GUERBOIAN

Jeweler is a real Santa Monica gem

BY NATALIE JARVEY
Special to the Daily Press

DOWNTOWN An engagement can be one of the happiest times in a person's life and for Edward Guerboian, it's an occasion he celebrates almost daily.

As the owner of Readers Fine Jewelers, Guerboian, 57, said it would take him days to recount all of the engagement stories he's been a part of since the store opened in 1976.

Just two weeks ago he had one of his most memorable stories to date. A couple knocked on his door after hours and said they had come to look at rings. Once the woman had chosen a ring, her fiancé motioned to Guerboian, got down on one knee and proposed in the middle of the store.

"It was so exciting," Guerboian said of the evening.

These stories continue to excite him even though he's heard them his entire life. Jewelry has long been a family tradition,

Gardening for the soul

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

SUNSET PARK There's a hearty vegetable garden in Greg Fuller's backyard with seemingly enough vegetables to fill the produce section of a small grocery store, teeming with zucchini, corn and tomatoes.

Tending to the small farm is a team of men and women who come without fail every Tuesday and Saturday morning for about three hours, pulling weeds, tilling the soil, and taking some of the ready-to-eat crop at the end of the day.

The gardeners are clients of OPCC's Safe Haven, a shelter that serves the needs of chronically homeless individuals who live with mental illnesses, and for the past year, they have sought solace and purpose in a blooming plot of land on Cedar Street.

"The garden is very therapeutic to me and the rest of my members," said Felix Garcia, a Safe Haven resident who not only serves as the team leader, but also the shelter's chef, using the garden's vegetables in his menu.

With a dozen chickens and even more worms fertilizing the soil in his backyard, Fuller saw a golden opportunity to build a vegetable garden, posting an advertisement on Craigslist for a gardener.

But rather than pay, Fuller proposed a deal — he would provide the land, water and seeds while the gardener would perform all the work but receive half of the crop.

The first response came from Todd Cosper, who was back then the activities coordinator for Safe Haven, asking if Fuller would be interested in taking on a group of homeless clients.

"He told me he had a few people in his

Cash for clunkers may stall out

KEN THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON The Obama administration will suspend the "cash for clunkers" program unless the Senate provides $2 billion more for the popular car incentive plan, Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood said Sunday.

He said he expects the current $1 billion pool to be exhausted by the end of this weekend. The House approved an additional $2 billion on Friday and the administration is pressing the Senate to go along before its summer vacation begins at week's end.

"If we don't get the $2 billion from the Senate ... we would have to suspend the program next week," LaHood said in an interview with C-SPAN's "Newsmakers" show. He said the administration "will continue the program until we see what the Senate does and I believe the Senate will pass this."

At least one GOP senator questioned the need to speed the money.

"This is crazy to try to rush this thing through again while they're trying to rush through health care, and they want to get on to cap and trade electricity tax," said Sen. Jim DeMint, R-S.C. "We've got to slow this thing down."

Former Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said car and truck building had begun to rebound even before the program got under way. But, he added, "there is no doubt that that very extraordinary response is a very important indicator that the state of confidence in the economy is beginning to pick up." If the incentive program had gone into place six months ago, he said, "it would have probably been a dud."

Obama officials scrambled last week to add money to the Car Allowance Rebate System (CARS), which is designed to get old, polluting vehicles off the road and scrapped while helping car dealers emerge from the recession. The $1 billion has led to the sale of 250,000 new vehicles.

Owners of gas-guzzlers can receive rebates of $3,500 or $4,500 toward the purchase of a new fuel-efficient car. LaHood said 62 percent of the traded-in vehicles were trucks and "these people are buying cars that get much better gas mileage."

The Senate narrowly approved the initial money in June. But some lawmakers who voted for the plan, including Sens. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and Susan Collins, R-Maine, have said the additional dollars should push consumers to buy more fuel-efficient vehicles and allow people to buy fuel-efficient used vehicles. Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., has said he was con-

Test quizzes at-risk kids for gang quotient

CHRISTINA HOAG
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Gang prevention cop Jeff Norat drives a bunch of sullen teens through the gang-riddled streets of a Los Angeles neighborhood, not because they're in trouble with the law — but so they'll stay out of it.

"These kids are all at risk of joining gangs — look where they live," said Norat, motoring through Boyle Heights where some gangs are in their third generation. "But some kids don't."

What prompts some kids to join gangs and their neighbors not to join is a question that has long baffled experts. City officials, who have made little headway denting the ranks of street gangs, now think they'll find the answer through a multiple-choice test.

"If you could identify who those at-risk kids were, then you could microtarget them with resources," said Jeff Carr, director of the mayor's office on gang reduction and youth development.

That premise marks a new strategy in the city's fight against gangs, which claim roughly 40,000 members in Los Angeles, making it the nation's gang capital.

The city spends about $20 million a year on gang prevention and intervention. Until now, much of that funding has gone to what the anti-gang czar calls a "shotgun approach" to prevention — flooding gang-infested neighborhoods with social programs under the theory that any kid raised in these "hot zones" could wind up a tattooed gangbanger.

