Lack of votes undermines parking restrictions

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

A lone "no" vote torpedoed an effort to expand a preferential parking zone near Santa Monica's border with Venice that divided opinion among residents.

Two-thirds of residents in the proposed zone petitioned the council last week to restrict parking on Ashland and Pier avenues adjacent to Lincoln Boulevard to two hours during the day for non-residents. Many of them wrote to the council that it is exceedingly difficult for them to park in their neighborhood.

"(It's) becoming almost impossible for residents to park on the street in which they reside which is not only an inconvenience but dangerous for families with young children who have to park blocks away and cross multiple streets to reach their home," wrote Jason Roberts.

But other residents wrote that they felt that preferential parking would hurt nearby businesses and discourage visitors. They said they do not have any trouble finding parking spaces near their homes.

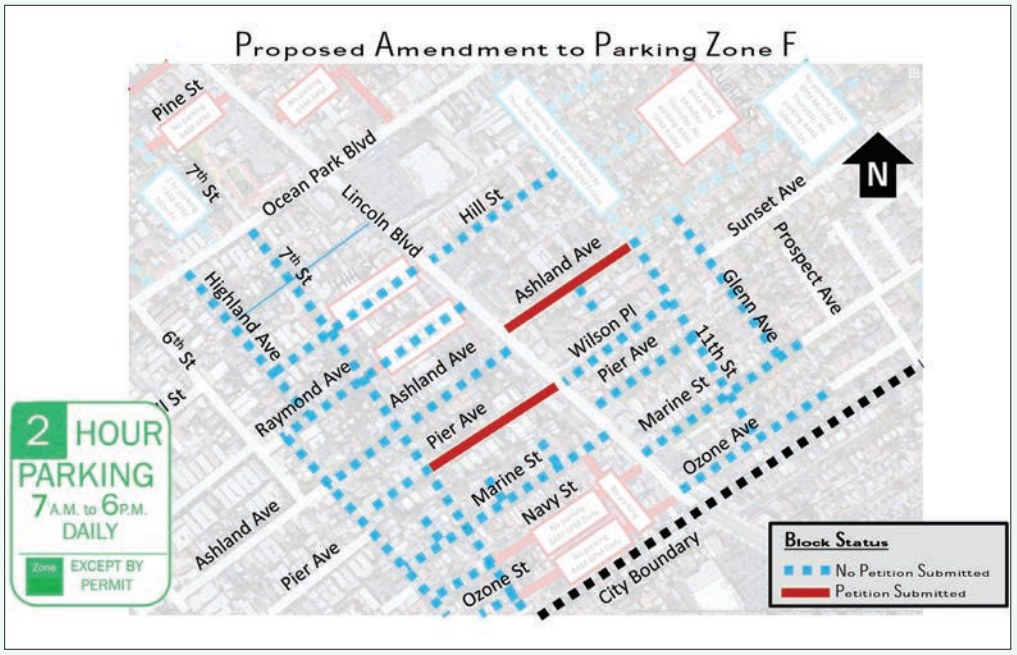

"These restrictions will also cause serious headaches for all residents when we have visitors ... stay for a visit longer than two hours," wrote David Cano. "It is a very unwelcoming approach and ... just not necessary."

The optimal street parking usage rate is 85%, the city of Santa Monica's planners said. The majority of blocks in the proposed zone exceed 85% occupancy for at least two hours each day, but few surpassed that rate for the entire day.

Only four out of seven councilmembers voted on the zone and it did not gain the number of votes required to go forward.

Kevin McKeown was absent, Ted Winterer recused himself because he lives in the proposed zone and Mayor Gleam Davis recused herself because she may buy

A group of Venice residents filed an opening brief last Friday in a lawsuit to stop the construction of a temporary facility that would house 154 people experiencing homelessness.

The Venice Stakeholders Association's lawsuit asks Judge Mitchell L. Beckloff to declare the city's of Los Angeles approval of the project invalid and halt

Richard Robbins Obituary

October 5, 1926 - July 8, 2019

Richard "Dick" Robbins was born in Tucson, AZ to Jack and Margaret Robbins. He moved to Santa Monica, CA where he attended Santa Monica High School. He was a member of the 82nd Airborne and America's Guard of Honor Marching Band. In 1945 he joined the family company located in SM, Robbins Auto Top. In 1949 Dick married his first love Eula Elizabeth (Betty) Sweeney. In 1955 they welcomed son Douglas. Dick and Betty enjoyed 42 fun years raising Doug, entertaining at their home and on their boat. Dick and his brother Stan built Robbins Auto Top into the premiere manufacturer of after-market convertible tops. Dick served as President of SM Chamber of Commerce, SM Airport Commissioner, President of SM Boys and Girls Club and was a long-time member of Rotary Club. In 1991, Dick married Barbara Mortensen. Together they had 28 years of great adventures. They spent the early years of their marriage travelling the world with friends, enjoying their condo in Mazatlán and on Dick's beloved boat, The Staretz II. They moved to Santa Barbara in 2001 and became active members of Birnam Wood Golf Club. His great passions in life were deep sea fishing, golf and having fun. Dick was the life of every party! Dick was a member of Cal Yacht Club, Riviera CC, LACC and Birnam Wood Golf Club where he spent his last years. Dick was predeceased by Betty along with brothers Stan and Jack. Dick is survived by wife, Barbara Robbins, son Douglas Robbins and wife Elaine, and three stepchildren, Mike Mortensen (Lisa), Stephanie Jonsson (Matthew), Karen Albi (John) and 9 grandchildren, Sarah, Trevor, Dylan, Amanda, Megan, Griffin, Hayley, Lauren and Johnny.

