$385M school bond set for November ballot

Money raised would be used to repair aging facilities across district

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

MALIBU The Board of Education voted 6-1 Wednesday to place a $385 million bond measure on the Nov. 6 ballot amid concerns that the move could hurt efforts to raise money to pay teachers in the future.

The bond would be used to cover a portion of what officials estimate to be $932 million worth of need across the district, specifically upgrading classrooms and installing safety devices like fire alarms and sprinklers.

If approved, it would cost property owners $185 per year on average. Renters would

Nurses union gives Gov. Brown's tax initiative $1 million

JULIET WILLIAMS
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. The politically influential California Nurses Association on Thursday announced its support for Gov. Jerry Brown's November tax initiative and handed over a $1 million contribution to his campaign.

Brown's initiative would temporarily raise the state sales tax by a half cent for five years and increase income taxes for people who make more than $250,000 a year for seven years to help balance the state budget.

The Democratic governor told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that the nurses' support is critical because the union can mobilize thousands of nurses for the campaign.

"The activism of the nurses will be very crucial to a victory in November," he said.

The union was a strong supporter of Brown in his 2010 gubernatorial race, staging animated rallies in which people dressed as royalty mocked his wealthy Republican opponent, Meg Whitman.

Recent revelations that the state Department of Parks and Recreation had underreported the amount of money in two of its special funds by nearly $54 million should not affect the fate of the tax initiative, Brown said. He had the same opinion of the news that the state Legislature had granted generous pay raises to more than 1,000 staffers.

He said the initiative stands on its own merits.

Missing teen found sleeping in parking structure

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor in Chief

DOWNTOWN A teenager from Tennessee who had been missing for more than a month was found safe and unharmed Wednesday sleeping inside a car parked in a Downtown parking structure, police said.

Hunter Barnes, 17, was last seen on the morning of June 13 at a federal credit union in Maryville, Tenn. withdrawing $1,800. His family organized a walk and T-shirts were sold to raise money for a search, according to Knoxnews.com.

No word yet as to why Barnes drove out to California in a white Mazda Protégé.

New additions

The Santa Monica-Malibu Board of Education approved the appointment of Jerry Block as the new principal of Malibu High School and Sean Allstot as the new assistant principal of Lincoln Middle School at its meeting Wednesday.

Block previously served as the assistant principal of curriculum and instruction at Oak Park High School for the past seven years. As assistant principal, Block set rules for teachers in implementing core standards and integrating technology into the classroom. He also developed a modern language program and secured grant funding that allowed for Mandarin Chinese instruction for grades 5-12, including the advanced placement level.

During his tenure, Oak Park High School's Academic Performance Index surpassed the 900 mark, the Regional Occupational Program expanded and the school received a six-year accreditation from the Western Association of Schools & Colleges. He is known for interacting with students in a firm and considerate manner as well as for developing strong relationships with staff and parents, school officials said.

Allstot has been a physical education teacher at Lincoln Middle School for the past six years. In addition to serving as the chairperson of the Faculty Advisory Committee, eighth grade coordinator and yearbook advisor, Allstot attended IEP and 504 Planning meetings and organized the AVID program. Allstot consistently aims to meet students' academic, physical and emotional needs as well as promoting regular community service among his students, school officials said.

Obama and Romney trade barbs over economic plans

JIM KUHNHENN & STEVE PEOPLES
Associated Press

GOLDEN, Colo. Mitt Romney promised Thursday that his economic program will create 12 million new jobs in the next four years, and likened President Barack Obama to a "dog trying to chase its tail" when it comes to strengthening the sluggish recovery.

Firing back instantly, Obama said his rival favors "trickle-down fairy dust" that has failed to fix the economy in the past, and unleashed a new television ad with a scathing summation of Romney's tax plans: "He pays less. You pay more."

The two men campaigned in battleground states hundreds of miles apart, the incumbent in Florida, his challenger in Colorado, both on a mission to convert undecided voters to their side in a race dominated by the economy and high joblessness.

Nor was there any summer lull in the television ad wars. Americans For Prosperity, an independent group that backs Romney, intends to launch a $25 million ad campaign beginning next week, according to officials familiar with the arrangements. The organization was founded by David and Charles Koch, billionaire brothers, and has spent about $15 million in swing states this year on ads attacking Obama.

For Romney, the day meant a return to domestic campaigning after a weeklong overseas trip. Aides say he intends to disclose a vice presidential pick before the Republican National Convention opens on Aug. 27 in Tampa, Fla., but the former Massachusetts governor told reporters: "I've got nothing to give you" by way of information on his decision.

Instead, he unveiled what aides called Romney's plan for more jobs and more take-home pay, backed by an eight-page paper arguing that the economic stimulus and other policies backed by Obama "exacerbated the economy's structural problems and weakened the recovery ... At the present rate of job creation, the nation will never return to full employment," it said, on the eve of the release of the government's official report on July joblessness.

Following the release of Friday's jobs report, Obama planned to use the backdrop of the White House and surround himself with families who would benefit from the election year middle-class tax cut he's pushing Congress to adopt. "As dysfunctional as Washington can be, this fight is far from hopeless," White House senior adviser David Plouffe said in an email.

In remarks in Golden, Colo., Romney said his economic policies would lead to creation of 12 million jobs in the four years of his term, if he is elected, and help make North America energy independent, a pledge that aides said included Canada and Mexico as well as the United States.

Romney pledged expanded international trade, particularly with Latin America, and vowed to confront China over its own policies. "I'm finally going to sit down with the Chinese and they're going to understand that if they cheat there are going to be consequences, because we're not going to let them walk all over us," the former Massachusetts governor said.

He said he would help small business owners, improve the education system and cut spending to reduce the deficit, but he offered relatively few specifics.

Romney previously has said he wants

More to the story

Editor:

Sad to see the headline in [Wednesday's] paper: "Jewish group says owner shut down party out of anti-Semitism." What the paper should have written was "Militant Israeli group sues claiming anti-Semitism" ("Shangri-La accused of civil rights violation, Aug. 1).

What does the Friends of Israeli Defense Force represent? The Israeli Defense Force, known as the IDF, is a vicious and self-righteous militant force in Israel that has been responsible for so much death and destruction, I don't even know where to begin.

The first thing that comes to my mind is how the IDF murdered Rachel Corrie, the 23-year-old U.S.-born Jewish peace activist who was killed on March 16, 2003 when she was crushed by an IDF bulldozer on the Gaza Strip that was bulldozing yet another Palestinian home, part of the routine ethnic cleansing carried out by Israel. Sure, such horrors are sponsored and then overlooked by the U.S. government. But that should not keep the IDF and the so-called Friends of the IDF immune from scrutiny.

In 2008-09, the IDF was responsible for carrying out that horrific attack known as Operation Cast Lead which killed approximately 1,400 Palestinians, most of whom were unarmed and innocent.

The IDF also carried out that vicious attack on the boat that was seeking to bring humanitarian supplies into the Gaza Strip, killing and wounding several unarmed passengers.

The IDF is arrogant and callous as it carries out the bulldozing of Palestinian homes and routinely carries out assassinations of Palestinian people, many of whom were innocent, except for resisting an encroaching apartheid state that has pushed them and their ancestors from their homes, land, farms in what used to be known as Palestine but is now called Israel. None of these people have been compensated for their losses as they are forced to live in settlement camps. Now the majority of Palestinians live in a virtual prison and the IDF is responsible for keeping those Palestinians hostage as the IDF's checkpoints keep Palestinians from traveling freely within that virtual prison system.

Next, there is a long list of Jews who are against the policies of the Israeli government and what the IDF represents. Would that make those Jews anti-Semites? No it would not. There are many Jews who value human rights, dignity and peace who do not support the IDF and have led all-out boycotts on Israeli goods. Just because someone is against the Israeli government, the IDF and their collective policies does not make someone anti-Jewish or anti-Semitic. It makes them pro peace and pro people.

