Music Center marks 50 years with Sunday celebration

EMILY SAWICKI
SMDP Staff Writer

Fifty years ago, 31-year-old musician and Santa Monican Chico Fernandez had a dream of opening a practice space and photography studio for local musicians to jam, record, take lessons, shoot album covers and share music with the community.

Five decades later, Fernandez and his family are preparing to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the fulfillment of that dream: the Santa Monica Music Center.

The Music Center has evolved over the years, with Chico's brother Victor introducing the now integral retail shop and Chico's daughter Lana founding a nonprofit based on Chico's values of community and sharing a love of music. The shop has also moved from its original storefront on Lincoln Boulevard over to a larger space on Santa Monica Boulevard.

The festivities are twofold, Fernandez's daughter Lana Negrete — a Santa Monica City Councilmember and now owner of Santa Monica Music Center — said in a recent interview, because Fernandez will also be celebrating his 82nd birthday.

In honor of the dual celebration, the Santa Monica Music Center (1901 Santa Monica Blvd.) will be pulling out all the stops: live music, DJ sets, local food vendors, a sale inside the Music Center and a raffle with proceeds supporting Negrete's nonprofit Outreach Through The Arts. The community party is scheduled to take place on Sunday

Newsom visits Santa Monica College to sign new gun control law

GUN LAW: Gov. Gavin Newsom addresses reporters at SMC on Friday before signing the new measure into law.

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

At Santa Monica College on Friday, Gov. Gavin Newsom signed a controversial, first-in-the-nation gun control measure patterned after a Texas anti-abortion law, saying the state would use an opportunity created by anti-abortion rulings to target assault weapons.

His action comes one month after conservative Supreme Court justices overturned women's constitutional right to abortions and undermined gun control laws in states including California.

Newsom stitched the two hot-button topics together in approving a law allowing people to sue anyone who distributes illegal assault weapons, parts that can be used to build weapons, guns without serial numbers or .50 caliber rifles. They would be awarded at least $10,000 in civil damages for each weapon, plus attorneys' fees.

"We're sick and tired of being on the defense in this movement. It's time to put them on the defense," Newsom said. "You cannot sell, you cannot manufacture, you cannot transfer these illegal weapons of war and mass destruction in the state of

Council bans potentially dangerous items from protests

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

Council has reauthorized a ban on select items during protests after a recent spate of activity downtown including individuals with knives, sticks and tactical gear.

The emergency ordinance is the second time Council has passed the rules. The first ban came in 2021 but expired in June of this year and the Santa Monica Police Department proposed reissuing the rules in response to an uptick in protest activity locally.

Santa Monica experienced looting following protests in 2020 but subsequent protests within city limits have been peaceful. However, on July 21, SMPD Lieutenant Sal Lucio said protest intensity has increased and while SMPD supports the peaceful exercise of free speech, steps need to be taken to guarantee everyone's safety.

"In general, over the last few years, we've all seen a significant increase in protest activities locally and regionally," he said. "Some of these protests have erupted in violence against police and the community and that directly affected local residents, at times spilling into neighborhoods, as well as impacting businesses. Over time, we've seen an increase in counter-protesters and what that means is … when there's a group that's organized themselves to protest with a desire to be heard on a particular issue, they're now being countered by other groups, and as a California. And if you do, there are 40 million people that can collect $10,000 from you and attorney fees for engaging in that illegal activity."

Lawmakers patterned the bill, at Newsom's request, after a Texas law allowing citizens to sue anyone who provides or assists in providing an abortion. The U.S. Supreme Court gave preliminary approval to the Texas law, but California's law will automatically be invalidated if the Texas law is eventually ruled unconstitutional.

"There's no other state the United States of America doing more on gun safety than the state of California. Period. Full stop. We set the tone and tenor for gun safety debate in this country," he said.

Newsom acknowledged the measure is in uncharted waters and said, while the Supreme Court's abortion ruling was wrong for endangering the lives of women, it opened a door that California would walk through to protect the lives of residents from gun violence.