Per his request, there will be a private celebration of life. In lieu of flowers, please consider donations to Santa Monica Boys and Girls Club or Visiting Nurse and Hospice Care in Santa Barbara.

Another federal lawsuit over playoff 'no call' dismissed

A judge has dismissed the last of three federal lawsuits targeting Roger Goodell and other NFL officials over officiating at January's NFC title game between the Los Angeles Rams and the New Orleans Saints. That leaves one state court lawsuit pending over game officials' failure to call a blatant penalty at a crucial point, helping the Rams advance to the Super Bowl.

U.S. District Judge Susie Morgan's ruling Tuesday rejected arguments that people who bought tickets to the game are entitled to damage payments. Ticket purchasers who filed the suit say the NFL broke a legal promise that the game would be played fairly.

Related federal lawsuits were dismissed earlier this year. The Louisiana state court suit survives and could result in Goodell being questioned about the game under oath.

Kidnap suspect held after LA standoff; woman still missing

A man suspected of kidnapping a woman was arrested after a five-hour standoff in Los Angeles but authorities say the victim remains missing.

Police spotted the man in a parked car early Tuesday morning and he refused to surrender until SWAT vehicles boxed in the vehicle and officers used tear gas.

Authorities had been seeking 27-year-old Robert Anthony Camou since witnesses reported seeing 31-year-old Amanda Kathleen Custer being put into the back of a car on Monday in suburban Monrovia.

Los Angeles County sheriff's Lt. Scott Hoglund says officers found blood at the Monrovia scene.

Hoglund says Monrovia police have handled numerous domestic violence incidents involving the pair.

Man pleads not guilty to 4 Los Angeles murders

A Los Angeles man charged with killing four people, including his father, in a shooting rampage has pleaded not guilty to murder.

Gerry Dean Zaragoza also entered pleas to attempted murder and robbery Monday. He could face the death penalty if convicted.

Prosecutors say Zaragoza wounded his mother and killed his father and brother in their Canoga Park home on Friday, then killed a woman he knew and wounded another man at a gas station. They say he then tried to rob someone at a Bank of America ATM before shooting a stranger in the head on a bus in Lake Balboa, killing him.

Authorities haven't identified a motive for the killings.

However, an acquaintance of Zaragoza's father says the man had confided his 26-year-old son had a drug problem.

BEVERLY HILLS

Producer of Woodstock calls it a lesson in community

A producer of the 1969 Woodstock festival says he's come to appreciate how a community can be born of difficulty.

Joel Rosenman said Tuesday he was so immersed in pulling off the massive event he didn't realize people "were having the time of their life" despite a myriad of uncomfortable problems at the rural New York location.

Among the newspaper headlines that added to the pressure: "Hippies mired in sea of mud."

While concertgoers reveled in the music of artists including Jimi Hendrix and The Who, concertgoers also banded together to cope with food shortages, rain and more, said Rosenman. He helped conceive the concert that drew some 500,000 people.

Screening filmmaker Barack Goodman's new PBS documentary about it gave him new insight into its message that reverberates today, Rosenman said.

"Adversity itself is not what gets in the way of community. In fact, from Barack's film I saw clearly that adversity can create a community," Rosenman told a TV critics meeting Tuesday. The program, "Woodstock: Three Days that Defined a Generation," will air Aug. 6 as part of PBS' "American Experience" series.

With the concert's mind-boggling lineup of performers well-documented in other projects, Goodman said it wasn't the music he wanted to focus on. It was instead how Woodstock crystallized the meaning of the counterculture, which had been seen as vague and open to caricature, he said.

"What happened at Woodstock underscored there was a reality to" the burgeoning movement and brought out its virtues as detailed by Rosenman, Goodman said.

Rosenman said he isn't involved in a planned 50th anniversary concert, other than licensing the use of the Woodstock name. He declined to comment on its setbacks, which includes trouble finding a venue and losing headliner artists Jay-Z and John Fogerty.

SANTA MONICA-MALIBU UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT

TO: General Public

FROM: Carey Upton, Chief Operations Officer

SUBJECT: PUBLIC NOTICE – PUBLIC COMMENT PERIOD AND HEARING – PRELIMINARY ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT REPORT EQUIVALENT – JOHN ADAMS MIDDLE SCHOOL

Date: Thursday, August 15, 2018

Time: 5:30 p.m.