As a businesswoman who happens to be Muslim, the owner of the Shangri-La probably knows the real history of the Israeli Defense Force all too well. In my humble opinion, it should be within her rights to not allow a militant group as the Friends of the Israeli Defense Force to set up and celebrate their arrogance in her hotel. Doing so would practically be an endorsement of the IDF and their disgusting policies. The headline, reinforcing the accusation of anti-Semitism is not only wrong, it is ignorant, for Arabs are Semites, too.

There is a lot more to this story than meets the eye. I am sure as it unfolds, the owner of the Shangri-La will prevail on legitimate grounds.

Smoke and mirrors

EVEN THOUGH IT'S HARD TO RECALL WHAT I did during the evenings before the Olympics (or what I'll do when they're over) I do remember a warm Tuesday night almost a month ago, when I eagerly watched a City Council meeting on TV.

Concerned about the dangers of drifting second-hand smoke in apartments and condos, the council was debating a smoking ban ordinance (which was only for new tenants, meaning existing smokers would be unaffected). Given that I dread a cigar smoker moving next door to me, I sat in front of my TV with bated breath (whatever bated is).

With all due respect to the council, I soon came to the conclusion their meetings are not exactly "must see" TV. Given the fixed cameras, I'd compare it to watching C-SPAN, meaning while viewing, one should not operate heavy equipment as it may cause drowsiness.

Speaking of drowsiness, as I watched the council I couldn't help but notice the huge pot of coffee behind them. Frankly, and I mean this as a compliment, I don't know how the council stays awake. You couldn't pay me enough to listen to people like me whine about what's wrong with Santa Monica, yada, yada, yada. (Whatever yada is.)

I also couldn't help but notice the big bags of Doritos on the same table. (Hope I'm not outing any of the council's guilty pleasures.) Hey, I've got an idea. Maybe City Hall could charge Frito Lay a product placement fee? The company can certainly afford it.

Doritos have been on the market since 1966 and are a $4 billion a year product. It's hard to imagine how, but in 1994 Doritos spent $50 million just to redesign the chip. (Which would suggest they could spring for an extra camera or two for our City Council broadcast.)

Back to smoking, in the name of full disclosure, when I'm exposed to cigarette smoke I have an allergic reaction wherein I practically lose my voice. (Which I realize some wouldn't think is such a bad idea.)

So, as I watched with delight, the council voted 4-2 for a smoking ban. I thought to myself, "This is too good to be true." Turns out, it was.

You see at the second reading of the ordinance the council completely reversed itself only a fortnight later (Old English for "14 nights," which shows you I haven't been just wasting my time watching the London Olympics). Bobby Shriver, author of the ordinance, says such a reversal has only happened once in his seven years on the council.

Shriver, Mayor Richard Bloom, Bob Holbrook and Terry O'Day had voted for the smoking ban (with Gleam Davis absent), but two weeks later, voting against were Kevin McKeown, O'Connor, Davis and Bloom. (Leaving me counting the days until a cigar smoker moves in next door and I wind up walking around my apartment in a hazmat suit.)

And just like that the smoking ordinance was toast. (Although I happen to like toast.) It had occurred so fast it was like smoke and mirrors. Actually, it was more like Zig-Zags and bongs as among the "constituencies" pressuring the council had been medical marijuana users. (Even though the city attorney specifically said they'd be eligible for an exemption.)

I realize that there are many who genuinely need medical marijuana. But I also know many who are just stoners, albeit with a note from their doctor. In fact, doctors' notes for marijuana or pets is seemingly such a big business these days that I wouldn't be surprised if "note writing" became a required course in med school.

For example, a young woman in my building got a note from her doctor saying that she needed to have two dogs. Bi-polar, perhaps? I can only imagine how many dogs Sybil might have needed.

So, despite warnings from the American Cancer Society and the Environmental Protection Agency that second-hand smoke causes lung cancer (is that all?), and despite the fact that only 10.7 percent of Santa Monicans smoke, our fair city doesn't have a smoking ordinance to protect residents' living space. (Though numerous communities in the state do!) So much for being "progressive" and "out front" in protecting public health.

But Mayor Bloom, who's running for the 50th Assembly District in November, insists that the smoking ban will be re-visited. "I am very resolute that we do pass something that moves this issue forward."

I'm hoping that whatever the good mayor has in mind, it comes soon. (Besides, it's really difficult to find a comfy hazmat suit.)

Now I must end this weekly missive as I've got to return to the Olympics. It seems they're replaying footage of the badminton scandal. (There's two words you never thought you'd ever see in the same sentence, "badminton" and "scandal.") You don't think I'm watching too much Olympics, do you?

If he can ever pry himself away from Olympics coverage, JACK can be reached at jnsmdp@aol.com.

Financial probe delayed at damaged nuke plant

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES The head of the California Public Utilities Commission recommended Thursday that the agency delay for several months an investigation into soaring costs tied to the damaged San Onofre nuclear power plant.

At issue is who is going to pay a bill that has reached $165 million so far for repairs, inspections and replacement electricity for a plant with crippled steam generators. San Onofre hasn't produced power since Jan. 31 and it's not clear when, or if, the twin reactors will return to service.

Meeting in San Francisco, the commission postponed for the second time voting on a proposed order requiring owners Southern California Edison and San Diego Gas & Electric to disclose the potential economic hit for ratepayers from the long-running shutdown.

According to a statement, commission President Michael R. Peevey recommended the panel wait until November to initiate an investigation, after Edison is required to notify the agency if a plant has been out of service for nine months.

He said the agency is working on options for power supplies for 2013, in the event the plant remains offline into next summer.

As costs and questions about the plant's future mount, consumer and environmental advocates have been pressuring the agency to move quickly. The commission determines how much utilities can charge homeowners and businesses for electricity.

The state Division of Ratepayer Advocates sent a letter to the agency Wednesday saying only the commission "can investigate whether SCE acted reasonably, how the cost responsibility should be resolved and whether future investments to repair or replace the steam generators are justified."

The letter was co-signed by executives from The Utility Reform Network, the Alliance for Nuclear Responsibility, Friends of the Earth and the Center for Energy Efficiency and Renewable Technologies.

"We think customers shouldn't be paying a dime for units that don't work because of mistakes by the utility," said Matthew Freedman, staff attorney for The Utility Reform Network. The delays are "a discouraging sign about their willingness to hold Edison accountable."

Freedman said the investigation being proposed by Peevey would be narrower in scope than the draft order, which could be revived at the commission's Aug. 23 meeting.

The trouble began to unfold in January, when the Unit 3 reactor was shut down as a precaution after a generator tube break. Traces of radiation escaped at the time, but officials said there was no danger to workers or neighbors. Unit 2 had been taken offline earlier that month for maintenance, but investigators later found unexpected wear on scores of tubes that carry radioactive water inside both units.

Gradual wear is common in such tubing, but the rate of erosion at San Onofre startled officials since the equipment is relatively new. The four generators — two in each plant — were replaced in a $670 million overhaul and began operating in April 2010 in Unit 2 and February 2011 in Unit 3.

Overall, investigators found wear from friction and vibration in 15,000 places, in varying degrees, in 3,401 tubes inside the four generators.

A three-month federal probe blamed a botched computer analysis for generator design flaws that ultimately resulted in heavy wear to the alloy tubing. Edison has been trying to determine how to correct the problem, while environmental activists have depicted the plant as a disaster in the making.

The generators, which resemble massive steel fire hydrants, are one of the central pieces of equipment in a nuclear plant. At San Onofre, each one stands 65 feet high, weighs 1.3 million pounds, with 9,727 U-shaped tubes inside, each three-quarters of an inch in diameter.

If a tube breaks there is the potential that radioactivity could escape into the atmosphere, and serious leaks also can drain cooling water from a reactor.

The steam generators were manufactured by Japan-based Mitsubishi Heavy Industries.

