose Mercury News reports that there's some confusion over the new law, including which devices will be legal.

Aides at the assemblyman's office said it even with the new law, using Apple's voice-activated Siri would still be illegal, even when speaking a message directly into Siri.

The California Highway Patrol says drivers who simply turn on a cellphone, or select a phone's hands-free text app, can still be ticketed, resulting a $100-plus fine. The same thing goes for using your phone to read texts.

"The phone can't be in your hands," said CHP spokeswoman Jaime Coffee. "Hands-free is the key."

The law signed Friday comes after a 2006 bill, authored by California Sen. Joe Simitian, D-Palo Alto, made it illegal to talk on a hand-held cellphone while driving.

That law contributed to a reduction in the number of traffic deaths, according to a University of California, Berkeley study

Editor:

I wanted to give The Farms Market on Montana Avenue a big patriotic round of applause!

The afternoon of the Fourth of July, I'm riding home up Montana, and I notice the smell of BBQ, and the sound of music in the air, growing stronger as I approach.

There, at The Farms Market, they are hosting a good ole' Fourth of July party, and all are welcome!

The "small guy" makes a big impact in the community, and shared their Fourth of July holiday spirit!

Good job, Farms Market!

Making it safe

Editor:

If Los Angeles can find a way to make the 340-ton "Levitated Mass" public art boulder display safe for people to walk under it, then surely Santa Monica can find a way to make Paul Conrad's 5.5-ton "Chain Reaction" nuclear mushroom cloud public art sculpture safe for people to walk around it.

'Chain Reaction' — an artistic and intellectual atom bomb

"CHAIN REACTION" WAS designated a Santa Monica landmark last Monday night by the Landmarks Commission. It joins a long list of dubious landmarks approved by the politically appointed (by City Council) citizens group.

I don't much care for "Chain Reaction," the 26-foot-tall, mushroom cloud sculpture made from chain that sits between the Los Angeles County Courthouse and the Civic Auditorium on Main Street.

It was created by the late Paul Conrad, a Pulitzer Prize-winning political cartoonist for the Los Angeles Times from the mid-1960s to the mid-1990s. It's a classic example how a work created for one media — pen and ink editorial cartoon — doesn't translate well to another media such as a three dimensional copper and steel sculpture.

I love Conrad's illustrative work, but "Chain Reaction," a heavy-handed warning about nuclear war, is clichéd and irrelevant. It may have been a bold statement in newspaper editorial pages 40 years ago when the Cold War between the United States and the former Soviet Union had everyone fearing nuclear Armageddon. Now, it's passé and dated.

In the mid 1980s, the anti-war Conrad wanted to make a "big statement" about the nuclear bomb as a weapon of mass destruction. He approached City Hall with his idea for a monumental sculpture of a nuclear mushroom cloud. Frustrated by lengthy delays for its approval, Conrad offered the sculpture to Beverly Hills and was turned down.

According to L.A. Times news reports at the time, when a model of it was displayed, the public voted 703 to 392 against it. Nevertheless, the Arts Commission ignored public opinion and voted to accept the sculpture because, they claimed, opponents of the work had stuffed the ballot box. Nothing changes here, does it?

Finally in 1990, the City Council voted 4 to 3 to accept Conrad's sculpture and display it in the Civic Center.

The work is facing removal because, over 20 years, its supporting structure has rusted and corroded. It presents a danger to public safety because of potential collapse. City Hall has indicated no willingness to put taxpayer money into its restoration — a smart decision. Public donations are being solicited for the estimated $227,000 to $423,000 repair costs.

If it's preserved, I hope it's moved. However, our Civic Center has become such a planning disaster, what harm is one more, badly placed monument to political propaganda going to do?

EAST PICO PROJECT 'OUT OF SCALE'

Another Santa Monica development is raising red flags in the Sunset Park/East Pico neighborhoods. It's a four-story, 197,971-square-foot mixed-use project consisting of 300 apartments, approximately 5,000 square feet of ground floor retail space and 554 parking spaces in a two-level subterranean garage — all on 2.5 acres.

The project is at 3402 Pico Blvd., which was the headquarters for the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences — the Grammy folks. It's being redeveloped by TC Pico Development, LLC, a Trammel-Crow Company which is an independently operated subsidiary of real-estate giant CBRE Group, Inc., headquartered in Los Angeles.

Pico neighborhood and Sunset Park residents have indicated they want Crow's project scaled down in size, height and mass. Because the developer hasn't provided renderings of the proposed project, nobody even knows what it will look like. Add another red flag.

But, the biggest issues are traffic, traffic and traffic. Neighbors are concerned about how much congestion the development will introduce onto adjacent, single-family streets already impacted by traffic from the I-10 Freeway on and off ramps, Centinela Avenue, a nearby Trader Joe's market and Santa Monica College further west on Pico. Estimates are Crow's development alone will add approximately 2,000 daily car trips to the area.

Two other projects are pending on Pico, further east in Los Angeles. One is a 95 unit apartment complex with parking for 163 cars at Pico and Centinela now under construction at the old Rent-A-Wreck site. The second project from Casden Development is a proposed 538 residential unit, high-rise, mega-complex at Pico and Sepulveda boulevards, with 271,000 square feet of commercial space and parking for 2,000 vehicles.

I have a suggestion: remove all the on-site parking. If none of the residents have cars or drive (like at 401 Broadway) and just walk, bicycle, ride the bus or Expo Light Rail, there'll be minimal traffic impacts. Yep. Everything will be "OK." Cough.

3402 Pico is on Wednesday's (July 18) Planning Commission agenda. Commissioners will review the project and make recommendations before sending it on to City Council for the eventual granting of a development agreement. The commission meets in council chambers, City Hall, at 7 p.m. Public input is strongly encouraged.

SMRR'S CRYSTAL BALL

Local political watchers should attend the Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR) Annual Convention, Sunday, July 22 at John Adams Middle School beginning at 12:45 p.m.