But Carr points to research showing only about 15 percent of kids in a given neighborhood join gangs, according to University of Southern California social psychologist Malcolm Klein and others. Klein found 10 factors that channel children into gangs, including poor parenting, justifying delinquent behavior and traumatic events.

Researchers at USC's Center for Research into Crime used those findings to develop the 74-question survey called the Youth

More work to do for homeless

Editor:

The ACLU suit against Santa Monica for arresting homeless for camping out in public has spawned two editorials from your newspaper and two-columns of public comment in two-week's time.

Yet, for all the attention Bill Bauer gives to Santa Monica's efforts to address the problem of homelessness, he has said nothing that gets at the heart of the issue. I have met with the homeless and with people from Santa Monica Human Services and can see how complicated it can be to deal with homelessness.

Given the resources available, Santa Monica has adopted a "Housing First" approach to homelessness, directing most of HUD's funding to providing housing for the most vulnerable homeless, those least able to help themselves. Unfortunately, the term "Housing First" makes it seem that we are doing more than we are. What we are not providing is "Safety First." While other funds go to nonprofits providing food, counseling, and other assistance, over 800 people are sleeping every night on the ground. True, the police have programs to help the homeless, but this has not kept them from rounding many of them up in the middle of the night and throwing them in jail.

It is probably not a coincidence that these pick-ups are often on Thursday night, which allows police to keep homeless locked up until Monday when fewer tourists are around. It is appropriate that your paper points out what Santa Monica has done to help the homeless, but that hardly excuses the police for costing taxpayers $300 a day for each person they put in jail. If we are willing to spend that much, couldn't we do it more productively?

Helping the homeless is so difficult that the Obama administration has responded to the economic crisis by sending our city funds for Homelessness Prevention and Rapid Re-Housing so that people who lose their jobs won't end up on the street. Those who have been homeless for over two weeks tend to "self-medicate" with alcohol and drugs, thus intensifying the problem. As time passes, these people become more worn down: They look bad, smell worse, and are saddled with belongings they must cart around town as they look for their next meal. Without overnight shelter, storage, or showers, these homeless wander our city like outcasts.

The homeless I have talked to see a role for themselves in helping their community during this time of economic difficulty. Many are ready to clean out foreclosed houses and break down the waste so it does not end up in a landfill. Several are eager to turn soil so residential community gardens could spread throughout our city. Fearing that homelessness will be a life-sentence, many seek ways to transition themselves off the street. Surely, their plight calls for a more humane solution than being confined like criminals.

In this current economic crisis, we must be creative in funding solutions for all of our problems. So, we might as well extend some of that creativity to dealing with problems facing the homeless. Why waste money jailing those we cannot house? Why waste even more defending such actions in court? If we are as concerned about the homeless as this newspaper claims, let's complete the job we set out to do.

Squandered resources and whistle-blowers

Editor's note: This is the final installment of a two-part series.

THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH OF the American Civil Liberties Union recently announced the filing of a lawsuit in Federal Court against City Hall and the Santa Monica Police Department for "violating the constitutional rights of chronically homeless people by arresting and harassing them" at a recent City Hall press conference.

One wonders what's going on in the "pro-bono" world of homeless advocacy when big fish are ignored by the ACLU and entities like Santa Monica, who do more than their part, are subject to groundless litigation.

For example, the Veteran's Administration has lagged in providing shelter beds, housing and other services for homeless vets for years.

Los Angeles based Public Counsel, the largest pro-bono public interest law firm in the world, is currently working with the VA and community partners to resolve problems encountered by homeless vets such as helping vets more easily access HUD VASH Vouchers with case management support and overcome other bureaucratic barriers to receiving the benefits they desperately need.

According to Paul Freese, director of Litigation and Advocacy, Public Counsel recently launched the Center for Veterans Advancement (CVA) to train pro-bono advocates nationally to advocate on behalf of veterans and ensure that they receive the services to which they are entitled in a just and timely manner.

The CVA also works with New Directions and the VA to promote the Veteran's Court model nationally where treatment and supportive housing are provided as alternatives to incarceration for those suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Disorders who violate the law.

Moreover, CVA, New Directions and the VA are making progress in expanding the availability of affordable housing for homeless veterans and those returning from the Iraq and Afghanistan wars. Freese says, "Thanks to CVA Director Rick Little's magnificent leadership and team, this project is off to a highly successful start and promises to assist thousands of veterans here and across the country in avoiding homelessness.

"While litigation is always an option, we strive to work with the system and resolve issues constructively before suing as litigation has a divisive effect, and homelessness is an issue that needs our collective unified attention and commitment."

Here's where advocacy and smart policy will change thousands of lives for the better. Public Counsel works toward big results, not cheap headlines.

At the press event, ACLU attorney Jennifer Pasquerella told reporters, "Prior to this we were speaking to numerous service providers. That's how we were introduced to this problem … . The police abuse was reported to us by people who are active in Santa Monica or who are in city government."