"It's time we step up to this moment. The world is changing radically," the Governor said. "You see what's happening with the rights revolution being wiped out in real time, just over the course of the last few years in red states all across this country. We need to act differently. We need to do things differently here in the state of California."

Newsom credited the work of local lawmakers on the bill including state Senator Bob Hertzberg and Assemblymember Richard Bloom.

"All I want to say is this: states are the incubators of democracy and the incubators of innovation," said Hertzberg, speaking at the event in Santa Monica on Friday. "It is our highest duty in our government to protect California residents with every power we have. If the United States Supreme Court is seeking to devolve authority to the states, this Governor, Gavin Newsom, and this California legislature will use this exact legal framework to save lives by it by taking illegal guns off the street."

Newsom signed the bill at Santa Monica College, the site of a 2013 mass shooting when John Zawahri killed five people. Two were killed before Zawahri entered campus including his father Samir Zawahri and brother Christopher Zawahri. Margarita Gomez, Carlos Navarro Franco and Marcela Dia Franco were shot on school property.

"In 2013 gun violence shattered our safe haven," said SMC President Dr. Kathryn Jeffery. "The gunman was taken down by four selfless officers from Santa Monica College Police Department and Santa Monica Police Department. Also SMC library staff responded using emergency training thereby saving lives. We continue to mourn the loss of groundskeeper Carlos Navarro Franco, his daughter Marcela Franco and our neighbor, Margarita Gomez."

Bloom said the SMC shooting may have crystallized the issue for local residents but it was just one example of the gun violence epidemic.

"It shook this great city and the Santa Monica College community to its core," he said. "In fact, we've grown all too familiar with the environment around gun violence."

The governor recently signed another bill patterned after a New York law that empowers anyone who suffered harm to sue gun makers or dealers who fail to follow precautions under a "firearm industry standard of conduct."

Emily Sawicki

AUTHORS: Senators Bob Hertzberg and Anthony Portantino display the signed law.

He further criticized the high court and conservative Republicans in a video message after he signed two earlier gun bills into law, one also addressing ghost guns and the other barring marketing firearms to minors.

Other recently-signed laws bar gun sales on state property, boost inspections of gun dealers, limit dealer fees, and add child and elder abuse to the list of crimes that block gun ownership.

Yet California finds itself among states fighting rear-guard actions against the Supreme Court's conservative wing.

Voters in November will be asked to guarantee the right to an abortion in the California State Constitution, while lawmakers in New York and Vermont advanced similar steps.

California and New York also are scrambling to update their laws regulating the concealed carrying of firearms after the nation's high court ruled that Americans have a right to carry firearms in public for self-defense.

New York Gov. Kathy Hochul called lawmakers there back into a special session to approve changes that take effect Sept. 1, including requiring gun owners to allow an examination of their social media accounts. California legislators expect to act in August on concealed carry restrictions.

California to allow cryptocurrency campaign donations

Candidates for state and local offices in California will soon be able to accept cryptocurrency campaign donations.

The Fair Political Practices Commission voted Thursday to approve new rules allowing the donations for digital currencies such as Bitcoin.

The new rules say candidates can accept cryptocurrency donations if they immediately convert the digital currency into U.S. dollars. Candidates must use a registered cryptocurrency processor to handle the transaction that will collect the name, address, occupation and employer of each contributor.

Cryptocurrencies don't rely on banks. Instead, transactions are recorded digitally through blockchain technology.

California's new rules will take effect within 60 days. California had been one of nine states that prohibited cryptocurrency contributions. Twelve states, plus Washington D.C., allow cryptocurrency contributions in some form, according to a commission staff report.

Candidates running for federal office are already allowed to accept cryptocurrency donations.

SpaceX launches more Starlink satellites from California

SpaceX launched 46 more Starlink satellites into orbit from California on Friday.

The satellites were carried aboard a Falcon 9 rocket that blasted off from Vandenberg Space Force Base at 10:39 a.m.