The plant is owned by SCE, San Diego Gas & Electric and the city of Riverside. The Unit 1 reactor operated from 1968 to 1992, when it was shut down and dismantled.

SCE is part of Edison International, and San Diego Gas & Electric is part of Sempra Energy.

The Q Line

Smoke signals

The City Council last week decided against a ban on smoking in multi-unit residences. There were concerns that condo owners and medical marijuana smokers were not considered when the proposed ban was conceived.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Should the council reconsider the ban or did it go too far to begin with?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call 310-573-8354.

CRIME WATCH
BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Parking garage isn't a campground

Crime Watch is a weekly series culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

MONDAY, JULY 23, AT 8:18 P.M.,
Santa Monica police officers responded to the 1900 block of Arizona Avenue regarding someone trespassing in the parking garage of an apartment building. When officers arrived, they made contact with a man who had set up a camp inside the garage. The man allegedly admitted that he was on probation and in possession of a pipe used to smoke methamphetamines. Officers found the pipe and after inspecting it said they found some meth. The suspect was placed under arrest and transported to the Santa Monica Jail where he was booked for possession of a controlled substance and drug paraphernalia, and a probation violation. He was identified as David Allen Shavalier, 29, of Santa Monica. His bail was set at $10,000.

TUESDAY, JULY 24, AT 8:02 P.M.,
Officers responded to the 200 block of Broadway regarding an assault that occurred. When officers arrived, they made contact with a female employee at the Santa Monica Place mall who said she was on her break when she saw a man standing 15 feet behind her. As she continued to talk on her phone she said the man took a swing at her head. She ducked. The man then allegedly spit on her. The man, who was later determined to be homeless, remained at the scene when witnesses intervened and called police. The employee identified the suspect and he was placed under arrest for assault and a probation violation. He was identified as Robert Blake, 28, a transient. His bail was set at $20,000.

TUESDAY, JULY 24, AT 8:23 A.M.,
Officers responded to an apartment complex on the 2400 block of Third Street regarding a report of a possible assault. When officers arrived, they made contact with a man who was alleged to have been involved in the assault. He appeared to be under the influence of a controlled substance, police said. During the investigation, the man told officers that he and his ex-girlfriend had been involved in an argument over money and she broke his television before leaving in a taxi. The man was placed under arrest as officers believed he was under the influence of some type of drug. While at the jail, the man allegedly admitted to using both cocaine and heroin that night. He was booked for being under the influence and his bail was set at $2,500. He was identified as Erik Aaron Jensen, 36, of Santa Monica.

THURSDAY, JULY 26, AT 7:45 P.M.,
Police responded to the area of 19th Street and Colorado Avenue regarding a fight in progress. When officers arrived, they detained two men who were brawling. During the investigation, officers determined that one of the two men was actually the victim of a robbery. He told officers that he was riding his bike east on Broadway when he stopped for a traffic light at 20th Street. He saw a dark-colored Honda drive by and stop at the curb near him. At least four men got out and allegedly threatened the cyclist. The suspects surrounded him and one pushed him backwards and into the street. All suspects were challenging him to fight. He pulled out his cell phone and called police. The suspects fled in different directions, one of them on his bicycle. One of the suspects stayed behind and continued to challenge the victim, police said. Officers placed that suspect under arrest for robbery and conspiracy to commit a crime. He was identified as Robert Mendelson, 19, of Santa Monica. His bail was set at $50,000. Officers continue to investigate.

FRIDAY, JULY 27, AT 10:27 P.M.,
Officers were on patrol on the 2100 block of Delaware Avenue when they saw a man cross the street without waiting for the light. Officers stopped him to issue him a ticket. While talking with the man, officers learned he had no ID. Officers searched him and allegedly found a baggie containing meth. He was placed under arrest for possession of a controlled substance. He was identified as Aaron Jernigan, 44, a transient. His bail was set at $10,000.

SATURDAY, JULY 28, AT 8:20 P.M.,
Officers were on patrol near Lincoln and Ocean Park boulevards when they noticed a man running out of the Albertson's parking lot carrying two nylon bags in his hands Officers then saw an Albertson's employee chasing the suspect. Officers saw the suspect drop the bags as he ran into a nearby alley. Officers detained the suspect in the alley. The store employee said the suspect stole cosmetics and personal hygiene products worth roughly $500. Officers placed the suspect under arrest for shoplifting. They searched him and said they found prescription drugs that did not belong to the suspect, as well as a syringe. The suspect was eventually booked for burglary and possession of a controlled substance and drug paraphernalia. He was identified as Michael Woolen, 20, of Los Angeles. His bail was set at $20,000.

SATURDAY, JULY 28, AT 2 P.M.,
Officers responded to the 300 block of Colorado Avenue – Bloomingdale's – regarding a report of a shoplifter in custody. When officers arrived, they made contact with a security guard who said that he saw the suspect enter the store and proceed directly to the Burberry collection and select a pair of jeans. The suspect then went to the fitting room with the jeans and then quickly exited without them. An employee checked the dressing room and did not see the jeans. The suspect left the store without paying for anything. Security confronted the suspect, who allegedly tried to flee. He was detained by security, who said he was wearing the Burberry jeans and two Burberry shirts underneath his clothes. He allegedly also had a pair of pliers. The total loss was estimated at $716. The suspect was placed under arrest for burglary and a probation violation. He was identified as Gregory Wells, 30. His bail was set at $50,000.

BOND

see a charge of roughly $16 per year. Amounts would vary because bond assessments are based on the value of property.

Twenty percent of the money would be guaranteed to go to Malibu schools, a point which still rankles some who note that Malibu residents contribute over 30 percent of the cash for any bond measure because of its higher land values.

The money could only be used to improve the facilities within the school district, and not for "operational costs" like teachers' salaries or supplies, but the needs on local campuses were too great not to take action, said Superintendent Sandra Lyon.

Polling suggested that the district would not be able to pass a parcel tax, a different funding mechanism that could have paid for salaries and other things prohibited under a bond.

Although parcel tax dollars are more flexible, they also require a two-thirds majority, while a bond needs only 55 percent to pass.

"It's not an easy decision, and there's always tug and pull between operating costs and facility needs, and both are important and ongoing," Lyon said.

Teachers and students alike need a clean, safe environment in which to work and learn, and technology in the otherwise-celebrated school district is out of date, Lyon said.

"Parents in our community may not know immediately about the high quality of teachers, programs or staff, and they may make judgments as they drive by or make cursory classroom visits," Lyon said.

Although no one spoke against the need for money to improve SMMUSD facilities, many have questioned the timing of the measure.

It will share a ballot with two other school funding measures — Propositions 30 and 38 — which aim to raise money for schools by increasing taxes on the wealthy and, in the case of Proposition 30, by increasing the sales tax by .25 percent.

Unlike the bond, the money from the propositions can pay for anything, including covering teacher salaries and paying for materials.

If both statewide measures fail in November, school districts across the state will be hit with crippling budget cuts.

SMMUSD Chief Financial Officer Jan Maez has estimated that the district's $5 million operating deficit will double if both fail, leaving the district to make brutal cuts to bring its fiscal house in order.

That doom and gloom scenario is one reason that local parent organizations and others have approached the idea of a bond with trepidation.

They fear that if the two funding measures fail, Santa Monica and Malibu will have to band together and pass a parcel tax to begin patching the holes in operational funding, and that a recently-passed bond measure would make that all the more difficult.

Those in support of the bond believe that the momentum of passing a bond, added to the "sky is falling" reality of losing the other two measures, will propel a parcel tax forward.

"This is not the question of moving forward on a bond or work on a parcel tax," said former school board member Barry Snell. "It's not either-or — it's both."

When the item first went before the board on July 18, several board members seemed hesitant to even bring it back by Aug. 1.

Seated behind the dais in Malibu City Hall, that sentiment had clearly changed.