City Hall's human services manager, Julie Rusk, said she and the rest of the city staff were totally blindsided. The thought of someone going outside and not coming to her or city staff first with complaints was troubling, she said.

After receiving tips from numerous highly-placed sources that complaints to the ACLU originated from OPCC, the city's largest, city-funded homeless services provider, I e-mailed its executive director, John Maceri, about reports of whistle-blowing. He responded: "I don't know who initiated contact with the ACLU. There are a lot of people who have connections to the ACLU, and I imagine they could have heard from more than one person. I was surprised by the lawsuit, but not by the allegations.

"I've heard a lot of complaints about the enforcement actions from our clients, staff and members of the community," Maceri added. "The last few times I've been at our Access Center, clients have come up to me to talk about how they feel they are being constantly harassed and ticketed for laying down, camping or sleeping in public."

But, apparently Maceri never relayed these concerns to city staff or the police department.

Former 1980's City Councilman and Mayor Jim Conn berated City Hall, telling reporters he was ashamed of his home town. Conn was one of those responsible for rolling out the red carpet for the homeless in the 1980s and is therefore partially responsible for the flood of transients still coming here.

Conn should know providing unending "no strings" support while allowing persons to ignore the law with impunity (as suggested in the ACLU suit's "Claims for Relief") is enabling. It'll never end homelessness and actually allow more people to become sick and die a lonely and painful death in an alley.

Maybe this is "OK" for the misguided barristers working under the ACLU banner or clueless ex-politicians, but it's not all right with me or other truly caring persons.

Residents are telling me that despite all the services and money spent, there's still crime, filth, panhandlers, drunks and "service abusers" who exist year in and year out on our streets. And now, lawsuits from the ACLU? Maybe it's time to pull the plug, they say.

If that were to happen, the ACLU's gunslingers may have truly shot and killed the Golden Goose.

Where's the change?

THE UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN THE U.S. now stands at 9.5 percent and soon will top 10 percent. And the number of U.S. households on the verge of losing their homes soared by nearly 15 percent in the first half of this year. This has caused some economists to question whether or not the country is headed toward another economic meltdown — a point of no return. However, watching the news coverage of Barack Obama's adventures while in office, you might be forgiven for thinking there were no problems left to solve in terms of the economy.

"It's getting to where you can't turn on your TV without seeing Obama," ranted political commentator Bill Maher in a recent piece in the Los Angeles Times. "[T]here's a fine line between being transparent and being overexposed. Every time you turn on the TV, there's Obama. He's getting a puppy! He's eating a cheeseburger with Joe Biden! He's taking the wife to Broadway and Paris — this is the best season of 'The Bachelor' yet!"

Within his first six months in office, President Obama has been wined and dined, photographed and treated like a rock star — all the while, flashing that bright, toothy grin. He has travelled to Russia, Ghana, Italy, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Iraq, Canada, Jordan, Israel, Germany, France and Great Britain. And he has been granted audiences with Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace and Pope Benedict XVI at Vatican City.

On the home front, Obama planned and hosted a star-studded concert at the White House in honor of Motown musician Stevie Wonder. A few weeks later, he flew to California and appeared on the Tonight Show with Jay Leno — a trip which had to cost U.S. taxpayers millions of dollars, considering the cost of operating Air Force One, as well as travel for the president's security detail, staff and the White House press corps. Most recently, Obama travelled to St. Louis, Mo., where he threw the first pitch at the Major League Baseball All-Star game while media pundits obsessed over the style of jeans he was wearing. Was he really wearing "mom jeans"?

No wonder Obama's approval ratings are now in a slow downward slide. A recent CNN poll put Obama's overall job approval rating at 61 percent, down from 76 percent in February. Popularity may win at the polls, but it's not going to create jobs, and celebrity-obsessed Americans are slowly starting to wake up to this reality. It's time that Obama does, too.

After all, Americans are grappling with critical issues, and they need a president who understands the urgency of their situation and reflects that sobriety — not one who's enjoying a jet-setting lifestyle at taxpayer expense — twitting while Rome burns, so to speak.

Indeed, Obama is increasingly being compared to his predecessor and in less than favorable terms. Dahlia Lithwick, a senior editor at Slate, has referred to Obama as "the keeper of Bush's secrets." Nat Hentoff, a long-time civil libertarian and outspoken critic of the Bush administration, refers to our nation's 44th president as "George W. Obama" — and with good reason. President Obama's time in office is increasingly starting to look like Bush, Part II.

For example, when Congress attempted to reclaim some of its oversight authority by requiring the president to inform a greater number of lawmakers about covert CIA activities, Obama threatened to veto the bill.

Obama recently issued a presidential signing statement declaring his intention to not be bound by congressional restrictions on the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. This came after campaign pledges by Obama to not abuse the signing statement privilege, which Bush was wont to do as a way to get around laws with which he disagreed.

Moreover, the war machine that threatened to bankrupt the country under Bush has actually grown under Obama. As if occupying Afghanistan and Iraq wasn't trouble enough, now we're moving into Pakistan.