Location: Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District
Administrative Offices – Board Room
1651 16th Street
Santa Monica, CA 90404

BACKGROUND:

On May 17, 2018, the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District ("District") approved the John Adams Middle School Auditorium Replacement Project and adopted its attendant Mitigated Negative Declaration ("MND") and Mitigation Monitoring and Reporting Program ("MMRP"). As disclosed in the MND, a Phase I Environmental Site Assessment ("JAMS Phase I") was conducted, which revealed the potential presence of lead-based paint in soils surrounding the auditorium. Mitigation Measure MM-HAZ-2 was included in the adopted MMRP to require removal of lead-based paint residues from the on-site soils that exceeded Department of Toxic Substances Control's ("DTSC") requirements. The District commissioned Converse Consultants ("Converse") to determine the presence and delineate the extent of lead-based paint residues in the soil and other chemicals of concern. Converse found a soil area adjacent to the auditorium of approximately 10 feet by 10 feet by 3 feet deep (approximately 11 cubic yards) containing lead-based paint residues above DTSC"s remediation level of 80 parts per million. Converse reported and recommended removal of these 11 cubic yards of soil in its Report of Findings – Sampling for Lead, Pesticides, and PCBs in Soil, dated March 23, 2018 ("Converse Report of Findings"). On July 19, 2019, the 11 cubic yards were removed, and confirmation testing demonstrated that the remaining soils are well below DTSC's remediation level ("Housekeeping Action").

CURRENT STATUS:

As a condition of receiving state funds, per Education Code section 17213.1(a)(4)(B), a Preliminary Environmental Assessment ("PEA") must be conducted where a Phase I Environmental Site Assessment recommends further assessment is required. The JAMS Phase I, Converse Report of Findings, and the Housekeeping Action all constitute an equivalent of a PEA ("PEA Equivalent"). Converse concluded that with the Housekeeping Action, no further action is recommended or necessary. Thus, the District requests a no-further-action determination and site certification from DTSC. With DTSC's site certification, the District can proceed with its application for state funding from the California Department of Education.

PROJECT LOCATION:

John Adams Middle School located at 2425 16th Street, Santa Monica California 90405, auditorium complex.

PEA EQUIVALENT AND SUPPORTING DOCUMENTS:

Per Education Code section 17213.1(a)(6)(A), upon request before the public hearing, the District will make the documents constituting the PEA Equivalent, supporting documents, and correspondence between DTSC and the District available for review by contacting Barbara Chiavelli, Senior Design Manager at 310-663-0238 or bchiavelli@smmusd.org.

PUBLIC COMMENT PERIOD:

The public comment period runs from July 31, 2019 through August 30, 2019. Written comments on the PEA Equivalent will only be accepted during the comment period. Public comments will also be accepted on August 15, 2019 public hearing.

California governor signs bill on presidential tax returns

KATHLEEN RONAYNE AND ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

California's Democratic governor signed a law Tuesday requiring presidential candidates to release their tax returns to appear on the state's primary ballot, a move aimed squarely at Republican President Donald Trump.

But even if the law withstands a likely legal challenge, Trump could avoid the requirements by choosing not to compete in California's primary. With no credible GOP challenger at this point, he likely won't need California's delegates to win the Republican nomination.

While aimed at Trump, the law also applies to candidates for governor. Newsom said California's status as one of the world's largest economies gives it "a special responsibility" to require tax returns from its prospective elected officials.

"These are extraordinary times and states have a legal and moral duty to do everything in their power to ensure leaders seeking the highest offices meet minimal standards, and to restore public confidence," Newsom wrote in his signing statement.

The Trump campaign called the bill "unconstitutional," saying there were good reasons why California's former Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown vetoed a similar proposal last year.

"What's next, five years of health records?" said Tim Murtaugh, communications director for Trump's campaign.

The courts will likely have the final say. The bill's author, Democratic state Sen. Mike McGuire, said lawmakers made sure the law only applies to the state's primary ballot because the state Constitution says the state Legislature does not control access to the general election ballot.

Newsom's message to state lawmakers on Tuesday said the law is constitutional because "the United States Constitution grants states the authority to determine how their electors are chosen."

But Murtaugh said the law violates First Amendment right of association "since California can't tell political parties which candidates their members can or cannot vote for in a primary election."

While states have authority over how candidates can access the ballot, the U.S. Constitution lays out a limited set of qualifications someone needs to meet to run for president, said Rick Hasen, a professor specializing in election law at the University of California-Irvine School of Law. Those qualifications include the requirement that presidential candidates be over age 35.

The U.S. Supreme court has previously stopped state efforts to add requirements on congressional candidates through ballot access rules.

New York has passed a law giving congressional committees access to Trump's state tax returns. But efforts to pry loose his tax returns have floundered in other states. California's first attempt to do so failed in 2017 when then-Gov. Jerry Brown, a Democrat, vetoed the law, raising questions about its constitutionality and where it would lead next.