It was Lyon's commitment to the idea that swayed Boardmember Jose Escarce, who had previously been hesitant to risk a spring parcel tax in any way.

Boardmember Nimish Patel also changed his position in the intervening two weeks.

"People call this political science. It's not. It's political art," Patel said. "Like with art, you have to evaluate and you have to adjust."

Boardmember Ralph Mechur, the only board member to oppose the measure, disagreed.

"I think we can do this in 2014 and we would be better prepared," Mechur said, indicating that he wanted more planning done to show where the money would go.

The board managed to put the measure on the November ballot, but now the real work begins.

The school community will have to raise support amongst parents and those without children to get behind another bond on top of Measure BB, which was passed in 2006; a 2008 parcel tax and a half-cent sales tax from 2010.

District officials don't yet know if they'll have support from the Parent Teacher Association Council, a powerful advocacy group in the city.

PTA Council Co-President Lori Whitesell said that the group has to get the full language of the ballot measure and give it to a study committee. It will then go before the executive board, and then the full body.

The group hopes to have a position on the measure by early to mid-September. If they come out in favor, they'll have less than two months to mount a campaign.

"It'll be tight, very tight," Whitesell said.

The district will also have to work closely with residents of Malibu, who have felt cut off from the decision-making process because of a lack of representation on the Board of Education as well as the Economic Feasibility Committee, the group that was instrumental in drafting the bond language.

"It's much easier for Malibu to oppose a bond measure than to support it," Craig Foster, member of Advocates for Malibu Public Schools, told the board. "We asked you to give us reasons to support it. I can't say that they've been unambiguously given, but we want to give support to the board in what it feels is best for the district."

In return for their support, Malibu residents want assurances that bond money will be spent on projects that they support.

On Wednesday, Foster asked the board to create a joint powers authority or other body that would give Malibu residents direct representation on how the funds were spent.

"It needs to be crystal clear," he said.

TEEN

Santa Monica Police Sgt. Richard Lewis said police responded to Parking Structure 3, located at 1320 Fourth St., after receiving a report from a Downtown service officer who saw the boy sleeping in the backseat of the Mazda, a violation of the Municipal Code.

Officers made contact with the teen, who provided his identification. Officers ran his name through their computer and discovered that he had been reported missing. He also matched the flyer officers were given before the start of their shift.

Barnes was transported to the Public Safety Facility where his family was notified. He was transported to a local juvenile facility until arrangements could be made to send him home. The vehicle was impounded, Lewis said.

"We would like to thank everyone for their assistance and support in helping to locate Hunter," Blount County Sheriff James Berrong said in a news release.

Barnes' sister, Cheyenne Dale Barnes, on Wednesday posted a Facebook message:

"Thank you everyone for all that you have done for my family. Thank you for the prayers because all of our prayers came true. God is amazing! Our family can't express how much it means to us to have all this support and all the prayers."

"Either we get more money for the schools or we have to cut back the schools. It's an either/or proposition," Brown said Thursday. "It's not in relation to any other proposition or any politician or any other topic of state government. ...

"It's the only time I've really seen where you vote yes and $6 billion to $9 billion goes to schools and balances our budget, or three weeks of school disappear and the universities and the state colleges lose billions."

The $91.3 billion budget Brown signed into law in June includes $6 billion in automatic cuts that would take effect if voters reject his initiative. The cuts would include a shortened school year and less money for local law enforcement. Steep fee increases at the University of California and California State University systems also would be likely.

Brown's ballot initiative has raised nearly $7.5 million since last year. Before the contribution from the nurses union, the committee reported that it had about $5 million in the bank.

Opponents of the tax initiative, led by the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association, have collected just $85,000 and have about $57,000 in debt.

RoseAnn DeMoro, executive director of the nurses union, said she believes raising more tax revenue will help end some of the "phenomenal suffering" in California.

"This is kind of billionaires against the rest of us. That's what it's come down to — a real polarized nation, a polarized state," she said.

The union also plans to campaign against Proposition 32, the so-called "paycheck protection" initiative that would prohibit unions and companies from collecting dues on paychecks for political activity.

PLANS

to extend the tax cuts due to expire on Dec. 31 and grant a new 20 percent cut in tax rates, in addition, to stimulate growth. He has also said he will reverse some of Obama's proposed defense cuts, and simultaneously reduce spending on other programs in a way that deficits would gradually subside.

But he so far has refused to identify which existing tax breaks he would curtail to accomplish his goals, and generally avoided naming individual programs he wants to cut or eliminate.

In his remarks during the day, Romney said he wants federal education funds that aid the disadvantaged and disabled to be tied to the student rather than flow to school districts, as is now the case. But he did not specify how much he would cut from them to achieve his goal of reducing federal deficits.

He also criticized Obama for signing legislation that cut $500 billion from Medicare over a decade. Aides said he would restore the funding, which was reduced as part of the president's health care bill. But they had no additional details.

Romney said Democrats have a different view. "They think we should just raise taxes. ...The problem is when you raise taxes you lower growth," he said.

Obama's approach is "like a dog trying to chase its tail, you just don't ever get there," he added. "So the right answer is not to raise taxes. The right answer is to cut taxes and cut spending."

Obama and other Democrats support extending existing tax cuts except for individuals making more than $200,000 a year and couples with incomes over $250,000 — and their disagreement with Romney and the Republicans on this point has emerged as arguably the most fundamental one of the campaign.

It's an argument that Obama seems eager to have — using campaign appearances and paid television advertising to do so.

For the second day in a row, Obama cited a study by the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center that says Romney and other millionaires would receive a tax cut of approximately $250,000 a year if the former Massachusetts governor gets his way.

"This analysis also found that if Gov. Romney wants to keep his word" about reducing deficits, "the average middle-class family with children would be stuck with a tax increase of more than $2,000," he added.

The president's new campaign ad was delivering the same highly personalized message. It says Romney has paid a lower proportion of his income in taxes than many people of lesser means and adds:

"He pays less, you pay more," the ad says.

Romney's personal wealth has been estimated as high as $250 million, but he has not so far made public a detailed disclosure of his holdings. His aides have sought to dismiss the report as a partisan attack by former aides to the president.

But Obama, picking up on what his own campaign staff said Wednesday, told an audience near Orlando, Fla., that the Tax Policy Center was headed by a former aide to President George W. Bush.

Romney, too, rolled out a new ad, giving a less-than-warm welcome to Obama on a day Air Force One touched down in Florida. It notes that the state still suffers from high unemployment, record home foreclosures and an increase in poverty.

"Barack Obama: What a disappointment," it says.

The president's stop in Florida reflected his campaign's efforts to build support among Latino voters, particularly Puerto Ricans. He was greeted on the tarmac of Orlando International Airport by Kenneth McClintock, the lieutenant governor of Puerto Rico.

With no concrete action in Europe, stocks hit slump

CHRISTINA REXRODE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK European leaders on Thursday gamely promised to keep tackling the continent's debt crisis. But the markets wanted much more.

Stocks sank across the U.S. and Europe, the euro fell against the dollar and investors dumped bonds issued by the governments of Spain and Italy. Investors had been expecting more immediate action from the European Central Bank and were disappointed by the plan's lack of details, especially considering the ECB president's pledge last week to do "whatever it takes" to keep the euro intact.

A week later, investors' response was more like: "whatever."

It was the second day in a row that markets were disappointed by a lack of decisive action from a major central bank. On Wednesday, stocks closed lower after the Federal Reserve made only vague promises about its plans for trying to revive the U.S. economy.

"It's more jawboning, it's more copy and paste from last week," said Kenny Polcari, managing director of the brokerage ICAP. "There was no definitive plan, and so all the hype and energy (Draghi) created last week is going to go down in flames today."

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 92.18 points to 12,878.88. The Dow had been down as much as 192 shortly after noon.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 10.32 to 1,365. The Nasdaq composite index lost 10.44 to 2,909.77.