And then there's the ailing economy. It's what got Obama elected in the first place, yet since taking office, he has been spending like mad, running up a huge deficit and charging taxpayers, to boot. If this keeps up, Obama is going to need his own stimulus package for media appearances alone.

What happened to change you could believe in? Was it all a massive marketing ploy? Were we lied to? Or was the idealism of the campaigner overcome by the corrupt realities of the office?

Clearly, spending more money that we don't have is not the solution. So what's your plan, Mr. President? Hopefully, not more television appearances. It's time for you to stay home, do your job and get your hands dirty for a change.

SIMPLE STEP: Turning the thermostat up in summer and down in winter is a simple yet oft-over-looked way to save money and energy on heating and cooling.

Do touch that dial

Dear EarthTalk

What are some simple low cost improvements I can do to my home to make it greener?

Stefan Lonce
via e-mail

ACCORDING TO CONSUMER ADVOCATE Remar Sutton, there are many ways to save energy and other resources around the home without spending a lot of money. And taking action sooner rather than later will lead to ongoing savings on utility bills, so a little cash outlay now will more than pay for itself in the long run.

On the energy front, turning your thermostat up in summer and down in winter is one often overlooked way to reduce usage and cost. "For each degree you raise or lower your thermostat, you can save anywhere from one to five percent on your cooling or heating bills depending on where you live," Sutton reports, adding that programmable thermostats can help greatly to maximize efficiency and cut out waste.

Other ways to save energy include: lowering the hot water heater's thermostat; getting heating and cooling equipment tuned once a year; insulating hot water pipes and hot water storage tanks; caulking cracks and gaps on walls, including around door and window frames; weather-stripping air leaks around windows and doors; and replacing incandescent light bulbs with more efficient compact fluorescent (CFL) bulbs.

Sutton recommends doing an energy audit to identify all the areas around the house where simple, low-cost improvements can make a difference. Your local utility may offer a free or low-cost audit, or you can do-it-yourself via the online calculator at the U.S. Department of Energy's Home Energy Saver website.

Beyond energy savings alone, Sutton offers a wealth of tips on how to reduce water usage around the house as well: Wash and dry only full loads of laundry and only wash full loads of dishes; fix leaky faucets and toilets; install aerating low-flow showerheads and faucets; turn off the faucet while brushing teeth and shaving; and take short(er) showers and avoid baths altogether. By taking some or all of these measures, you can run a much greener home without spending much at all.

Once you've exhausted ways to save energy and water around the house as it is, you might consider taking larger steps to boost efficiency more. According to Harvey Sachs of the American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy, installing or upgrading insulation is a sure-fire way to save money over time, as your heating and cooling equipment won't have to work so hard maintaining the desired temperature of your home's interior. Planting shade trees around your home's exterior will help reduce the need for air conditioning in summer and, if they're deciduous, they'll let sunlight through in the winter.

Also, says Sachs, upgrading to more energy efficient appliances — preferably those brandishing the federal government's EnergySTAR seal of approval — should more than make up for any cost premiums with the energy savings they'll bring going forward. Replacing older single pane windows with new more efficient double or even triple pane varieties can significantly reduce home energy usage and heating/cooling bills as well. Be sure to get professional help when installing insulation or new windows, as improper installation can negate the benefits you're trying to obtain.

King salmon numbers dwindle

MARY PEMBERTON
Associated Press Writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska Yukon River smokehouses should be filled this summer with oil-rich strips of king salmon — long used by Alaska Natives as a high-energy food to get through the long Alaska winters. But they're mostly empty.

The kings failed to show up, and not just in the Yukon.

One Alaska river after another has been closed to king fishing this summer because significant numbers of fish failed to return to spawn. The dismally weak return follows weak runs last summer and poor runs in 2007, which also resulted in emergency fishing closures.

"It is going to be a tough winter, no two ways about it," said Leslie Hunter, a 67-year-old store owner and commercial fisherman from the Yup'ik Eskimo village of Marshall in western Alaska.

Federal and state fisheries biologists are looking into the mystery.

King salmon spend years in the Bering Sea before returning as adults to rivers where they were born to spawn and die. Biologists speculate that the mostly likely cause was a shift in Pacific Ocean currents, but food availability, changing river conditions and predator-prey relationships could be affecting the fish.

People living along the Yukon River think they know what is to blame — pollock fishery. The fishery — the nation's largest — removes about 1 million metric tons of pollock each year from the eastern Bering Sea. Its wholesale value is nearly $1 billion.

King salmon get caught in the huge pollock trawl nets, and the dead kings are counted and most are thrown back into the ocean. Some are donated to the needy.

"We do know for a fact that the pollock fishery is slaughtering wholesale and wiping out the king salmon stocks out there that are coming into all the major tributaries," said Nick Andrew Jr., executive director of the Ohagamuit Traditional Council. "The pollock fishery is taking away our way of living."