The major Democratic 2020 contenders have already released tax returns for roughly the past decade. Trump has bucked decades of precedent by refusing to release his. Tax returns show income, charitable giving and business dealings, all of which Democratic state lawmakers say voters are entitled to know about.

California's new law will require candidates to submit tax returns for the most recent five years to California's Secretary of State at least 98 days before the primary. They will then be posed online for the public to view, with certain personal information redacted.

California is holding next year's primary on March 3, known as Super Tuesday because the high number of state's with nominating contests that day.

Democratic Sen. Mike McGuire of Healdsburg said it would be "inconsistent" with past practice for Trump to forgo the primary ballot and "ignore the most popular and vote-rich state in the nation."

Republican Party of California chairwoman Jessica Millan Patterson said Newsom signing the law shows Democratic leaders in the state continue "to put partisan politics first," urging Democrats to instead join Republicans "in seeking ways to reduce the cost of living, help our schools and make our streets safer."

Zuni House, Bernie, Get It right!

NEW BAD NEWS

Yes, Santa Monica keeps reinventing itself, aren't we something? But usually, for most of the last decade, not in good ways.

Now comes the prospect of a youth hostel popping up right next door to you. Yes, you. No matter where in SM you live.

But it couldn't happen on one of those older, desirable, historic streets north of Montana, right? $3M+ homes. A cul-de-sac, no less. Now, suddenly, a hotel/hostel? Can't happen here!

It can, it has, and this looks like only the beginning.

According to George Preonas, in his home on Adelaide Place for 45 years, the family who lived next door to him for a long time sold it in March and by May it was being rented out through Airbnb. Advertising 36 beds per night at $49 per bed. (With only three bathrooms.) Even though their business license application, he said, claims a capacity of 15 (and isn't that bad enough?).

Why in the world would anyone in our City government approve such an application? And how do you even get a license to operate a business on a residential street?

THIS HOUSE IS SPECIAL

It's beautiful, it's unique. A landmarked historic building designed by innovative architect Robert Stacey-Judd in the mid-1920s. The Zuni House was at the forefront of the Pueblo Revival architectural style that Stacey-Judd is credited with launching here.

As someone who grew up in New Mexico where the Zuni Pueblo is, I can especially appreciate it. (The Zunis were already around the Southwest for about 4,000 years when a Berber Moroccan explorer named Esteban, traveling with Cabeza de Vaca, "discovered" them in 1536. He was the first non-native to visit a pueblo. Reports are they killed him.) I have Zuni pottery in my collection (though Acoma is probably my favorite). If anyone wants to buy that historic home and put me and my family in, I promise I will caretake it for the treasure it is.

Do you think the overnight travelers who are there because it's a heckuva nice pad for $49 a night in a great part of Santa Monica will treat it with that respect?

I SAT IN

Sunday on an informal neighbors meeting at Preonas' home, at the invitation of Arts Commissioner Phil Brock. Preonas had contacted a lot of City officials about the situation, and Council members Ted Winterer and Kevin McKeown got back to him the same day, but he said he invited Brock because he felt he had a reputation for sticking up for residents.

After the meeting I observed one of the problems the neighbors complained about, a very large number of cigarette butts on the sidewalk and gutter in front of the now-Airbnb, and beer cans and other litter, that you don't see anywhere else on the well-maintained street of longtime homeowners. But there is a long list of reasons you don't want a hotel in your residential neighborhood.

YOU CAN'T DO THAT! – OOPS

Our City staff wrote, and our City Council passed, a home-sharing ordinance in 2015 that was supposed to prevent such homes from being converted to vacation rentals. Residents are permitted to host guests in their home for 30 days or less while living on-site throughout the guests' stay. But it does not set a limit on the number of guests allowed. Well, that was a major oversight, wasn't it? Maybe we need a larger, higher paid City staff to get that and 1,000 other things right.

The "resident" manager at the Zuni House, Ryusei "Ryan" Shimizu, also lists three other places he's renting out through Airbnb, one more in SM, two in LA. How many premises can you reside in at once?

"I have seen the quality of life in Santa Monica deteriorate little by little," Preonas said, and he blamed our love affairs with tourism and developers.

BERNIE SANDERS

Came to town again Friday, returning to Samohi and filling the Amphitheater with enthusiastic supporters who came to hear him say what he always says. But that's the point. He has stood for the same principles and fought for those issues for decades.

I was a very strong Bernie supporter last election (but of course I voted for Hillary). I'd been drifting this time toward Kamala Harris because I felt she had the right combination of toughness and prosecutorial smarts to take down the Racist Bully-in-Chief and get elected.