The satellite were later deployed from the rocket's second stage to join the Starlink constellation, a space-based broadband internet system with hundreds of satellites in low Earth orbit.

The Falcon 9's reusable first stage returned from space and successfully touched down on a seagoing landing platform in the Pacific Ocean. It was the stage's fourth flight.

The launch occurred 24 hours after an initial attempt was scrubbed seconds before liftoff when the flight computer detected a problem with the position of a valve in one of the rocket's engines, according to the SpaceX launch webcast.

AN ORDINANCE OF THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF SANTA MONICA ADOPTING CHAPTER 6.42 TO ESTABLISH THE SANTA MONICA OUTDOORS PARKLET PROGRAM

The following is a summary of Ordinance Number 2708 (CCS) prepared by the Office of the City Attorney:

Ordinance Number 2708 (CCS) ("the Ordinance") is an Ordinance that adopts Chapter 6.42 of the Santa Monica Municipal Code establishing the Santa Monica Outdoors Pilot Program. Chapter 6.42 authorizes eligible businesses that obtain a permit and enter into a licensing agreement with the City to operate a parklet in a parking or loading space on specified streets. Except for provisional permits, a parklet permit is valid for a two-year term and may be renewed for subsequent two-year terms, subject to the City's right to suspend or revoke a permit as provided by Section 6.42.060. Eligible businesses that have a permit to operate a parklet pursuant to Chapter 6.40, the Santa Monica Outdoors Pilot Program, and submit an application before September 15, 2022 may obtain a provisional parklet permit. The term of the provisional permit and how such a permit may be transitioned to a two-year permit will be set forth in administrative regulations. To obtain or renew a parklet permit, the eligible business must obtain the consent of the ground-floor tenant if at least half of the parking or loading space used for the parklet is in front of the ground-floor tenant's business. Eligible businesses must also (1) comply with the design and safety specifications for the construction of the parklet as set forth in the administrative regulations; (2) be responsible for the maintenance of the parklet and keeping the parklet in a clean and sanitary condition; (3) maintain insurance at coverage limits and name the City of Santa Monica as an additional insured; (4) agree to indemnify, defend, and hold the City harmless from any and all loss, damages, liability, claims, suits, costs, or expenses arising from or in any way connected to the eligible business's use of the parklet or the condition of the parking or loading space that is the subject of the permit; (5) pay the application, permit fees, charges, and security deposit established by resolution; and (6) comply with all applicable federal, state, and City laws and regulations. Following the termination or revocation of a permit, the eligible business is responsible for restoring the parking or loading space used for the parklet to its original condition. Failure to comply with Chapter 6.42 and its administrative regulations may result in denial of an application for a permit, suspension or revocation of the permit, or other enforcement action, as provided by Sections 6.42.060 and 6.42.100.

The Ordinance was adopted on July 12, 2022 and becomes effective on August 11, 2022, 30 days after its adoption.

The full text of the above Ordinance is available upon request from the office of the City Clerk, located at 1685 Main Street, Room 102, Santa Monica. Phone: (310) 458-8211.

California OKs 'baby bonds' to help combat child poverty

ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

Parenting — that long chain of decisions that hopefully leads to a well-rounded adult — was always a little less stressful for Laura Guerra because her husband, Rigo, was "100% in it" for their daughter, Emilia.

But Rigo died from COVID-19 on Christmas Eve in 2020, alone in a hospital room while Guerra watched helplessly from the other side of a window. Since then, left to raise their now 2-year-old daughter mostly by herself, Guerra's mind hasn't stopped racing.

"I'm constantly thinking," she said. "Every decision that I make, if I make the wrong decision, she's going to suffer for it. And that scares the hell out of me."

Now, California is using some of its record-setting budget surplus to help ease Guerra's mind, and those of others like her. Last month, California became the first state to commit to setting up trust funds for children who lost a parent or caregiver to the pandemic.

The money — $100 million in total — will go to into interest-bearing accounts for children from low-income families who have lost a parent to COVID and to kids who are in the state's foster care system. State lawmakers haven't decided how much money each child will get, but one early proposal would give younger kids $4,000 and older kids $8,000. That would be enough to provide funding for about 16,000 kids, who could spend the money once they become adults.