It was the fourth day in a row of losses; U.S. stocks haven't risen since ECB President Mario Draghi's now-famous three-word promise one week ago.

Investors had been hoping for clear action from the ECB, such as a cut in interest rates or clear plans to buy more European government bonds, which could lower borrowing costs for troubled countries like Spain and Italy.

But Germany's central bank, which has footed much of the bill for bailing out other European countries, declined to go along. And so Draghi on Thursday had to tell a highly anticipated news conference that the ECB "may" intervene in the bond market. He promised the ECB would consider other emergency measures in coming weeks.

The yield, or interest rate, on Spain's benchmark 10-year bond jumped to 7.06 percent from 6.68 percent late Wednesday, making it more expensive for the country to borrow money. The yield on Italy's 10-year bond rose to 6.30 percent from 5.85 percent. Other countries have been forced to seek bailouts once their rates rose above 7 percent.

To be fair, the ECB faces a Herculean task with no easy solutions. Whatever it does is sure to offend someone. Some of the weaker countries, like Greece, have lodged their own resistance to other ECB measures, such as demands for spending cuts meant to help countries achieve sustainable budgets.

It's also unrealistic for investors to expect quick fixes to a problem that was so long in the making, said Christian Bertelsen, chief investment officer of Global Financial Private Capital in Sarasota, Fla.

In the U.S., he noted, there was a half-year lag between the Treasury Department announcing it would buy stakes directly in banks in the fall of 2008 and investors becoming comfortable by the spring of 2009 that there wouldn't be uncontrollable bank failures.

"People look at Euroland and say, 'Why don't they get something done there?'" Bertelsen said. "How quickly they forget what a miserable six months it was here."

In the U.S., thoughts of Europe were close at hand. General Motors and Kellogg reported lower quarterly profits and put some of the blame on Europe.

In other trading:

• Knight Capital Group, the trading firm whose technical glitch sent trading of dozens of stocks into chaos early Wednesday, lost 63 percent of its value, plunging $4.36 to $2.58. In two days, it has lost 75 percent of its value.

• Abercrombie & Fitch dropped 15 percent and Aeropostale dropped 33 percent after both companies warned of weak second-quarter sales. Abercrombie lost $4.96 to $29.06. Aeropostale lost $6.37 to $13.08.

• A smattering of positive signs about the economy got lost in the greater maelstrom. Retailers including Target, Limited Brands and Gap announced that July sales beat expectations. Shares of all three companies climbed, with the biggest increase at Gap. It rose 13 percent, gaining $3.75 to $33.17.

Immigrants prove big business for private prison companies

GARANCE BURKE & LAURA WIDES-MUNOZ
Associated Press

MIAMI Locking up illegal immigrants has grown profoundly lucrative for the private prisons industry, a reliable pot of revenue that helped keep some of the biggest companies in business.

And while nearly half of the 400,000 immigrants held annually are housed in private facilities, the federal government — which spends $2 billion a year on keeping those people in custody — says it isn't necessarily cheaper to outsource the work, a central argument used for privatization in the first place.

The Associated Press, seeking to tally the scope of the private facilities, add up their cost and the amounts the companies spend on lobbying and campaign donations, reviewed more than 10 years' worth of federal and state records. It found a complex, mutually beneficial and evidently legal relationship between those who make corrections and immigration policy and a few prison companies. Some of those companies were struggling to survive before toughened immigrant detention laws took effect.

A decade ago, just 10 percent of the beds in the nation's civil detention system were in private facilities with little federal oversight. Now, about half the beds are part of a sprawling, private system, largely controlled by just three companies: Corrections Corporation of America, The GEO Group, and Management and Training Corp.

And the growth is far from over, despite the sheer drop in illegal immigration in recent years.

CCA was on the verge of bankruptcy in 2000 due to lawsuits, management problems and dwindling contracts. Last year, the company reaped $162 million in net income. Federal contracts made up 43 percent of its total revenues, in part thanks to rising immigrant detention.

GEO, which cites the immigration agency as its largest client, saw its net income jump from $16.9 million to $78.6 million since 2000.

At the same time, the three businesses have spent at least $45 million combined on campaign donations and lobbyists at the state and federal level in the last decade, the AP found.

This seismic shift toward a privatized system happened quietly. While Congress' unsuccessful efforts to overhaul immigration laws drew headlines and sparked massive demonstrations, lawmakers' negotiations to boost detention dollars received far less attention.

CCA and GEO, who manage most private detention centers, insist they aren't trying to influence immigration policy to make more money, and their lobbying and campaign donations have been legal.

"As a matter of long-standing corporate policy, CCA does not lobby on issues that would determine the basis for an individual's detention or incarceration," CCA spokesman Steve Owen said in an email to the AP. The company has a website dedicated to debunking such allegations.

GEO, which was part of The Wackenhut Corp. security firm until 2003, and Management and Training declined repeated interview requests.

Advocates for immigrants are skeptical the lobbying is not meant to influence policy.

"That's a lot of money to listen quietly," said Peter Cervantes-Gautschi, who has helped lead a campaign to encourage large banks and mutual funds to divest from the prison companies.

The detention centers are located in cities and remote areas alike, from a Denver suburb to an industrial area flanking Newark's airport, often in low-slung buildings surrounded by chain-link fences and razor wire. U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement agents detain men, women and children suspected of violating civil immigration laws at these facilities. Most of those held at the 250 sites nationwide are illegal immigrants awaiting deportation, but some green card holders, asylum seekers and others are also there.

The total average nightly cost to taxpayers to detain an illegal immigrant, including health care and guards' salaries, is about $166, ICE confirmed only after the AP calculated that figure and presented it to the agency.

That's up from $80 in 2004. ICE said the $80 didn't include all of the same costs but declined to provide details.

Pedro Guzman is among those who have passed through the private detention centers. He was brought to the U.S. by his Guatemalan mother at age 8. He was working and living here legally under temporary protected status but was detained after missing an appearance for an asylum application. Officials ordered him deported.

Although he was married to a U.S. citizen, ICE considered him a flight risk and locked him up in 2009: first at a private detention facility run by CCA in Gainesville, Ga., and eventually at CCA's Stewart Detention Center, south of Atlanta. Guzman spent 19 months in Stewart until he was finally granted legal permanent residency.

"It's a millionaire's business, and they are living off profits from each one of the people who go through there every single night," said Guzman, now a cable installer in Durham, N.C. "It's our money that we earn as taxpayers every day that goes to finance this."

The federal government stepped up detentions of illegal immigrants in the 1990s, as the number of people crossing the border soared. In 1996, Congress passed a law requiring many more illegal immigrants be locked up. But it wasn't until 2005 — as the corrections companies' lobbying efforts reached their zenith — that ICE got a major boost. Between 2005 and 2007, the agency's budget jumped from $3.5 billion to $4.7 billion, adding more than $5 million for custody operations.

Dora Schriro, who in 2009 reviewed the nation's detention system at the request of Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano, said nearly every aspect had been outsourced.

"ICE was always relying on others for responsibilities that are fundamentally those of the government," said Schriro, now the New York City Correction Commissioner. "If you don't have the competency to know what is a fair price to ask and negotiate the most favorable rates for the best service, then the likelihood that you are going to overspend is greater."

Private companies argue they can save Americans money by running the centers more cheaply.

Pablo Paez, a spokesman for Boca Raton, Fla.-based GEO, said in an email his company supports public-private partnerships which "have been demonstrated to achieve significant cost savings for the taxpayers." He declined to answer specific questions.

But ICE Executive Associate Director for Enforcement and Removal Operations Gary Mead said the government has never studied whether privatizing immigrant detention saves money.

"They are not our most expensive, they are not our cheapest" facilities, he said. "At some point cost cannot be the only factor."

One fundamental difference between private detention facilities and their publicly-run counterparts is transparency. The private ones don't have to follow the same public records and access requirements.