Since 2000, the incidental number of king salmon caught has skyrocketed, reaching over 120,000 kings in 2007. A substantial portion of those fish were bound for western Alaska rivers. If those fish had lived, an estimated 78,000 adult fish would have returned to rivers from the Pacific Northwest to Western Alaska.

Efforts to reduce bycatch are not new. In 2006, bycatch rules were adopted allowing the pollock fleet to move from areas where lots of kings were being inadvertently caught, thereby avoiding large-scale fishing closures. Then, 2007 happaned, and it was back to the drawing board.

Last April, the North Pacific Fishery Management Council, the organization that manages ocean fish, passed a hard cap on the pollock fishery. Beginning in 2011, the portion of the fleet that participates in the program is allowed 60,000 kings a year. If the cap is reached, the fishery shuts down. Those who don't participate have a lower cap — 47,591 fish.

The loss of the kings is devastating village economies. These are the same Yukon River villages where spring floods swept away homes, as well as boats, nets and smokehouses. There's no money to buy anything, Andrew said.

"It is crippling the economy in all of the rivers where we depend on commercial fishing for income," he said.

Bycatch plays a role but is not the only reason for the vanishing kings, said Diana Stram, a fishery management plan coordinator at the council.

Herman Savikko, an Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist, agreed. He pointed to changing ocean currents, plankton blooms and even the carnivorous nature of salmon. River conditions could be changing, too, he said.

A lot isn't known about what happens to king salmon in the ocean, Savikko said. "Once the fish enter the marine environment it just is a big black box," he said.

In a good year, Kwik'pak Fisheries L.L.C. in Emmonak on the lower Yukon employs between 200 and 300 people. This summer, only about 30 people have been hired. Kwik'pak is the largest employer in the region.

General manager Jack Schultheis said when the king fishery was shut down, the summer chum salmon run was curtailed as well, even though a good number of chums were returning to the river.

The lower Yukon villages are economically devastated, he said.

Fishermen used to get between $5 million and $10 million from the fishery. Last year, it was $1.1 million.

That means instead of making between $20,000 and $30,000 in the 1970s, fishermen are making just a few thousand dollars now, and that in villages where fuel costs $8 a gallon, milk is $15 a gallon and a T-bone steak costs $25, he said.

It's hard to see the villages in such economic hardship but the Yukon should be managed conservatively until the problem of the disappearing kings is better understood, Schultheis said.

"For 50 years, it was an extremely stable fishery," he said.

NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS
Associated Press Writer

HAYDEN LAKE, Idaho The house where Aryan Nations founder Richard Butler lived has been demolished. So has the church where he preached his racist religion. Cows graze where hundreds of white supremacists used to burn crosses in the summer.

The Aryan Nations is long gone from northern Idaho, but its reputation lingers to the chagrin of locals.

When a man recently shot up the Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C., much was made of the fact that accused shooter James von Brunn spent a few days in 2004 in this area, living with a fellow anti-Semite before he was evicted for being too radical.

"The stain is so deep," said Tony Stewart, a long time resident who helped evict the Aryan Nations. "We feel stereotyped in a way that is unjust."

At the center of the debate is Hayden Lake, a posh town of fewer than 500 people that mostly consists of a country club and lavish homes along its picture-postcard lake. Hayden Lake served as the post office address for the rural Aryan Nations compound, some five miles away, and became shorthand as the haven for hate groups.

Instead of goose-stepping neo-Nazis, its streets are full of golf carts and joggers.

So it is in much of the Idaho Panhandle these days, where tourism has replaced logging and mining as the major economic activity.

Coeur d'Alene, eight miles south of Hayden Lake, is the largest city and economic hub of the panhandle. Built along Lake Coeur d'Alene, it draws golfers, boaters, and outdoor enthusiasts, and the charming downtown is full of sidewalk cafes, art galleries and boutiques.

A decade ago, the Aryan Nations held annual marches by its handful of members down Sherman Avenue, at the height of the tourist season.

Not that it hurt business much. Kootenai County has grown from 69,000 residents in 1990 to nearly 140,000 now, and has been able to recruit jobs and retirees from larger urban areas.

The Aryans were never a local product. Butler was an aerospace engineer from Southern California who used to vacation in the area because it had so few minorities. The county is more than 94 percent white and non-Hispanic, one of the most homogenous places in the nation.

In the 1970s, Butler bought 20 acres near Hayden Lake and began gathering followers from around the country. He held annual skinhead symposiums called the Aryan World Congress, which lured hundreds of supporters to the compound for a weekend of speeches, cross burnings and marches. Some followers would leave and commit acts of violence.

Stewart and other community leaders organized a human rights task force that rallied the community against Butler. Their opposition put them at risk, as when the home of activist Bill Wassmuth was bombed in 1986. Three Aryan Nations members were convicted in the bombings.

The end for Butler began during a congress in the summer of 1998. A car driving past the compound apparently backfired, and Aryan security guards, thinking it was a gunshot, gave chase.