This is where SMRR members (as of April 24, 2012) will endorse candidates for four open council seats, three school board seats, two rent control board seats and three Santa Monica College Board of Trustee seats.

SMRR-backed candidates usually prevail in municipal races, so anyone endorsed at this meeting will have a big advantage in the fall election. Keep in mind that two years ago, SMRR's Steering Committee later added persons not endorsed during the membership voting to SMRR's "endorse" list creating a big stink among members.

The SMRR convention is a great political theater and a primer on staying in power like a Middle East dictator. And, it's open to the public.

Tainted Montana town reaches cleanup milestone

MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. Grass and freshly planted trees are sprouting in a new town park that sits atop the site of a vermiculite plant that once spewed asbestos dust across the mountain community of Libby — a welcome dose of normalcy for a city that has become synonymous with lung disease and death.

It's a major milestone for the mining town of about 3,000 people near the Canadian border where an estimated 400 people to date have been killed by asbestos exposure. More than 1,700 have been sickened. Lethal dust from the WR. Grace and Co. plant and the company's nearby mine once blanketed the town, and asbestos illnesses are still being diagnosed more than two decades after the mine was shuttered.

Following a 12-year cleanup, Riverfront Park hosted a wedding last weekend. Officials said another wedding and a blues festival are scheduled for early August. For Mayor Doug Roll, the federal government's recent transfer of the park to the city offers a symbolic break from Libby's lethal past.

"It's sort of like Phoenix rising from the ashes," Roll said. "We've had a lot of negative stuff going on and we're trying to turn that around."

But the park — the first major finished piece of a federal cleanup that so far has cost $447 million — carries a significant asterisk: Because of the difficulty of removing all the asbestos-containing vermiculite from the highly-contaminated site, federal regulators say some of the dangerous material remains.

For three decades, the Grace plant was used to stockpile vermiculite from the mine before the material was exported by rail across the U.S. for use as attic insulation. The town's ball fields are right next door; Libby residents who today battle asbestos disease tell stories of playing in the plant's piles of raw vermiculite as children.

Just 18 inches beneath the park's surface beneath a cap of clean soil is a fluorescent orange barrier, a warning to those who dig on the site in the future that they face potential asbestos exposure.

It's one of many reminders that Libby's tragedy has yet to run its course.

The town remains under a first-of-its kind public health emergency declaration issued by Environmental Protection Agency administrator Lisa Jackson in 2009. The deaths are expected to continue for decades due to the long latency of asbestos-related diseases.

Agency scientists still have not settled on a safe level of human exposure to the type of asbestos found in the Kootenai Valley. That means hundreds of homes and businesses cleaned once could face additional work.

Almost a million cubic yards of soil and contaminated material have been removed from Libby to date. Federal regulators say they hope to have that phase completed in the next three to five years. The end date is uncertain, pending the results of a risk assessment to determine safe levels of exposure.

The assessment could be finished sometime next year, said the EPA's Libby team leader, Victor Ketellapper. But citing the potency of Libby's asbestos, independent scientists reviewing the document already have questioned whether it goes far enough to protect human health. If they push for changes, that could further delay completion of the assessment — and the cleanup.

Jeff Camplin, an environmental safety consultant who has been working with activists in Libby, said the uncertain timetable means the EPA has pushed forward without enough scientific grounding to guide its cleanup.

"They just seem to be throwing money at the issue," said Camplin. "There's not a good handle on what is the scope of the problem, what is the overall master cleanup plan."

Camplin and others, including a former member of the town council, have warned that EPA contractors are inadvertently cross-contaminating the town in the rush to make it safer. They contend that earlier this year the contractors unknowingly pulled up steel parking barriers at Riverfront Park made from sections of pipe used by Grace to transport vermiculite, spilling raw material from the pipes and fouling the site yet again.

EPA's manager of the park site, Rebecca Thomas, rejected the claim, saying the pipes were neither contaminated nor in contact with contaminated soil. She said she did not know the history of the pipes themselves.

It wouldn't be the first time vermiculite turned up in an area already treated by the EPA. Since the agency descended on Libby in 1999 after media reports about rising numbers of deaths, the EPA and Grace have revisited the former export plant site at least six times to remove vermiculite or carry out other cleanup actions.

As recently as late May, vermiculite was found during excavation to install a communication line through the 17-acre park. Thomas said all of the vermiculite found was either removed or covered with clean material.

"We have utmost confidence that everything in the top 18 inches is clean," she said. "There are areas where it was left in place at low concentrations when it was found. It just doesn't make sense to just dig and dig and dig."

Cheap parking

City Hall offers $2.20 annual parking passes to seniors for beach parking lots. In fact, the cost doesn't even cover the price of the sticker it's printed on.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Do you think this is a fair price or should it be increased?

MAKING A STINK: A study by the Environmental Working Group assessed the climate impacts of 20 popular types of meat, fish, dairy and vegetable proteins and concluded that beef has more than twice the emissions of pork, nearly four times more than chicken and more than 13 times as much as vegetable proteins such as beans, lentils and tofu.

Meaty issue

Dear EarthTalk:

We've been hearing for years how producing red meat is bad for the environment while consuming it is bad for our health. How do other types of meat, fish, dairy and vegetable proteins stack up in terms of environmental and health impacts?

– Julia Saperstein

Not all forms of protein are created equal as to the environmental and health implications of raising and consuming them. A 2011 assessment by the non-profit Environmental Working Group (EWG) found that "different meats and different production systems have varying health, climate and other environmental impacts."

The quantity of chemical fertilizers, fuel and other "production inputs" used, the differences in soil conditions and production systems and the extent to which best practices such as cover cropping, intensive grazing or manure management are implemented all affect the amount of greenhouse gas emissions a meat product is responsible for generating. To wit, lamb, beef, cheese, pork and farmed salmon raised "conventionally" (e.g. with inputs including hormones and antibiotics and feed derived from crops grown with chemical pesticides and fertilizers) were determined by EWG to generate the most greenhouse gases.