"As a mom, this gives me a little bit of that security back," said Guerra, who has been advocating for the trust funds as a member of the advocacy group COVID Survivors for Change. "I don't want her to continue to be a victim of this virus forever."

The first U.S. savings bonds were introduced in the 1930s to raise money for the government and give ordinary Americans an opportunity to invest. Those bonds were nicknamed "baby bonds," because parents would often buy them for their children.

These modern-day baby bonds are different in that, instead of being purchased by parents, the government gives the money to children from low-income families for free. Advocates have held up the idea as a way to help close the racial wealth gap between white and minority families, who were largely excluded from the federal wealth-building programs during the Great Depression.

Hillary Clinton briefly included a baby bonds proposal in her 2008 presidential campaign platform, and U.S. Sen. Cory Booker introduced a national baby bonds bill in Congress that has yet to pass.

The Washington D.C. City Council passed a baby bond program in 2021, committing to give low-income children $500 plus another $1,000 each year that their parents remain below a certain income level. Last year, Connecticut was the first state to approve a statewide baby bonds program — although it hasn't been funded yet.

The idea is similar to guaranteed income programs that give cash to low-income people each month with no restrictions on how they can use it. California has several such programs at the local level, modeled after high-profile demonstration project in Stockton that launched three years ago.

While guaranteed income programs are about helping people with short-term expenses, baby bonds are about the future. Children could not touch the money until they reach adulthood. During that time, the money would grow by collecting interest payments from a bank.

How much money they children will get depends on how long the account grows. For younger children, advocates hope they will have between $20,000 and $40,000 once they become adults.

"Income and wealth are different things," said Michael Tubbs, the former mayor of Stockton who is now an advisor to Gov. Gavin Newsom and founder of the advocacy group End Poverty in California. "People should have the wherewithal to pay their bills today ... but the next generation shouldn't have to live paycheck to paycheck."

California's baby bonds program is the latest in a surge of new spending aimed at combating poverty. Since 2018, California has spent $13 billion on an array of new laws and policy changes that have lifted an estimated 300,000 children out of poverty, according to a report released earlier this year by Grace, a California-based nonprofit.

That spending includes a $1,000 tax credit for low income families with young children, a universal school meals program, college savings accounts for low-income kids and a commitment to send every 4-year-old to kindergarten for free.

The group hopes California's baby bonds program is just a first step. Its goal is to eventually have the state give trust funds to every child in the state born into a low income family.

"The goal has always been, 'How do we help best set up low income children for their future?' said Shimica Gaskins, president and CEO of Grace. "We had really relied on educational pathways, but also know that cash and cash assistance and opportunity are equally important."

It's not clear if the Legislature would expand the program to include all children from low-income families. State Sen. Nancy Skinner, a Democrat from Berkeley and chair of the Senate Budget Committee, said lawmakers will closely watch the COVID survivor bond program to see how it works.

"The great irony of California especially, but the nation as a whole, is we have such wealth but it's so concentrated," Skinner said. "Whatever we can do that can address that income inequality is essential to do."

The state treasurer's office will manage the money in interest-bearing accounts. Once the recipients become adults, they can spend the money however they want. But advocates hope they'll use it for things like a down payment for a house, college tuition or a car.

Guerra said she doesn't know how her daughter would use the money once she's old enough to spend it.

"I do whatever I can to steer her in the right direction and to make her a good human being, right?" she said.

afternoon from 12-4 p.m. and will be open to the public and free of charge.

"Sometimes, it feels like we're this metropolis city where there's transient people passing through just visiting, but we are a city full of residents, and there [are] legacy businesses in the community," Negrete said. "And, just kind of having that old school vibe of coming in and talking to someone that owns the local coffee shop or the local music store, and knowing your neighbor, knowing your business owner — this Sunday is really about celebrating that."