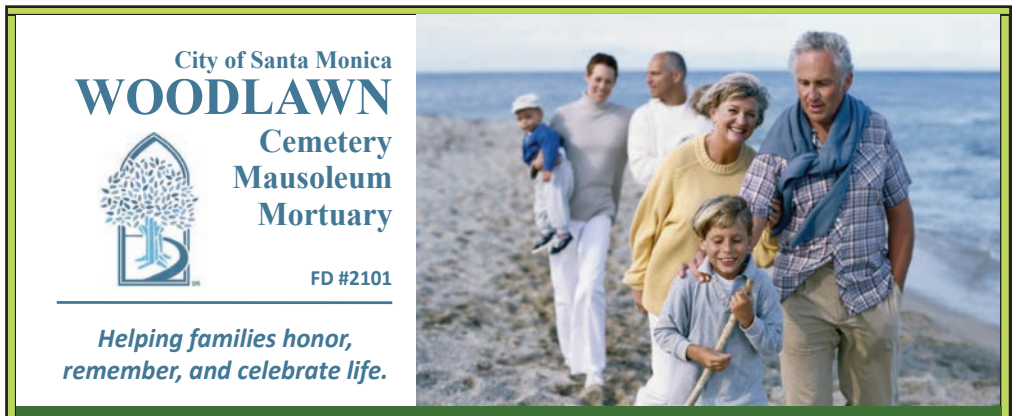

Bernie's great ideas were considered by some too radical just three years ago, he'll never get elected, they said (despite polls showing he would have beaten Trump). But now most of the Dem nominee hopefuls have adopted them. So, why would you go with the imitators, the bandwagon jumpers, when you have the original?

For me, it's a moral decision. Sen. Sanders has stood for a wide platform of the most humane ideas for a truly great America ALL HIS LIFE.

I'm sick and tired of the lesser of two evils, of "The One Who Can Win." Bernie can win, he has energized an army of young people who don't have so much interest in voting except for voting for him. Everything he stands for is what I believe in; why should I back anyone else?

Charles Andrews has lived in Santa Monica for 33 years and wouldn't live anywhere else in the world. Really. Send love and/or rebuke to him at therealmrmusic@gmail.com a home there. Sue Himmelrich, Greg Morena and Ana Maria Jara supported the district, but Terry O'Day voted against it.

O'Day said he votes against preferential parking zones on principle, and Himmelrich said she hated them.

"I think that generally these parking permit districts are a privatization of public space that benefits homeowners over everybody else in the community," O'Day said.

Preferential parking zones cover 40% of city blocks and the council has approved an additional 12% of blocks for preferential parking if residents petition for it, said city spokesperson Constance Farrell. Three out of 52 zones have been approved in the last two years, bringing the total number of blocks subject to regulations from 622 to 665.

"(Preferential parking is) intended to regulate and manage traffic and parking circulation by limiting on-street parking availability on residential streets in a manner that facilitates the ability of residents ... to find on-street parking for their vehicles," Farrell said.

Some residents wrote to the council that they believe new preferential parking zones simply shift parking demand to nearby streets without regulations, spurring residents on those streets to petition for their own preferential parking.

"It just moves all the parking over to the next street, and that becomes crowded, and then that street has to ask for a preferential zone," wrote Abby Arnold, a homeowner in the new zone. "To the extent there is a problem, it just concentrates it and moves it around."

Others said a 47-unit apartment building with ground-floor businesses planned for 2903 Lincoln Blvd. would generate more parking demand. The building will contain 151 parking spaces for cars and 98 for bicycles.