EWG partnered with the environmental analysis firm CleanMetrics to assess the climate impacts via lifecycle assessments of 20 popular types of meat, fish, dairy and vegetable proteins. EWG's assessment calculated the full "cradle-to-grave" carbon footprint of each food item based on the greenhouse gas emissions generated before and after it left the farm-from the pesticides and fertilizer used to grow animal feed all the way through the grazing, animal raising, processing, transportation, cooking and even disposal of unused food (since some 20 percent of edible meat gets thrown away by Americans).

According to EWG, conventionally raised lamb, beef, cheese and pork also generate more polluting waste, pound for pound. Of these, lamb has the greatest impact, followed by beef and then by cheese-so vegetarians who eat dairy aren't off the hook. "Beef has more than twice the emissions of pork, nearly four times more than chicken and more than 13 times as much as vegetable proteins such as beans, lentils and tofu," summarizes EWG.

On the health front, EWG reports that "eating too much of these greenhouse gas-intensive meats boosts exposure to toxins and increases the risk of a wide variety of serious health problems, including heart disease, certain cancers, obesity and, in some studies, diabetes."

Besides cutting out animal-derived proteins altogether, the best thing we can do for our health and the environment is to cut down on our meat consumption and choose only organic, humane and/or grass-fed meat, eggs and dairy. "Overall, these products are the least harmful, most ethical choices," says EWG, adding that grass-fed and pasture-raised products are typically more nutritious and carry less risk of bacterial contamination. "While best management practices can demonstrably reduce overall emissions and environmental harm, the most effective and efficient way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and environmental impacts from livestock is simply to eat, waste and produce less meat and dairy." For more information, check out EWG's free online "Meat Eater's Guide."

San Francisco considering ways to curb plastic water bottles

FENIT NIRAPPIL
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO San Francisco, the city that regulated Happy Meal toys and banned plastic grocery bags, has a new target in its health-conscious, eco-friendly crosshairs: plastic water bottles.

City officials are considering an ordinance that would require owners of new and renovated buildings with water fountains to install special bottle-filling taps. The law's designed to encourage thirsty people to refill containers instead of reaching for another bottle of Evian or Aquafina.

"This is the appropriate next step to make it easier for San Franciscans to get out of the bad habit of using environmentally wasteful plastic water bottles and into the good habit of using reusable water containers," said Board of Supervisors President David Chiu, who introduced the legislation in June.

Bottle-filling taps like the ones that would be required if Chiu's measure passes already are found at San Francisco International Airport and at some city parks and schools. Installed behind a drinking fountain's regular faucet, they dispense chilled water in a quick-streaming vertical jet that is high enough to accommodate most water containers.

Advocates say having bottle-specific spigots encourages the reuse of water bottles by eliminating long waits to fill them and removing concerns about germs. Some people squirm at the thought of drinking from a fountain exposed to so many mouths, although city officials say water fountains are no less hygienic than bottle taps.

Skeptics question whether the ordinance is necessary, since the proposed taps pour the same highly-regarded public water that comes out of every other faucet and drinking fountain. Businesses often complain that San Francisco lawmakers are too quick to impose bans or restrictions that affect their bottom lines.

"If you are in an office, your kitchen has a sink, the sink has a faucet and that faucet puts out Hetch Hetchy (reservoir) water," San Francisco Building Owners and Managers Association representative Ken Cleaveland said. "It's just one more new law that San Francisco is implementing on top of hundreds of other laws to make, rather force, compliance in sustainable practices."

Despite initial skepticism, the association is waiting for more details before taking a stance on the law

Adding a bottled-water spigot to existing water fountains would cost at least around $750, according to manufacturers.

For officials at Pennsylvania State University, the cost has been worthwhile. The university is now installing taps on all its campuses after experimenting with them for three years, said Lydia Vandenbergh, an official overseeing the university's effort to reduce use of plastic water bottles. Students were more receptive to filling bottles from special taps than drinking fountains, thought to be dirty.

"In the era of hyper hygiene, for a lot of people, that's a barrier," Vandenbergh said. University officials have estimated the busiest tap replaces the equivalent of 35,000 plastic bottles a month.

Chiu's ordinance calls plastic water bottles "bad for the environment," unnecessarily taking up landfill space and causing greenhouse gas emissions when cheap tap water is available. San Francisco city departments have been barred from buying plastic water bottles since 2007.

Chiu said he considered other aggressive measures to curb the bottle, including a fee and an outright ban. The proposed ordinance is less severe and is meant to raise awareness about drinking tap water as an alternative, he said.

Environmental groups are supportive of efforts to wean San Franciscans from plastic water bottles.

"San Francisco has among the best drinking water in country. It's ridiculous that people would go out and spend their now very limited dollars to buy bottled water," said Mae Wu, an attorney with the Natural Resources Defense Council.

Chris Hogan, an International Bottled Water Association spokesman, said his industry contributes a small fraction of worldwide energy consumption and greenhouse gas emissions. He welcomed efforts to encourage drinking tap water, but said they don't require demonizing bottled water.

"When you make the argument to discourage people from drinking bottled water, you are removing the healthiest option when it comes to choosing a bottled beverage," Hogan said.

Chiu introduced the ordinance at a board of supervisors meeting on June 26. It is expected to go before the supervisors' Land Use and Economic Development Committee in September and if it passes, on to the full board of supervisors.

Suit filed to stop pumping of Mojave groundwater

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CADIZ, Calif. A Texas-based oil and gas company is suing over plans to pump Mojave Desert groundwater, saying its neighboring industrial salt operations will be affected.

The Los Angeles Times reports Tetra Technologies Inc., has filed two lawsuits to stop Cadiz Inc.'s pumping plans, which would provide enough groundwater to supply 100,000 urban Southern California homes.

Tetra says the water project's environmental review was a sham designed to escape serious scrutiny.

Cadiz says it would consider buying out the salt operations and has offered to pay to drill deeper brine wells for Tetra's salt operations.