President Barack Obama has asked for less detention money this year and encouraged the agency to look at alternatives to locking people up. He also ordered DHS to stop deporting young immigrants brought to the U.S. illegally, which could reduce the number behind bars. Congress, however, can approve more detention spending than DHS requests.

Beyond civil detention centers, private companies are also making more money locking up non-citizens who commit federal crimes.

To deter illegal border crossers, federal prosecutors are increasingly charging immigrants with felonies for repeatedly entering the country without papers. That has led thousands of people convicted of illegal reentry, as well as more serious federal offenses, to serve time in private prisons built just for them.

A decade ago, more than 3,300 criminal immigrants were sent to private prisons under two 10-year contracts the Federal Bureau of Prisons signed with CCA worth $760 million. Now, the agency is paying the private companies $5.1 billion to hold more than 23,000 criminal immigrants through 13 contracts of varying lengths.

CCA was on the verge of bankruptcy in 2000 due to lawsuits, management problems and dwindling contracts. Last year, the company reaped $162 million in net income. Federal contracts made up 43 percent of its total revenues, in part thanks to rising immigrant detention.

GEO, which cites the immigration agency as its largest client, saw its net income jump from $16.9 million to $78.6 million since 2000.

"Another factor driving growth ... for the private sector is in the area of immigration and illegal immigration specifically," Chief Financial Officer Brian Evans told investors in GEO's 2011 3rd quarter earnings call.

CCA warned in its 2011 annual earnings report that federal policy changes in "illegal immigration could affect the number of persons arrested, convicted, and sentenced, thereby potentially reducing demand for correctional facilities to house them."

Utah-based Management and Training is not publicly held, so it does not post earnings.

At just the federal level, these companies, their political action committees and their employees have spent more than $32 million on lobbying and on campaign contributions since 2000 — with the national political parties getting the largest campaign contributions.

An AP review of Federal Election Commission data found the prison companies and their employees gave to key congressional leaders who control how much money goes to run the nation's detention centers and who influence how many contracts go to the private sector.

James Thurber, head of American University's Center for Congressional & Presidential Studies, said amid the heated national debate over immigration, the companies have been savvy not to donate heavily to those sponsoring legislation, which could spark backlash, or to lobby directly for tougher laws.

"It's too controversial," he said. "But support for privatization doesn't get as political. And it can be done discretely."

There are more discrete and more powerful ways to influence policy, Thurber said.

"Follow the money," he said. "If the money is being increased significantly for illegal immigration, then that is a shift in policy ... a significant shift."

The top beneficiaries of the campaign contributions include:

• The Republican Party. Its national and congressional committees received around $450,000. Democrats received less than half that.

• Arizona Republican Sen. John McCain. He received $71,000, mostly during his failed presidential bid against Obama, well after he dropped support for a bill that would have given illegal immigrants a path to citizenship and reduced detentions.

• House Speaker John Boehner received $63,000.

• Kentucky U.S. Rep. Hal Rogers received about $59,000. Rogers chaired the first subcommittee on Homeland Security and heads the powerful House Appropriations Committee. He often criticizes ICE for not filling more detention beds.

• Former U.S. Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist. He received $58,500. The lawmaker from Tennessee, where CCA is headquartered, led the Senate at the height of the nation's immigrant detention build up from 2003 to 2007.

More than campaign contributions, though, the private prison companies spent most of their money each year on lobbying in Washington, peaking in 2005 when they spent $5 million.

In just 2011, CCA paid the Washington firm Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld $280,000 in part to "monitor immigration reform," federal reports show.

They also lobbied heavily against a bill that would force them to comply with the same open records requirements governing public facilities.

Owen, the CCA spokesman, said the company ramped up lobbying to acquaint new lawmakers with the industry.

"In recent years, federal elections have been very volatile, resulting in a lot of new faces in Washington," he said. "The result of that volatility means a lot of people at the federal level who may not be familiar with the work we do."

The prison companies' influence at the state level mirrors that in Washington, although the money is even harder to track since many states, such as Arizona and Illinois, where the companies have won lucrative detention contracts, don't require corporations to disclose what they pay lobbyists.

The AP reviewed campaign contribution data from the three companies' political action committees and their employees over the last decade, compiled by the National Institute on Money in State Politics. From 2003 to the first half of 2012, state candidates and political parties in the 50 states received more than $5.32 million.

In the 10 states where the companies' committees and employees contributed the most, the AP found they also spent at least $8 million more lobbying local officials in the last five years alone. It is impossible to know how much of this lobbying money was aimed only at immigrant-related contracts. But that money generally went to states along the border, such as Florida and Texas, which have high numbers of immigrants, as well as states such as Georgia and Louisiana, where large numbers of immigrants also are detained.

‘Richard III’ goes to prisons and senior centers

MARK KENNEDY
AP Drama Writer

BEDFORD HILLS, N.Y. It got a standing ovation. Then again, it was a captive audience.

William Shakespeare’s “Richard III,” the hair-raising tale of one man’s murderous pursuit of power, was performed this week for about 75 inmates at the Taconic Correctional Facility, leaving many wide-eyed spectators in the medium-security women’s prison.

“It was phenomenal,” said 23-year-old Lorraine Bennett, serving time for attempted robbery. Another prisoner, Jessica Lazore, 29, convicted of vehicular manslaughter, gave it a thumbs up: “I actually think I would pick up the play.”

Mission accomplished for The Public Theater, which is wrapping up a three-week tour of its “Richard III” after more than 15 stops across New York City and surrounding areas, including a recreation center on Staten Island and an army base in Brooklyn to Rikers Island prison in Queens and a facility for homeless adults with mental illness in Manhattan.

Ron Cephas Jones, who plays the physically deformed title monarch with a brace on his left leg and a fingerless glove on his left hand, leads a stripped-down production performed by a nine-member cast that plays some 20 roles.

There are no lights, no makeup, no backstage and only a few props — a mirror, a bedsheet, a few metal folding chairs, coils of rope, five wooden boxes and a few wooden sticks that double for swords.

“There’s nothing to hide behind,” said Suzanne Bertish, a former member of the Royal Shakespeare Company who plays three characters in “Richard III,” including Queen Margaret. “In one way, it’s very liberating. But it does mean you have to concentrate 110 percent.”

The mobile Shakespeare unit is a reinvention of a push in the late 1950s by legendary theatrical producer Joseph Papp to bring Shakespeare to the masses, which evolved into the New York Shakespeare Festival and ultimately became The Public Theater.

Exposing Shakespeare’s power and relevance by taking his work to new audiences — from homeless shelters to prisons — has always been a core mission, said Oskar Eustis, the Public’s artistic director.

“If our thesis is true that Shakespeare really is for everybody and that Shakespeare can be a binding force for society, these are the places we should be taking it,” said Eustis.

He got a reminder of the Bard’s genius while watching the troupe perform at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility, the state’s largest maximum-security prison for women, across the street from Taconic. The audience, he said, watched with rapt concentration. And it was, by definition, a tough crowd.

“You could tell they cared about issues of betrayal and the seeking of power over everything else. They were following that with absolute attention, absolute understanding,” he said. “It’s invigorating because you feel the truth of the proposition that Shakespeare really can speak to everybody.”

The production, directed by Amanda Dehnert, lasts about 90 minutes without intermission, which has meant sections of the play have been excised and characters dropped. It is taut, almost guerrilla theater in which the actors sit among the audience between scenes and hisses are welcome.

The costumes are minimal, with heavy use of leather jackets and peacoats. The actors often must bellow over air conditioners and Alex Hernandez, who plays Richmond, Prince Edward and Lord Rivers, plays the violin.

The result is a blistering, at times very funny and always inventive production that arrives at the Public’s downtown home from Aug. 6-25 after its unorthodox tour ends this week.