They shot at the vehicle and forced the two terrified occupants off the road. Working with the Southern Poverty Law Center, the two victims sued the Aryan Nations for negligence in the supervision of the guards. A Coeur d'Alene jury awarded them a $6.3 million judgment, and Butler was forced to declare bankruptcy and then sell his land.

He lived his remaining days in a donated house in Hayden, dying in 2004. His remaining followers scattered around the country.

There are still scattered efforts to revive Butler's legacy.

The Aryan Nations Web site lists Coeur d'Alene residents Jerald O'Brien and Michael Lombard as leaders. Both hold the title of pastor, which was also used by Butler. O'Brien declined to say how many people had joined the group, but welcomed a reporter's attention.

"Any publicity is good publicity," O'Brien said. "If the enemy is not screaming for our blood, we are not doing a good job."

O'Brien, who knew Butler, said he is trying to re-establish the annual congresses.

"I promised Pastor Butler on his death bed that I would not let this die," he said.

Accused Holocaust museum shooter von Brunn, 89, grew up in Missouri, worked in advertising in New York City and has lived on Maryland's Eastern Shore since the late 1960s.

But what got the most publicity in his background was a few days in 2004 he spent at the home of Stan Hess, an anti-Semite in Hayden, Idaho, who von Brunn located via the Internet. Hess found the visitor too violent for his liking and asked him to leave.

"He lives in Maryland, but Maryland didn't get the bad rep," Stewart complained.

That's not to say that northern Idaho is a tolerant paradise, Stewart notes.

Right-wing political attitudes are common. It's not unusual to see people sporting Confederate flags, anti-government slogans or even a swastika tattoo.

Many of the newcomers hail from California, including a large cadre of retired law enforcement officers, of whom O.J. Simpson trial figure Mark Fuhrman is the best known.

"LA cops move up here to get away from diversity," said Rachel Dolezal, director of education for the Human Rights Education Institute in downtown Coeur d'Alene.

Dolezal, a multi-racial woman who graduated from Howard University, jokes that she traded one monoculture for another when she moved here in 2004.

As a woman of color, she finds plenty of challenges in Coeur d'Alene. The center's efforts to bring black history programs to schools, and a black student association to North Idaho College have resulted in letters to the editor criticizing the efforts, she said.

There was also a recent incident in which three skinheads visited the office and asked for a tour, Dolezal said.

They showed little interest in the center's work, she said, but saluted a Nazi flag that was part of an exhibit on propaganda.

"They asked me where I lived," she said, and where her young son went to school.

The three eventually left. Dolezal reported the incident to the FBI, which interviewed the men. The center also installed security cameras

OPCC clients find therapy through gardening efforts

gardening class and wanted to have them come over," Fuller said. "I said sure, let's do it."

They started planting corn in late August last year, but it was already too late in the season to yield a good crop. The team came back again in the winter and started planting cauliflower, corn and zucchini, finding favorable results the second time around.

Today the gardens — which sit in the front and rear yards — are packed with fresh fruits and vegetables, from watermelons to eggplants to tomatoes. While the agreement entitles the gardeners to half the crop, Fuller said he usually gives them about 75 percent.

That produce is used in the Safe Haven kitchen.

"It's delicious," Luther Richert, the project director at Safe Haven, said. "I always eat here when we have vegetables from that garden."

Leading the team is 55-year-old Garcia, who has been homeless for about a decade, suffering from both bipolar disorder and schizophrenia.

Having studied permaculture, he is the only member of the team who always comes to the garden twice a week, assuaging Fuller's concerns that it would deteriorate without enough attention.

He also comes on days when there are no OPCC staff members available to give the clients a ride to Fuller's home, instead walking the mile or taking the bus from the shelter on Cloverfield Boulevard. On those days, Garcia tells his team to stay behind, concerned for their safety.

"I don't want anything to happen to my peers along the way," he said.

During the week Fuller does his part to maintain the garden, watering it every morning. To ensure optimal soil, he feeds the chickens and worms old produce donated daily by nearby Bob's Market.

In the months since they started working together, Fuller said he has come to know the gardeners well, such as Garcia, who he learned is a master at handiwork.

"They've been very good," Fuller said. "Their behavior and everything has been great."

There are hopes that other property owners will be interested in similar partnerships with OPCC.

"We are very interested in activities that would help (our client's) well being," Richert said. "I would guess the majority of our clients would similarly find this therapeutic, something that is healing."

Business is five generations old extending to Guerboian's great-great grandfather Gregory.

"My dad, my grandfather, they started in Europe and we just passed along through generations," he said. "It's tradition."

Though his father died when he was only 16, Guerboian kept the tradition alive, moving to the United States in 1967 and opening his shop in Santa Monica a decade later. As the oldest of four children, Guerboian supported his family and saved enough money so they could join him in California.

"It's something that I promised my dad before he died, that I would take care of my mom and siblings," he said.

Since opening his own store on the corner of Wilshire Boulevard and Fourth Street, Guerboian has made sure to keep things all in the family. His wife is the chief financial officer of the company, his 84-year-old mother continues to help in the store and two years ago, his son joined the staff full time.