The lawsuits were cheered by conservationists and desert residents opposed to the project.

The water district will hold a public hearing July 25.

Expo Light Rail Line

Please note the following activities:
1. Street parking: striping and signage: Starting Monday, July 16 through Friday, July 20.
Work crews will install parking meters and ramps on seven side streets listed below. Construction activities include, installing meters, wheel stops, handicap ramps and curb paint.
• Seventh from Colorado Avenue to Olympic Boulevard.
• Ninth, 10th, 12th, Euclid, 15th and 16th streets from Colorado Avenue to Broadway.
2. Sewer relocations in Downtown Santa Monica on Colorado Avenue between Fourth Street and Lincoln Boulevard. Please note the following partial street closures and after hours work. Expect daytime lane closures on Colorado and night work partial closure of Fifth Street and Colorado Avenue, and Seventh Street and Colorado from 9 p.m. – 6 a.m. this week.
3. Sewer relocations on Colorado between Lincoln Boulevard and 14th Streets. Expect daytime lane closures on Colorado, one lane in each direction will be maintained. Expect delays if using Colorado.
4. Watermain relocation on 20th Street. Work crews will be relocating an existing water line currently located underground at various points along the Expo right-of-way in the city of Santa Monica. Work is scheduled to start on July 1 on 20th Street between Olympic Boulevard and Colorado. Please note that only one northbound lane will be maintained on 20th Street between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. Expect delays. Noise levels will be monitored to ensure work performed is within the necessary compliance levels.
5. Watermain relocation on 26th Street. Work crews will be relocating an existing water line currently located underground at various points along the Expo right-of-way in the city of Santa Monica. Work is scheduled to start on July 16 on 26th Street between Olympic Boulevard and Michigan Avenue. Please note that only one northbound lane will be maintained on 26th Street between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. Expect delays. Noise levels will be monitored to ensure work performed is within the necessary compliance levels.
6. Centinela Bridge: Majority of the work will take place in the city of Los Angeles right-of-way, with the west abutment being built within the city of Santa Monica. Construction of the Centinela Bridge will be implemented in stages. Initial stages include implementing controls to realign traffic lanes between Exposition and Olympic boulevards by restriping traffic lanes and placing k-rail (or concrete barriers) south of the Exposition right-of-way on the east and west sides of Centinela Avenue. Immediately behind the k-rail, abutment excavation will begin to prepare the area for the actual bridge construction. All construction activities will be limited to areas behind the k-rail.
7. Soil removal and grading within the Expo right-of-way (ROW): To continue in Santa Monica on July 16. Expect additional truck activates on Centinela Avenue, Stewart and 26th streets.
8. South sidewalk is closed on Colorado between 14th and 16th streets.

20th/Cloverfield improvement project

Construction activities on 20th Street and Cloverfield Boulevard between the Santa Monica Freeway (I-10) and Pico Boulevard include potholing, driveway reconstruction, irrigation line installation, curb ramp modification and street light pole foundation installation. Said work will involve lane closures. Traffic control will be in place during construction and will maintain one lane of traffic in each direction at all times. Left and right turn movements may be restricted some times. Please use alternate routes whenever possible. For more info, please contact Jim Litzel, Black & Veatch, (310) 863-4991.

Annual paving and sidewalk repair project

The contractor will be repairing sidewalks and performing striping work at various locations throughout the city. Striping locations: Pearl Street between 17th Street and Centinela Avenue; Ocean Park Boulevard between Cloverfield Boulevard and Centinela Avenue; Sixth Street between Montana and Colorado avenues; Montana Avenue between Ocean Avenue and Seventh Street; 14th Street between Washington and Ashland avenues. Also, damaged portion of concrete sidewalk will be removed and replaced in phase III area of the project (north of Broadway and east of Ocean Avenue). Crack filling will be continued in Ocean Park area to prepare the streets for slurry seal. Temporary traffic control signs and barricades will be deployed to guide vehicular and pedestrian traffic in and around the work areas. Work hours are 8 a.m. – 6 p.m. Impact to traffic should be minimal but partial closures of some travel lanes may be necessary at times. For more info, please contact Inspector Chuck Stagner, (714) 925-4628.

Advanced traffic management systems project

The contractor will be working on sidewalk restoration along Broadway at the intersections of 11th, 14th and 17th streets and will continue to work at Broadway and 26th Street setting the signal poles and traffic equipment, as well as installing traffic signal pull boxes at Arizona Avenue and Seventh Street and Arizona and 11th Street, and potholing along Arizona from Ocean Avenue to 17th Street for the boring and pulling of fiber optic run. Impact to traffic should be minimal but partial and full lane closures may be necessary at times. All work will take place between the hours of 8 a.m. – 6 p.m. Questions may be directed to the project hotline at (866) 755-7679 and/or Glenn Paras, Inspector, (714) 493-7017. For more info, visit www.SMConstructs.org.

Ocean Park Boulevard complete green street project

Construction will take place Monday to Friday, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., on Ocean Park Boulevard, between Neilson Way and Lincoln Boulevard. Phase 3 of the traffic control will be implemented with work occurring in the center of Ocean Park Boulevard and will continue to maintain one lane of traffic in each direction. There will be lane closures from Neilson Way to Lincoln. Please use alternate routes whenever possible. For more info, visit www.SMConstructs.org.

Parking Structure No. 6

There will be sidewalk and NB lane closures on Second Street between Broadway and Santa Monica Boulevard due to tree trimming/removal. Temporary traffic control signs and barricades will be deployed to guide vehicular and pedestrian traffic in and around the work areas. Fencing and deliveries work will take place in the alley behind the parking structure (Second Court), with partial alley closures taking place through Nov. 30, 2012. All work will take place Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

pain and it's a painful way to live, I couldn't bear having a child who has to endure such an experience, they should be free to be an athlete."

Safe4Athlete's mission is to develop policies and procedures at the local level for sports clubs and teams to handle sexual harassment and bullying by providing them with an athlete welfare advocate to speak to about these issues, should they occur. Starr believes that parents should be more informed and capable of making better decisions about such situations.