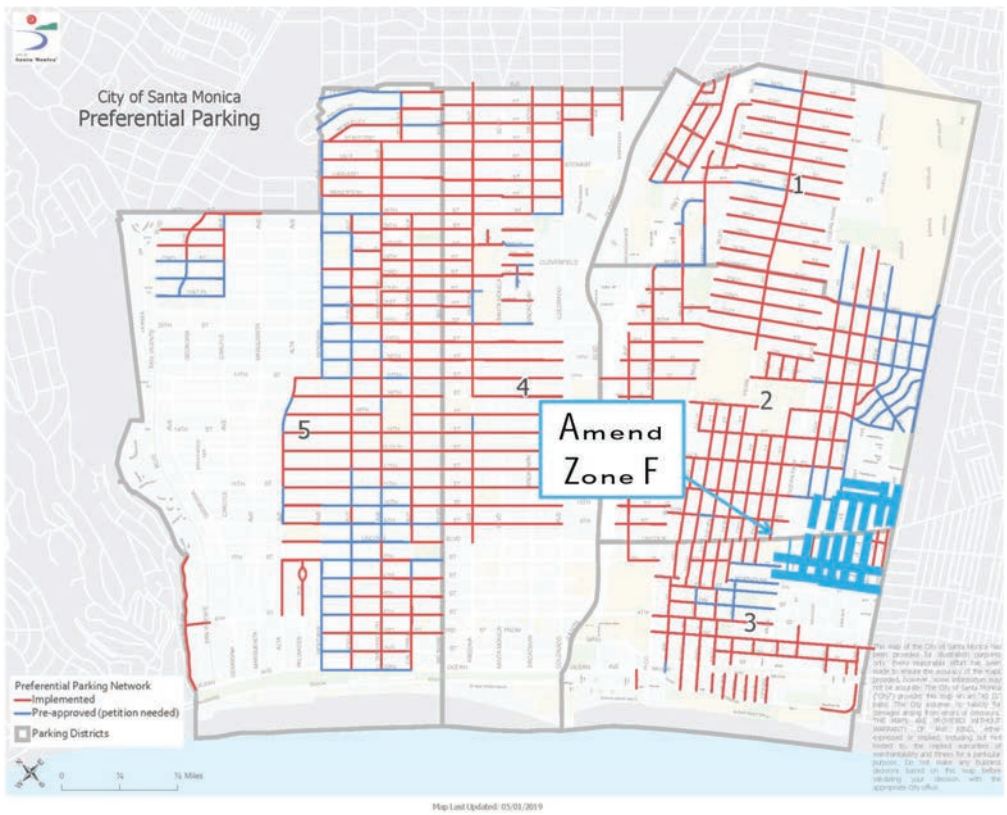

"The (development) ... is going to add dozens of new residents with vehicles and insufficient designated parking for them," wrote Daniel Shear. "The construction phase alone will create parking chaos for years as all the construction workers arrive before 7 a.m. and scatter park in our already overburdened neighborhood."

Donald Shoup, a professor of urban planning at UCLA and a widely cited parking expert, said he thinks the growth of preferential parking in Santa Monica is in part a reaction to development. But if implemented thoughtfully, he said, preferential parking can address the traffic concerns associated with new housing.

He said some preferential parking programs allow non-residents to purchase permits at a higher price, which nearby businesses typically use for their employees. Casual visitors can pay for more than two hours of parking through their phones. The revenue funds streetscape improvements in the zone, Shoup said.

"I think these improved permit districts ... would enable development to take place in a way that pleases residents who are now fighting them because their neighborhoods will be overwhelmed with cars," he said.

PARKING: Many Santa Monica streets have some kind of parking restriction and residents of the proposed Zone F wanted to expand parking rules along a pair of streets.

Events look at balancing security, ambiance after shooting

STEFANIE DAZIO
Associated Press

Event organizers should review their emergency plans after a deadly shooting at a California food festival to see if they can make additional safety improvements as the peak of summer and fair season culminates with a series of open-air events that are notoriously difficult to secure, law enforcement experts said.

The weekend shooting at the Gilroy Garlic Festival left three dead — including two children — and a dozen injured at the famous three-day event that attracts more than 100,000 people annually to the agricultural community in Northern California.

The festival included a perimeter fence, metal detectors, a bag search and police patrols. Santino William Legan, 19, cut through the fence and opened fire with an AK-47-style rifle before three officers fatally shot him in less than a minute.

"Anytime you put on a large event with a lot of people you're always concerned, which is why we try to run a very tight, closed event where there's, you know, controlled access," Gilroy Police Chief Scot Smithee said at a news conference Monday. "Do we think about how we're going to respond if something were to happen? I would say the answer is yes."

Experts ticked off a list of ideal precautions: a perimeter fence — or even two — with police patrols, as well as drones, security cameras, social media monitoring, bag checks, metal detectors, limited points of entry and an "overwatch" police unit that monitors the event from a high perch.

Recommendations for an overwatch position and securing beyond the site of the event are similar to suggested improvements after another deadly festival shooting: In 2017, a gunman on the 32nd floor of a Las Vegas hotel fired into a concert crowd and killed 58 people.

It became the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history. A review recommended securing high-rise buildings overlooking open-air venues, not just the festivals themselves.

"It's not just OK to secure your perimeter and think you're safe," said Michael Downing, a former Los Angeles Police Department deputy chief.

Still, officials said first responders and event coordinators need to balance safety concerns, costs and a welcoming atmosphere for visitors, noting that eventgoers likely do not want to be subjected to extensive screening with X-ray machines and metal detectors.

"You obviously can't do an event that is set up like an international airport," said Sheriff Tony Spurlock of Douglas County, Colorado, where the annual county fair is being held this week. "It's not the kind of environment that we would set up magnetometers at every entrance."

Brian Higgins, a former Bergen County, New Jersey, police chief, said controlling an event's perimeter through technology and police is key to safety. Although a long line of people at a single point of entry can pose its own target, limited access means law enforcement can more easily see who is coming in and out — and with what.

"Just because it's a family-friendly event doesn't mean that something bad can't happen," Higgins said.

Although festivalgoers may notice increased security in the coming weeks, experts don't foresee a major shift in safety protocols going forward.

"Events like this are occurring across the country every weekend and it's up to those event coordinators to determine the extent to which they want to employ security features," Craig Fair, deputy special agent in charge at the FBI's San Francisco office, said told reporters Monday.