At the Taconic prison, inmates dressed in green jumpsuits fanned themselves with the show’s programs in a sweltering common room but none wandered away as the play unwound. The actors had to perform over the crackle of corrections officers’ radios.

“Who knows what impact this has on them,” says Bertish, who has been deeply moved during each stop, especially the first one at a facility for homeless veterans. “If it has an impact on one person, then one’s doing something worthwhile.”

Richard III’s venal nature wasn’t hard to gather, despite the passage of 400 years and the play’s thick, flowery language. “He’s something else!” one inmate shouted after the newly crowned king slaughtered still more innocents. The inmates also recoiled when the king spit into a courtier’s face and giggled at the Elizabethan insults such as “monstrous witch” and “hedgehog.”

The watchful prison staff, metal detectors and rows of razor wire outside gave the production an added jolt of paranoia. A cardboard cutout of Barney the purple dinosaur on one wall added a dose of despair.

At the Theodora G. Jackson Adult Center in Queens, about 60 seniors gathered to see the play in the mustard-colored dining room with cinderblock walls, which competed for attention with ringing phones, the scraping of chair legs and the occasional thwack from a nearby game of pool.

The audience — either seated in rows surrounding the center of the room on three sides or lounging at plastic-covered tables further away — politely listened. There were ooohs when Richard successfully and improbably wooed Lady Anne, the wife of a man he had just killed.

“It was really something different. Really a change of pace,” Queens native Cecelia Castillo said afterward before returning to the broiling city.

The king’s murderous quest for power was somewhat undercut by the glittery stars and moons that dangled festively from the ceiling. Many of the women in attendance wore colorful sun hats.

Tracy Reaves, director of the center, which is part of the Jamaica Service Program for Older Adults, said it was the third consecutive year that Shakespeare has been performed at the center.

“We love it. The seniors look forward to it every year,” she said.

The play was performed during a month in which the center featured nutrition workshops, arthritis pain management workshops, a talk about diabetes and trips to the Bronx to play bingo.

Pac-12 prepares for launch of network

JOSH DUBOW
AP Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO The studio has been built, the staff has been hired and the programming grid completed.

It's been a whirlwind year since the Pac-12 announced plans on July 27, 2011, to launch one national and six regional networks to give more exposure to the conference's athletic teams.

And the fun has just begun.

Come launch day on Aug. 15, the conference will be responsible for making sure the seven television networks and one digital network that will air 850 live sporting events and countless studio shows this coming year run smoothly.

"It's like racing to the start line," said Lydia Murphy-Stephans, the executive vice president and general manager of the Pac-12 Networks. "It's not racing to the finish. Launching the networks is only the beginning. It's almost as if there's two distinct huge projects going on. One is hiring the people, locking in the facility and getting the facility ready to launch networks. The second part is bringing the networks to life and taking the Pac-12 brand and bringing it to life."

The first live event on the network will be a women's soccer game on Aug. 17 between Stanford and Santa Clara. There will be a handful of other soccer. volleyball and field hockey games that air before the first football game is played on Aug. 30 between Utah and Northern Colorado.

That is one of three football games to air on the opening weekend, followed by Stanford against San Jose State the following day and California against Nevada on Sept. 1.

"Gone are the days of regional broadcasts on ABC or Fox," Commissioner Larry Scott said. "This is going to be a major change in terms of the national exposure and recognition our conference gets."

The networks are guaranteed a wide distribution, having announced distribution deals with Comcast, Time Warner, Cox and Bright House cable systems when revealing plans for the networks last summer. Those systems are in more than 40 million homes, including much of the conference's footprint, lessening some of the distribution issues that plagued the Big Ten Network in its first year in 2007.

The conference recently announced deals with the National Cable Television Cooperative, which sets the terms for distribution on hundreds of smaller cable operators, BendBroadband in Oregon, Frontier Communications, Western Broadband and Orbitel Communications.

Deals with DirecTV, Dish Network, Verizon, AT&T, Cablevision and other distributors are still being negotiated, with the conference hoping to have contracts in place by launch or shortly after.

"We've had great conversations with all of them," said Gary Stevenson, president of Pac-12 Enterprises. "They all believe our programming is important. There's no doubt that fans want this. Pac-12 fans feel they have been underserved because of our television contracts in the past were not as broad as they should be."

That is no longer the case under the conference's new $3 billion, 12-year contract with Fox and ESPN that will end the days of regionalization of Pac-12 football games. Fox and ESPN will broadcast 44 football games nationally, with 35 additional games on Pac-12 Networks.

Also, every home men's basketball game will air either on Fox, ESPN or the Pac-12 Networks, as will extensive coverage of women's and men's Olympic sports that traditionally had been overlooked on television.

"It was like being Santa Claus because in all cases the amount or programming these sports will get in Pac-12 Networks is double, triple, quadruple, quintuple or dramatically more than the exposure these teams have gotten in the past," Stevenson said.

And in a development the conference is particularly proud of, there will be just as many women's sports on the network as men's in what Murphy-Stephans said is a credit to the gains made 40 years after the start of Title IX and the deep investments conference schools have made in women's athletics. The Big Ten Network reached a 50-50 split between men's and women's sports last season, its fifth year on the air.

"Many times I've been approached or asked the question when is it time to launch a women's sports network," Murphy-Stephans said. "This is absolutely the best outcome. Why separate it? Instead of launching a women's sports network have a network that's all about sports and there's a significant amount of women's and men's sports on the same network. I never thought in my career that this would happen."

Stanford women's basketball coach Tara VanDerveer, who had complained in the past about lack of coverage, called the new arrangement the best television package in the country that will help the conference's schools recruit top athletes.

"It's great for women's sports," she said. "It's a great statement by the Pac-12 presidents and athletic directors and Larry Scott. In women's basketball, a lot of top players have left the West Coast. We want great players coming to the West Coast and now we have great universities here, great weather, a stable league and now television exposure. What's not to like?"

The first year will rely heavily on game action with the 850 live events as well as replays of most football and men's basketball games that air on Fox and ESPN. There will be classic games from the past in both football and men's basketball to augment coverage.

There will also be pregame, halftime and postgame studio shows for every football game, a Sunday night football studio wrapup show and a Tuesday coaches show for football and men's basketball.

As a conference-owned network there is the delicate situation of how to handle off-field news. The Big Ten Network came under heat recently when it did not cover the release of the Freeh Report at Penn State.

The network later aired a special on Penn State and covered the NCAA's punishment of the school.

"They may not like it but they need to agree that there is a certain way to communicate whether it's internal messaging or external messaging," Murphy-Stephans said. "I don't think it's healthy for anybody to put their head in the sand and pretend it didn't happen."

LOCATION: Council Chambers, Room 213, Santa Monica City Hall, 1685 Main Street, Santa Monica

A Public Hearing will be held by the Zoning Administrator of the City of Santa Monica at the above noted time and place in regard to the following requests:

Use Permit 11-006, 1602 Ocean Park Boulevard. The applicant requests the installation of eight (8) 8-foot tall and three (3) 6-foot tall roof-mounted panel antennas with remote radio units (RRU), along with three (3) GPS antennas on an existing single-story building. The 8-foot tall antennas and associated RRUs are located on the northwest corner of the roof and the 6-foot tall antennas and associated RRUs are located on the southwest corner of the roof. The GPS antennas are mounted behind the existing building parapet and an emergency generator plug is proposed on the back of the building. All proposed antennas and RRUs will be located behind new screening that matches the existing building. As proposed, the project does not comply with the requirements for non-parabolic or parabolic antennas contained in Santa Monica Municipal Code (SMMC) Section 9.04.10.06.110 and 9.04.10.06.160. Pursuant to SMMC Section 9.04.10.06.110(b) and 9.04.10.06.161, the Zoning Administrator may approve modifications to the requirements for non-parabolic or parabolic commercial antennas through the approval of a Use Permit application. [Planner: Grace Page] APPLICANT/OWNER: AT&T Mobility. This public hearing was continued from the June 12, 2012 Zoning Administrator Hearing.