There is no legal protection for open amateur sports outside of criminal law, according to Starr, and that is why sexual harassment is tolerated in the athletic community. There isn't a way to prevent it.

This is evident; 159 coaches in Washington have been fired or reprimanded for sexual misconduct ranging from harassment to rape in the last decade, and nearly all were male coaches victimizing girls, according to the Seattle Times. At least 98 of said coaches continued to coach. The Board of Directors of USA Gymnastics released a statement that revealed that 82 coaches were banned from its ranks.

Starr hopes that every sports club and community will adopt a Safe4Athletes policy and program to prevent this type of abuse as well as sexual abuse and harassment from happening. She believes that parents should know that when they drop their children off at one of these programs, there is a set of procedures in place to protect their kids from all types of abuse.

Sports psychology consultant Karen Costello believes that the most prevalent abuse at the high school level is verbal coach-on-athlete abuse.

"I saw a lot of it happening at the high school level with young male coaches who don't respect boundaries," Costello said. "They cross the line and maybe start being a little too friendly with the athletes, trying to be one of them rather than an authority figure, and then it becomes something else."

Costello also notes that a lot of this verbal abuse, especially when it targets body image, can lead to eating disorders for many young girls.

"One little comment can put a teenage girl over the edge," Costello said. "In my 22 years in athletics, the most prevalent thing I've seen is body image issues."

It is also very difficult, especially for a high school student, to blow the whistle on a popular coach. There is often backlash from other athletes so it is difficult for an athlete to come forward and speak to someone about any problems with the coach, Costello said.

The athlete welfare advocate provided to the children would be an unbiased person, which makes him or her more accessible and helpful than another parent or coach. This ameliorates the process for such aforementioned high school students who are afraid of being bullied by other athletes for ousting a popular coach.

"Another parent wouldn't want to fire a coach because their kid might still be doing well, never mind that this other child is suffering," Starr said. "You have to take away the decision from the parents' hands. They [the young athletes] need to be able to perform and not have to figure out the emotional intelligence behind this."

After suffering such abuse herself, Starr recognizes the struggles that athletes go through, and the added pressure of figuring out what to do when abuse occurs is a very heavy weight to have on one's shoulders.

"In my case, I wouldn't have gone to a governing body, I was only 14," Starr said. "A 14-year-old cannot navigate themselves around a corporation."

The welfare advocates could be reached through more modern technological means, unlike in Starr's day when a pen and paper was the only communication method. This also helps make the process more discrete.

Safe4Athletes got the word out and hosted a fundraising event at the home of Richard Riordan, the former mayor of Los Angeles, on June 26. Many celebrities and athletes such as Estella Warren, Canadian national synchronized swimming champion and actress in "Planet of the Apes," and Nancy Hogshead-Makar, three-time Olympic gold medalist for swimming, were in attendance.

"It went very well," Starr said. "To have someone like Richard Riordan put on an event for you speaks volumes about the need for the organization. We put a stake in the ground and we're moving forward so I'm happy about it. It's more important that what we do gets implemented into the sports community."

In addition to being so invested in the athletic community, Starr still stays active herself. Being a Santa Monica local, Starr frequents the Fourth Street stairs to work out. She enjoys being outside and walking on the beach as well.

Starr has lived in Santa Monica for seven years, and lives just several blocks from the popular Third Street Promenade in one of the city's historic buildings, the Sovereign.

"I just love the diversity of the [Santa Monica] community, and it's a great place to live," Starr said. "It's a very active community, and a very friendly place. I like the locals and I like Montana Avenue, which I think is the best kept secret of Santa Monica. It's a great street."

Although Starr does not have children of her own, she hopes to "adopt every little athlete child of my own." Her organization is committed to protecting their welfare.

"I want parents to be able to read this and understand how important it is to have a program like this for their kid," Starr said. "I'm empowering them to make a decision. They need to know that their kids are vulnerable, and we're trying to change that. Don't turn a blind eye to this issue, and know that you can do something about it."

released in March.

The study by the university's Safe Transportation Research and Education Center examined deaths for two years before and two years after the cellphone ban took effect in July 2008.

It found that overall traffic deaths dropped 22 percent, while deaths blamed on drivers using hand-held cellphones were down 47 percent. Deaths among drivers who use hands-free phones dropped at a similar rate.

"The most important thing to do when you're driving is to drive," Coffee said. "It does take your attention away, whether it's hands free or not."

California is one of 39 states that bans texting while driving, though it's unclear if any of the others allow hands-free texting.

ELECTION

As City Councilmember Bob Holbrook knows, getting signatures can be a stressful experience.

Holbrook, who is not up for election this year, has walked Santa Monica door-to-door in search of signatures. The experience gives candidates face-time with the people they hope to represent and can give them a first-hand look at Santa Monica's diverse neighborhoods.

It can also acquaint a person with the more arcane provisions of the Santa Monica municipal code.

While on a signature hunt one year, Holbrook stopped by a house with a gated front yard. The front door was on the other end of a walkway, lined with lush plants.

While he contemplated entering the front yard to knock on the door, something made the decision for him.

"This neck came around the corner," Holbrook said.

The owner of the house, who happened to be absent, owned emus. Emus are the second tallest birds in the world, right after ostriches. Holbrook described the attack-emu "like something out of Jurassic Park."

When he joined the council, Holbrook made it a point to check on the legality of emu-keeping within city limits. It's a-OK.

Setting the physical dangers of signature gathering aside, there are other pitfalls. Holbrook has seen candidates come up with over 100 signatures only to find that a handful were invalid, cutting off their candidacy before it really began.

Well-intentioned people sign nominating papers not knowing that their zeal for the democratic process will hinder the candidate down the road. Holbrook no longer takes chances. Over his years on the campaign trail, he has developed a rolodex of voters he knows meet the nominating requirements.

Candidates don't seem to have trouble surpassing the 100-signature bar. City Council elections, in particular, are crowded affairs, with upwards of 10 people qualifying.