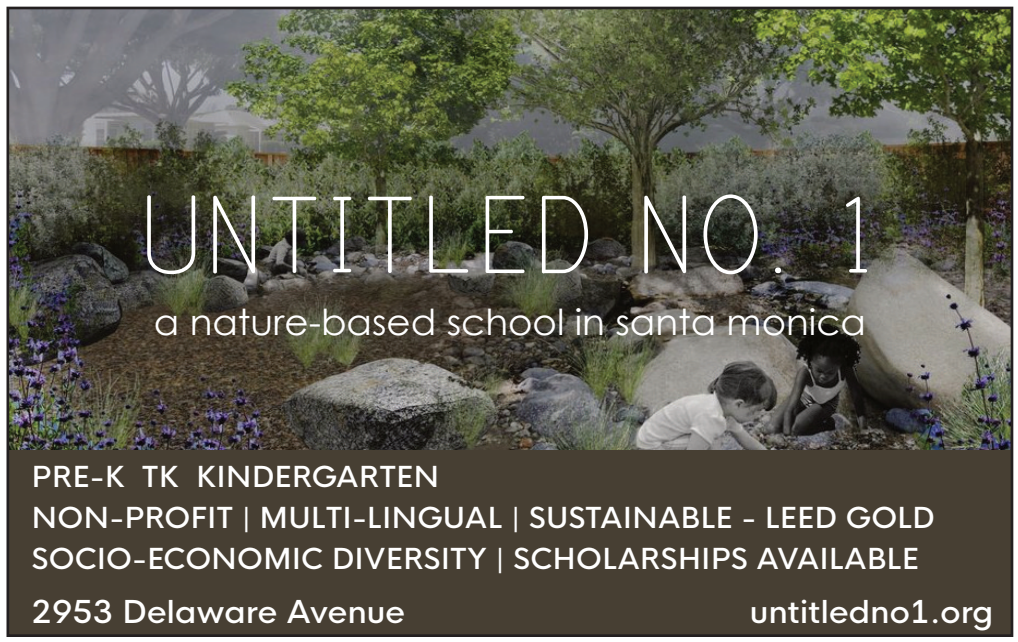

Experts praised the Gilroy Police Department's precautionary efforts and quick response, noting that law enforcement there had taken many critical steps.

"If somebody's that determined to do something that terrible, it's going to be hard to stop them," said Soraya Sutherlin, managing partner of Los Angeles-based Emergency Management Safety Partners.

Sutherlin said event planners should clearly label exits, with signs pointing people toward an evacuation route, and design a way for visitors to report suspicious activity either in person, over the phone or through an app.

Officials said there must be greater efforts to identify future shooters beforehand, through social media monitoring or other means.

"How do we figure out that he was an absolute ticking time bomb waiting to go off?" said Stephan Dembinsky, public safety director in Daytona Beach Shores, Florida. "Until we figure out how to identify them, we're going to keep having these shootings."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (July 31)

Paradoxically, this year you will simplify your life and make it fuller. You'll build with people you've known a long time, and these joint ventures and shared successes bond you. Conversations lead you to a new interest. Take vacations. You become more passionate about work after a rest from it. Capricorn and Pisces adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 6, 49, 3, 25 and 10.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The good ideas rain down on you today, so many that you'll forget unless you catch them with notes or by taking pictures. Little reminders can turn into big profits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You've been influenced enough. Taking yourself out of the chatter of the world for a block of time will help you connect to a well with something timeless and rich inside.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Some social arenas are easy to navigate. Their rules are clear-cut, and you've obeyed them so many times the behavior is automatic. The other social arenas will get easier, too. You just have to experience them more.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). It's hard enough to know what to do for yourself. How are you supposed to know what to do for others? Sometimes you do just know, and it works. When that's not the case, stick with doing what makes you feel most alive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). There's a stronger-than-usual inner commentator to deal with, and that's only because you're in a state of flux. Who you are is changing. Knowing how to act like you isn't as certain as it was.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Getting carried away with an idea or activity can be a little embarrassing, especially when the others don't take to it with your enthusiasm. This is the best kind of embarrassed to be and highly recommended by the fates.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You want to know about your faults. You don't mind when they are gently pointed out. In fact, you gravitate toward friends and seek teachers who can do this for you – Miracle-Gro for your soul.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Until you fully understand a thing, it is dangerous to praise it, and even more dangerous to reject it. The gift of penetrating curiosity combined with the discipline of study will serve you well.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Personal fulfillment doesn't come from success. Instead, like sweat, it's a product of work. Because it's not contingent on the win, personal fulfillment can come equally from success or failure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Let some of the praise from your last success soak in and juice your ego just enough to fuel the start of the next thing. It's a safe thing to do, only because you're too modest to dwell there and get a big head.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). In a dog-eat-dog world, you're vegan. That doesn't mean you won't compete. You can and will. You'll just do it by minding your own business and committing even more fully to the same work you've done all along.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Even though your friends and family members would like to have your back, they won't think ahead like a professional would. For the things that matter for your bottom line, hire the right person.