Use Permit 11-017, 1918 Main Street. The applicant requests approval to remove six (6) existing AT&T panel antennas and install twelve (12), four-foot tall panel antennas which will be concealed by screening and/or painted to match the building. In addition, the applicant proposes to install twelve (12) new radio remote units (behind antenna panels), six DC surge suppressors (behind antenna panels), a new roof-mounted GPS antenna and new equipment rack and power cabinet inside the existing roof penthouse. The proposed antennas do not comply with the requirements for non-parabolic antennas contained in Santa Monica Municipal Code (SMMC) Section 9.04.10.06.110(a). Pursuant to SMMC Section 9.04.10.06.110(b), the Zoning Administrator may approve modifications to the requirements for non-parabolic commercial antennas through the approval of a Use Permit application. . [Planner: Grace Page] APPLICANT/OWNER: Trillium Companies.

Use Permit 12-007, 225 12th Street. The applicant requests approval to construct a two-story accessory building. The first floor of the two-story building would have a garage and the second story would have a multi-purpose room and half bath. The accessory building is a part of a construction project on the property that consists of demolishing the existing single-family dwelling, constructing a new, two-story main house and building the new accessory building. The proposed accessory building is a detached structure located on the rear half of a lot. The accessory structure has a garage which will have access from the alley (12th Court). Pursuant to SMMC Section 9.04.08.02.040(s), the applicant may request a Use Permit to allow a two-story accessory building up to 24 feet on parcels located within the North of Montana area, if such buildings conform to the development standards set forth in Section 9.04.13.050. [Planner: Dennis Banks] APPLICANT/OWNER: Jennifer Rios/ John Adler and Gerda Newbold.

Use Permit 12-017, 226 Georgina Avenue. A Use Permit to retain an existing curb cut providing street access to a new single family residence with attached garage on the subject parcel which has an adjacent rear alley. This proposal is requested in conjunction with construction of a new single-family residence. The applicant requests approval of the Use Permit to allow continued vehicle access on to the property from Georgina Avenue. Pursuant to SMMC Section 9.04.08.02.040(d), the applicant may request a Use Permit to allow the retention of a curb cut for purposes of providing street access to an on-site parking garage on parcels located within the single family residential zone with an adjacent rear alley having a minimum right-of-way of fifteen feet. The subject property is located in the R1 single family neighborhood and it has an adjacent rear alley that is 20 feet in width. Planner: Gina Szilak] APPLICANT/OWNER: Jason Somers/226 Georgina Trust /co Michael D. Karlin.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

LSU tops USA Today coaches poll over 'Bama

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BATON ROUGE, La. Despite its lopsided loss to Alabama in last January's BCS national title game, LSU will open the 2012 season ranked No. 1 in at least one poll.

LSU sits atop the USA Today Top 25 coaches poll released on Thursday, with Alabama second and Southern California third.

LSU received 18 first-place votes, slightly fewer that the 20 first-place votes for the Crimson Tide and 19 first-place votes for the Trojans. Still, the Tigers narrowly had the most overall points in the poll, which awards 25 points for a No. 1 vote down to one point for 25th.

Oklahoma and Oregon round out the top five, followed by Georgia, Florida State, Michigan, South Carolina and Arkansas.

LSU and Alabama, rivals in the Southeastern Conference, meet Nov. 3 in Baton Rouge.

Say 'yes' to an offer, Leo

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ You naturally slow down as the weekend approaches. Discussions surround a very unusual idea, so be sure to brainstorm with respected associates and friends. A partner sees a way to transform a situation. Tonight: Get home early. Relax.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ A friendship becomes even more important than you thought. This person is a source of remarkable ideas and solutions. Back off in order to gain perspective. You see what many people don't. A discussion revitalizes a relationship. Tonight: Where people are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ A take-charge attitude is not your style, but it serves you well. If an idea is to be implemented as you would like, you must carry it out yourself. Others cannot read your mind. Tonight: Into the wee hours.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Detach from an immediate situation, especially if it seems like a maze. Find an expert, or seek out different ideas. You might not be seeing this situation as clearly as you would like. Someone could be holding back some information. Tonight: Make music a requirement.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Others have a lot to share. You might prefer to relate directly to a key person. Your warm feelings and dynamic energy will complement your interaction. The two of you together could handle what might seem impossible by yourself. Tonight: Say "yes" to an offer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ An early invitation could make it close to impossible to say "no." In fact, after accepting, you might have a difficult time remaining focused. If you can, head home early. Tonight: Go along with someone's suggestion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ You look around and see everything you need to do. Don't think about it, just do it. An element of confusion or dreaminess runs through your thoughts. Be explicit about instructions and meeting times. Confirm what you have heard. Tonight: Squeeze in something fun.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ You are drawn in by adventure and a desire to understand more of what is happening with an interesting loved one or friend. As a result, you'll make an adjustment to your plans and be much more content. Tonight: Flex with a loved one or new friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ If you are in the mood to stay home, why not indulge that desire? Others might choose to take a relaxing walk by water at some point. Use your instincts with spending and your home. Keep your budget in mind. Tonight: Play it low-key.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Keep talking and working through an issue. By the end of the day, you might see eye-to-eye with someone. What you might be inspired to do is much different than what can be accomplished. Others admire your strength and ability not to remain rigid. Tonight: Go to a favorite spot.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ You could feel more polarized and opinionated than in the past. Relax a little, and absorb others' views -- there might be some validity to be found. Tonight: Clear your thoughts; share with a wise friend.

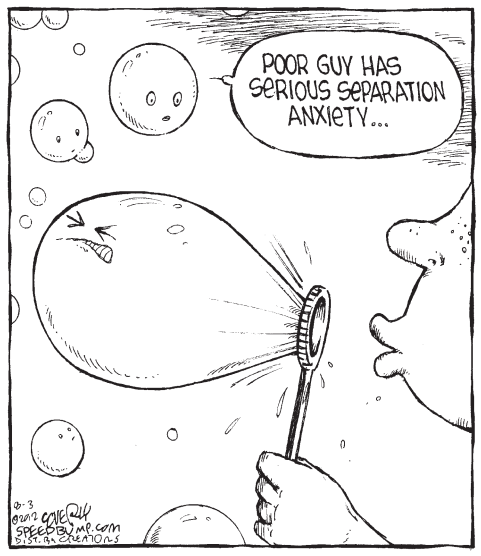

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Your essence and higher self come out. You can inspire others at best. Still, be aware of a tendency to be unrealistic. A conversation or meeting points to your being too idealistic. Take off your rose-colored shades once in a while. Tonight: As you like.

This year great events occur because of your ability to relate intimately with others. You also seem to know what others aspire to achieve and are able to pave the way. Your day-to-day schedule changes and adds a new dimension. If you are single, you enjoy relating on an individual level. Others find you to be intense and often a handful. You could meet someone very important to your life history. If you are attached, you have great hope for your relationship. Are you being realistic? ■ Adriana Villareal of Dos de Mayo, Argentina, lost her husband two years ago but now makes it a point to visit his tomb about four times a year, and not just briefly. Said Villareal, according to a June Agence France-Presse dispatch, "When you love someone, you do all sorts of things."

■ Not Ready for Prime Time: (1) On June 8, sheriff's deputies near Tampa, Fla., charged Robert Suggs, 36, and David Hall, 28, with taking a front-end loader and a dump truck from a construction site and using them to steal an ATM from a Bank of America drive-thru. The theft took place at 5 a.m., and deputies arrested the pair that afternoon when they were found near the bank, still trying to get the ATM open. (2) On the same day, in Albuquerque, Thomas Molina, 38, was arrested in the act of fleeing a burglary at Central New Mexico Community College. As he tried to climb out a window, his getaway was hampered by having gotten his foot caught in the blinds.