The City Council flirted with the notion of upping the required signatures to 200 while giving candidates who couldn't meet that mark the option of gathering only 100 and paying an in-lieu fee for the remaining Hancocks as a way of making sure that prospective candidates had more "skin in the game."

That provision failed, and with it an attempt to get candidates to cover some of the city-incurred costs for their runs. According to the City Clerk's office, a single candidate can cost municipal coffers up to $14,000 for the production of candidate videos and the airtime they use on City TV alone.

THE RACES

Although the nominating process is only just under way, the field for the City Council race, in particular, is already filling up.

Four incumbents are up for election, and at least one is wide open for a fresh face if they have the ability to take it.

Mayor Richard Bloom will end his 13-year run on the Santa Monica City Council as he vies against Assemblywoman Betsy Butler for the 50th Assembly District, which encompasses Santa Monica, Malibu, West Hollywood and Beverly Hills.

Mayor Pro Tem Gleam Davis has already announced her decision to win her seat outright. She and Councilmember Terry O'Day were both appointed to fill seats left empty by the passings of Herb Katz and Ken Genser, respectively.

O'Day has not made a formal announcement, and may still be reeling from the loss of thousands of dollars in campaign funds to Kinde Durkee, a campaign treasurer for many Democrats that admitted to taking $7 million from the campaigns she administered.

One notable hold out is Councilmember Bobby Shriver. Rumors have swirled for over a year whether Shriver will run in 2012, go for another elected office or step out of local politics for a stretch, but the councilmember is steadfastly refusing to satisfy curiosity with a definitive statement.

Non-incumbents who have announced their intentions include Planning Commissioner Ted Winterer, education advocate Shari Davis, peace activist Jerry Rubin and newcomer John Cyrus Smith.

On the Board of Education front, sitting Board President Ben Allen and board members Jose Escarce and Maria Leon Vasquez will have to run to keep their seats.

Those who decide to run may see some competition from Malibu parents that feel marginalized by the dominance of Santa Monica residents on the Board of Education.

Malibu will "likely" field a candidate, but it's difficult to find someone to run when many feel that the odds are stacked against them, wrote Craig Foster, of the parent group Advocates for Malibu Public Schools, in an e-mail.

Representation has been a key issue for Malibu residents, who are in the process of trying to separate from the district altogether.

On the Rent Control Board front, Robert Kronovet, the sole landlord in the group, is up for re-election. It's unclear who, if anyone, will run for the two open seats given the dearth of candidates when former Rent Control Board member Chris Braun ran unopposed for his appointed seat in 2010.

Finally, the Santa Monica College Board of Trustees took heat in the past year for an incident in which students protesting a two-tier pricing model for summer classes were pepper sprayed outside a board meeting.

In the intervening months of public discussion and student outcry, many students reminded board members sharply that they are elected and that their constituents were not happy. Given the fact that only 15 percent of SMC students live in Santa Monica, it's unclear if student organizing can directly impact Rob Rader or Margaret Quinones-Perez's re-elections.

MONEY

The role of money in political campaigns at every level has been a key issue since the Supreme Court's 2010 decision to allow unfettered corporate spending in elections.

The City Council attempted to reign that spending in at the beginning of 2011, but was barred from doing so by First Amendment protections conferred to corporations by the Citizens' United decision.

The City Council did vote to raise the maximum campaign contribution from the standard $250, which had been in place since 1992, to $325 for City Council and Rent Control Board races. Proponents of the change felt that it would allow candidates to raise more money from individuals to stave off attacks from private interests.

School board and SMC races do not have contribution limits spelled out in the Santa Monica municipal code, nor are they defined in their respective policies or bylaws.

Factions within the community concerned by the influence of outside money in local politics have formed to keep an eye on where donations to primarily council races are coming from.

Members of the Santa Monica Transparency Project analyzed the 2010 campaign contributions, and found that many council members had taken money from developers that did work in Santa Monica.

Those groups, and the Daily Press, will be keeping an eye on campaign contribution filings that must be turned in to the City Clerk's office at regular intervals.

According to the Fair Political Practices Commission, the first deadline for all committees for the period between March 31 and June 30 is July 31. The next filing dates fall on Oct. 5 and Oct. 25. After that, updates are filed daily.

THE ISSUES

Traffic. Over-development. The impacts of the Santa Monica Airport.

Many of the problems listed by community groups in the city sound familiar, likely because they've been on repeat for many years.

Groups like the Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City feel that many members of the current City Council have done little to solve these critical issues, and put them on notice.

"There are five council members who vote for anything developers want, regardless of traffic, quality of life impacts," wrote Diana Gordon, co-chair of SMCLC. "Now that there are a couple of open seats for the council, we need to fill them with people who will take residents' concerns into account on these critical development issues."

Those in education have their own problems to deal with.

A crushing budget from the state lopped 22 percent of state contributions from the local district, and the community colleges have lost millions as they cope with a decrease in classes and increase in needy students.

Attempts to solve those problems have met with stiff resistance from students, who fear their public education will be privatized.

The Nov. 5 election could bring many new players into Santa Monica politics, or it could retain those that have committed themselves to office thus far.

It seems unlikely that either group will have an easy time of it.

HOMES

would sign on as a client of Mortgage Resolution Partners, then condemn certain mortgages. The mortgages are typically owned by private investors like hedge funds and pension funds.

Under eminent domain, the city or county would be required to pay those investors "fair value" for the seized mortgages. So Mortgage Resolution Partners would find private investors to fund that.

Mortgage Resolution Partners will focus on mortgages where the borrowers are current on their payments but are "under water," meaning their mortgage costs more than the home is worth. After being condemned and seized, the mortgages would be rewritten based on the homes' current values. The borrowers would get to stay, but with cheaper monthly payments. The city or county would resell the loans to other private investors, so it could pay back the investors who funded the seizure and pay a flat fee to Mortgage Resolution Partners.