But Negrete said preserving that community atmosphere and keeping the business alive has not been without its challenges.

"We're a small, family owned-business that survived a car running through the front of our store, two riots and a pandemic, and we're still standing," Negrete reflected. "We're still family owned and operated. And we still are serving the schools and the community the best we can, and we hope to still be here another 50 years."

Over the years, through good and bad economic times, Negrete said, the business has been able to stay afloat thanks to Chico living in a rent controlled apartment.

"My dad — he wouldn't have been able to afford to maintain it if he didn't have a rent controlled apartment because there was times where they didn't pay themselves for over a year," Negrete said, later adding, "We live in these places and are able to have businesses here because of that, you know what I mean?"

Negrete, like many children of small business owners, grew up uninterested in taking over the family business. Instead, she pursued a career in retail and fashion, eventually attaining success working on Rodeo Drive and as a buyer for Fred Segal. But when her kids and step kids started going to school, she realized most high school orchestra students were white or Asian.

"I was like, 'That's so weird, when everybody gets music [lessons] here, and they make it so accessible. Why, when it becomes a choice, is it not that?' And I realized not having private lessons and quality instruments really puts you at a disadvantage in a community like this," Negrete said.

So, 10 years ago she moved with her family back to Santa Monica and established Outreach Through The Arts. For the last four-and-a-half years, she has also run the Santa Monica Music Center.

"My dad started that [musical outreach] in his own way, and I'm continuing it in a different way — a different generation of it," Negrete said. "And so, to me, this 50 years really culminates the years that we've been contributing to the community of Santa Monica, providing affordable access to both instruments and music lessons, and today how it's expanded to a full thriving nonprofit that's attached to it that really is contributing in a much larger way to the community by providing scholarships, consistent access to music, and then it's expanded to DJing and music production and job skill and all that kind of stuff."

Musical acts on Sunday afternoon, July 24, will include their own music students' rock band, plus cover band Run for Cover, Cindy Speer's and Martin Purtell, DJs and other entertainment. Food vendors will include Truxton, DK Donuts, Socolo and more.

Democrats widen scrutiny of tech over abortion data privacy

MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer

Democratic representatives are widening their scrutiny into the role of tech companies in collecting the personal data of people who may be seeking an abortion, as lawmakers, regulators and the Biden administration grapple with the aftermath of the Supreme Court ruling last month ending the constitutional protections for abortion.

In a new volley of congressional letters, six House Democrats have asked the top executives of Amazon's cloud-service network and major cloud provider Oracle about the companies' handling of consumers' location data from mobile phones, and what steps they have taken or planned to protect the privacy rights of individuals seeking information on abortion.

The decision by the court's conservative majority to overturn Roe v. Wade has resulted in strict limits or total bans on abortion in more than a dozen states. About a dozen more states are set to impose additional restrictions. Privacy experts say that could make women vulnerable because their personal data could be used to surveil pregnancies and shared with police or sold to vigilantes. Online searches, location data, text messages and emails, and even apps that track periods could be used to prosecute people who seek an abortion — or medical care for a miscarriage — as well as those who assist them, experts say.

Privacy advocates are watching for possible new moves by law enforcement agencies in affected states — serving subpoenas, for example, on tech companies such as Google, Apple, Bing, Facebook's Messenger and WhatsApp, services like Uber and Lyft, and internet service providers including AT&T, Verizon, T-Mobile and Comcast.

"Data collected and sold by your company could be used by law enforcement and prosecutors in states with aggressive abortion restrictions," the House Democrats, led by Rep. Lori Trahan of Massachusetts, said in the letters. "Additionally, in states that empower vigilantes and private actors to sue abortion providers, this information can be used as part of judicial proceedings.

"When consumers use apps on their phone and quickly tap 'yes' on 'use geolocation data' pop-ups, they should not be worried about the endless sale of their data to advertisers, individuals or law enforcement. And it most certainly should not be used to hunt down, prosecute and jail an individual seeking reproductive care. Companies can take action today to protect individual rights."