New Moon and Mercury Favor Order

Mercury ends a tantrum of disruptive domestic detail today, and the new moon encourages us to seize this chance to re-establish order. If you're not as organized as you'd like, take a breath and start your own KonMari experiment: Redo your filing system, or change to paperless financial systems. Fortune will favor the attempt at fresh habits.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION

"My son is getting his driver's license this month. My plan is to make a flier with his picture on it that says, "caution: new driver" and post it all over the neighborhood. My husband says that my way of teasing our son actually humiliates him. But shouldn't he be used to my humor by now? I only have a few more years with him at home. Shouldn't I be able to have fun with it? This is part of the way I show my love. My son is a Scorpio, and I am a Sagittarius. My husband is a Capricorn."

Your husband has a point. If your son is a typical Scorpio, he is much more sensitive than he appears on the surface. Furthermore, he is likely to hide his true feelings under a cool veneer. These hot, angry feelings simmer and boil like lava under a volcano until they erupt one day, often at the most inconvenient time. Yes, at some point people should know your humor and be able to take a joke. But it's more important now that you don't give your teenage son any more reason to resent you than (assuming he's a typical teen) he already has.

by Measure SMS and Measure M.

The district's Facility Improvement Project website shows updates including: installing new toilets, drinking fountains and water bottle fillers at Webster Elementary; fixing a water leak at Malibu Middle and High School's upper playground; constructing new classrooms at Olympic and more.

The presentation will also include schedule and budget updates for projects in the district.

COACH CADY REMEMBERED

Beloved Samohi track coach Patrick Cady passed away in June of this year, a passing that left Samohi and the community with an irreplaceable void.

Cady was a beloved Samohi teacher and coach who impacted the lives of students and staff, dedicating his life to enriching others in the Santa Monica and Malibu communities.

He worked at Samohi for 34 years and to honor Coach Cady, the SMMUSD board will consider naming the Samohi track in his honor.

If the renaming is agreed to, the item will be brought back for board approval on August 15.

COMMUNITY SCHOOL INITIATIVE

SMMUSD was one of 15 school districts selected by the Los Angeles County Office of Education to participate in their Community Schools Initiative, which would take place at Samohi.

A presentation for the initiative says the purpose of Community Schools is to improve the lives of students through service, leadership and advocacy so that students are college-ready and civic-ready.

The initiative would do this by making Samohi a hub of sorts for "uniting families, educators and community partners to provide all students with top-quality academics, enrichment, health and social services, and opportunities."

The initiative would see partnerships with LA Public Works, LA County Library, LA County Department of Mental Health and the probation and Parks and Rec departments.

Highlighting areas of need for the initiative include increasing graduation rates, decreasing chronic absenteeism and dropout rates, reducing suspensions and increasing family engagement.

construction on the site. Beckloff denied a similar request in May, saying the facility is necessary to provide adequate shelter for Venice's homeless residents. More than 1,100 people experiencing homelessness live in the neighborhood, according to the 2019 Greater Los Angeles Homeless Count, a 33% increase over last year.

Bridge Home Venice is under construction at a Metro-owned former bus yard at the corner of Main Street and Pacific Avenue, near some of Venice's largest homeless encampments. People Assisting the Homeless (PATH) and the Venice-based Safe Place for Youth will manage and operate the facility, which will open later this summer. It is intended to be open for three years.

Like other facilities in the city's Bridge Home program, the shelter is meant to replace the nearby encampments with temporary housing and case management services. It will be open 24 hours a day, seven days a week and provide meals, restrooms, showers, storage and room for pets. The services offered on-site will help individuals find permanent housing.

The city has opened four bridge housing facilities and approved 12 others, many of which are facing similar opposition from neighborhood organizations.

"Homelessness is a severe and urgent crisis, and bridge housing in Venice is a big and important part of a multi-faceted strategy that most Venetians support and demand," said Councilmember Mike Bonin, who represents neighborhoods on the Westside, in a May press release. "No one deserves to live on a sidewalk, and no one deserves to have encampments in their neighborhood. Bridge housing is a needed alternative to encampments."

The Venice Stakeholders Association contends that the facility will attract crime and generate noise in the beachfront residential neighborhood that surrounds the site.

"These facilities, as we have seen around the St. Joseph Center and its services center, attract new encampments, which become a heavy burden for neighbors," said president Mark Ryavec, who has challenged other homeless facilities and policies in Venice.

The association's lawsuit, which was filed in January, asserts that the city did not fully evaluate the impacts of the project on the neighborhood, such as limited parking availability and increased noise, under the California Environmental Quality Act.

It asks the court to declare the approval of the project to be in violation and CEQA and prevent the city, Metro and Coastal Commission from constructing the facility until it presents another environmental impact report that fully captures the impact of the project on the neighborhood.

The association is now waiting for the city, Metro and the Coastal Commission to reply to the opening brief, Ryavec said. The lawsuit will go to trial Oct. 11.