The company says that overall, all parties will be happy. The homeowners, for obvious reasons. The cities, for stemming economic blight without using taxpayer bailouts. And even the investors whose mortgage investments are seized. Mortgage Resolution Partners figures they should be glad to unload a risky asset.

Rick Rayl, an eminent domain lawyer in Irvine, Calif., who is not connected to the company, isn't so sure.

"The lenders are going to be livid," he said. He thinks the plan could have unintended consequences, like discouraging banks and other lenders from making new mortgage loans in an area.

The company says that focusing on borrowers who are current on their loans is a smart way to do business, rewarding those who are already working hard to keep their homes. But, Rayl pointed out, those are also the exact mortgages that investors are eager to keep.

Already, the outcry was heard at the first meeting of the joint powers authority on Friday, even as chairman and San Bernardino County chief executive Greg Devereaux said the entity — which was inspired by Mortgage Resolution Partners' proposal — has not yet decided on a specific course of action.

Timothy Cameron, managing director of the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association's asset managers group, told the authority that residents of the region would find it harder to get loans and investors — including pensioners — would suffer losses. He also said such a move would invite costly litigation.

"The use of eminent domain will do more harm than good," he said. "We need mortgage investors and lenders to come back to these fragile markets — but this plan will force both groups to avoid them."

But Robert Hockett, a Cornell University law professor who serves as an unpaid adviser to Mortgage Resolution Partners, was unsympathetic. He likes how the plan forces the hand of uncooperative investors, who have sometimes stifled plans to reduce mortgage payments.

"It's kind of like saying a loan shark objects to anti-predatory lending laws," Hockett said.

Theodore Woodard, a 62-year-old retired air conditioner installer, said he'd welcome the help on his five-bedroom home in Fontana. So far, he and his wife have kept up with monthly $3,100 payments, plus taxes and insurance, but it hasn't been easy, and they have watched several neighbors in the well-manicured neighborhood some 50 miles east of Los Angeles lose their homes to foreclosure.

"We've been making our monthly payments, barely making them, but we just pay them and try to survive off what's left," said Woodard, who estimates his house has lost a third of its value since 2004.

In San Bernardino County, the problem is clear. The median home price has plunged to $150,000 from $370,000 in five years. The combined San Bernardino-Riverside metro area has the highest foreclosure rate of any large metro area in the country, at four times the national average, according to RealtyTrac, which tracks foreclosure properties.

Devereaux, who has seen other plans to fix the housing crisis peter out, is cautious.

"I don't know whether this will work or not," he said. "But we do think we have a responsibility to explore it."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

OLYMPICS

Much work to do before London is ready for games

STEPHEN WILSON
AP Sports Writer

LONDON With the opening ceremony less than two weeks away, there's a mad dash to the finish line at the Olympics and it has nothing to do with sprinters.

Hundreds of construction workers are toiling away inside the Olympic Park, laying cables, installing seats and adding the last layers of sparkle and polish to the venues.

There's plenty to do.

"It's looking a bit industrial isn't it?" said Chris Allen, a Londoner who came to the edge of the park to have a look. "I am not seeing England's green fields. I do hope it's going to look better."

Shades of Athens, where chronic delays pushed workers to the brink to complete preparations in time for the games to start in 2004? Hardly, say London organizers who have prided themselves on finishing their massive construction project ahead of time and on budget. Things may look a bit messy now, they say, but all will be fine by the time the curtain goes up, on July 27, when the torch is lit.

"We're not at the stage yet where we're ready to flick the TV on," James Bulley, director of venues for organizing committee LOCOG, told The Associated Press. "The athletes aren't ready to start competing yet, either. We want all our venues to look absolutely spectacular and pristine.

"The venues are ready. We're now just doing the final setup for the games. We're in a good place. We're on track. There's nothing I'm worried about."

The last few weeks and days are all about putting up signs, fitting in the remaining seats and completing the landscaping.

"We will be mowing lawns right up to the opening ceremony," LOCOG chairman Sebastian Coe told the AP.

The last thing organizers need at this point is a crisis over readiness of the venues. At the moment, they're coping with the fallout from a bungled contract by private security group G4S that forced the government to call in about 3,500 additional troops — many just returned from tours of duty in Afghanistan — to fill the shortfall.

A walk through the 560-acre Olympic Park in east London this weekend, between yet another bout of rain showers, showed the scale of what remains to be done: a small army of workers, a sea of white tents, cranes, bulldozers, upturned tables and chairs, humming generators, television cables and rigging, a maze of fences.

Paul Gauger, who works for the tourism agency Visit Britain, surveyed a sad-looking wild flower patch near the aquatics center but took it in stride.

"This is all cosmetic stuff," he said. "Look! There are some flowers growing over there!"

Bulley said the venues, after the construction and fit-out phases, are now in their final "bump-in" period. Television networks from around the world are moving in and cabling the venues for their cameras. LOCOG's "look'" teams are completing the signage and color schemes. Sports equipment is being shipped in.

"We're still putting in seats at probably 10 or so venues," Bulley said. "We're putting in 1,000 seats a day."

The "live site" in the Olympic Park — a grassy area where spectators can watch the events on a giant screen and listen to musical entertainment — is also unfinished.

"The bump-in looks quite messy, but you leave this to the last stages," Bulley said. "It's always the last thing you do in getting events ready. We want to work these venues right up to when the athletes are coming in so they look as good as possible."

Olympic Park isn't the only place getting dolled up.

So is Horse Guards Parade, the ceremonial parade ground a stone's throw from the Prime Minister's Downing Street residence in central London, and site of beach volleyball. It's a temporary venue which requires stands and 5,000 tons of sand brought in from a quarry south of London. Imagine a giant sandbox. Work started only late last month after the Trooping of the Color ceremony marking Queen Elizabeth II's birthday.

Another key venue requiring special attention is ExCel. The conference and exhibition center in the Docklands area is being turned into multiple arenas hosting boxing, judo, table tennis, wrestling, fencing, taekwondo and weightlifting.