The letters also went to executives of Near Intelligence Holdings and Mobilewalla. Along with Oracle and Amazon Web Services' Data Exchange, the companies were described as leading data brokers — businesses that gather, sell or trade location data from mobile phones, which could be used to track people who have visited abortion clinics or have gone out of state seeking abortion services.

Five other Democrats active in tech issues signed the letters with Trahan: Reps. David Cicilline of Rhode Island, Yvette Clarke of New York, Debbie Dingell of Michigan, Adam Schiff of California and Sean Casten of Illinois.

Spokespeople for Amazon and Oracle didn't respond to requests for comment from The Associated Press.

Also this week, Massachusetts' two U.S. senators, Democrats Elizabeth Warren and Edward Markey, sent letters to four companies raising concerns that the software they use to monitor students' online communications could be used to punish students who seek information about abortion services and reproductive health care. They asked the companies — Bark Technologies, Gaggle.net, GoGuardian and Securly — whether their software flags students' online searches for abortion and other related terms.

"It would be deeply disturbing if your software flags words or activity that suggest students are searching for contraception, abortion or other related services, and if school administrators, parents and even law enforcement were potentially informed of this activity," Warren and Markey wrote.

Generally, the so-called "ed tech" companies say the monitoring is intended to stop the next school shooter or student suicide, and that the scans are mostly limited to school e-mails or activity on school computers or internet networks, not private accounts.

Earlier this month, President Joe Biden, under mounting pressure from fellow Democrats to be more forceful in response to the Supreme Court ruling, signed an executive order to try to protect access to abortion. The actions Biden outlined are intended to head off some potential penalties that women seeking abortion may face after the ruling, but his order cannot restore access to abortion in the more than a dozen states where strict limits or total bans have gone into effect.

Biden also asked the Federal Trade Commission to take steps to protect the privacy of those seeking information about reproductive care online. On June 24, the day the high court announced its decision, four Democratic lawmakers asked the FTC to investigate Apple and Google for allegedly deceiving millions of mobile phone users by enabling the collection and sale of their personal data of all kinds to third parties.

In May, several Senate Democrats urged the CEOs of Google and Apple to prohibit apps on the Google Play Store and the Apple App Store from using data-mining practices that could facilitate the targeting of individuals seeking abortion services.

result, this is causing the imminent threat of violence to occur in these environments and spaces."

In the past month, Santa Monica has seen protests by pro-choice and anti-abortion groups. Both groups have brought items that would be covered under the reimposed ban.

"I've been involved with the response to thousands of high-risk incidents as well as several hundred protests throughout my career and on behalf of the Chief of Police, the Deputy Chief, my colleagues, and in all of our collective experiences, we've never seen this type of violence and propensity for violence in or about protests in our careers," he said.

Lucio said SMPD is asking for a ban on items that do not serve an expressive purpose based on time, place and manner of use.

Council quickly and unanimously agreed, approving the ban on a temporary basis through June 30, 2023, to allow for input from the Public Safety Reform and Oversight Commission (PSROC) before consideration of language for a permanent ordinance.

The rules are identical to the previous ordinance and prohibit sticks, poles, pipes, bats, pepper spray (or variants), projectile launchers whether manually operated or powered by springs/gas, chains, bladed weapons, martial arts weapons, BB guns, explosives, tasers, knuckle dusters, containers of noxious liquid, any glass or metal containers, any open flame, shields, bricks, gas masks, protective helmets, laser pointers, umbrellas absent rain, tactical clothing designed to carry weapons and combat clothing such as bullet-proof vests.

Lt. Lucio said the rule had a preventative impact that allowed officers to make contact with individuals before conflict occurred. He said when the previous rules were in place, Santa Monica saw about one large protest a month. He said numerous individuals were contacted and those with prohibited items were compliant.

He said it would also benefit mental health concerns within the department as the department anticipates an increase in protest activity given the start of election season.

"It allows us to also address our officer fatigue and burnout by minimizing the volume of these events, because oftentimes we're seeing that individuals are coming out here to find the stage to create this theme or the notoriety for the position and for their extremist mentality and it's causing our officers a great amount of burnout."