With his son by his side, Guerboian has been able to realize his dream for a larger business and recently renvoated the store.

Construction began five months ago while Guerboian continued his business out of a few small cases in the art gallery next door. He marked the completion of the new store on June 19 with a re-opening celebration.

"It was my vision, my dream to one day have a large store where I could serve my clients better — provide more services, more merchandise,' he said.

He and his son, Avedis, have also launched their own jewelry lines called the Edward Avedis Bridal and Fashion collections, which showcase custom designs with an art deco touch.

"I increased my selection a lot in the last year and a half because I could see there is more love in the air lately," Guerboian said of the recent expansion. "Couples are getting engaged."

Though he's not a resident of Santa Monica, Guerboian said he spends more time in the city than he does at his home because of the many community groups he has joined over the years.

"I live in Santa Monica," he said. "I just don't sleep in Santa Monica."

In his 41 years as a member of the community, Guerboian has served as chairman of the board for the Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce, president of the Kiwanis and board member for the Santa Monica Boys & Girls Club and Santa Monica College.

"The community has supported me these last 40 years, and I want to give back to the community," he said of his involvement.

Calling himself Coach Eddie — from his days as a basketball coach for the Boys & Girls Club — he said that nothing makes him happier today than having couples return to his store.

"I love people and that's why I'm in this business," he said. "I want my customers to come back. I enjoy seeing the couples come in with their kids."

But his favorite engagement story after all these years is his own.

"I've been married for 33 years so I'm one of the luckiest guys in this room," he said. "I gave her a small diamond back then. She's got a bigger one now but she still keeps it."

Officials hope to dent gang numbers

Services Eligibility Test. A kid with at least five factors is deemed "at risk" and offered programs such as counseling, anger management, and tutoring.

Rather than reject a test that could stigmatize their kids, many struggling parents embrace it as a means to get their children much-needed help.

Frustrated mother Lorena Monzon was almost happy when her chronic-F daughter, Andrea, "failed" the test.

"I want something that's going to help her. Her grades are so low and her attitude is so bad," said Monzon, 29. "I'm afraid she'll get into drugs. She needs counseling."

Andrea, 12, said she likes the self-esteem enhancement programs she enrolled in. "It's pretty fun. It keeps me out of trouble," she said.

Gangs are always a risk in Boyle Heights, Monzon said. "I don't even want her to go out," she said. "There are so many gangsters around here."

On the eastern fringe of downtown LA, Boyle Heights is famed for its bright murals of Latino symbols like the Virgin of Guadalupe and pre-Columbian deity Quetzalcoatl, but it's also notorious as housing L.A.'s densest concentration of gangs.

After a gang prevention program at the Hollenbeck Police Activities League, LAPD's Norat takes the kids home. One lives a couple doors from a White Fence gang house. Two blocks later, in Evergreen turf, he drops off two brothers whose gangbanger dad was recently killed. Another boy gets out a street away from the house where a "shotcaller," or gang boss, lives.

The test found several of those kids at risk of joining a gang, but not others. Some critics say that's one problem with the test. In such a high-poverty, gang-saturated milieu, it excludes a lot of less-troubled kids who still need help. Fewer than a third of interviewed kids were identified as potential gang members.

"Any kid, if you're living in this environment surrounded by gangs, is going to be at risk," said Lorraine Garcia, Hollenbeck PAL program director.

Others suggest that kids ages 10 to 15 will tend to lie on a test that asks about drug use, parental abuse and criminal acts. Although kids are told answers are confidential, it's a lot to expect honest responses, said Jorja Leap, a gang expert at University of California, Los Angeles.

"These are kids who are afraid of arrest, afraid of being taken away from their parents," she said. "They've been schooled in not being truthful. It can take years to get their confidence."

Leap and others point to the low percentage of kids deemed at risk as a sign they're not being honest. Numbers should be higher because they were already singled out as troubled by teachers and counselors, they say.

USC's Karen Hennigan, director of the Center for Research into Crime who oversees the questionnaire scoring, said the test is a reasonable, data-supported approach and she believes kids are reasonably truthful.

Nevertheless, USC has advised case workers to build a rapport with youths by meeting with them before the interview. Agencies report that seems to be working. Hollenbeck PAL has seen the number of eligible kids triple from 15 percent to 45 percent since starting the new strategy in May.

No one knows if the test works. The city has contracted for a study in three years to see if kids the test failed to identify as gang-joiners went on to become homeboys.

"In some ways it's an experiment," Carr admitted. "But the gang problem has been endemic in L.A. for 25, 30 years. We have to innovate our way out of it."

cerned with the way the House paid for the extension, shifting $2 billion from a renewable energy loan program.

DeMint questioned the government's role in providing incentives for auto sales.

"My children and grandchildren are going to have to pay for these cars, and we're helping auto dealers while there are thousands of other small businesses that aren't getting the help," he said.

LaHood said dealers will be reimbursed for deals in the pipeline and that the government will make a "good-faith effort" for transactions beginning Monday.