"We're well advanced," Bulley said. "We'll be ready to hand those arenas over as of early next week. We took the venues later than many of the others. We've always known the period we've had to deliver these venues. We track them very closely. We're in super shape."

International Olympic Committee President Jacques Rogge said it's normal for host cities to face a flurry of last-ditch issues.

"It's not peculiar for London," he said. "We've always had difficulties in the days leading up to the games in the previous games and the games were of an impeccable nature. This is something that does not worry us. We're confident that everything will be fine by the opening ceremony day."

Even Andrew Boff, a member of the London Assembly and vocal critic of the Olympic project, has no doubts.

"It's the nature of any games," he said. "They look unfinished before you get there. But the venues are ready. They've been tested. You can do a lot in 12 days. If it weren't ready, Seb Coe would have his Lordship or knighthood taken away."

Dinner for two tonight, Sag

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ You are quite diversified and energized. Your ability to focus is unusually high, which is good. You intuitively know when someone pushes you in the wrong direction. Share more. Tonight: Happily head home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★ You might want to rethink a personal matter that could impact your finances. Let your creativity stretch to new limits when in a meeting or brainstorming situation. You believe anything is possible, though you do understand there is a limit to your own energy. Tonight: Catch up on a pal's news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★ You have that sparkle that convinces others to go along with your ideas. You might want to think about a situation in which you will need to take the lead. A child or a loved one could be shut down or testy. Tonight: Treat yourself well.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★ Step back and do some thinking. You might want to move in a new direction. You also might do some research and check in with a respected authority figure. You will know when you have sufficient information. Tonight: Come out of hiding. Others want to visit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ Use the daylight hours to the max. Understand what your limitations might be. You cannot hold back at the moment; you need to initiate a project or a conversation. The reaction you get could be better, but know that this, too, will pass. Tonight: Vanish while you can!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★ Once more, you discover how many people depend on getting a certain reaction from you. They might not realize how demanding their needs can be. A conversation cannot be put on the back burner. Let people know when a situation becomes cumbersome. Tonight: Out among friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ Take a chance and make that long-distance call. You are on top of your game and honoring exactly what you want. Your seriousness tells others that you mean business. Do not sell yourself short. Also, do a better job of listening. Tonight: A force to be dealt with.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★ You could be on top of a situation because of a partner who seems to catch others' news and whimsies way before anyone else. Listen to this person's feedback with care if you want to make strong decisions. Tonight: Let your mind wander and choose.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★★ Others seek you out, but your hands are full with juggling people and requests. The good news is that you handle it well. You might need to stop and deal with a difficult person in a meeting. You have the right leverage. Tonight: Dinner for two.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★ Dive into your normal routine, yet be aware that you could be slowed down by someone you look up to. He or she could be inordinately testy. Rather than thinking about someone, pick up the phone and say "hello." Your efforts will be appreciated. Tonight: Sort through invitations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Tap into your innate ingenuity to find the right solution. Someone you trust and respect might be unavailable. Understand rather than complain. Use care with your finances, and follow a hunch. Be sure you can afford the risk. Tonight: Take it easy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

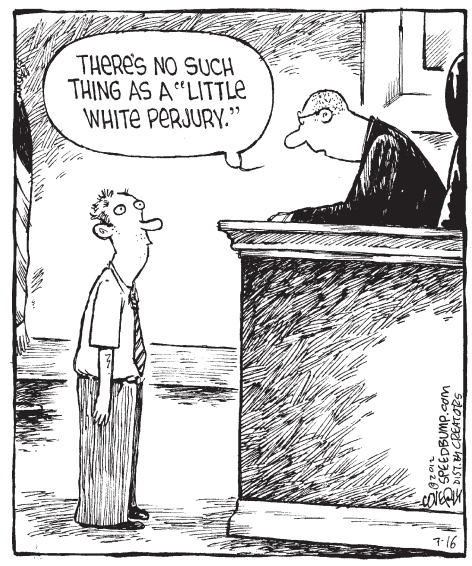

★★★★ You might want to rethink a decision that could cause a bit of a hardship in a relationship. You know what you want to do. Tonight: Let your imagination rock and roll.

Happy birthday

This year you swing from being introverted to extroverted. You also waver between being intellectual and highly emotional. You may be deciding whether to buy a home or remodel your present one. You'll want to live out a dream that could involve travel and/or a foreigner. If you are single, you certainly have the capacity to confuse someone. Make sure your choice is emotionally available. If you are attached, plan a special trip or event that the two of you often have spoken about. GEMINI understands you nearly too well.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Japanese Scientists, Overperforming: (1) Researchers at the University of Tokyo's Graduate School of Information Science and Technology have developed goggles that can enlarge the image of a bite of food so that the eater might fool himself into thinking he has consumed more than he has (and thus, that his hunger might dissipate sooner). The software is so sophisticated, they said, that the food carrier (a fork, or the eater's hand) is not transformed and appears at normal size. In basic tests, according to a June Agence France-Presse report, a 50 percent increase in imagined cookie size reduced actual consumption by 9 percent. (2) Prolific inventor Nobuhiro Takahashi announced in May that he had created a silicone-and-foam "buttocks robot" that can clench, twitch or protrude when probed (primarily for training proctology students to deal with patient anxiety).

■ In May, two members of the Senate Intelligence Oversight Committee requested the total number of U.S. citizens who have been legally spied upon (by phone calls, e-mail, etc.) since 2008 by the National Security Agency, but the NSA's inspector general said he was prohibited from answering. To go back through agency records, he said, would violate the privacy rights of those spied-upon U.S. citizens, which the agency cannot do without judicial warrant.

TODAY IN HISTORY

1956 - Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus closes its very last "Big Tent" show in Pittsburgh, due to changing economics all subsequent circus shows will be held in arenas.

1957 - United States Marine major John Glenn flies a F8U Crusader supersonic jet from California to New York in 3 hours, 23 minutes and 8 seconds, setting a new transcontinental speed record.