Emilia Guerra sees her daddy everywhere. He's in the picture frames on the walls of her room. He's on the screen of her mother's phone. And he's in the recesses of her 2-year-old mind, showing his face to her in scattered moments across her bustling life.

"Randomly, we will be sitting somewhere and she says, 'Hi Daddy!'" Guerra said. "I do tell her that mommy can't see daddy. But maybe she can."

Ronald Farnham

May 27th, 1942 - November 29th, 2021

Ronald "Ron" Farnham, age 79 of Santa Monica, passed away peacefully on Sunday November 29, 2021.

As Ron would have wanted it, we are planning a small memorial at Clover park on Sunday July 31st at 1:00pm. We will be gathering near the far northwest end of the park, near the airport fence. As Clover park was Ron's "Playground", we felt it fitting to say our goodbyes in the place where Ron not only spent much of his time on his daily walks, but where he made many friends, always looking forward to his daily encounters and conversations

Ron was born in Santa Monica on May 27, 1942 and other than in his college years and early in his career, he has always lived in Santa Monica, a familiar place he called home. Ron studied engineering at Loyola Marymount University and then transferred to California State University, Long Beach where he earned his bachelor's degree,

He never met a stranger and always made others feel comfortable when he spoke with them, which is why sales and corporate recruiting was such a natural career fit for him. Ron's dedication as a corporate recruiter expanded beyond placing a qualified candidate into a new job. Ron considered himself a businessman, but would often share stories about his recent recruits, explaining personal details about their lives, family, career, and concerns. With empathy, Ron would get to know his candidates well, listening to them, allowing him to offer advice and guidance that was meaningful and helpful.

Ron was loved by his large extended Irish Catholic family, friends, and his 12-step community. As an Uncle and a friend, Ron's arrival at family holiday celebrations was a treat (although his arrival was always beyond fashionably late…). Ron always brought his appetite, making his way back for not only seconds, but oftentimes thirds, followed by dessert. Notably, Ron was passionate about classic country music, College football and driving fast.

Ron is survived by his son, Aaron, sister Diane and preceded in death by his father, Bob, his mother, Margaret, and his sister, Nancy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). No one would guess the amount of work you put into making a transaction go smoothly. It wouldn't occur to you to want a reward for helping others, though you will be rewarded nonetheless with the respect of your peers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You'll be the host and the center of attention. For many, this would be a lot of pressure, but you're ready for it. You are so creative that you can take any situation and turn it into an opportunity for warmth and connection.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). With your quick mind and strong intuition, you will solve problems of all kinds today. They don't even have to be your problems for you to experience a great deal of satisfaction in the solving of them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). People have said you're psychic. Remember when you predicted the future accurately and accidentally, without even intending to make a prescient statement? You'll do it again today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). While many of your relationships bring sweetness to life, some bring a good amount of stress. You still believe that in time you will be grateful for these relationships and eventually you'll understand their purpose in your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Opportunities are missed by those who rush to completion. Endings are very important, and they deserve time and attention. It's not a race and there is no ribbon to break through at the end. Slow down and savor it all.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll express yourself well without calculation or rehearsal. The message simply rises up and leaps out. The act of speaking up is important to your self-esteem. Whether or how things land is beside the point.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). There's much to enjoy about where you are today. The next voyage seems more glamorous than this one, but that's only because, like all that exists in the realm of the future, it reflects the light of pure potentiality.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You're sensitive to all kinds of vibrations, and when you feel tension in the air it's so tangible to you that you'll either be driven to find its source or determined to get as far away from it as possible. You can trust your instincts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Supercharged feelings race through your veins. You'll make the powerful choice to use your emotions instead of letting them use you. You'll organize, compartmentalize and act on only that which will serve your purpose.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Knowledge, topical medicine and beauty products are all things that must be fully absorbed before they will work for you. Soak in your experiences. Take full possession of the moment before you move on to the next one.