Dealers have complained of computer problems and difficulties processing their transactions. LaHood said the program's Web site — http://www.cars.gov/ — received 2 million hits and the department faced "some bureaucratic problems" in getting the dealer paperwork processed.

But LaHood said the department was working to fix the computer glitches facing dealers, an unexpected consequence to a program that took off despite sluggish car sales this year. "We knew it was going to be very popular. We didn't know it was going to be as wildly popular as it was," LaHood said.

DeMint appeared on "Fox News Sunday," while Greenspan was on ABC's "This Week."

‘Funny People’ wins weekend with $23.4M

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES Adam Sandler’s serious side has caught on with audiences.

Universal Pictures’ “Funny People,” with Sandler trading adolescent humor for an adult story about a terminally ill comedy star, debuted as the top weekend movie with $23.4 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

It was a modest weekend for Hollywood, with the shadow of last summer’s juggernaut “The Dark Knight” hanging over the current blockbuster season. Overall summer revenues, which had been running ahead of last year’s since early May, dipped below those of 2008, when “The Dark Knight” was packing theaters for weeks on end.

“It’s staggering how strong ‘The Dark Knight’ was last year. At this point last year, ‘The Dark Knight’ had added nearly $400 million to the summer box office. How can you compete with that?” said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com.

Revenues this weekend came in at $122 million, down 20 percent from a year ago, when “The Dark Knight” led with $42.7 million, followed by “The Mummy: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor” with $40.5 million.

“The Dark Knight” went on to a $533 million domestic haul, the biggest hit since “Titanic.”

Since the summer season opened the first week of May, Hollywood’s domestic receipts total $3.34 billion, off 0.8 percent through the same weekend last summer, according to figures compiled by Hollywood.com.

Factoring in this year’s higher ticket prices, movie attendance this season is down 4.4 percent compared with summer 2008.

Next weekend’s new action tale, Paramount’s “G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra,” has great fan buzz and could help set Hollywood back on track to break last summer’s domestic revenue record of $4.2 billion, Dergarabedian said.

For the year, movies have rung up $6.43 billion, on pace to break the revenue record of $9.68 billion set in 2007.

Coming in second for the weekend was the Warner Bros. fantasy adventure “Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince” with $17.7 million, raising its domestic total to $255.5 million.

Disney’s family action tale “G-Force,” the previous weekend’s top movie, slipped to third with $17.1 million, lifting its total to $66.5 million.

The weekend’s other new wide release, 20th Century Fox’s family flick “Aliens in the Attic,” opened at No. 5 with $7.8 million.

“Funny People” debuted well below most of Sandler’s comedies, which typically start with $30 million to $40 million opening weekends. Universal is counting on good word of mouth to keep it alive for a long run at the box office.

The movie pairs Sandler as the dying comic with Seth Rogen as his new assistant and joke writer. It also reunites Rogen with his “Knocked Up” director Judd Apatow, a longtime friend and former roommate of Sandler.

Nikki Rocco, head of distribution for Universal, compared the shift in tone for Sandler to Tom Cruise’s turn as a hit man in “Collateral,” a film that opened in the same range then held on to become a $100 million hit.

“This is Adam and even Judd to an extent stretching out in their careers to something that’s a bit out of the norm,” Rocco said. “A big movie star in a different kind of role.”

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Final figures will be released Monday.

1. “Funny People,” $23.4 million.
2. “Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince,” $17.7 million.
3. “G-Force,” $17.1 million.
4. “The Ugly Truth,” $13 million.
5. “Aliens in the Attic,” $7.8 million.
6. “Orphan,” $7.3 million.
7. “Ice Age: Dawn of the Dinosaurs,” $5.3 million.
8. “The Hangover,” $5.1 million.
9. “The Proposal,” $4.8 million.
10. “Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen,” $4.6 million.a

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Apparently believing that religious competition in the Middle East is not exciting enough already, the television station Kanal T in Istanbul, Turkey, is preparing a reality game show for September release in which 10 certified atheists try to resist conversion by a priest, a rabbi, a Muslim imam and a Buddhist monk. The exact rules have not been disclosed, but the "winning" convert will receive an expense-paid trip to the holy land of the most persuasive religion (the Vatican, Jerusalem, Mecca or Tibet). According to a July Reuters report, Turkey's Islamic Religious Affairs Directorate, not surprisingly, had vowed never to co-operate.

■ By early July, Jonathan Baltesz and his wife and kids were desperate to find their 10-year-old black Labrador mix, Simon, who had run away. They had one more plan, however. The family members urinated into containers and sprinkled the contents at various locales around their town (Bristol, England), laid out so that Simon could follow a trail home. (Results were unavailable at press time.)

1914 Germany declared war on France at the onset of World War I.

1923 Calvin Coolidge was sworn in as the 30th president of the United States, following the death of Warren G. Harding.

1943 Gen. George S. Patton slapped a private at an army hospital in Sicily, accusing him of cowardice. (Patton was later ordered by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to apologize for this and a second, similar episode.)
